EXTRACTS FROM REVIEWS.

"One of the most ambitious, and ought to be, when it is complete, one of the most generally useful legal works which the present century has produced."—Literature.

"A perfect storehouse of the principles established and illustrated by our case law and that of the United States."—Law Times.

"By this time this series has become so widely known, and doubtless appreciated, that it becomes unnecessary to do much more than chronicle the appearance of the new volume, to state the contents, and to say that its workmanship is quite up to the former level."—Law Journal.

"A work of unusual value and interest. . . . Each leading case or group of cases is preceded by a statement in bold type of the rule which they are quoted as establishing. The work is happy in conception, and this first volume shows that it will be adequately and successfully carried out."—Solicitors' Journal.

"The general scheme appears to be excellent, and its execution reflects the greatest credit on everybody concerned. It may, indeed, be said to constitute, for the present, the high-water mark of the science of book-making."—Saturday Review.

"The English Ruling Cases seem generally to have been well and carefully chosen, and a great amount of work has been expended. . . . Great accuracy and care are shown in the preparation of the Notes."—Law Quarterly Review.

"A Cyclopædia of law . . . most ably executed, learned, accurate, clear, concise; but perhaps its chief merit is that it impresses on us what the practising English lawyer is too apt to forget—that English law really is a body of principles."—The British Review.

A. HIGHWAYS.

1. NATURE AND CREATION OF.

a. Generally.

Through Private Property.]—Although a public way may pass through private property, it must have at each end a public terminus. Young v. Cuthbertson, 1 Macq. H. L. 455.

Over Place not a Thoroughfare.]—A public highway may in law exist over a place which is not a thoroughfare; whether in fact it does exist or not is a question for the jury. Bateman v. Bluck, 18 Q. B. 870; 21 L. J., Q. B. 406; 17 Jur. 386.

When Stopped at one End.]—Quære, if a road, long used as a thoroughfare by the public, is lawfully stopped at one end, whether the right of way over the remainder is gone. Per Patteson, J., it is not. Rex v. Downshire (Marquis), 4 A. & E. 698; 6 N. & M. 92; 5 L. J., M. C. 72.

When a Cul-de-sac.]—A public footpath was rendered a cul-de-sac by buildings authorised by act of parliament; the defendant obstructed the path at a place between which and the end of the cul-de-sac there was no opening or thoroughfare. Upon an indictment for this obstruction, the jury found the defendant guilty; but also found that this part of the path, which the obstruction stopped, had ceased to be of any public utility;—Held, that a public path was still a highway, although it had become a cul-de-sac; and that the measure of public inconvenience caused by the obstruction of such a highway could be considered only with regard to the punishment of the person causing it. Reg. v. Burney, 31 L. T. 828.

In 1871 the plaintiff became the purchaser in fee-simple of hereditaments, described in the deed of conveyance as "all that piece of ground with the sixteen messuages thereon." The houses were divided into two blocks by a cul-de-sac or passage open at one end only, which had been dedicated to the use of the public for twenty years, but the soil of which the plaintiff claimed as his private property by virtue of his conveyance. A railway company, being about to tunnel under this cul-de-sac, gave the plaintiff a notice to treat in respect of three houses on each side of it, but not in respect of that part of the cul-de-sac between them, the company contending it was a public way or street;—Held, that the cul-de-sac was a public way or street, and that the company was entitled to tunnel under it without paying the plaintiff any compensation. South v. East London Ry., 42 L. J., Ch. 477; L. R. 16 Eq. 108; 21 W. R. 590.

The terminus of a public way may be sufficient, although it has not in the ordinary sense an exit. It may be a cul-de-sac. Young v. Cuthbertson, supra.

But a mere private place, not admitting of a passage through or beyond it, cannot form the terminus of a public way. Ib.

The terminus ad quem being laid to be a public highway, is proved by evidence of a public footway. Allen v. Ormond, 8 East, 4; 9 R. R. 363.

Consideration of the circumstances under which a cul-de-sac may be a highway. Bourke v. Davis, 44 Ch. D. 110; 62 L. T. 34; 38 W. R. 167.

When rendered Inaccessible.]—A way ceases to be a public highway where the access to it at either end has become impossible by reason of ways leading to it having been legally stopped up. Bailey v. Jamieson, 1 C. P. D. 329; 34 L. T. 62; 24 W. R. 456.

An ancient footpath led from one point to another in a high road, being a loop or short cut for pedestrians. The court of quarter sessions made an order diverting the part of the high-road in connection with the footpath, and substituting another road at some distance which did not communicate with the footpath. The order did not expressly refer to the footpath; but its effect was to stop both ends of it:—Held, that the footpath ceased to be a highway, and that the public right of way over it was by necessary implication extinguished by the order of quarter sessions. Ib.

—— Extinguishment by Act of Parliament.]—A provisional order made by the Board of Trade, under the general Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, sanctioned by a confirmation act, authorised the construction of a pier at the end of a street, and blocking it up:—Held, that any public right of way from the street to the beach was taken away. Yarmouth Corporation v. Simmons, 47 L. J., Ch. 792; 10 Ch. D. 518; 38 L. T. 881; 26 W. R. 802.

A public right of way is not saved as a right of the crown under the above sections of the general act. Ib.

Sufficiency of Way.]—A right of way for all the king's subjects to pass and repass with their carts and carriages, is not restrained because all carriages cannot pass and repass. Rex v. Lyon,

5 D. & R. 497 ; 1 Car. & P. 527 ; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 92 ; 27 R. R. 530.

Extent of Public Rights—Nature of Easement.]—The right of the public in a highway is an easement to pass and repass at their pleasure for the purpose of legitimate travel, and the use of the soil for any other purpose is an infringement of the right of the owner of the soil, who has, subject to this easement, precisely the same estate in the soil as he had previously to any easement being acquired by the public. Harrison v. Rutland (Duke), 62 L. J., Q. B. 117 ; [1893] 1 Q. B. 142 ; 4 R. 155 ; 68 L. T. 35 ; 41 W. R. 322 ; 57 J. P. 278.

If a person uses the soil of a highway for any other purpose than that in respect of which the dedication was made, he is a trespasser. Ib.

—— Breadth of Way.]—The right of the public to use a highway extends to the whole road, and not merely to the part used as via trita. Nicol v. Beaumont, 53 L. J., Ch. 853 ; 50 L. T. 112.

In an ordinary highway running between fences the right of passage primâ facie, extends to the whole space between the fences, and the public are not confined to that part which is metalled and kept in repair for passengers. Reg. v. United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Co., 3 F. & F. 73 ; 2 B. & S. 647, n. ; 31 L. J., M. C. 166 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1153 ; 6 L. T. 378 ; 10 W. R. 538 ; 9 Cox, C. C. 174.

In 1811 a public road was set out across a common by inclosure commissioners of a width of fifty feet, and allotments of the land on either side were at the same time made. About twenty-five feet only of the fifty feet allotted had been used as the actual road, the sides having become covered with furze and heath ; and fir trees had been allowed to come up through the furze. In 1868 the highway board advertised a sale of some of these fir trees growing within the fifty feet allotted by the commissioners in 1811 for the highway :—Held, that the right of the public was to have the whole width of the road, and not merely the via trita, preserved free from obstructions ; and such right had not become extinguished by the fact that the trees had been allowed to grow up within the fifty feet for the period of twenty-five years. Turner v. Ringwood Highway Board, L. R. 9 Eq. 418 ; 21 L. T. 745 ; 18 W. R. 424.

—— Adverse User by Individual for Twenty Years.]—The adverse user by an individual of a public highway, or any part thereof, for more than twenty years, is no bar to the assertion by the public of their right over the highway, or the portion thereof, so adversely used. Ib.

—— Encroachment by Adjoining Owners.]—The common notion that owners of land on the sides of a highway may encroach or enclose up to within fifteen feet of the centre is an error. Reg. v. Johnson, 1 F. & F. 657.

—— Proof of Boundaries—Map—Inclosure Award.]—A map attached to an old inclosure award shewing a highway existent at the date of the award is not admissible as evidence of reputation to prove the boundaries of the highway at that date against a person whose property adjoined the highway, but over which the inclosure commissioners had no jurisdiction. Reg. v. Berger, 63 L. J., Q. B. 529 ; [1894] 1 Q. B. 823 ; 10 R. 245 ; 70 L. T. 807 ; 42 W. R. 541 ; 17 Cox C. C. 761 ; 58 J. P. 416.

Sufficiency of Description in Pleadings.]—It is sufficient in pleading a public highway to allege, that it is a common public highway, without shewing how it became so, or that it has been so time immemorial. Aspindall v. Brown, 3 Term Rep. 265.

It is not necessary to state any termini. Rouse v. Bardin, 1 H. Bl. 351.

Jurisdiction to Determine.]—The court of chancery has no jurisdiction to decide the question of a public or private right of way upon a motion in a petition suit. Pryor v. Pryor, 27 L. T. 257—L.JJ.

b. Creation by Statute.

A highway may be created by an act of parliament. Sutcliffe v. Greenwood, 8 Price, 535 ; 22 R. R. 771.

Strictness of Conditions.]—A highway cannot be created by statute unless the provisions of the statute creating it are strictly followed. Cubitt v. Maxse, 42 L. J., C. P. 278 ; L. R. 8 C. P. 704 ; 29 L. T. 244 ; 21 W. R. 789.

—— Road Formed and Completed, what is.]—By the General Inclosure Act (41 Geo. 3, c. 109), ss. 8 and 9, the commissioner, before making the allotments of the land to be inclosed, was to set out such roads as he should judge necessary, and to appoint a surveyor to form and complete the same, and until so formed and completed the parish was not to be bound to repair such roads, but after that time they were to be for ever after kept in repair by the parish. An inclosure commissioner appointed to act under a local act, subject to the provisions of 41 Geo. 3, c. 109, duly set out a road which he described in his award made in 1808, but although such road was staked out on the ground and fenced off, it was never formed and completed as required by 41 Geo. 3, c. 109, nor was it ever used by the public :—Held, that as the requirements of the statute had not been complied with, the road was not a highway created by statute, and as there had been no user by the public, it was not otherwise a highway. Ib.

When Completion a Condition Precedent.]—A local turnpike act recited, "that the making and maintaining a new road from Leeds to join the Wakefield and Halifax turnpike road, at a certain point, and several branch roads (therein also described) from out of the main turnpike road, would be an advantage to the inhabitants of Leeds and Halifax, and to the public in general" ; and it authorised the making of the said several roads, and enacted, "that the new roads should not be respectively open to the public, or become public roads until two justices should have certified that the roads respectively, and the works thereon respectively, were completely made, and fit to be travelled upon, throughout the whole length of such roads respectively." Semble, per Littledale and Taunton, JJ., that the making of all the branch roads was not a condition precedent to the main road becoming a public road. Rex v. Yorkshire (W. R.) JJ., 5 B. & Ad. 1003 ; 3 N. & M. 86 ; 3 L. J., M. C. 54.

Rights Reserved by Owner.]—The provisions of the Highway and Metropolitan Local Management Acts, so far as they apply to roads and streets, are subordinate to the paramount rights reserved by the owner. St. Mary Newington Vestry v. Jacobs, 41 L. J., M. C. 72; L. R. 7 Q. B. 47; 25 L. T. 800; 20 W. R. 249.

c. Dedication.

By the Crown.]—The crown, if owner of the soil, may dedicate it to the public. Reg. v. East Mark Tything, 11 Q. B. 877; 17 L. J., Q. B. 177; 12 Jur. 332; 3 Cox, C. C. 60.

Evidence of Intention—User.]—To constitute a dedication of a way to the public by an owner of the soil, there must be an intention so to dedicate, of which the user by the public is evidence, subject to be rebutted by contrary evidence. Poole v. Huskinson, 11 M. & W. 827.

If a road has been used by the public for a great number of years, a dedication by the owner of the soil may be presumed; and it is not material to inquire who the owner was, or whether he intended to dedicate the road to the public. Reg. v. East Mark Tything, 11 Q. B. 877; 17 L. J., Q. B. 177; 12 Jur. 332; 3 Cox, C. C. 60.

Public user of a road for some time is sufficient primâ facie evidence of a dedication to the public, and it is not necessary to shew by whom the dedication was made. Reg. v. Petrie, 4 El. & Bl. 737; 3 C. L. R. 829; 24 L. J., Q. B. 167; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 752; 3 W. R. 243; 6 Cox, C. C. 512.

A user of a road for eighteen months, accompanied with a declaration of an intention to devote it to the public, may be sufficient evidence of a dedication. North London Ry. v. St. Mary Vestry, Islington, 27 L. T. 672; 21 W. R. 226.

A road led from a highway to the gates of a park; through the park was a bridleway, terminating at another highway, but carriages could not go through the park without permission, the gates being occasionally locked. The parish had repaired the road from time immemorial, taking stones from the park for that purpose, but there had not been any user except for the purpose of seeking admission to the park:—Held, that the evidence did not shew a sufficient dedication to the public and user by them, and the road was not a public highway. Reg. v. Hawkhurst, 7 L. T. 268; 11 W. R. 9.

A public footway over crown land was extinguished by an inclosure act, but for twenty years after the inclosure the public continued to use the way:—Held, that this was not evidence of a dedication to the public, as it did not appear to have been with the knowledge of the crown. Harper v. Charlesworth, 4 B. & C. 574; 6 D. & R. 572; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 265; 28 R. R. 405.

It is by the continued passage of people who wish to go along a particular way, that evidence of there being a highway is established. Eyre v. New Forest Highway Board, 56 J. P. 517—C. A.

—— By Scots Law.]—In an action claiming a public right of way over a track or natural mountain pass about fourteen miles long, running through a thinly populated district of the Highlands of Scotland and connecting by the shortest route Braemar and Clova, it appeared from the evidence of user that the track in question had been used by the public on foot; by drovers twice a year driving sheep from a market held at Braemar to one held near Clova; that public subscriptions had been collected for a bridge in the line of the track; that some distance up the disputed track there was an old milestone, and, that a proprietor in planting trees had specially left a space for the track:—Held, that the amount of user, having regard to the character of the district, was such as might have been expected if the track had been admittedly a public way and not the subject of mere tolerance, and that the evidence was sufficient to establish the right of way. Macpherson v. Scottish Rights of Way and Recreation Society, 13 App. Cas. 744—H. L. (Sc.)

According to the law of Scotland, the constitution of a public right of way does not depend upon any legal fiction, but upon the fact of user by the public as matter of right, continuously and without interruption for forty years. And the amount of user must be such as might have been reasonably expected if the road in dispute had been an undoubted public highway. Also, the user must be a user of the whole road as a means of passage from one terminus to the other, and must not be such a user as can be reasonably ascribed either to private servitude rights or to the licence of the proprietor. The continued exclusion of the public from the use of an alleged public road for thirty-seven years will not, per se, destroy a pre-existent right of public way unless it is maintained for the prescriptive period of forty years, but it is strong evidence that no such public right ever existed. Mann v. Brodie, 10 App. Cas. 378—H. L. (Sc.)

Upon the trial of an issue directed to try whether, for forty-six years prior to 1822 there existed a public road from G. to C., it was proved that from 1755 to 1789 the road was used by the public without interruption, and that stiles had in 1789 been placed in the fences by the owners of the land over which the road passed. From 1797 there were frequent interruptions down to the date of the trial. The judge at the trial directed the jury that the interruptions proved were not sufficient to defeat the right in the public to the footway in question, which right must in the evidence be presumed to have been established by having been used for forty years and upwards from the date of the interruption, as stated in the issue. Upon a bill of exceptions to this direction:—Held, that on proof of thirty-four years' uninterrupted exercise of the right, it was competent for the jury to presume, and that they might in point of law be directed to presume an enjoyment corresponding with the manner in which the road had been enjoyed during the thirty-four years, establishing, according to the law of Scotland, a prescriptive right of way. Harvie v. Rogers, 3 Bligh. (N.S.) 440.

—— When Land in the Hands of Lessees.]—If the land has been out on lease, the acquiescence of the tenant will not bind the landlord, without evidence of his knowledge sufficient to presume a grant from him. Rugby Charity v. Merryweather, 11 East, 376, n.; 10 R. R. 528.

If a way has been used by the public for a great number of years over a close in the hands of a succession of tenants, the privity of the landlord and a dedication may be presumed, although he was never in the actual possession of the close himself, and he is proved not to have been near the spot. Rex v. Barr, 4 Camp. 16; 15 R. R. 721.

Where a way has been used by the public for a great number of years over a close, leading only to the houses of lessees, there being no thoroughfare, the privity of the landlord, and a dedication by him to the public, are essential to constitute it a public highway; and evidence that the locus in quo has been paved and lighted for the like number of years, under an act of parliament, in which it is enumerated amongst the public streets, within the scope of the statute, will not prejudice the rights of the owner of the fee. Wood v. Veal, 1 D. & R. 20; 5 B. & Ald. 454; 24 R. R. 454.

In order to prove that a way was public, evidence was given of user extending over nearly seventy years; but during the whole period the land had been on lease. The judge told the jury that they were at liberty, if they thought proper, to presume a dedication of the way to the public by the defendant or his ancestor, anterior to the land being leased:—Held, a proper direction. Winterbottom v. Derby (Earl), 36 L. J., Ex. 194; L. R. 2 Ex. 316; 16 L. T. 771; 16 W. R. 15.

No dedication to the public of a right of way will be presumed to have been made by the reversioner in fee of land during the existence of a term of years under a lease. Bermondsey Vestry v. Brown, 35 Beav. 226; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1031; 13 L. T. 574; 14 W. R. 213.

Two owners of freehold property, by agreement in 1808, undertook, after a part should have been let on building leases, to demise the remainder to trustees for C. for sixty-one years, to lease upon the like plan as should have been adopted with respect to the other part, or in such manner as C. should think fit. In pursuance of the agreement, a lease was accordingly granted in 1813 to C.'s trustees, the lease reciting the agreement, and shewing by a plan the manner in which the other part of the property had been dealt with. Upon this plan there appeared a street, part of the land comprised in the lease adjoining one end of the street. C. and his trustees leased this land for building purposes for the whole term, less ten days, to D., who erected houses in such a manner as to continue the street. The street was used by the public for upwards of twenty years:—Held, that there had been a direction by the freeholders to continue the street, and that it had become a public road. Pryor v. Pryor, 26 L. T. 758. And see 27 L. T. 257.

—— Streets and Roads—Within 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 88.]—A vestry proposed to erect a public urinal in a mews, not a thoroughfare, the freehold of which was in the plaintiffs as trustees. The mews had for seventy years or more been open to the public at all times; no barrier had ever been put across the entrance. The mews had been lighted, cleansed and paved by the vestry. The land adjoining the mews was in lease during the whole period. The lessees had applied to the vestry for leave to interfere with the soil of the mews, but such applications were made without the knowledge of the trustees:—Held, that the soil of the mews had been dedicated to the public, and it was "a street," being a highway within the meaning of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 88. Vernon v. St. James's Vestry, 49 L. J., Ch. 130; 42 L. T. 82. See also (per Lush, L.J.) 50 L. J., Ch. 81; 16 Ch. D. 449; 44 L. T. 229; 29 W. R. 222—C. A.

The actual site of the urinal had up to 1858 been occupied by a dung-pit, used by the tenant of stables adjoining the mews. About that year it was filled up:—Held, that the site of the dung-pit had been abandoned, and dedicated to the public with the rest of the mews. Ib.

—— Setting out proposed Road.]—H., a lessee for a term of seventy-five years of a plot of building land, laid out, in 1865, a proposed road across part of the land, and built six houses on one side of it, but subsequently abandoned her intention of making the road, and, in 1874, demised the remainder of the land, including the site of the abandoned road, for use as a timber-yard. The public had occasionally used the road from 1865 up to 1880, when the urban authority required H., as the owner of the houses, to sewer, flag and pave the same, and on the lessee declining, the urban authority executed the works:—Held, that the mere setting out of a road was not such an act that the person who did it, and allowed the public to traverse and use the road, was to be taken to have dedicated the same to the public; and that the urban authority had no right to cast upon the lessee the whole expense of sewering and paving the road. Hall v. Bootle Corporation, 44 L. T. 873; 29 W. R. 862.

Commission to set out meet ways for passages. Oxford (Custos, &c.) v. Everall, Cary, 75.

—— Continuation by a Lessee—Jurisdiction.]—Two owners of freehold property, by agreement, in 1808 undertook, after a part should have been let on building leases, to demise the remainder to trustees for C. for sixty-one years, upon trust to lease upon the like plan as should have been adopted with respect to the other part, or as C. should think fit. In pursuance of the agreement, a lease was granted in 1813 to C.'s trustees, the lease reciting the agreement, and shewing by a plan the manner in which the other part of the property had been dealt with. Upon this plan there appeared a street, part of the land comprised in the lease adjoining one end of it. C. and his trustees leased this land for building purposes for the whole term, less ten days, to D., who erected houses to continue the street. The street was used by the public for upwards of twenty years:—Held, that there had been a direction by the freeholders to continue the street, and that it had become a public road. Pryor v. Pryor, 26 L. T. 758. Held, on appeal, without going into the merits, that the court had no jurisdiction. S. C., 27 L. T. 257.

—— Agreement in expired Lease.]—In 1850 the owner in fee of a plot of land near a town demised the coals under it for six years to K., the owner of the adjoining land; and in the lease was an agreement that a street, to be called Union Street, should within five years be made across the land under which the coal lay and K.'s land; that a sewer should be made under such road; that the lessor and lessee should, at their own cost, construct and repair so much of the road and sewer as should extend along their respective lands; and that the road should be used as a public road for ever thereafter, and should be maintained by each of the parties, until it should be adopted by the surveyor of highways. The road and sewer were never made, and there was no dedication of a highway to the public by notice under the highway act. A brickfield, and afterwards (in 1851) a colliery, were opened on K.'s land, and gaps were opened through which access was obtained to the premises for carts and foot passengers. In 1869 posts and chains were placed across one of the openings, but after a few months the chains were removed. In 1870 K.'s land was sold, and in 1871 conveyed to the plaintiff in fee, and in 1872 the local board of health called upon him to sewer and pave the alleged street under the Public Health Act, 1848:—Held, that the agreement in the expired lease had been abandoned and could not be enforced; and that it did not amount to a dedication of a way to the public. Healey v. Batley Corporation, 44 L. J., Ch. 642; L. R. 19 Eq. 375.

—— Rights of Reversioners.]—A dedication of a highway is not to be presumed against a reversioner. Baxter v. Taylor, 1 N. & M. 13; 4 B. & Ad. 72; 2 L. J., K. B. 65.

No dedication to the public of a right of way will be presumed to have been made by a reversioner in fee of land during the existence of a term of years under a lease. Bermondsey Vestry v. Brown, 35 Beav. 226; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1031; 13 L. T. 574; 14 W. R. 213.

A tenant for life cannot dedicate a way as a highway as against the remainderman. Eyre v. New Forest Highway Board, 56 J. P. 517.

Occasional User—Effect of.]—The occasional user of a farm road by strangers, is evidence of a public rather than of a private way, and may be evidence of a dedication to the public, but must be well weighed with reference to all the circumstances, tending to shew whether the owner ever intended such a dedication, especially if it leads to a place of resort for mere purposes of pleasure. Mildred v. Weaver, 3 F. & F. 30; 6 L. T. 225.

Over Copyholds.]—Where evidence of user is given in support of a presumed dedication of a public way over copyhold, it does not lie on the persons claiming such right to shew that the lord has had possession. Powers v. Bathurst, 49 L. J., Ch. 294; 42 L. T. 123; 28 W. R. 390.

Of a Sea Wall.]—There is nothing inconsistent with the purposes of a sea or a river wall or an embankment, erected to protect neighbouring lands, in a right of way along the surface; and the same evidence of user will raise a presumption of dedication by the owner in the case of such an embankment as in any other case of uninterrupted user by the public. Greenwich Board of Works v. Maudslay, 39 L. J., Q. B. 205; L. R. 5 Q. B. 397; 23 L. T. 121; 18 W. R. 948.

Of Road originally intended for Special Persons.]—By their act of incorporation, the proprietors of the Surrey canal were to erect and maintain bridges over the canal where it intersected any public highway, bridleway, or footpath, and for the use of the owners and occupiers of lands adjoining the canal. In 1804 the company erected a swivel bridge (of sufficient dimensions for a carriage across the canal) at a spot where there had formerly been a public way, which at the most was only a bridleway This bridge was originally intended for the exclusive accommodation (as a carriage-way) of the tenants of an estate adjoining, called the Rolls estate. The neighbourhood having become populous, and a church having been built near the bridge, the public, from 1822 to 1832, used it as a carriage-way. In 1832 the company for the first time imposed a toll upon all carriages traversing the bridge, except those belonging to the tenants of the Rolls estate; and in 1840 they removed the old swivel bridge, and erected a stone bridge in the place of it. In an action against the defendant for passing over the bridge without paying toll, the judge told the jury, that, supposing the bridge to have been originally erected for the exclusive accommodation of the tenants of the Rolls estate, still if, by the acts of the company, an idea grew up in the minds of the public that the company had dedicated the way to the public use, they might find such dedication:—Held, that this was not a misdirection; and that the evidence warranted the jury in finding a dedication. Grand Surrey Canal Co. v. Hall, 1 Scott (N.R.) 264; 1 Man. & G. 392; 9 L. J., C. P. 329.

Held, also, that there was nothing in the constitution of the company, or in their property, to prevent them from dedicating the bridge to the public. Ib.

Where a road was set out by commissioners under a local act, and certain persons only were entitled to use it, but in fact it had been used by the public for many years:—Held, that this was not sufficient evidence of a dedication to the public. Rex v. St. Benedict, 4 B. & Ald. 447; 23 R. R. 441.

Land vested in Company for Statutory Purposes.]—Land acquired by a company under an act of parliament for the purposes of their undertaking as specified by such act may be dedicated by them as a public highway, if such use by the public be not incompatible with the objects prescribed by the act. Therefore, where land was acquired and used by a canal company under their statutes for the purpose of a towing-path, and it appeared that the use of it as a public footpath was not inconsistent with its use as a towing path by the company:—Held, that the company could dedicate the land as a public footpath subject to its use by them as a towing-path. Rex v. Leake (5 B. & Ad. 469) approved and followed. Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Petty, 57 L. J., Q. B. 572; 21 Q. B. D. 273; 59 L. T. 767; 36 W. R. 795; 52 J. P. 692—C. A.

Where drainage commissioners were directed by act of parliament to purchase lands, cut drains, and cleanse them when cut, by placing the mud upon the banks:—Held, that it was competent to them to dedicate such banks to the public as a highway. Rex v. Leake, 2 N. & M. 595; 5 B. & Ad. 469.

Of Vague Tracks.]—The mere use by people of tracks in a wood, where they were free to wander as they pleased, is not necessarily enough to shew a dedication of such tracks to the public as public footways. Chapman v. Cripps, 2 F. & F. 864.

Evidence that in a place of resort for pleasure, as a wood, or the like, people have gone wherever they pleased, there being no definite trackway in any particular direction, but merely transitory tracks, and varying every season, and never shewn to be repaired, is not evidence of either a public highway or a public right of resort for air and exercise, or a prescriptive right of way. Selwinge v. Dowell, 2 F. & F. 845.

Of Open Space—Absence of Termini.]—No right of way is acquired by user, enjoyed over every part of an open space and not between any definite termini, such user not being sufficient evidence of an intention on the part of the owner to dedicate to the public the whole surface of the space. Robinson v. Cowpen Local Board, 63 L. J., Q. B. 235 ; 9 R. 858—C. A.

Limited Dedication—To Part of Public.]—There cannot be a dedication to a limited part of the public, as to a parish ; and such a partial dedication is simply void. Poole v. Huskinson, 11 M. & W. 827.

A parish may possess, as private property, an exclusive right of way, but it must be by express grant from the owner of the land ; and no such right can be presumed to have arisen from dedication, inasmuch as there can be no such thing as a dedication to a part of the public. Bermondsey Vestry v. Brown, 35 Beav. 226 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1031 ; 13 L. T. 574 ; 14 W. R. 213.

—— For Limited Purpose.]—There may be a dedication to the public for a limited purpose, as for a footway. Poole v. Huskinson, supra.

Semble, that there may be a limited dedication of a highway to the public, as for carts laden with coal. Stafford (Marquis) v. Coyney, 7 B. & C. 257 ; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 285 ; 31 R. R. 186.

—— For Limited Time.]—There can be no dedication of a way to the public for a limited time ; if dedicated at all, it must be dedicated in perpetuity. Neither can the public by nonuser release their rights. Dawes v. Hawkins, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 848 ; 29 L. J., C. P. 343 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 262 ; 4 L. T. 288.

—— Evidence of mere Licence.—Where a landowner suffered the public to use for several years a road for all purposes, except that of carrying coals :—Held, that this was either a limited dedication to the public, or no dedication at all, but only a licence ; and that a person carrying coals along the road after notice not to do so, was a trespasser. Stafford (Marquis) v. Coyney, supra.

A road had been used by the public for about thirty years, but it appeared that in 1814, twenty-two years before the action, an agreement was made by the owner on one side, and a company and a surveyor of highways of the hamlet and others on the other side, by which the owner agreed to let them use the road on the company paying five shillings a year, and finding cinders, and the hamlet loading and spreading them :—Held, that although the evidence of user per se would shew a dedication by the owner of the soil, it was explained by the agreement, which only amounted to a licence to use the road while the conditions in it should be observed. Barraclough v. Johnson, 3 N. & P. 233 ; 8 A. & E. 99 ; 1 W., W. & H. 162 ; 7 L. J., Q. B. 172 ; 2 Jur. 839.

—— Dedication of Street—Notice of—Neglect of Duty by Surveyor.]—Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 23, when a person is about to dedicate a new road to the public, and seeks to made it repairable by the parish, and gives notice to the surveyor that at the end of three months it will be dedicated, it is the duty of the surveyor to call a vestry meeting of the inhabitants, and if such meeting decides that the road is not of sufficient utility to justify its being kept in repair, it is his further duty to summon the party proposing to dedicate before the justices at the next special sessions for highways, who are to decide on the question of the utility of the road ; but if the surveyor omits to summon the party, at the next special sessions after such vestry meeting, the parish is not liable to repair the road, and a mandamus will not lie to the justices, after the three months mentioned in the notice have expired, to view and certify that the road has been substantially made. Reg. v. Bagge, 44 L. J., M. C. 45 ; 31 L. T. 585 ; 23 W. R. 165.

Held, also, that the neglect of the surveyor to call a meeting did not enable the landowner to dedicate the highway to the parish, and the acceptance by the vestry was a condition precedent to dedication. Ib.

—— Effect of Public Health Act.]—In 1798, by a local act, trustees were appointed to repair, &c., the streets of a township, and to levy rates on the inhabitants, who on paying them were to be exempt from all other charges, for paving, &c. In 1816, A. laid out a street on his land, which in 1819 became dedicated to the public. In 1823, by another local act, the former act was repealed, and trustees were appointed for similar purposes, and it was provided that all persons should be exonerated from statute duty and compositions and all liability for highway repairs, that surveyors should be appointed to be in the position of surveyors of highways, all costs to be paid by the trustees out of rates, and when any new streets were properly paved, &c., on application by the owners of adjoining houses, to declare them public, they were to be public and repaired by the trustees, and where any streets set out on private property had been opened and used for three years, on application to cause them to be paved, &c., they should be deemed public. In 1851, the Public Health Act, 1848, was applied to the township and the local acts repealed ; and the local board having paved the street before mentioned, called on A. to contribute as an adjoining owner, under s. 69 of the last-mentioned act, which excepts highways defined by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 42, s. 13, to be repairable by the inhabitants at large. Rates had been paid in respect of the premises under the local acts, but the street had never been paved, &c., never been dedicated under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, and no steps taken by the trustees or the local board to make it public :—Held, that the first local act did not prevent a dedication to the public, that the second only applied to streets then in course of construction or afterwards constructed, and that therefore the street was a highway within the exception in s. 69 of the Public Health Act, 1848, and A. not liable. Hirst v. Halifax Local Board, 40 L. J., M. C. 43 ; L. R. 6 Q. B. 181 ; 19 W. R. 279.

—— Evidence of.]—If the owners of land suffer the public to have the free passage of a street in London, though not a thoroughfare, for eight years without any impediment, it is sufficient to presume a general dedication of it to the public. Rugby Charity v. Merryweather, 11 East, 376, n. ; 10 R. R. 528.

The plaintiff erected a street, leading out of a highway across his own close, and terminating at the edge of the defendant's adjoining close, which was separated from the end of the street by the defendant's fence for twenty-one years, during nineteen of which the houses were completed, and the street publicly watched, cleansed and lighted :—Held, that this street was not so dedicated to the public, that the defendant pulling down his wall might enter it at the end adjoining to his land, and use it as a highway. Woodyer v. Hadden, 5 Taunt. 125 ; 14 R. R. 706.

Ely Place, part of the liberty of Saffron Hill, Hatton Garden, and Ely Rents, is private property ; and, though it is generally open to the public during the day, has never been dedicated to the public. Paul v. Jones, 1 G. & D. 316 ; 1 Q. B. 832 ; 10 L. J., Q. B. 246.

If a passage leading from one part to another of a public street (though by a very circuitous route), made originally for private convenience, has been open to all the world for a great number of years, without any bar or chain across it, and without any person meeting with interruption, it is to be considered as dedicated to the public and it becomes a highway, to obstruct which is an indictable offence. Rex v. Lloyd, 1 Camp. 260 ; 10 R. R. 674.

Effect of Repairing.]—The defendant, to prove a public right of way over the plaintiff's land, shewed acts of repair done in a certain year by C., the township surveyor. The plaintiff offered to prove in answer an agreement made in that year, between C. and the steward of the plaintiff's predecessor, that C., in consideration of repayment by the steward, should repair a road which according to the plaintiff's case was the road now in question. The defendant's counsel objected, because it did not appear that the steward had authority to make such agreement. The judge received the evidence, and the plaintiff had a verdict. On motion for a new trial the former objection was renewed, and it was urged also that the evidence, when given, did not shew that the road to which the agreement related was the same as the one now in question :—Held, first, that (assuming the roads to be identified) the agreement, even if the steward had no sufficient authority, was evidence to explain the fact of repair, and was properly admitted. Ferrand v. Millman, 7 Q. B. 730 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 103.

Held, secondly, that if the evidence failed to identify the roads, the objection should have been made when the defect appeared, and that the point could not now be raised. Ib.

Acts to Prevent Dedication.]—If a person opens his land so that the public pass over it continually, they would, after the user of a very few years, be entitled to pass over it and use it as a way ; and if the person does not mean to dedicate it as a way, but only to give a licence, he should do some act to shew that he gives a licence only. The common course is to shut it up one day in the year. British Museum Trustees v. Finnis, 5 Car. & P. 460.

The erection of a bar, although it may have been knocked down, rebuts the presumption of a dedication to the public. Roberts v. Karr, 1 Camp. 262.

A gate being kept across a way is not conclusive that it is not a public way, as the way may have been granted to the public, with a reservation of the right of keeping a gate across it, to prevent cattle straying. Davies v. Stephens, 7 Car. & P. 570. S. P., Rex v. Bliss, 1 Jur. 960.

Occupation Roads.]—Occupation roads laid out through an estate for the use and convenience of the inhabitants are not thereby dedicated to the public. Selby v. Crystal Palace District Gas Co., 30 Beav. 606 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 595 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 422 ; 10 W. R. 432. S. C., on appeal, 4 De G. F. & J. 246 ; 10 W. R. 636.

There may be both an occupation-way and a public highway over the same road, for it does not, on becoming a highway, cease to be an occupation way. Per Lord Denman, C.J., at nisi prius. Brownlow v. Tomlinson, 1 Man. & G. 484 ; 1 Scott (N.R.) 428.

Deviation from ancient Path—Dedication of new Way—Evidence of.]—The right of deviation is not an inseparable incident to the grant of a highway, and is not to be presumed in the absence of evidence, shewing that it has been either granted by the owner of the soil or enjoyed from time immemorial. Arnold v. Holbrook, 42 L. J., Q. B. 80 ; L. R. 8 Q. B. 96 ; 28 L. T. 23 ; 21 W. R. 330.

A passer-by is not entitled to remove hurdles standing on land immediately adjoining a highway, on the ground that they may be at night dangerous to the public. Ib.

The plaintiff was the occupier of an arable field, across which was a public footpath, but he and his predecessors had the right to plough up the footpath when ploughing the field. The public, when the way was muddy, having deviated on to the plaintiff's field, he, to prevent them from straying from the line of footpath, placed hurdles on the sides of it, some of which were thrown down by the defendant :—Held, that the footpath having been dedicated to the public, with a reservation of the right to plough it up, on its becoming impassable after being ploughed up the public had no right, in the absence of evidence of such a prescriptive right, to pass over the adjoining parts of the plaintiff's field ; and that the defendant was liable in an action of trespass. Ib.

An ancient highway over a common or a down, was without authority or interference from the owner of the soil, diverted by an adjoining proprietor, who substituted for it a new road which was used by the public for more than twenty years. After the lapse of that period, the original road was re-opened to the public, and the owner of the soil, over which the substituted road passed, built a wall and planted trees across it. In an action against a party for pulling down the wall and cutting down the trees :—Held, that these facts afforded no evidence of a dedication of the road to the public, the public user being referable to the right of the public to deviate on to the adjoining land whenever the owner of the soil illegally stops a highway or suffers it to become founderous. Dawes v. Hawkins, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 848 ; 29 L. J., C. P. 343 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 262 ; 4 L. T. 288.

If there is an old way near to a person's land, and, by the fences decaying, the public come on the land, that is no dedication of the land as a way. British Museum Trustees v. Finnis, 5 Car. & P. 460.

In an action for an injury to the wife of the plaintiff, through the negligence of the defendant, in leaving an open vault or cellar unfenced, whereby she fell in, and was injured, the evidence was that persons were in the habit of going across the spot where the vault was, for the purpose of making a short cut from a street to the main road, by avoiding an angle ; but that the owner of the premises, as often as he saw them, turned them back :—Held, no evidence of a public way. Stone v. Jackson, 16 C. B. 199.

Rights of Owner.]—Subject to the right of the public to pass and repass, the owner of the soil of a highway has the same estate in the soil as he had previously to this right being acquired by the public. Harrison v. Rutland (Duke), 62 L. J., Q. B. 117; [1893] 1 Q. B. 142; 4 R. 155; 68 L. T. 35; 41 W. R. 322; 57 J. P. 278.

The owner who dedicates to public use as a highway a portion of his land, parts with no other right than a right of passage, and may exercise all other rights of ownership consistent with such dedication; and the appropriation, made to and adopted by the public of a part of the street to one kind of passage and another part to another, does not deprive him of any rights as owner of the land which are not inconsistent with the right of passage by the public. St. Mary Newington Vestry v. Jacobs, 41 L. J., M. C. 72; L. R. 7 Q. B. 47; 25 L. T. 800; 20 W. R. 249.

The provisions of the highway and metropolis local management acts, so far as they apply to roads and streets, are subordinate to the paramount rights reserved by the owner. Ib.

Therefore, when on a summons under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72, it appeared that the owner of premises adjoining a public street had caused heavily-laden waggons to be dragged to and from his premises across the footway, and had thereby injured it, the magistrate having found that such user was necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the freehold premises, and was not inconsistent with the general welfare:—Held, that the summons was properly dismissed. Ib.

—— Right to Plough up a Path.]—There may, in law, be a dedication to the public of a right of way, subject to the right of the owner of the soil to plough it up in due course of husbandry, and to destroy all trace of it for the time. Mercer v. Woodgate, 39 L. J., M. C. 21; L. R. 5 Q. B. 26; 21 L. T. 458; 18 W. R. 116.

As far as living memory went, the occupier for the time being of a field over which a footpath crossed, had been in the habit, in due course of farming, of ploughing up the whole field, and so destroying the footpath. There was no evidence of the existence of the footpath before living memory:—Held, that the inference to be drawn was, that the owner had originally dedicated the right of way to the public, subject to this right of periodically ploughing it up. Ib.

A footway across a field had from time immemorial at all times of the year been used by all persons, as of right, but the occupier of the field and his predecessors had also from time immemorial ploughed up the footway in such parts as they thought fit, and in other parts lifted the plough across it:—Held, that the surveyors of highways were not justified in repairing the way with hard materials so as to prevent it from being ploughed, or the plough from being lifted over it so easily as before, as it must be presumed to have been dedicated to the public subject to the inconvenience of being occasionally ploughed up. Arnold v. Blaker, 40 L. J., Q. B. 185; L. R. 6 Q. B. 433; 19 W. R. 1090—Ex. Ch.

—— Power of Magistrates to make Road over Land held for Public Recreation.]—Magistrates for a burgh held the links from time immemorial for the inhabitants, and, inter alia, subject to the obligation of preserving the same for the game of golf and for the recreation of the inhabitants. They had from time to time exercised powers of administration and management over the links. The magistrates proposed to make a macadamised road along the outside boundary of the links, where that boundary adjoined certain feus let off by them in 1820, which feus are no longer, in point of law, part of the links. P., an inhabitant of the burgh and member of the principal golfing club there, and others, the appellants, sought to restrain the magistrates either from making the road or from permitting any road to be used in that place for wheel traffic:—Held, substantially affirming the decision of the court below, but altering their interlocutor, that the proposed road would have no substantial interference with the obligation of golfing, &c., and that the road might be reconciled with its due observance; but that it was inconsistent with that obligation for the magistrates to alienate any part of the solum of the ground in question, or to abdicate their existing powers of administration, either by granting private easements to particular individuals, or, having made the road, to create a public easement by dedicating it to the public. Paterson v. St. Andrews (Provost), 6 App. Cas. 833—H. L. (Sc.)

Reservations—Right to make Cuts for Drainage.]—There can be no dedication to the public of land as a highway, with the reservation of a right of making cuts through the land for the purposes of drainage. Rex v. Leake, 2 N. & M. 595; 5 B. & Ad. 469.

—— Tolls.]—The promoters of an intended road by deed declared that the road should not only be enjoyed by them for their individual purposes, but "should be open to the use of the public at large for all manner of purposes, in all respects as a common turnpike road," but subject to the payment of tolls by the persons using it:—Held, that this was not a dedication of the road to the public, and that the road was not a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large under s. 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Austerberry v. Oldham Corporation, 55 L. J., Ch. 633; 29 Ch. D. 750; 53 L. T. 543; 33 W. R. 807; 49 J. P. 532—C. A.

Semble, an individual cannot, without legislative authority, dedicate a road to the public if he reserves the right to charge tolls for the user; and the mere fact that a number of persons form themselves into a company for making and maintaining a road, and erect gates and bars and charge tolls, does not make the road a "turnpike road," in the sense of a turnpike road made such by act of parliament, and so dedicated to the public. Ib.

Subject to existing Rights.]—A highway may be dedicated to the public, subject to a pre-existing right of user by the occupiers of adjoining land for the purpose of depositing goods thereon. Morant v. Chamberlin, 6 H. & N. 541; 30 L. J., Ex. 299.

—— Effect on Rent-charge.]—A rent-charge issuing from lands adjoining certain roads, and granted at a time when the roads were private occupation roads, in respect of the use of such roads, and the use of a sewer laid down in one of them, is not determined by the roads becoming highways repairable by the inhabitants at large, and the sewer becoming vested in and discontinued by the local authority; and it matters not that the grantor of the rent-charge had covenanted in the grant to keep the roads and sewers in repair. Merrett v. Bridges, 47 J. P. 775.

—— Dangerous Obstructions.]—If a highway is dedicated to the public with a dangerous obstruction upon it, such as would have been a nuisance on an ancient way, as, a flight of steps, or a projecting flap, no action can be maintained against the person dedicating it for an injury caused thereby. Robbins v. Jones, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 221; 33 L. J., C. P. 1; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 9 L. T. 523; 12 W. R. 248.

An action will not lie against the owner of a house having a covered area adjoining a public footway, which area was in existence before and at the time of the dedication of the highway, and before 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, for an injury to an individual from the giving way of the covering of the area in consequence of the wear and tear by public user. Ib.

Where an erection or an excavation exists upon land which is dedicated to the public as a highway, the dedication must be taken to be made to the public and accepted by them, subject to the inconvenience or risk arising from the existing state of things. Fisher v. Prowse, 2 B. & S. 770; 31 L. J., Q. B. 212; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1208; 6 L. T. 711.

A. occupied a house adjoining to a public street, with a cellar belonging to it. The mouth of this cellar opened into the footway of the street by a trapdoor. During the day this trapdoor was open, but at night it was closed by a flap, which slightly projected above the footway, and had so projected as long as living memory went back. B. coming along the footway at night, stumbled over this flap, fell and sustained injury, for which he brought an action against A.:—Held, that the cellar flap had existed as long as the street, and that the dedication of the way to the public was with the cellar flap in it, and, therefore, that A. was not liable, as the maintenance of such an ancient cellar flap was not unlawful. Ib.

A railway bridge spanned a road within the defendant's district, and whilst in that condition the road was dedicated to the public and vested in the defendants. There was less space between the road and the bridge on one side than on the other, and the plaintiff while driving along was injured by his head coming in contact with the bridge:—Held, that as the road was dedicated subject to this obstruction, the action against the defendants could not be maintained. Warner v. Wandsworth Board of Works, 53 J. P. 471.

Widening Highway—Dangerous Condition.]—The defendants were the owners of land on each side of a highway, which was originally ten feet wide. On one side of the highway there was a declivity gradually sloping down to a brook. The defendants widened the highway by increasing its width to about thirty-four feet on the side towards the brook, and it became necessary to bank up that side. The highway had never been fenced. It was in a hilly district, and was steep. The plaintiff was leading his horse and cart up the highway, and drew the horse across the widened part of the road to rest it. The horse staggered and fell over the embankment. The plaintiff brought an action for damages, complaining that the defendants had created a new danger alongside of the highway:—Held, that the defendants were not liable. Owen v. De Winton, 58 J. P. 833—C. A.

d. Adoption by Parish.

Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 23.]—Sect. 23 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50 (Highway Act, 1835), is not retrospective in respect of roads completely public by dedication at the time of the passing of the act; it applies to roads then made, and in progress of dedication. Reg. v. West Mark (Tithing), 2 M. & Rob. 305.

The formalities necessitated by the said statute before a road dedicated to the public can become such a highway, do not apply to a road made by trustees under a turnpike act. Reg. v. Thomas, 7 El. & Bl. 399; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 713; 5 W. R. 321.

—— Notice for Repairs.]—If a road has been dedicated to the public and used, but the necessary steps have not been taken by notice, under the above section, to make it repairable by the parish, it is still a highway in other respects, and an action is maintainable for obstructing it to the plaintiff's damage. Roberts v. Hunt, 15 Q. B. 17.

—— Satisfaction of Local Board.]—A landowner gave notice to the local board of his intention to dedicate a road as a highway; to which the board replied that they would not adopt the road, as it had not been sewered, levelled, &c., to their satisfaction. The landowner, however, obtained and enrolled the certificate of two justices, and the public then used the road, which was kept in repair by the landowner for twelve months; after which, it being out of repair, an indictment was preferred against the inhabitants:—Held, that the inhabitants were not liable, inasmuch as the road had not become a highway; for that, assuming the above provision to apply to the case, the road had not been made to the satisfaction of the local board, who were the surveyors. Reg. v. Dukinfield, 4 B. & S. 158; 32 L. J., M. C. 230.

—— Magistrates' Certificate.]—Justices, after a parish had resolved that a road proposed to be dedicated to the public was of sufficient utility, were called upon to certify that it was made in conformity to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 23. They refused to grant their certificate, being of opinion that it was but a part of a road, which in another part was not of the requisite width:—Held, that they were right in their decision. Reg. v. Surrey JJ., 3 L. T. 808.

—— Appeal against Order of Justices.]—Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 23, a special sessions was held after the vestry had deemed a highway not to be of sufficient utility to justify its being kept in repair at the expense of the parish. The justices made an order, in conformity with the determination of the vestry, that the highway was not of sufficient utility:—Held, that an appeal to the quarter sessions lay by the persons dedicating the highway against this order. Reg. v. Derbyshire JJ., El. Bl. & El. 69; 27 L. J., M. C. 189; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 755; 6 W. R. 444.

At Common Law.]—Where a way has been recognised as public in an act of parliament, it is not necessary that it should be adopted by the parish to make it a public way. Rex v. Lyon, 5 D. & R. 497; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 92; 27 R. R. 530.

A road dedicated to and used by the public becomes a highway, which the parish must repair, although neither such dedication nor such user has been adopted or acquiesced in by the parish. Rex v. Leake, 2 N. & M. 583; 5 B. & Ad. 469.

Where a public road has been made such pursuant to an act, which was to continue in force for a limited period, and the inhabitants of a parish through which it passed were thereby bound to do statute duty:—Held, that the performance of such duty was not an adoption of the road by the parishioners; and that, at the expiration of the act, they were not bound by common law to repair such road. Rex v. Mellor, 1 B. & Ad. 32; 8 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 109.

By a local act for the better governing a parish, it was enacted that no road which had not been repaired by the parish should be repaired out of the parochial funds until such road should have been surveyed by two surveyors, and certified by them to have been properly made and drained, one of the surveyors to be appointed by the vestry and one by the freeholder or his lessee. A road had been set out by the proprietors, for the purpose of letting the frontage, 5,660 feet, as building ground. Eight houses had been built and were inhabited, and twenty-six carcases erected. The road had been formed and constructed, made and drained, and used by the public for six months, and the freeholder and his lessee had appointed a surveyor, and required the vestry to appoint one, which they refused. The court refused to grant a mandamus to the vestry to compel them to appoint a surveyor, as such appointment would have the effect of throwing on the parish the burden of repairing a road which would not be so much for the benefit of the public as for the peculiar benefit of the freeholder during the time his buildings were being erected. Rex v. Paddington Vestry, 9 B. & C. 456; 8 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 4.

e. Property in the Soil.

i. Of Highway.

Title of Parish—Presumption of Grant to Trustee for—Long User.]—In pursuance of an inclosure act passed in 1774, the commissioners thereby appointed set out a lane as a public way over certain land in the manor of T. Since 1778 this lane had been let by the vestry of the parish every Easter to persons who paid for the hire of it and depastured it. There was no evidence to shew to whom the soil of the lane belonged before the passing of the inclosure act. Nor was there evidence of any grant thereof at any time to any trustee of the parishioners. The defendant, to whom the lane was so let by the vestry for a year, used it for grazing sheep thereon, though one of the terms of his lease was that he should not turn sheep into it. An action was brought by the lord of the manor of T. asking for a declaration that the soil of the lane belonged to him, and an injunction to restrain the defendant from grazing sheep thereon:—Held, first, that the true presumption was that the soil of the lane was not in the lord of the manor, but, notwithstanding 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 3, and the absence of any enrolled grant, was vested in some persons as trustees for the parishioners, and that, by virtue of 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 17, the churchwardens and overseers of the parish were such trustees; secondly, that apart from all presumptions the parish had gained a title to the lane by the statute of limitations, subject to the public right of way; and, thirdly, that the fact that the defendant had broken one of the conditions of his lease by putting sheep into the lane did not entitle the lord of the manor to treat him as a trespasser. Haigh v. West, 62 L. J., Q. B. 532; [1893] 2 Q. B. 19; 4 R. 396; 69 L. T. 165; 57 J. P. 358—C. A.

Rights of Adjoining Owners.]—Ownership of land adjoining either side of the road is primâ facie evidence of a right to the soil extending to the centre of the road. Cooke v. Green, 11 Price, 736.

And a recent right, founded on an inclosure under an act, does not make a distinction with regard to the general law. Ib.

The soil of a public highway is presumably vested in the owner of the adjacent land ad medium filum viæ. Salisbury (Marquis) v. G. N. Ry., 5 C. B. (N.S.) 174; 28 L. J., C. P. 40; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 70; 7 W. R. 75.

There is nothing in 3 Geo. 4, c. 126 (General Turnpike Act), to alter this presumption, or to vest the soil of that description of roads in the trustees. Ib.

If the lord of the manor, being owner of close A., adjacent to one side of a highway, and also of close B., adjacent to the opposite side, conveys both in one deed to one vendee, the soil of the road passes to the vendee, although the acreage of each of the closes is stated in the conveyances, unless there is enough in the deed to shew that the soil of the road was intended to remain in the vendor. Ib.

The presumption that the soil of a road, usque ad medium filum viæ, belongs to the owners of the adjoining lands applies equally to a private as to a public road. Holmes v. Bellingham, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 329; 29 L. J., C. P. 132; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 534.

Where the boundary of property is described as abutting upon a highway, such boundary must be taken (in the absence of evidence the other way) to extend to the middle of such highway. Reg. v. Strand Board of Works, 4 B. & S. 551; 33 L. J., M. C. 33; 11 L. T. 183; 12 W. R. 828—Ex. Ch.

—— Evidence.]—The right of the owner of land abutting on a highway to the soil of the highway ad medium filum viæ is founded on a presumption of law which exists only in the absence of evidence of ownership. Beckett v. Leeds Corporation, L. R. 7 Ch. 421; 26 L. T. 375; 20 W. R. 454.

In opposition to a claim of the owners of houses abutting upon an ancient street in a town that they were entitled to the soil of the street ad medium filum viæ, evidence was adduced, that the lords of the manor used formerly to receive tolls in respect of markets held in the street, which tolls they subsequently sold to the corporation of the town; that in 1694 they had, in consideration of a yearly rent of 3*l.*, granted a licence to persons to dig up any streets of the town in order to lay pipes for the purpose of supplying the town with water, which rent was paid to them down to 1858, when it was bought up by the corporation for 75*l.*; and that payments had on several occasions been made to the lords of the manor by owners of houses abutting on the street in respect of encroachments made upon the soil of the street:—Held, that the evidence of ownership in the lords of the manor was sufficient to rebut the presumption of law, that the owners of the lands abutting upon the street were entitled to the soil of the street ad medium filum viæ, and that consequently the lords of the manor had shewn a good title to the soil in question. Ib.

Though the right of the soil in a public highway belongs to the owner of the adjoining closes (when no other proprietor appears), usque ad medium filum viæ, this is only a presumption of law in his favour, when the original dedication of the road cannot be shewn by positive evidence. Headlam v. Hedley, Holt, N. P. 463.

The plaintiff granted to the defendant two pieces of land separated by, and each described as abutting on, a strip of land called a street, which the plaintiff intended to dedicate as a highway, but which was in fact never so dedicated. For more than twenty years before action the defendant used this piece of land for the purposes of his business in such a way as to make it impassible, save for foot passengers. Within twenty years both the plaintiff and the defendant had repaired some railings which separated this intended street from an adjoining highway; and within the same period the defendant had first enclosed a small portion of the street, and then fenced it in at each end, where it abutted on two highways. In an action to recover possession of the land:—Held, that the presumption that the soil to the middle of a highway belongs to the owner of the adjoining closed land, does not apply where such land abuts on an intended highway which has not at the time of the conveyance been dedicated to the public. Leigh v. Jack, 49 L. J., Ex. 220; 5 Ex. D. 246; 42 L. T. 463; 28 W. R. 452; 44 J. P. 488—C. A.

—— By Conveyance.]—Where a piece of land which adjoins a highway is conveyed by general words, the presumption of law is that the soil of the highway, usque ad medium filum, passes by the conveyance, even though reference is made to a plan annexed, the measurement and colouring of which would exclude it. Berridge v. Ward, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 400; 30 L. J., C. P. 218; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 876. S. C., at Nisi Prius, 2 F. & F. 208.

Where a deed of conveyance of land contiguous to a highway described the parcels, giving the acreage to the thousandth part of an acre, by reference to an ordnance map, and to a schedule and plan drawn on the conveyance, the measurements and corresponding numbers, and colouring of which did not include any portion of the highway, and further contained a recital that the trees on the land to be sold had been valued and the amount of the valuation, which, in fact, did not include any of the trees upon the highway, formed part of the purchase-money:—Held, that the presumption of law that a moiety of the highway passed by the conveyance was rebutted. Berridge v. Ward, supra, distinguished. Pryor v. Petre, 63 L. J., Ch. 531; [1894] 2 Ch. 11; 7 R. 424; 70 L. T. 331; 42 W. R. 435.

Strips of land lying along a highway, even though indirectly connected with parts of a waste, may well pass under a conveyance of the adjacent inclosure, though the deed purports to state the quantity of acres within the fences that were therein conveyed, if the words "more or less" were added. Dendy v. Simpson, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1058; 9 W. R. 743—Ex. Ch. Affirming 8 C. B. (N.S.) 433; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1197.

—— Access to Esplanade.]—An owner of land which runs right up to a public highway is entitled to access to that highway from his land, and that is so whether he is the presumptive owner of the soil of the highway or not. Where, therefore, a landowner, whose land adjoined a public promenade which had been also for many years used as a public highway for foot passengers, was deprived of his access to the promenade by a fence erected by a local board in whom the promenade had been vested:—Held, that a mandatory injunction must issue to compel the removal of the fence, and an inquiry as to damages be directed. Ramuz v. Southend Local Board, 67 L. T. 169.

—— Encroachments.]—The common notion that owners of land on the sides of a highway may encroach or enclose up to within fifteen feet of the centre is an error, and the question will always be as to the extent of the highway by user. Reg. v. Johnson, 1 F. & F. 657.

Rights of Owners — Nature of Estate.] — Subject to the easement acquired by the public, the owner of the soil of a highway retains the same estate therein as he had previously to any easement being acquired by the public. Harrison v. Rutland (Duke), 62 L. J., Q. B. 117; [1893] 1 Q. B. 142; 4 R. 155; 68 L. T. 35; 41 W. R. 322; 57 J. P. 278.

—— Injunction to prevent Laying Down of Pipes.]—The owner of the soil in a public way is entitled to an injunction to prevent a stranger from laying down pipes therein, and from keeping there any already laid. Goodson v. Richardson, 43 L. J., Ch. 790; L. R. 9 Ch. 221; 30 L. T. 142; 22 W. R. 337.

—— Removal of Obstructions.]—The owner of the soil of a highway may remove anything thereon not justified by the easement, though not a nuisance to the way. Reg. v. Mathias, 2 F. & F. 570.

One of the public has no right to remove an incumbrance to the soil of a highway unless a nuisance to the way. Ib.

ii. Of Adjoining Land.

Presumption.]—The presumption is, that waste land which adjoins to a road belongs to the owner of the adjoining inclosed land, and not to the lord of the manor. Steel v. Prickett, 2 Stark. 463; 20 R. R. 717.

And that, whether he is a freeholder, a leaseholder, or a copyholder. Doe d. Pring v. Pearsey, 7 B. & C. 304; 9 D. & R. 908; 31 R. R. 209.

When strips of land lie between the highway and the adjoining inclosure, the legal presumption is, that the soil belongs to the owner of the adjoining old inclosure. Scoones v. Morrell, 1 Beav. 251.

The ordinary presumption is, that strips of land lying along a highway, even though indirectly connected with parts of the waste, belong to the owner of the adjacent inclosed land between which and the actual beaten road they lie, and not to the lord of the manor, especially if the adjacent owner has done acts of ownership without interruption upon the land. Simpson v. Dendy, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 433; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1197. S. C., affirmed, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1058; 9 W. R. 743.

Primâ facie the presumption is, that a strip of land lying between a highway and the adjoining inclosure is, as well as the soil of the highway ad medium filum viæ, the property of the owner of the inclosure. But if the strip of land communicates with open commons or other larger portions of land, the presumption is either done away or considerably narrowed; for the evidence of ownership which applies to the larger portions applies also to the narrow strip which communicates with them. Grose v. West, 7 Taunt. 39; 17 R. R. 437.

Where the lord of a manor has conveyed land to A., and afterwards other land to B., and it appears that a narrow strip of land passed by one or other of the conveyances, but it is doubtful by which, no presumption arises in favour of A. from the fact that the strip of land lies between a highway and land undisputedly comprised in the conveyance to A. White v. Hill, 6 Q. B. 487 ; 14 L. J., Q. B. 79 ; 9 Jur. 129.

Evidence to Rebut Presumption.]—Where the question was, whether a slip of land, between some old inclosures and the highway, belonged to the lord of the manor or the owner of the adjoining freehold :—Held, that evidence might be received of acts of ownership by the lord of the manor on similar slips of land not adjoining his own freehold in various parts of the manor. Doe d. Barrett v. Kemp, 7 Bing. 332 ; 5 M. & P. 173.

Evidence of acts of ownership in the lord of the manor is admissible to repel the presumption that waste adjoining a road belongs to the owner of the adjoining enclosed land. Anon., Lofft, 358.

Upon a question whether waste land on the side of a road belonged to the owner of the adjoining inclosure, or to the lord of the manor, grants made by the lord of the waste lands lying on both sides of the road at a considerable distance from the spot in dispute, but in continuity with it, are admissible in evidence ; acts of ownership having been proved to have been exercised by the lord, on the waste in the immediate vicinity of the wastes adjoining to the plaintiff's inclosure. Doe d. Barrett v. Kemp, 2 Scott, 9 ; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 102 ; 1 Hodges, 231 ; 4 L. J., Ex. 331.

But grants made by the lord, of waste lands in other parts of the manor, which were not in continuity with the spot in dispute, are not admissible in evidence. Ib.

Though it is the presumption of law that a strip of waste land between an old inclosure and a highway belongs to the owner of the old inclosure, yet that presumption may be rebutted by shewing that there is other land also adjoining the strip to which it may have formerly belonged. Doe d. Harrison v. Hampson, 4 C. B. 267 ; 17 L. J., C. P. 225.

"Roadside Waste"—Not Vesting in County Council.]—The land lying between the metalled part of a main road and the hedges on either side is "roadside waste" within s. 11, sub-s. 1 of the Local Government Act, 1888, and does not vest in the county council under s. 11, sub-s. 6, of that act. Curtis v. Kesteven County Council, 60 L. J., Ch. 103 ; 45 Ch. D. 504 ; 63 L. T. 543 ; 39 W. R. 199.

2. Stoppage and Diversion of.

a. Under Inclosure Acts.

See Common.

b. By Order of Justices.

i. Generally.

Under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78.]—The 13 Geo. 3, c. 84, s. 63, only referred to diversions under writs of ad quod damnum, and under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 19. Rex v. Netherthong, 2 B. & Ald. 179.

—— Widening of Roads.]—The power of two justices, under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 16, to order any highway to be widened, extended to roads repairable ratione tenuræ. Rex v. Balme, Cowp. 648.

Sects. 6 and 63 of 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, did not authorise the surveyor to widen a road to thirty feet by removing a fence, unless the fence supposed to be an encroachment was actually upon the highway. Lowen v. Kaye, 6 D. & R. 20 ; 4 B. & C. 3 ; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 123.

—— Rendering Footpath a Cul de Sac.]—By 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, justices were empowered to divert and stop up certain highways, and to sell the part stopped up ; but by s. 17, if they found it necessary, the old highway was to be sold, subject to the right of way and passage to any lands, house or place, according to the ancient usage in that respect. In 1827 orders for diverting, stopping and selling a portion of a highway were confirmed at quarter sessions, containing the reservation of a free passage for persons on foot only over and along the land and soil of the highway to and from a certain public footpath communicating therewith at the letter E., as delineated on an annexed plan, according to the ancient usage thereof :—Held, that the effect of these orders was to render another public footpath which communicated with the old highway at another point, and was not marked in the annexed plan, a cul de sac ; and that a landowner was justified in closing a door at the point of communication. Reg. v. Waller, 31 L. T. 777.

—— Setting out of New Highway—Necessity of.]—Under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 19, a new highway must have been set out before an old one could be stopped up ; and it was not sufficient that another old highway was widened in parts to answer the purpose of a new road. Welch v. Nash, 8 East, 394 ; 9 R. R. 478. But see Reg. v. Phillips, post, col. 30.

Where a road was stopped up by order of justices, and a new one was substituted, partly over the ground of a stranger, and partly over an accustomed road, that was a sufficient compliance with the act, provided the new road conveyed the public to the same place as the old one did. De Ponthieu v. Pennyfeather, 1 Marsh. 261 ; 5 Taunt. 634 ; 15 R. R. 603.

Application to the court to set aside an ad quod damnum, on a suggestion of surprise upon the neighbouring inhabitants when the inquisition was taken, and for want of a new road being set out (in lieu of the road taken away by the person who issued the writ) in his own ground. Lord Chancellor held there was no surprise, nor was it necessary the new road should be set out on the party's own soil. Vennor, Ex parte, 3 Atk. 766.

—— Sufficiency of Certificate.]—Where an order of justices for the diversion and turning of a road recited that they had viewed the new road and found it to be in good condition and repair :—Held, to be a sufficient certificate under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 19. De Ponthieu v. Pennyfeather, supra.

—— Presentment under—Effect of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, upon.]—A presentment under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, was in progress when 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, which repealed that statute, came into operation :—Held, that the court could not give judgment upon it. Reg. v. Mawgon (Inhabitants), 8 Ad. & E. 496 ; 3 N. & P. 502 ; 7 L. J., M. C. 98.

ii. Prior to Highway Act, 1835.

Contents of Order.]—An order of sessions for stopping up footpaths must distinctly describe the parish they are in, their length and breadth, and order them to be sold. Rex v. Kenyon, 6 B. & C. 640 ; 9 D. & R. 694.

Semble, that to an order for diverting a road made by justices under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, the names of the owners of the land through which the road is to pass are not essential. Rex v. Casson, 3 D. & R. 36.

In an order of justices for stopping up an unnecessary highway under 55 Geo. 3, c. 68, it must be stated that it appeared to the justices on view that the way was unnecessary. Rex v. Worcestershire JJ., 8 B. & C. 254 ; 2 M. & Ry. 289 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 72.

Justices could not make an order for stopping up part of a highway as unnecessary, under 55 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 2, unless they had viewed the highway together ; nor unless the finding that it was unnecessary was the result of that view. Rex v. Cambridgeshire JJ., 5 N. & M. 440 ; 4 A. & E. 111 ; 1 H. & W. 600 ; 5 L. J., M. C. 6.

By an order of justices, it was stated that three justices having particularly viewed the public roads within a parish thereinafter described, and being satisfied that they were unnecessary to be continued, did order that such roads should be stopped up and extinguished :—Held, that this order was invalid, inasmuch as it did not appear upon the face of it that the justices were, upon the view, satisfied that the roads were unnecessary. Rex v. Downshire (Marquis), 6 N. & M. 92 ; 4 A. & E. 698 ; 1 H. & W. 673 ; 5 L. J., M. C. 72.

An order of justices under 55 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 2, for stopping a highway, began with this recital, "we," &c., "having viewed a certain public highway," &c., "and it appearing to us that such highway is unnecessary," we do order, &c. :—Held, a bad order, the words not necessarily implying that it was made upon the view "of the said justices" according to the act. Reg. v. Jones, 12 A. & E. 684 ; 4 P. & D. 520 ; 1 Arn. & H. 113 ; 9 D. P. C. 504 ; 10 L. J., M. C. 5.

Quære, whether the order should include an order for the sale of the unnecessary highway, and contain a description of its breadth, and a reservation of the rights of the parties ; and whether the order, as set out in the case, sufficiently shews that the parties were acting at a special sessions. Ib.

Validity of Order.] — An order of justices, under 55 Geo. 3, c. 68, stopping up more than the highway, was void. Rex v. Milverton, 1 N. & P. 179 ; 5 A. & E. 841 ; 2 H. & W. 435 ; 6 L. J., M. C. 73.

Such an order, stopping up part only of a highway, was void. Ib.

Justices had no authority to narrow a highway. Ib.

An order of justices under 55 Geo. 3, c. 68, for diverting a public footway and substituting a new one, which contained also an order for the stopping up the old footway, was void. There should have been two separate orders : the one for diverting, the other for stopping up. Rex v. Middlesex JJ., 1 N. & P. 92 ; 2 H. & W. 407 ; 5 A. & E. 626 ; 6 L. J., M. C. 10.

An order of justices for diverting a public highway and substituting a new one for it, containing also an order for stopping up the old highway, is bad, inasmuch as they have no power to stop up the old road until the new one has been made. An order for diverting an old highway and substituting a new one, must shew, on the face of it, that the justices viewed the line of the proposed new road. Rex v. Kent JJ., 10 B. & C. 477 ; 8 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 73.

If a new highway be not set out before the old one be stopped up, the legality of the orders of the justices for diverting the old road and stopping it up may be questioned in an action of trespass, notwithstanding such orders were confirmed by the sessions on appeal stating the fact of a new road being set out in lieu of the old one. The defendant cannot justify, under the general issue, the cutting the posts and rails of the plaintiff, though erected upon the defendant's own land ; there being no question raised as to the property remaining in the plaintiff. Welch v. Nash, 8 East, 394 ; 9 R. R. 478.

An order for diverting and stopping up a highway and substituting for it a new road is bad, unless it appears that the public acquire as permanent a right in the latter as they had in the former. Rex v. Winter, 3 M. & Ry. 433 ; 8 B. & C. 785 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 15.

Justices by 55 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 2, might make an order for stopping a footway as unnecessary, without ordering it to be sold. Rex v. Glover, 1 B. & Ad. 482 ; 9 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 38.

—— By what Justices.]—By 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, s. 36, sched. (O.) 30, Clifton is made a part of the parliamentary borough of Bristol, which is a county of itself. Except so far as that act operated, it was in the county of Gloucester :—Held, that after the passing of the Corporations Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, ss. 7, 8), the Gloucestershire justices could not make an order for diverting a footway in Clifton, their jurisdiction, in such cases, being transferred to the justices of Bristol. Rex v. Gloucester JJ., 4 A. & E. 689.

Justices in petty session having made an order for stopping a highway under a local act, giving an appeal, and the time for appeal having elapsed, it cannot be contended, on a prosecution for obstructing such way, that the order was bad, because the justices were not properly summoned to the petty session. Rex v. Downshire (Marquis), 4 A. & E. 698 ; 6 N. & M. 92 ; 1 H. & W. 673 ; 5 L. J., M. C. 72.

—— Consent of Parties.]—An order made by justices of peace, under 55 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 2, for stopping up an old highway, and setting out a new one, must shew that it was made with the consent in writing, under the hand and seal of the owner of the land through which the new highway was proposed to be made. Rex v. Denbighshire JJ., 2 D. & R. 52. S. C., nom. Rex v. Kirk, 1 B. & C. 21.

So, where an order of justices for turning a footpath was founded upon a consent, signed and sealed by the attorney of the parties in and through whose ground the new road was to pass, there being nothing to bind the principal :—Held ill, and quashed by the court, after confirmation by sessions. Rex v. Crewe, 3 D. & R. 6. S. C., nom. Rex v. Kent JJ., 1 B. & C. 622.

—— Description of Order—Plan Annexed—Notice without Plan.]—An order of justices for diverting a highway, and stopping up a part of it, described the highway by termini, and by reference to a plan ; the part to be stopped up was described as so many yards of the said highway, lying between certain letters on the plan, and coloured blue. Notice was published (pursuant to 55 Geo. 3, c. 68) of the order having been made; but the notice had no plan annexed, and merely described the road by termini and the part to be stopped up as so many yards of such road:—Held, that the order explained by a plan annexed was good, but that the notice was insufficient. Rex v. Horner, 2 B. & Ad. 150.

See S. C., on motion for the rule, sub nom. Rex v. Kent JJ., 1 L. J., M. C. 29.

"On Notice being given."]—By 59 Geo. 3, c. 134, s. 39, an order of the church building commissioners for stopping paths through a churchyard is to be made with consent of two justices, and on notice being given in the manner and form prescribed by 55 Geo. 3, c. 68; and no appeal lies against the order. By 55 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 2, the stopping up was to be by an order of two justices, provided that were given in the form annexed, which form stated that the order had been signed; but there was an appeal to the sessions, and if no one appealed, or the order was confirmed on appeal, the way was to be stopped, and the proceedings conclusive:—Held, that an order of the commissioners being final when made, must be preceded by notice, and that the words "on notice being given," in 59 Geo. 3, c. 134, s. 39, must, with reference to such an order, be read "after notice given." Reg. v. Arkwright, 12 Q. B. 960; 18 L. J., Q. B. 26; 13 Jur. 300.

Notice of Special Sessions, by whom to be given.]—The notices of holding a special sessions for the purpose of diverting a public highway, when given to the justices of the peace of the county acting within the district, must be given by the high constable of the hundred. Rex v. Surrey JJ., 5 B. & C. 241; 7 D. & R. 857; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 246.

Proof of Highway—Evidence of Order.]—An award, made in 1830, under an inclosure act, which empowered the commissioners to stop up highways, subject, nevertheless, to the order and concurrence of two justices, directed a public highway for carriages to be stopped up. Ever since the award (i.e. for twenty-eight years) the road had been stopped up by a gate, and had never been used by the public with carriages or horses. There had been, however, some user by foot passengers. No proof was given that the requisite order of justices had ever been made:—Held, that from the non-user of the road for so long a period, the jury might presume that there was such an order. Williams v. Eyton, 4 H. & N. 357; 28 L. J., Ex. 146; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 770; 7 W. R. 291—Ex. Ch.

iii. Since the Highway Act, 1835.

Power to Order on a Contingency.]—Justices of the peace have no power under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 85, to order a highway to be stopped up because, in consequence of matters to arise at some future time, another road not yet made will be nearer or more commodious to the public. Reg. v. Midgley Local Board, 5 B. & S. 621; 33 L. J., M. C. 188; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1125; 12 W. R. 951.

Validity of Certificate—Authority to make Application.]—When a highway, which was situate locally within the boundaries of a parish, was also within the limits of a local improvement act, and the commissioners appointed by that act were liable to repair, and entitled to the control and management of the highway, but no provision was made by the local act for its diversion, the inhabitants of the parish in which the road was situate, in vestry assembled, have no authority under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 82, to direct their surveyors to make an application to the justices to view the same in order to its being stopped up or diverted, and a certificate of two justices grounded on such an application is void. Wright v. Frant, 4 B. & S. 118; 32 L. J., M. C. 204; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 39; 8 L. T. 455; 11 W. R. 883.

—— Sufficiency of Statements in.]—A certificate of a justice for the diversion of a highway, need not state that the proposed new highway is nearer and more commodious; it is sufficient if the statement is in the alternative. Reg. v. Phillips, 35 L. J., M. C. 217; L. R. 1 Q. B. 648; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 920; 14 W. R. 791.

It is not necessary that the new highway should be over entirely new land; it is a sufficient substitution if an old narrow highway is widened so as to form a more commodious road. Ib.

It is sufficient if the certificate states that the old highway will be unnecessary when the proposed alterations are completed. Ib.

Proceedings were taken under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, ss. 84, 85, to divert a footpath which crossed the corner of the grounds of an asylum, the new path being of greater length round the fence, and upon what had been a ditch between the fence and the highway. Two justices certified that the new path was more commodious than the old, but made no mention in their certificate of any consent of the owner. A written consent of the proprietors of the asylum was inrolled with the certificate and plan by the quarter sessions. This consent professed to be by the owners of the lands or grounds through, along or adjoining which the footpath was intended to be diverted and turned, and they consented to the making and continuing the new path through, along or adjoining their lands or grounds:—Held, that this was a substitution of a new path, that the certificate need not mention the consent of the owner, and that this consent contained in effect what was mentioned in the scheduled form. Reg. v. Surrey JJ., 26 L. T. 22.

Two justices proceeding under s. 84 of the Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), for the diversion of a footway, found that the proposed line was "nearer and more commodious" than the old one. An appeal was made against this proceeding, under s. 88 of the same act; and the appellants set forth, in the statement of their grounds of appeal, that the proposed new way was not "nearer and more commodious" than the old one: a jury being empanelled to try the appeal, found that the proposed new way was "nearer," but not "more commodious," than the old one:—Held, that on this finding the court of quarter sessions could not make an order for diverting the footway. The justices in their certificate described this footway as "leading from W. to A." It appeared that the old footway led, in fact, from W. to a point in the highway leading from A. to several other places, and consequently that the footway was a mode of communication between W. and those places, and that the new footway, joining the highway at a part nearer to A. than the old one, was nearer as between W. and A., but longer as between W.

and other places. In the ground of appeal it was stated that "reference being had to the different places, &c., with which the footway communicated, the new way was not nearer than the old one":—Held, that the jury were properly directed to construe the word "nearer," not as between W. and A., but as between the point at which the new and old footway parted, and the point where the old footway reached the high road. Reg. v. Shiles, 1 Q. B. 919; 1 G. & D. 304; 10 L. J., M. C. 157.

A party, desirous of stopping up a highway in a metropolitan parish, required the vestry of the parish, pursuant to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 84, and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 112, s. 9, to give notice to and direct the clerk of the vestry to convene and assemble a meeting of the vestry for the special purpose of considering her desire. All the other steps preliminary to stopping up a highway, as required by ss. 84 and 85 of the former act, were duly carried out, but the two justices who viewed the highway omitted to state in their certificate that the surveyors had first duly obtained the consent of the inhabitants of the parish in vestry assembled, or were acting under an order of the chairman:—Held, that this technical objection to the form of the certificate did not invalidate the order of sessions by which the highway was shut up. Reg. v. Hervey, 44 L. J., M. C. 1; L. R. 10 Q. B. 46; 31 L. T. 505; 23 W. R. 231.

—— When no Appeal.]—When there is no appeal, it is the duty of the sessions to be satisfied that the certificate is correct on its face, and accompanied by plan and proof, such as required by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 85. Reg. v. Worcestershire JJ., 3 El. & Bl. 447; 2 C. L. R. 1333; 23 L. J., M. C. 113; 18 Jur. 424.

—— Must be Founded on Inspection of Justices, not upon Inquiries.]—Justices in certifying under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 85, that they have viewed a highway proposed to be diverted, and that the proposed new highway is nearer or more commodious to the public, must so certify from their own inspection, and not as the result of inquiries from other persons. When, therefore, justices certified that the proposed new highway would be more commodious to the public than the present highway because, "upon inquiries," they found that the old path was inconvenient, and the new path convenient:—Held, that the certificate was invalid. Reg. v. Wallace, 4 Q. B. D. 641; 40 L. T. 518.

—— Delegation of Discretion to Surveyor.]—Mandamus to remove obstructions on a highway. Return shewing that proceedings were taken under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 82, for diverting the highway, that two justices viewed the highway, and the proposed new highway, and certified that they had done so, and that the proposed highway was more commodious to the public, which certificate was laid before the quarter sessions; that no appeal was made, and the proceedings were regular up to the order of the sessions; that the order directed the surveyor to stop the old highway, and before doing so to make the new one, and in doing this not to pull down any house or building, or take away the ground of any yard. The return shewed that the proposed line passed over a building and a yard, and that the surveyors bonâ fide made the new line as near to the old line as could be without pulling down the building and taking the yard, and then stopped up the old way:—Held, that either the order of sessions was bad as delegating to the surveyors a discretion as to the line of the new highway to be made, or if the words to this purport were rejected, it did not appear that the order was obeyed; and the old highway was not shewn to have been effectually stopped. Reg. v. Newmarket Ry., 15 Q. B. 702; 4 New Sess. Cas. 241; 19 L. J., M. C. 241.

—— Neglect to give Prescribed Notices.]—Three roads, each in a separate parish, formed one system, and consisted of three limbs, running from three turnpike roads at the points A., B. and C., and meeting at a point D., so as to form a figure like that of the letter Y. The justices, purporting to act under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, s. 21, made three certificates as to each of the highways. The roads referred to in the certificates were described, one as running from D. to A., another as running from D. to B., and a third as running from D. to C. The certificates also recited that the requisite notices had been given. A notice had been placed at the points A., B. and C., but not at the central point D. The certificates having been affirmed on appeal:—Held, that a certiorari must issue for the purpose of quashing the order of sessions, as each of the orders related to a separate highway, one end of which was at D., so that the prescribed notices had not been given, and the certificate was invalid. Reg. v. Surrey JJ., 39 L. J., M. C. 145; L. R. 5 Q. B. 466.

The applicant for the certiorari resided in the neighbourhood of the highways to which the certificates related:—Held, that, by reason of his residence, he was a person grieved, and entitled to the certiorari as of right. Ib.

Expenses—Right to employ Solicitor.]—The charges of a solicitor employed by an urban authority to conduct proceedings at the instance of an individual for the stopping up or diverting a highway under ss. 84, 85, of the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, are not "expenses" within s. 84 of the act, so as to be recoverable in the manner pointed out by s. 101:—Semble, that all the steps required by s. 85 to be taken for the purpose of obtaining the order of sessions, are ministerial acts which ought to be done by the surveyor of the local authority. United Land Co. v. Tottenham Local Board, 53 L. J., M. C. 136; 13 Q. B. D. 640; 32 W. R. 798.

Notice of Vestry Meeting.]—Notice of a vestry meeting was given in the words following: "Hamlet of Trevecca,—I, the undersigned, hereby give notice that a meeting of the ratepayers of the above hamlet will be held at the vestry-room, &c. . . . . for the purpose of taking into consideration the proceedings now taken by Mr. John Parry, of ———, against Mr. Rhys Davies, surveyor of the Talgarth District Highway Board, respecting Blaenanbach road, and for other purposes connected with the highways of the above hamlet." The meeting so convened passed a resolution that the road should be stopped up, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 84:—Held, that, having regard to the fact that proceedings had been taken for compelling the parish to repair the highway, the notice sufficiently informed the public that any steps which might be necessary for defeating these proceedings, such as stopping up the highway, would be considered by the vestry, and that the meeting was therefore duly convened. Reg. v. Powell, 42 L. J., M. C. 129; L. R. 8 Q. B. 403; 28 L. T. 697; 21 W. R. 867.

Place for affixing Notices.]—The Highway Act, 1835, provides by s. 85 that upon proceedings under that and the preceding section for turning, diverting, or stopping up a highway, notices shall be affixed by the surveyor "at the place and by the side of each end of the said highway from whence the same is proposed to be turned, diverted, or stopped up," and "on the door of the church of every parish in which such highway so proposed to be diverted, turned, or stopped up, or any part thereof, shall lie":—Held, that it is sufficient to affix notices at the commencement and termination of the particular portion of highway proposed to be dealt with, and on the church door of the parish or parishes in which such portion is situated. Reg. v. Surrey JJ., 61 L. J., M. C. 153; [1892] 1 Q. B. 867; 66 L. T. 578; 40 W. R. 500; 56 J. P. 695—C. A.

iv. Appeal against Order.

To Quarter Sessions.]—An appeal to the quarter sessions lies under the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, s. 21, against an order directing that a highway should cease to be a highway which the parish is liable to repair. Reg. v. Surrey JJ., 39 L. J., M. C. 49; L. R. 5 Q. B. 87; 18 W. R. 166.

—— Time for—Notice of.]—Where sessions are regularly held on certain fixed days, at certain places in different divisions of a county, and in each division of a county (except the first), by adjournment from the preceding, the ten days' notice of appeal against a certificate for stopping up a highway, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 88, is to be reckoned with reference to the first day of the sessions held in the first of such divisions, though the highway is not situate within such first division. Reg. v. Suffolk JJ., 3 New Sess. Cas. 146; 5 D. & L. 558; 17 L. J., M. C. 143; 12 Jur. 480.

Notice of appeal against an order for closing a highway required by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 88, must be given ten days before the commencement of the original quarter sessions; not ten days before the adjourned sessions of the district in which the highway is situate. Swift v. Lancashire JJ., 22 W. R. 76.

Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 88, an appeal against a certificate of justices for stopping a highway cannot be brought unless ten days' notice has been given before the quarter sessions held next after the expiration of four weeks from the lodging of the certificate with the clerk of the peace. Reg. v. Lancashire JJ., 8 El. & Bl. 563; 27 L. J., M. C. 161; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 375; 6 W. R. 74.

Where the sessions had entered and respited an appeal, of which such notice had not been given, the court quashed the order of sessions on certiorari. Ib.

Where the general quarter sessions commence on a certain day, and are in practice afterwards adjourned and held on another day in another place, for the purpose of deciding matters in its vicinity, the notice of appeal must be given ten days before the day first mentioned, though the highway is in the vicinity of the latter place. Ib.

The 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 1, which requires fourteen days' notice of appeal to be given upon appeals (with certain exceptions) to the quarter sessions, applies to an appeal against a certificate for diverting a highway under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50. But the provisions in s. 84 of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, which requires the chairman of the vestry to give an order in writing directing the surveyor to apply to two justices to view the highway do not apply to a case where the proceedings are taken at the instance of a private individual. Reg. v. Maule, 41 L. J., M. C. 47; 23 L. T. 859.

Therefore, when an individual took proceedings under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, to divert a highway, and the vestry assented to his proposal, but the chairman of the vestry did not give any order in writing to the surveyor to apply to the justices, and he appealed against the certificate, giving only ten days' notice of appeal, which notice the sessions held to be sufficient, and upon its being objected that the certificate of the justices was bad for not alleging that the chairman gave the surveyor an order in writing to apply to two justices to view, they held such order to be bad for such omission:—Held, that the quarter sessions were wrong upon both points, for that the notice of appeal was bad for not being fourteen days at least, and the certificate was good. Ib.

An order made under 55 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 2, could not be confirmed till the sessions held next after the expiration of four weeks from the first day on which the notices required by law had been published. Rex v. Denbighshire JJ., 2 D. & R. 52. S. C., nom. Rex v. Kirk, 1 B. & C. 21.

Neglect to give Notice—Misdescription of Way.]—Upon a rule for a mandamus to compel the sessions to inrol an order of petty sessions, for stopping up a footway, there being fair ground for believing that many persons had been misled by the published description of the footway, and had therefore neglected to give notice of appeal, the court made a rule to let in the appeal. Rex v. Suffolk JJ., 6 B. & C. 110; 9 D. & R. 11; 5 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 27.

Statements in Notice—Party aggrieved.]—A notice of appeal, by an inhabitant of a parish, against an order for stopping up an unnecessary public footway, under 55 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 2, must have stated that the appellant was injured, or aggrieved, pursuing the language of s. 3, or the party had no locus standi in curiâ. Rex v. Essex JJ., 7 D. & R. 658; 5 B. & C. 431; 5 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 65. S. P., Rex v. Somersetshire JJ., 7 B. & C. 682, n.

By a local act, certain trustees of roads were authorised to make an order for stopping up part of certain old highways, and a right of appeal was given to any person who might be aggrieved by the making of any such order:—Held, that in a notice of appeal against an order of the trustees for stopping up a highway, it was necessary to state that the party intending to appeal was aggrieved by the order. Rex v. Yorkshire (W. R.) JJ., 7 B. & C. 678; 1 M. & Ry. 547; 6 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 59.

A notice of appeal against an order for stopping up a highway is sufficient if it states that the appellants are aggrieved by being compelled to go a greater distance to the next market town from their respective residences than they would have gone if the road intended to be stopped up were put and kept in a proper state of repair. Rex v. Ady, 4 N. & M. 365; 1 H. & W. 42; 4 L. J., M. C. 76.

In a notice of appeal against an order for stopping up a footway (under 55 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 3), it sufficiently appeared that the appellant was a party aggrieved, if it was stated that he and his tenants, occupiers of a farm and lands near the way, and who had heretofore used, and had a right to use it, and also other persons and the public, would be put to great inconvenience. Rex v. Yorkshire (W. R.) JJ., 4 B. & Ad. 685 ; 1 N. & M. 427 ; 2 L. J., M. C. 93.

Mandamus to Compel a Hearing — Appeal against several Orders.]—An appellant gave notices of appeal against three orders, all of the same date ; he attended the clerk of the peace to enter, and the entry was in the following form : "A., appellant, against an order of B. and C., esquires, dated, &c., for stopping up footways in," &c. He paid the fee as upon one appeal. At the sessions the appellant's counsel, being called upon to elect which appeal he would proceed with, proved his notices upon one, which was dismissed on a supposed defect of notice, and the order confirmed, as were the two others, nothing being said of the appeals against these, to which the same objections would have applied. On motion for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear the appeals, it appearing that the preliminary objection taken was unfounded, and that the appellant had in reality intended to enter his appeal against all the orders, the court made the rule absolute as to all three. Ib.

Defects in Certificate—Jurisdiction of Court.]—Upon appeal against an inrolment of a certificate by two justices for the diversion of a highway, and the stopping up of an old road under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, the sessions have jurisdiction to inquire into defects upon the face of it, and are not limited to the trying by a jury the three questions of fact stated in s. 89. Reg. v. Worcestershire JJ., 3 El. & Bl. 447 ; 2 C. L. R. 1333 ; 23 L. J., M. C. 113 ; 18 Jur. 424.

Distinct Orders in Certificate.]—On appeal to the quarter sessions against a certificate of justices ordering certain roads to be diverted and others to be stopped up, the court may confirm the order as to the stopping up, and quash it as to the diverting. Reg. v. Midgley Local Board, 5 B. & S. 621 ; 33 L. J., M. C. 188 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1125 ; 12 W. R. 951.

Costs—Discretion.]—The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 90, by which "the court of quarter sessions is required to award costs to the party giving or receiving notice of appeal (against a certificate of justices for stopping up a highway), whether the same shall be tried or not," is imperative, and the court of quarter sessions has no discretion to disallow such costs in any particular case. Pouncey, Ex parte, 2 C. L. R. 1593.

Notice of appeal having been given against a certificate of justices for the diversion of a highway, the party at whose instance such certificate had been given gave notice to the appellant that he had abandoned further proceedings, and should make no application to the quarter sessions. The appeal was nevertheless entered at the quarter sessions, and placed on the list, and being called on in its turn, and no one appearing, it was struck out. Afterwards, on the same day, an application was made by the counsel for the appellant to reinstate the appeal, and make an order for the costs of the appellant : —Held, that, inasmuch as by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 90, the court is required to give costs, whether the appeal is heard or not, they were bound to enter continuances and make such order for costs as by law required. Reg. v. Yorkshire (W. R.) JJ., 2 B. & S. 811 ; 31 L. J., M. C. 271 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 118 ; 6 L. T. 494 ; 10 W. R. 757.

Two justices, by an order at special sessions, directed a footway to be diverted, under the authority of 55 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 2, against which a party aggrieved gave notice of appeal to the next quarter sessions. In the interval, the justices gave notice to the appellant that they had abandoned the order, which had been filed with the clerk of the peace pursuant to the statute : —Held, that the sessions had no jurisdiction to award the appellant his costs of preparing to try the appeal, either under the appeal clause of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 2, or under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 80. Rex v. Wing, 6 D. & R. 323 ; 4 B. & C. 184 ; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 201.

—— Effect of Nonpayment.]—The nonpayment of costs awarded by an order of quarter sessions, on the trial of an appeal against the stoppage of a highway, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 90, is not an offence forming a subject for a conviction under ss. 101 and 103 ; but the nonpayment of them may be enforced by a distress warrant, issued by two justices under s. 103, grounded directly upon the order of sessions. Selwood v. Mount, 1 G. & D. 358 ; 1 Q. B. 726 ; 10 L. J., M. C. 121.

Such a distress warrant is bad, if it does not shew on the face of it an order of sessions for the payment of a specific sum as costs. Ib.

c. By Individuals.

Indictment for—Evidence of Motive.]—Upon an indictment for stopping up a highway, it appeared that the road ran through a meadow ; that a party was the occupier of the meadow ; that he was dead ; that he had planted a willow in the meadow ; that, at the time of planting, he said he did it because that spot was the boundary of the road, and that he did it to mark the boundary :—Held, that the declaration of his motive for planting the willow was not evidence of reputation, although the act itself might be. Rex v. Bliss, 9 Jur. 959.

Where, upon an indictment for stopping up a highway which ran through a meadow, there was a general verdict for the crown, the jury finding specially that a gate at the entrance of the road was contemporaneous with the road, the court granted a new trial, as the gate might have been only to prevent cattle from straying, and not to exclude the public. Ib.

—— Party Grieved.]—The prosecutor of an indictment for stopping a common footway, who had used it for some years before it was stopped up, is a party grieved within 5 & 6 Will. & M. c. 11, s. 3. Rex v. Williamson, 7 Term Rep. 32.

—— Practice.]—In an indictment for stopping up a highway removed by a certiorari, and tried at the assizes, the counsel for the defendant may sum up his evidence at the close of his case, as in a civil action. Reg. v. Broke, 1 F. & F. 514.

Contractor acting under statutory Powers — Duty to prevent Passengers going astray.]—

A duty is cast upon those who, in the exercise of statutory powers, divert a public footpath, to protect, by fencing or otherwise, reasonably careful persons using the footpath, from injury through going astray at the point of diversion. Hirst v. Taylor, 54 L. J., Q. B. 310; 14 Q. B. D. 918; 33 W. R. 582; 49 J. P. 359.

3. User of.

a. Obstruction.

i. What Amounts to.

Encroachments generally.]—The erection of a building within fifteen feet of the centre of a carriage-way, which has been repaired by the surveyor for the six months preceding, but not on any part of the highway which has been lately used for passage, is not an encroachment of which justices can take summary cognizance under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 69. Chapman v. Robinson, 1 El. & El. 25; 28 L. J., M. C. 30; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 434; 7 W. R. 12.

By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101 (the Highway Act, 1864), s. 51, if any person shall encroach by making any hedge or other fence on the side of any carriage-way, or within fifteen feet of the centre thereof, he shall be subject on conviction for every such offence to a penalty, notwithstanding that the whole space of fifteen feet from the centre of such carriage-way has not been maintained with stones or other materials used in forming highways. A person erected a fence upon the site of an open and uninclosed ditch, which was his property, which, however, was within fifteen feet of the centre of a carriage-way:—Held, that this was not an encroachment within the meaning of the section. Field v. Thorne, 20 L. T. 563.

By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101 (the Highway Act, 1864), s. 51, if any person shall encroach by making or causing to be made any building or pit, or hedge, ditch or other fence, on the side or sides of any carriage-way or cart-way within fifteen feet of the centre thereof, he shall be subject, on conviction for any such offence, to any sum not exceeding 40*s.*, notwithstanding that the whole space of fifteen feet from the centre of such carriage-way or cart-way has not been maintained with stones or other materials used in forming highways:—Held, that this enactment only applies to persons who have committed the encroachment upon the carriage-way or cart-way, or upon that part of the side which has been dedicated to the public. Easton v. Richmond Highway District Board, 41 L. J., M. C. 25; L. R. 7 Q. B. 69; 25 L. T. 586; 20 W. R. 203.

A post and wire fence was erected by A. within eight feet from the centre of a highway; he intended to keep it up for five years as a guard to a quick fence to be laid down at a distance of fifteen feet from the centre:—Held, that the justices should have convicted A. of unlawfully encroaching on the highway under s. 51 of the Highway Act, 1864. Clarson v. Arnold, 54 J. P. 630.

Ditches cut at side of Road.]—The right of the public to use a highway extends to the whole road, and not merely to the part used as via trita. Therefore, ditches fifteen inches wide and ten inches deep, cut completely across the strips of grass land at the sides of roads, so as to amount to a danger to persons walking along the strips, amount to a nuisance and obstruction. Nicol v. Beaumont, 53 L. J., Ch. 853; 50 L. T. 112.

Placing Bar across part of public Footway—Right to Use as private Carriage-way.]—See Pullin v. Deffel, 64 L. T. 134, post, col. 45.

Wall.]—Semble, that a wall inclosing part of a street is an obstruction to the safe and convenient passage along the street, within the Towns Improvement Clauses Act of 1847, whatever be the width of the uninclosed portion of the street. Bagshaw v. Buxton Local Board, 45 L. J., Ch. 260; 1 Ch. D. 220; 34 L. T. 112; 24 W. R. 231.

—— Right to Remove.]—See post, col. 44.

Putting up Stalls—Jurisdiction.]—Under 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 48, it is lawful to hold petty sessions, otherwise called statute sessions, in all shires wherein such sessions have been used to be kept, but there cannot be a legal custom to put up stalls for refreshments at such sessions on the public highway. And if such stalls are put up so as to obstruct the free passage of a highway, the persons putting them up are liable to be convicted under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72. Simpson v. Wells, 41 L. J., M. C. 105; L. R. 7 Q. B. 214; 26 L. T. 163.

The jurisdiction of justices is not ousted by a claim of right to put up such stalls. Ib.

Depositing Rubbish.]—Upon hearing an information and a complaint, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 73, for a nuisance, by depositing rubbish on a highway, the defendant claimed to be owner of the land, subject to a private right of road only, and denied the existence of a highway:—Held, that it was competent to the justices, as a necessary preliminary to the exercise of their functions, to determine the question of highway or no highway, and that title to the land was not involved in such question. Williams v. Adams, 2 B. & S. 312; 31 L. J., M. C. 109; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 816; 5 L. T. 790.

Depositing Stones for Repairs—Liability of Surveyor.]—A local surveyor of highways, in repairing a road, placed stones thereon, and allowed them to remain at night insufficiently fenced, and without sufficient light to warn the public against the obstruction:—Held, that he was properly convicted under s. 72 of the Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), notwithstanding that he might also have been guilty of an offence under s. 56. Fearnley v. Ormsby, 4 C. P. D. 136; 27 W. R. 823.

Depositing Clay.]—The plaintiff having a right to use a road, the defendants (a railway company) contracted for 20,000 cubic yards of clay; and on the 2nd of March fifty loads of it were brought by the contractor, for the purpose of being removed into the defendants' premises, and were placed in the road opposite the plaintiff's gates, so as to obstruct the entrance. All further carting into the road was stopped upon plaintiff's application to defendants, but the clay was left on the road until the 9th, when its removal was commenced, and finished on the 13th. On the 10th the plaintiff filed his bill, and on the 12th obtained an ex parte injunction to prevent the injury complained of, having, prior to the 10th, employed a person to remonstrate with the defendants, which caused the removal, although the plaintiff was not aware that the removal was intended when he filed his bill:—Held, first, that the contractor was the agent of the defendants, and that therefore they were liable for his acts; secondly, that the use of the road by defendants was unreasonable; and, thirdly, that the subsequent removal was no ground for dissolving the injunction, unless it could be shewn that the plaintiff was guilty of misrepresentation or concealment as to the probable continuance of the evil when he filed his bill. Ignorance of what the plaintiff ought to have known is not sufficient ground for dissolving the injunction. Semple v. London and Birmingham Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 480; 2 Jur. 560.

And see S. C., 1 Railw. Cas. 120, where the Lord Chancellor, reversing the decision of the vice-chancellor, refused an injunction, because plaintiff had not established his right at law, the affidavits being conflicting on the question of nuisance.

Sweeping Snow off Tramway Line—Sprinkling Salt on Snow.]—See, Ogston v. Aberdeen District Tramways, post, col. 53.

Laying Timber.]—Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 73, which enacts, that if any timber is laid upon any highway, so as to be a nuisance, and shall not after notice be removed, it shall be lawful for the surveyor, by order in writing from a justice, to remove the timber, an order of a justice, reciting that the plaintiff's timber was laid on a highway, and directing its removal, is conclusive to shew that the locus in quo was a highway, so that the plaintiff, in an action against the justice who made the order, cannot dispute his jurisdiction on the ground that the locus in quo was not a highway. Mould v. Williams, D. & M. 631; 5 Q. B. 469.

Standing of Vehicles.]—The mere fact that a piece of ground, part of a public highway, has for twenty years been used by an innkeeper for the standing of the vehicles belonging to his guests, is no answer to a complaint for the obstruction under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72. Gerring v. Barfield, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 597; 11 L. T. 270.

Where the commissioners of pavement within a certain district were authorised by act of parliament to direct and regulate the stands of hackney-coaches within the district:—Held, that this gave them power to remove a stand from a street where it occasioned obstruction in the carriage-way. Rex v. Rawlinson, 6 B. & C. 23; 9 D. & R. 7; 5 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 16.

Traction-engine on narrow Road.]—Persons using a traction-engine and trucks on a highway may be indicted for a nuisance, if they create a substantial obstruction and occasion delay and inconvenience to the public substantially greater than such as would arise from the use of carts and horses. Reg. v. Chittenden, 15 Cox, C. C. 725; 49 J. P. 503.

Roller left on Highway.]—The defendant left an agricultural roller between the hedge and the metalled part of the road, having removed it from a field on the opposite side of the road for his own convenience. A pony drawing a carriage in which the plaintiff's wife was riding, shied at the roller and upset the carriage, whereby the plaintiff's wife was killed:—Held, that the roller was an obstruction to the highway, and that it was an unreasonable user of the highway by the defendant. Wilkins v. Day, 12 Q. B. D. 110; 49 L. T. 399; 32 W. R. 123; 48 J. P. 6.

Where a steam-roller, though lawfully on the highway, constitutes a nuisance, the owners are liable for damage caused thereby, though they have not been guilty of any negligence. It is a question for the jury in each case, whether a steam-roller was or was not a nuisance on the occasion complained of. Jeffery v. St. Pancras Vestry, 63 L. J., Q. B. 618; 10 R. 554.

Use of Perambulators.]—The use of a public footway includes that of a perambulator as a usual accompaniment of a large class of foot passengers, if of a size and weight not to inconvenience other passengers, and not to injure the soil. Reg. v. Mathias, 2 F. & F. 570.

Whether, under the circumstances, the use of such a vehicle is justifiable, is a question of fact. Ib.

Riding on Footpaths.]—The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72, imposes a penalty on any person "who shall wilfully ride upon any footpath or causeway by the side of any road made or set apart for the use or accommodation of foot passengers, or shall wilfully drive any horse, &c., cattle or carriage, upon any such footpath or causeway":—Held, that the enactment applies only to footpaths (as well as causeways) by the side of roads, and not to footways in general. Reg. v. Pratt, 37 L. J., M. C. 23; L. R. 3 Q. B. 64; 16 W. R. 146.

—— Bicycle.] — See M'Gee v. M'Grath, post, cols. 54, 55.

Collecting Crowd.]—The appellant was summoned under the provisions of s. 72 of the Highway Act, 1835, for wilfully obstructing the free passage of a public highway at Sedgley. It appeared that he had marched into the Bull ring (which was a highway) at the head of a band, and had taken up his position there, and had addressed a crowd for an hour and a half, during which period no person could, without considerable inconvenience and danger, have either walked or driven across that part of the highway where the appellant and his band and the crowd were stationed. The magistrate was of opinion that, although there was a passage round the crowd available for traffic, the appellant was not entitled to appropriate to himself any part of the highway; accordingly he was convicted:—Held, upon the above facts, that there was evidence on which the magistrate could properly convict the appellant of an offence under s. 72 of the Highway Act, 1835. Horner or Homer v. Cadman, 55 L. J., M. C. 110; 54 L. T. 421; 34 W. R. 413; 16 Cox, C. C. 51; 50 J. P. 454.

Cattle.] — Under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, s. 25, the owner is liable to a penalty if cattle, sheep, &c., are found lying about any highway, notwithstanding they are under the control of a keeper at the time. Lawrence v. King, 9 B. & S. 325;

37 L. J., M. C. 78; L. R. 3 Q. B. 345; 18 L. T. 356; 16 W. R. 966.

By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, s. 25, if any horse, ox, &c., is found straying on or lying about any highway, or across any part, or by the sides thereof, the owner shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*s.* for each animal, provided that nothing in the act shall be deemed to extend to take away any right of pasturage which may exist on the sides of any highway:—Held, that the owner of cattle found straying on the metalled part of a highway was liable to the penalty, notwithstanding he had a right of pasturage on the sides of it. Golding v. Stocking, 10 B. & S. 348; 38 L. J., M. C. 122; L. R. 4 Q. B. 516; 20 L. T. 479; 17 W. R. 722.

By a local act, a barrier bank, made for drainage purposes in Lincolnshire, together with a road thereon, was vested in trustees, who were directed and required from time to time to let the herbage of the bank to be grazed with sheep only, at such yearly rent as could be reasonably had for the same. The road ran along the top of the bank, and was an open public highway. Sheep owned by a renter of the herbage, and depastured on the sides of the barrier bank, were found upon the metalled part of the highway, and the owner was convicted and fined under the Highway Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 101), s. 25:—Held, that the conviction was right. Bothamley v. Danby, 24 L. T. 656.

By the Public Health Act, 1875, highways (not being turnpike roads) are, in urban districts, vested in and put under the control of the urban authority for the district, which in some places is the local board. In 1771 the commissioners under an inclosure act set out E. and C. as private roads. In 1818 E. became a public road, and as such has since been repaired by the parish. C. has always continued to be a private way. Until 1863 the surveyor of highways, and subsequently the local board (to whom the office of surveyor of highways was then transferred, and who in 1875 became the urban authority for the district under the Public Health Act), were accustomed, year by year, to let the right of pasturage on the sides of E. and C., though several persons in the neighbourhood had insisted on the right to put cattle in both places without making any payment. In February, 1876, the local board let to the plaintiff the right of herbage on the sides of both E. and C. for a term, notwithstanding which the defendant insisted, during the continuance of the term, on turning out his cattle to graze on the side of both roads. The plaintiff thereupon brought an action for trespass against the defendant:—Held, that the action was maintainable so far as related to the sides of E., which by virtue of s. 149 of the Public Health Act, 1875, had become vested in the local board in such a way as to confer the right of pasture; but that the plaintiff's claim failed as regarded C., the local board having no title, and there being no such actual or conclusive possession on the part of the plaintiff as would enable him to maintain an action for trespass against the defendant. Cowerdale v. Charlton, 47 L. J., Q. B. 446; 3 Q. B. D. 376; 38 L. T. 687; 26 W. R. 687. Affirmed, 48 L. J., Q. B. 128; 4 Q. B. D. 104; 40 L. T. 88; 27 W. R. 257—C. A.

—— "Turned loose."]—By the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47 (Metropolitan Police Act), s. 54, a penalty is imposed on all persons who, to the annoyance of passengers shall turn loose any horse or cattle in a thoroughfare:—Held, that the expression "turned loose" means leaving the cattle without any control. Sherborn v. Wells, 3 B. & S. 784; 32 L. J., M. C. 179; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1104; 8 L. T. 274; 11 W. R. 594.

Where, therefore, a person sent his cattle without any halter, but under the care of a boy, to graze on a highway:—Held, that this was not an offence within the act. Ib.

Overhanging Trees.]—By the Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 72, if any person shall wilfully obstruct the passage of any footway, he is made liable to a penalty of 40*s.* A person was summoned under this section for obstructing a way. Evidence was given that trees and underwood on his land had grown over and across the way, so as to be an obstruction to the free passage along it:—Held, that the person, in merely suffering the trees to grow so as to be an obstruction, did not wilfully obstruct the way within s. 72. Walker v. Horner, 45 L. J., M. C. 34; 1 Q. B. D. 4; 33 L. T. 601; 24 W. R. 95.

—— Power of Magistrates to cut down.]—Magistrates have no power, under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, to cut down trees which may damage the highway, if planted for ornament and shelter. Frampton v. Tiffin, 2 Jur. 986.

—— Order of Justices on Occupier.]—The word "owner" in s. 65 of the Highways Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50) means the person in actual occupation. An order of justices under s. 65 for lopping trees overhanging a highway, made on a summons served only on the occupying tenant of the land abutting on the highway:—Held, to be valid, and in form sufficient:—Woodard v. Billericay Highway Board, 48 L. J., Ch. 535; 11 Ch. D. 214; 27 W. R. 593.

—— Lopping done by Surveyor on Default.]—At a special session for the highways, an order of justices under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 65, was made, reciting a complaint by the surveyors that the owner had refused and neglected to cut, prune, or plash certain hedges, and to prune or lop certain trees upon his farm, on the side of a carriage-way or cart-way, "whereby the sun and wind were excluded from the carriage-way or cart-way, to the damage thereof, and whereby also obstructions were caused in the carriage-way or cart-way"; that the owner had appeared, and the offence was proved; and the justices did thereby order the owner "to cause the hedges to be cut, pruned, or plashed, and the trees to be pruned or lopped, and the obstructions complained of, to the injury or damage of the highway, removed within ten days from the service hereof." Upon default of the owner to comply with this order, the surveyor cut one of the hedges, and removed the obstruction caused thereby, and, in so doing, cut down the thorn trees or thorns in question:—Held, that the order, if not valid, afforded no justification to the surveyor. Jenny v. Brook, 1 New Sess. Cas. 323; 6 Q. B. 323; 13 L. J., Q. B. 376; 8 Jur. 782—Ex. Ch.

Held, also, that the order, so far as the direction contained in it to cut, prune, or plash the hedges without any description of the extent to which it was to be done, was bad, but was good as to the residue, and justified the surveyor in removing any actual obstruction to the highways by hedges or trees, though, as to the trees, it was defective, in omitting to state that they were not planted for ornament, &c. Ib.

Held, lastly, that a statement, that the hedges and trees were growing on the plaintiff's farm, and on the side of the highway, was equivalent to a statement that he was the owner of the land next adjoining the road; so that the order was not bad altogether for omitting to shew that fact. Ib.

—— Recovery of Expenses—Mandamus to issue Warrant.]—The court will not grant a rule nisi for a mandamus to compel justices to issue their warrant to levy the expenses of cutting a hedge, pursuant to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 65, unless it appears that a demand has been made of the expenses from a person sought to be charged, and that the justices were informed of that demand. Whitemarsh, Ex parte, 8 D. P. C. 431; 4 Jur. 823.

Allowing Rain-water to Fall from Eaves of Building.]—C. was occupier of a stable, and also owner, but not occupier, of some cottages, and the dripping of the rain-water from the eaves of the stables and cottages obstructed the free passage of the adjacent public footways by flowing upon and over them, and caused public inconvenience to the passengers. C. had frequent notice of the obstruction, but did nothing to remove it:—Held, that he was not guilty of wilfully obstructing the free passage of the highway within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72. Croasdill v. Ratcliffe, 5 L. T. 834.

Making Fires.]—The lighting of a fire within fifty feet of the centre of the highway is not an offence within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72, unless done "to the injury of such highway, or to the injury, interruption, or personal danger of any person travelling thereon." Stinson v. Browning, 1 H. & R. 263; 35 L. J., M. C. 152; L. R. 1 C. P. 321; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 262; 13 L. T. 799; 14 W. R. 395.

H. was charged under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72, with unlawfully assisting in making a fire on the highway. He was rolling a tar-barrel that was alight, along a road, but no one was injured or endangered:—Held, that H. could not be convicted, as it was essential to the offence that passengers should be endangered or interrupted. Hill v. Somerset, 51 J. P. 742.

Removing Flagstones.]—Up to 1855 a footway across a brook had been by means of fourteen stepping-stones. In that year the highway surveyors reduced the number of stones, increased their height, and placed flagstones on the top of them, forming thereby a kind of bridge:—Held, that the surveyors were not justified in so doing, and that the owner of the land adjoining the brook having removed the flagstones, could not be convicted of obstructing the way under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72. Sutcliffe v. Sowerby, 1 L. T. 7; 8 W. R. 40.

Omission to remove Obstruction.]—Magistrates convicted the appellant of the offence of "wilfully obstructing the free passage of a highway," under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72, although the appellant had not done any act of obstruction:—Held, that an omission to remove an obstruction after notice to remove it might amount to wilful obstruction. Gully v. Smith, 53 L. J., M. C. 35; 12 Q. B. D. 121; 48 J. P. 309.

Obstruction of Cul-de-sac.]—A public footpath was rendered a cul-de-sac by buildings authorised by act of parliament; the defendant obstructed the path at a place between which and the end of the cul-de-sac there was no opening or thoroughfare. Upon an indictment for this obstruction, the jury found the defendant guilty; but also found that this part of the path, which the obstruction stopped, had ceased to be of any public utility:—Held, that a public path was still a highway, although it had become a cul-de-sac; and that the measure of public inconvenience caused by the obstruction of such a highway could be considered only with regard to the punishment of the person causing it. Reg. v. Burney, 31 L. T. 828.

ii. Removal of.

By County Council—Main Road.]—A county council is entitled to remove an obstruction upon a main road whether the soil is vested in the council or not. Such right is exercisable whether the obstruction has been created either before or after the passing of the Local Government Act, 1888. Harris v. Northamptonshire County Council, 61 J. P. 599.

By District Council—Absence of Conviction.]—An urban district council, as the successor to the urban sanitary authority, may remove encroachments on highways without a preliminary conviction, inasmuch as the highways are vested in them by s. 149 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and the alternative procedure given to them by that section or under the Highway Acts does not deprive them of their right summarily to remove encroachments. Reynolds v. Presteign Urban Council, 65 L. J., Q. B. 400; [1896] 1 Q. B. 604; 74 L. T. 422; 44 W. R. 479; 60 J. P. 296.

—— Roadside Waste—Recovery of Expenses.]—A district council in exercising the duties imposed upon them by s. 26 of the Local Government Act, 1894, are entitled to remove an obstruction which has been placed upon the roadside waste within their district, and they may recover the expenses of so doing in an action against the obstructor. Louth District Council v. West, 65 L. J., Q. B. 535; 60 J. P. 600.

By Surveyor.]—Semble, that after it has been judicially determined that a particular object is an obstruction to a public highway, the surveyors of highways may remove the obstruction. Bagshaw v. Buxton Local Board, 45 L. J., Ch. 260; 1 Ch. D. 220; 34 L. T. 112; 24 W. R. 231.

—— Injunction to Restrain.]—In a suit to restrain surveyors of highways from removing a wall inclosing a piece of ground alleged to form part of a highway, the high court of justice has jurisdiction to decide whether the land does or does not form part of the highway; and if the court comes to the conclusion that it does not form part of the highway, an injunction to prevent the removal of the inclosure cannot be granted. Bagshaw v. Buxton Local Board, 45 L. J., Ch. 260; 1 Ch. D. 220; 34 L. T. 112; 24 W. R. 231.

Semble, that a wall inclosing part of a street is an obstruction to the "safe and convenient passage along" the street within the meaning of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, whatever may be the width of the uninclosed portion of the street. Ib.

A public bridle-road and footway, fifteen feet wide, had been set out by an award which provided that the same should also be used as a private carriage and drift way by the owners of certain adjoining allotments. The plaintiffs, owners of these allotments, placed a bar across eleven and a half feet of the width of the way in order to preserve their exclusive right to the use of the way as a carriage and drift way, and brought an action for injunction against the surveyor of highways, who had removed the barrier for the purpose of repairing the way:—Held, that the public had the right to the use of the whole length and breadth of the way as a bridle-road and footway. Pullin v. Deffel, 64 L. T. 134.

—— Right of to remove Watch-box—Action for Trespass—Defence.]—By 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 10, it is enacted that if any stone or timber, &c., shall be laid in the highway, and the party placing it there shall not remove it within a certain time after notice, the owner of lands adjoining may do so. By s. 12, the surveyors of the highway may remove nuisances, encroachments, obstructions, or annoyances made or committed contrary to the directions of the act. By s. 82, in actions brought against parties for anything done in pursuance of the act, they may plead the general issue, and give the act and special matter in evidence. The defendants erected a watch-box or house, of timber, upon the highway:—Held, that there were no words in the act which enabled the surveyor to remove such a building, as being against the direction of the act; therefore that they could not, on action of trespass being brought against them, justify the removal under the general issue, but should have pleaded the special matter. Witham Navigation Co. v. Padley, 4 B. & Ad. 69; 2 L. J., M. C. 29.

By Private Person — Wall — Trespass — Defence.]—To an action for entering a close and pulling down a wall there, the defendant pleaded that the close was a paved public place, within the Metropolitan Paving Act (57 Geo. 3, c. xxix.), and that the plaintiff had unlawfully, and contrary to the act, erected thereon the wall; and because the wall remained incumbering the pavement, and because the plaintiff, upon the request of the defendant, refused to remove the same, the defendant entered upon the close and pulled down the wall:—Held, that the plea was bad, as it did not shew any necessity for the defendant's using a portion of the pavement obstructed by the wall, or that it interfered with the exercise of his right of passage. Bateman v. Bluck, 18 Q. B. 870; 21 L. J., Q. B. 406; 17 Jur. 386.

iii. Action for Injuries caused by.

Particular Injury, Necessity of.]—To entitle any one to bring an action for an obstruction to a highway he must shew that he has sustained a "particular, direct and substantial" injury beyond that which is done to the public. Benjamin v. Storr, 43 L. J., C. P. 162; L. R. 9 C. P. 400; 30 L. T. 362; 22 W. R. 631.

In order to maintain an action for obstructing a public way, a person must suffer some substantial damage peculiar to himself, beyond that suffered by the rest of the public who use the way. Winterbottom v. Derby (Earl), 36 L. J., Ex. 194; L. R. 2 Ex. 316; 16 L. T. 771; 16 W. R. 15.

In an action for obstructing a public way, the plaintiff proved no damage peculiar to himself beyond being delayed on several occasions in passing along it, and being obliged, in common with every one else who attempted to use it, either to pursue his journey by a less direct road, or to remove the obstruction:—Held, that he was not entitled to maintain the action. Ib.

An action will lie at the suit of a private individual who actually sustains an injury by reason of a public nuisance, which may possibly affect the public, and for which the person committing the nuisance would be indictable. Rose v. Groves, 5 Man. & G. 613; 6 Scott (N.R.) 645; 1 D. & L. 61; 12 L. J., C. P. 251; 7 Jur. 951. See Hubert v. Groves, 1 Esp. 148.

Where A. was delayed by an obstruction in a highway, and thereby prevented from performing the same journey as many times in a day as he otherwise would if the obstruction had not existed: — Held, that he might maintain an action against the person who raised the obstruction, as he had sustained an individual injury or inconvenience. Greasley v. Codling, 2 Bing. 263; 9 Moore, 489; 3 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 262.

Proximity of Damage.]—A declaration alleged that there was a public footway from a field of the plaintiff to another field of the plaintiff, and that the defendant obstructed the way, whereby the plaintiff and his servants, employed in the management of his lands and in tending his cattle, were compelled to go by a longer route, and thereby the work and labour of the plaintiff and his servants were necessarily consumed to a greater extent, and the plaintiff was prevented from employing his servants during such excess as he otherwise would have done:—Held, a sufficient allegation of peculiar damage to enable the plaintiff to maintain the action. Blagrave v. Bristol Waterworks Co., 1 H. & N. 369; 26 L. J., Ex. 57.

—— Causing Trespass.]—It is no ground of action that a person, by stopping up on his own land the continuation of a public footway over his neighbour's land, causes the public to trespass on other parts of his neighbour's land, to his damage. Ib.

Under Lord Campbell's Act—Roller left in Highway.]—The defendant left an agricultural roller between the hedge and the metalled part of the road, having removed it from a field on the opposite side of the road for his own convenience. A pony, drawing a carriage in which the plaintiff's wife was riding, shied at the roller, upset the carriage, and the plaintiff's wife was killed:—Held, that the roller was an obstruction to the highway; that it was an unreasonable user of the highway by the defendant, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages for the death of his wife under Lord Campbell's Act. Wilkins v. Day, 12 Q. B. D. 110; 49 L. T. 399; 32 W. R. 123; 48 J. P. 6.

Effect of contributory Negligence.]—H. was driving a mare along a highway. The mare took fright at a house-van belonging to the defendant, which was standing on the grassy side of the highway; she kicked and fell, and H. was thrown out of his vehicle and injured so severely that he died. The mare was a kicker, but H. did not know of her vice. The jury found that the van was a dangerous object; that the defendant had acted unreasonably in leaving it where it stood; and that the injury to H. was occasioned by two causes combined: (1) the van standing where it stood, and (2) the vice of the mare. They also found that H. was guilty of no contributory negligence:—Held, that on these findings his executors were entitled to recover against the defendant under Lord Campbell's Act. Harris v. Mobbs, 3 Ex. D. 268; 39 L. T. 164; 27 W. R. 154.

Unreasonable and unnecessary user of part of a highway is equivalent to the obstruction of the highway. Ib.

One who is injured by an obstruction in a highway, against which he fell, cannot maintain an action, if it appears that he was riding with great violence and want of ordinary care, but for which he might have seen and avoided the obstruction. Butterfield v. Forrester, 11 East, 60; 10 R. R. 433.

In an action to recover compensation for an injury occasioned by an obstruction in a highway, it was left to the jury to say whether or not the plaintiff was himself in any degree the cause of the injury: whether he had acted with such a want of reasonable and ordinary care as to disentitle him to recover:—Held, that the direction was proper. Marriott v. Stanley, 1 Scott (N.R.) 392; 4 Jur. 320.

In an action for killing an ass, which the declaration alleged to have been lawfully upon a highway when it met its death, it appeared that the animal, fettered by the fore feet, had been placed on the highway by the plaintiff, and was killed by being unable to get away from the defendant's waggon, which, without its driver, was coming at a smartish pace along the road:—Held, that the jury was properly directed that, although it was an illegal act on the part of the plaintiff to put the animal on the highway, still, unless its being there was the immediate cause of the accident, the plaintiff was entitled to recover against the defendant for the loss of the animal. Davies v. Mann, 10 M. & W. 546; 12 L. J., Ex. 10; 6 Jur. 954.

Defendants placed an obstruction across the footway during hours prohibited by the Metropolitan Police and Metropolitan Street Acts, so that foot passengers were obliged either to get over it, or go round vans in the roadway, or wait till the obstruction was removed. The obstruction was very slippery, and in attempting to get over it the plaintiff was injured. In an action for damages:—Held, that it was for the jury to decide what was the proper course for the plaintiff to have adopted, and whether or not his attempt to get over the obstruction was the act of a reasonable and prudent man, for if the inconvenience is so great that it is reasonable to get rid of it by an act not obviously dangerous, and executed without carelessness, the person causing the inconvenience by his negligence is liable for any injury that may result from an attempt to avoid such inconvenience. Lee v. Nixey, 63 L. T. 285; 54 J. P. 807.

Necessity of Precautions against Danger.]—A person placing a dangerous obstruction in a highway or in a private road over which persons have a right of way, is bound to take all necessary precautions to protect persons exercising their right of way; and if he neglects to do so is liable for the consequences. Clark v. Chambers, 47 L. J., Q. B. 427; 3 Q. B. D. 327; 38 L. T. 454; 26 W. R. 613.

The defendant had placed in a private road adjoining his ground a hurdle with a chevaux-de-frise on the top in order to prevent the public from looking over the barrier at athletic sports in his grounds. Some one, not known, removed the hurdle to another spot without his authority, and the plaintiff, passing of right along the road, soon afterwards, in the dark, and knowing the original position of the hurdle, but not that it was moved, ran his eye against the chevaux-de-frise and lost his sight. The jury, in an action for negligence, held that the original erection of this hurdle was unauthorised and wrongful, that the chevaux-de-frise was dangerous to the safety of persons using the road, and that there was no contributory negligence. They gave the plaintiff a substantial verdict:—Held, that the injury was not an improbable consequence of the defendant's act; that it was his duty to take all necessary precautions under the circumstances to protect persons exercising their right of way; and that the action was maintainable. Ib.

If a highway is dedicated to the public with a dangerous obstruction upon it, such as would have been a nuisance if placed upon an ancient way, as a flight of steps, or a projecting flap, no action can be maintained against the person dedicating it for an injury caused thereby. Robbins v. Jones, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 221; 33 L. J., C. P. 1; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 9 L. T. 523; 12 W. R. 248.

An action will not lie against the owner of a house having a covered area adjoining a public footway, which area was in existence before and at the time of the dedication of the highway, and was dedicated to the public before 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, for an injury to an individual from the giving way of the covering of the area in consequence of the wear and tear occasioned by public user. Ib.

Obstructing Access to a House.]—When the private right of the owner of a house adjoining a highway to access from his house to the highway is interfered with by an unreasonable user of the highway, he is entitled to recover damages from the wrongdoer in respect of loss of custom in the business which he carries on in his house. He is entitled also to recover damages on the ground that he has suffered a particular injury from a public nuisance. Fritz v. Hobson, 49 L. J., Ch. 321; 14 Ch. D. 542; 42 L. T. 225; 28 W. R. 459.

Rose v. Groves (5 Man. & G. 613) and Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co. (1 App. Cas. 662) followed. Ricket v. Metropolitan Ry. (L. R. 2 H. L. 175) distinguished. Ib.

The right of a landowner to use a public highway, e.g. for the purpose of bringing materials for the building of a house on his land, must be exercised reasonably. Ib.

If there are several ways of access to the land there is no absolute right to use the most convenient way exclusively without regard to the convenience of neighbouring landowners. Ib.

For any obstruction to a public highway, which is a nuisance, though such should obstruct the party's business, an action cannot be maintained by the party so obstructed; the only remedy is by an indictment. Hubert v. Groves, 1 Esp. 148.

A railway company, in the construction of its line of railway, and under the powers of its statute, temporarily obstructed a highway, adjoining which was a house occupied by a licensed victualler, whereby the number of passengers passing along the highway was diminished, and he sustained damage by the falling off of his business :—Held, that such damage was not the subject of compensation. Ricket v. Metropolitan Ry., 5 B. & S. 149 ; 34 L. J., Q. B. 257 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 260 ; 12 L. T. 75 ; 13 W. R. 455—Ex. Ch. And 36 L. J., Q. B. 205 ; L. R. 2 H. L. 175 ; 16 L. T. 542 ; 15 W. R. 937—H. L. (E.)

Duty of Owners of Adjoining Land—Fencing of Excavations.]—Where an excavation is made near to, but not substantially adjoining, a public highway, at common law no action lies against the owner of the land by a person who has strayed off the highway, and fallen into such excavation. Hardcastle v. South Yorkshire Railway and River Dun Co., 4 H. & N. 67 ; 28 L. J., Ex. 139 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 150 ; 7 W. R. 326.

A person while passing along a recently used way over the defendant's land instead of an ancient way close by, sustained injury by falling into a sand pit excavated by the defendant on his own land :—Held, that as there was no evidence of dedication of the new way by the defendant to the public, he was not responsible. Neill v. Byrne, 2 L. R., Ir. 287.

In an action for an injury to the wife of the plaintiff through the negligence of the defendant in leaving an open vault or cellar on his own premises unfenced, whereby she fell in and was injured, the evidence was that persons were in the habit of going across the spot where the vault was for the purpose of making a short cut from a street to the main road, by avoiding an angle, but that the owner of the premises as often as he saw them turned them back :—Held, that he was not liable. Stone v. Jackson, 16 C. B. 199.

Where owners of some waste land, which was bounded by two highways, and in which there was a quarry, worked it by their licensees, and the plaintiff, not knowing of the quarry, passed over the waste in the dark to get from one road to the other, and fell into the quarry :—Held, that no duty was cast upon the owners to fence, as the digging the quarry did not amount to a public nuisance. Hounsell v. Smyth, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 731 ; 29 L. J., C. P. 203 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 897 ; 1 L. T. 440 ; 8 W. R. 277.

A person who makes a hole in his own ground abutting on a public highway so that the use of the way is rendered unsafe, is responsible for an injury to a person accidentally falling into the hole while passing with ordinary caution along the highway. Barnes v. Ward, 2 Car. & K. 661 ; 9 C. B. 392 ; 19 L. J., C. P. 195 ; 14 Jur. 334.

If an excavation has been made so near to a highway since its dedication and adoption as to create or increase danger to the public, and an accident happens thereby, the person making the excavation is not absolved from liability by reason that a statutory obligation to fence the highway is imposed upon other parties, who have neglected to do so. Wettor v. Dunk, 4 F. & F. 298.

Parties Liable—Proximate Cause.]—If the proximate cause of damage is the plaintiff's unskilfulness, although the primary cause is the misfeasance of the defendant, he cannot recover ; at least, if the mischief is in part occasioned by the misfeasance of a third person not sued. Flower v. Adam, 2 Taunt. 314 ; 11 R. R. 591.

A. placed lime rubbish in a highway ; the dust blown from it frightened the horse of B., and nearly carried him into contact with a passing waggon, in avoiding which, he unskilfully drove over other rubbish placed in the road by C., and was overthrown and hurt :—Held, that B. could not recover against A. Ib.

—— Highway Board.]—A highway board are liable for damages in respect of an injury caused by a heap of stones projecting into the road, which had been placed there by one of their servants. Tucker v. Axbridge Highway Board, 53 J. P. 87.

—— Local Board.]—The defendants, as the highway and lighting authority, had erected a post in the centre of a footpath, and near the post a lamp was placed which was lighted at night. The plaintiff was injured by running against the post when the lamp was out or unlighted :—Held, that the defendants were liable. Lamley v. East Retford Corporation, 55 J. P. 133—C. A.

A heap of stones was left by the side of a road without light, and the plaintiff on a dark night drove his cart against it, and was upset and injured. The road was in the district of which the corporation was the local board of health, and the heap was left there by the negligence of persons employed by the corporation to repair the roads :—Held, that the corporation was liable, as the local board, to an action for the negligence of their servants ; and was not exempt from liability by reason of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 117, which imposes on them the same duties and liabilities as a surveyor of highways. Foreman v. Canterbury Corporation, 40 L. J., Q. B. 138 ; L. R. 6 Q. B. 214 ; 24 L. T. 385 ; 19 W. R. 719.

—— Owner of Traction Engine.]—The owners of a traction engine are responsible for its general management on the highway by their servants. Reg. v. Chittenden, 15 Cox, C. C. 725 ; 49 J. P. 503.

—— Negligence of Contractor.]—A company contracted with A. for the laying down of their main gas pipes in the streets of a town, having no special legislative powers for such purpose. A.'s servants left a heap of earth and stones which had been thrown out of the trenches dug for receiving the pipe in one of the streets, and B., in passing along the street, tumbled over it and was injured:—Held, that the company was liable for the injury occasioned to B. Ellis v. Sheffield Gas Consumers' Co., 2 El. & Bl. 767 ; 2 C. L. R. 249 ; 23 L. J., Q. B. 42 ; 18 Jur. 146 ; 2 W. R. 19.

A workman in a government dockyard, which he was not allowed to leave during the day, returning to his place of work from a necessary in the dockyard, which he habitually used, by one of several practicable routes which he was permitted to take, accidentally fell, and had his arm injured by a revolving shaft insufficiently fenced, which had been placed in the road by a government contractor, who placed his works on the spot by permission of the government :—Held, that the contractor was not responsible. Bolch v. Smith, 7 H. & N. 736 ; 31 L. J., Ex.

201 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 197 ; 6 L. T. 158 ; 10 W. R. 387.

—— Negligence of Sub-contractor.]—A. employed B. to construct a drain in a public highway, B. employed C. to fill in the earth over the brickwork and to carry away the surplus : C., in performing his work, left the earth raised so much above the level of the road, that D., driving in the dark, was thereby upset and sustained injury :—Held, that A. was not responsible for the negligence of C. Peachey v. Rowland, 13 C. B. 182 ; 22 L. J., C. P. 81 ; 17 Jur. 764.

—— Mine-owner working subjacent Minerals—Subsidence—Level-crossing—Ballast placed by Railway to maintain Level—Nominal Damages.]—Where a mine-owner, by properly working minerals under a highway vested in the local authority, caused a gradual subsidence of the highway, and a railway company, over whose line the highway crossed on the level, placed ballast under their line to prevent it sinking and thereby obstructed the highway, the mine-owner was held not liable to the local authority for damages for the obstruction so caused. Per Collins, J. (Wright, J., dubitante), that an action for nominal damages would lie for interference with the proprietary rights of the local authority, as it would in the case of an ordinary owner, although no appreciable damage had been done by the subsidence. Att.-Gen. v. Conduit Colliery Co., 64 L. J., Q. B. 207 ; [1895] 1 Q. B. 301 ; 15 R. 267 ; 71 L. T. 771 ; 43 W. R. 366 ; 59 J. P. 70.

—— Company in Possession of Way under Statutory Right—Accident—Liability of Owner of Way.]—The defendants were the owners of a quay, over which there was a public right of way to their docks. The Great Eastern Railway Company by their private act were empowered to, and did enter into an arrangement with the defendants to lay tramways connecting the docks with the railway system. The company were to keep the tramways in good working order, under the Tramways Act, 1870. The company, as promoters, gave notice to the defendants of their intention to open and break up the road for the purpose of doubling the rails at a particular point. The company did break up the highway for their tramway purposes. The plaintiff was injured by being thrown from his cart through the defective condition of the roadway at the place where the works were being carried out, and brought his action for compensation against the defendants as owners of the highway. The jury at the trial found that the accident to the plaintiff had been caused by the negligence of the railway company, who were in possession of the spot where the occurrence took place, and that the roadway was in a defective condition owing to a breach of duty on the part of the railway company, and gave the plaintiff substantial damages :—Held, that as the railway company were carrying out their works not under the orders or as licensees of the defendants, but under their statutory powers, and were in sole possession of the place where the accident happened, which was entirely under their control, and the negligence causing the accident was that of the railway company and not of the defendants, the verdict ought to be entered for the defendants. Barham v. Ipswich Dock Commissioners, 54 L. T. 23.

iv. Injunction.

Injunction—Rights of Owner.]—The owner of the soil of a public way is entitled to an injunction to prevent a stranger from laying down pipes therein, and from keeping there any already laid. Goodson v. Richardson, 43 L. J., Ch. 790 ; L. R. 9 Ch. 221 ; 30 L. T. 142 ; 22 W. R. 337.

—— Amount of Inconvenience.]—A railway company, being in the use and occupation of a railway bridge over a highway, and being owners of the soil on either side of the road, commenced the construction of buttresses in the road, on a line with the existing abutments, for the purpose of widening their bridge. The plaintiffs, in whom the soil of the road was vested under the Metropolitan Management Act, as surveyors of the highways, filed a bill to restrain the company from further narrowing the road, on the ground of public inconvenience :—Held, that the inconvenience was not of sufficient magnitude for the interference of the court. Wandsworth Board of Works v. L. & S. W. Ry., 31 L. J., Ch. 854 ; 10 W. R. 814.

—— Subsidence — Level raised by County Council—Interference with Access to Adjoining Land.] — A certain highway, which was not vested in the county council, but in certain frontagers, subsided from time to time, together with the adjoining land, owing to pumping operations. The highway formed one of the approaches to a bridge. The county council, in whom the roadway over the bridge was vested, resolved to raise it, together with the approaches, including the highway in question. The plaintiff, as one of the frontagers in whom the highway was vested, complained that the county council by raising the level of the highway would interfere with the access to his premises, and claimed an injunction to restrain the county council from carrying out the work of raising the level of the highway. At the trial before Day, J., the jury stated "in the absence of written evidence, they were not satisfied that the height of the roadway was going to be raised above the level at which it originally stood." Day, J., thereupon gave judgment for the county council :—Held, that such judgment was right. Atherton v. Cheshire County Council, 60 J. P. 6 —C. A.

—— Dissolution of—Removal of Obstruction.]—See Semple v. London and Birmingham Ry., ante, col. 39.

—— Costs.]—Sect. 109 of the Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), which provides that where an action is brought against any person for anything done under the authority of the act, and judgment shall be given for the defendant, he shall have costs as between attorney and client, does not apply to an action for an injunction in the chancery division. Pullin v. Deffel, 64 L. T. 134.

Mandatory Injunction — Fence preventing Access to Promenade.] — Where a landowner whose land adjoined a public promenade which had been also used as a public highway for foot passengers was deprived of his access to the promenade by a fence erected by a local board in whom the promenade had been vested, it was held that a mandatory injunction must issue to compel the renewal of the fence and an inquiry as to damages be directed. Ramuz v. Southend Local Board, 67 L. T. 169.

Injunction or Information.]—The vestry of a parish, who, by virtue of a local act, combined with the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102, are constituted the custodians of ways within the parish, and are empowered, in case of obstruction of such ways, to take such proceedings for the opening them as they may think fit, must, if they institute proceedings in chancery for the removal of such an obstruction, do so by information in the name of the attorney-general, and not by bill. Bermondsey Vestry v. Brown, L. R. 2 Eq. 204; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1031; 13 L. T. 574; 14 W. R. 213.

—— Where Particular Injury.]—Where a plaintiff suffers a particular injury from the obstruction of a public way, a bill for an injunction in equity will lie, and the attorney-general need not be a party. Cook v. Bath Corporation, L. R. 6 Eq. 177.

Scots Law—Interdict—Sweeping Snow off Tramway Line—Sprinkling Salt on Snow.]—Although road authorities are invested with large discretionary powers in regard to the cleaning of streets and the regulation of traffic, and a court of law would decline to interfere with a due exercise of that discretion, they have no power or discretion in the case of a nuisance, which the legislature has not expressly or by necessary implication sanctioned, either to commit it themselves or to authorise its commission by others. Ogston v. Aberdeen District Tramways, 66 L. J., P. C. 1; [1897] A. C. 111; 75 L. T. 633; 61 J. P. 436—H. L. (Sc.)

The appellant sued for an interdict to prevent the respondents from continuing the practice of sweeping away the snow from their tramway-rails, and sprinkling salt on the snow in order to melt it in such a way as to cause a nuisance. The court of session refused the note of suspension and interdict on the ground that the local authority, to which was entrusted the duty of seeing that the streets were cleared in such an emergency as a snowstorm, had approved the method adopted by the respondents. The house remitted the case to the second division of the court of session to pronounce decree of interdict. Ib.

iv. Other Proceedings.

Summary Proceedings—Several Convictions—Continuing Offence.]—A person was convicted at petty sessions, in June, 1893, for obstructing the free passage of a road by "erecting" a barbed wire fence thereon, and was afterwards convicted on four separate charges of obstructing, on August 7, 14, 21 and 28, 1893, respectively, the free passage of the road by "erecting and maintaining" a barbed wire fence thereon. The fence was the same one, the defendant not having removed it after the first conviction:—Held, that the convictions were good, the obstructing on each day being a separate offence. Reg. v. Dublin County JJ., [1894] 2 Ir. R. 527.

—— Suing for Penalty—Time for.]—Under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, s. 51, which enacts that if any person shall encroach by making or causing to be made any building or fence on the side of any carriage way within fifteen feet from the centre thereof, he shall be subject to a penalty not exceeding 40*s.*, the encroachment is not a continuing offence, and the six months' limitation created by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11, commences from the completion of such building or fence. Coggins v. Bennett, 2 C. P. D. 568.

—— Highway within Metropolitan Area—Power of Police to Prosecute.]—A person, by singing hymns, occasioned a crowd to assemble, and thereby obstructed a certain highway within the metropolitan police district. An information was accordingly preferred against him by an inspector of police, under s. 72 of the Highway Act:—Held, that the provisions of s. 72 of the Highway Act were applicable to highways within the metropolitan area. Held, also, that a prosecution under s. 72 of the act might be initiated by any one, and therefore that the proceedings taken by the police were valid. Back v. Holmes, 57 L. J., M. C. 37; 56 L. T. 713; 16 Cox, C. C. 263; 51 J. P. 693.

—— Dismissal of Charge—Appeal to Quarter Sessions.]—A vestry summoned C. under s. 72 of the Highway Act, 1835, for unlawfully and wilfully obstructing the free passage of a highway by erecting a fence across it. The charge was dismissed by the justices who heard it. The 105th section of the same act provides that, "if any person shall think himself aggrieved by . . . any order, conviction, judgment, or determination made . . . by any justice . . . such person may appeal to the justices at the next general quarter sessions of the peace . . ." The vestry appealed against the dismissal of their summons, and the justices at the general quarter sessions declined jurisdiction:—Held, that s. 105 gave no appeal except in the case of a conviction. Reg. v. County of London JJ., Fulham Vestry, Ex parte, 59 L. J., M. C. 146; 25 Q. B. D. 357; 63 L. T. 243; 39 W. R. 11; 55 J. P. 56.

Indictment—New Trial—Misfeasance.]—The court has power to order a new trial not only in cases of mere non-feasance, but also where the defendant has been convicted of positive misfeasance. Reg. v. Berger, 63 L. J., Q. B. 529; [1894] 1 Q. B. 823; 10 R. 245; 70 L. T. 807; 42 W. R. 541; 17 Cox, C. C. 761; 58 J. P. 416.

b. Use of Bicycles.

Bicycle, whether a Carriage.]—A bicycle is a "carriage" within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 78. Taylor v. Goodwin, infra.

A bicycle is a "carriage" under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92. M'Gee v. M'Grath, infra.

A bicycle is a "vehicle" within s. 12 of the Liverpool Corporation Act, 1889. Ellis v. Nott-Bower, infra.

Riding on Footpath.]—To convict a person of riding or driving any carriage, e.g. a bicycle, on a footpath under s. 72 of the Highway Act, 1835, it is not necessary to prove that such person has caused injury to the highway, or injury, interruption or personal danger to any person travelling thereon. Brotherton v. Tittensor, 60 J. P. 72.

A person riding a bicycle on a footpath along the side of a public road in a country district, may, although no evidence can be produced of obstruction to the free passage of foot-passengers along that footpath, or of any foot-passenger on the same footpath being in sight of the person riding, be summarily convicted, under sub-s. 3 of s. 13 of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, for wilfully preventing and interrupting the free passage of persons along the road of which the footpath forms a part. A bicycle is a "carriage." M'Gee v. M'Grath, 30 L. R., Ir. 41.

Riding Furiously.]—A person riding a bicycle on a highway at such a pace as to be dangerous to the passers-by, may be convicted of furiously driving a carriage, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 78. Taylor v. Goodwin, 48 L. J., M. C. 104; 4 Q. B. D. 228; 40 L. T. 458; 27 W. R. 489.

Travelling at Night without Lamp—Arrest by Police Constable—Assault.]—The powers given under s. 78 of the Highway Act, 1835, to apprehend without warrant drivers of carriages offending against that act, are not incorporated in s. 85 of the Local Government Act, 1888, which declares bicycles to be carriages within the highway acts, and a police constable cannot arrest a bicyclist who commits the offence under s. 85 of riding at night without a lighted lamp, and who refuses to stop when called upon. Hatton v. Treeby, 66 L. J., Q. B. 729; [1897] 2 Q. B. 452; 77 L. T. 309; 46 W. R. 6; 61 J. P. 586.

For Displaying Advertisements.]—A bicycle is a vehicle within the meaning of s. 12 of the Liverpool Corporation Act, 1889, which provides that it shall not be lawful in any street in the city to use any vehicle exclusively or principally for the purpose of displaying advertisements without the consent of the corporation. Ellis v. Nott-Bower, 60 J. P. 760.

c. Use of Locomotives.

Statutes.]—59 & 60 Vict. c. 36, is the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896.

57 & 58 Vict. c. 37, removes restrictions on the use of locomotive engines for threshing purposes.

Locomotives, what are—Threshing-machine.]—A portable steam-engine, upon wheels and drawn by horse-power, used to drive a threshing-machine within a barn, but not fixed thereto or to the soil, is within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 70. Smith v. Stokes, 4 B. & S. 84; 32 L. J., M. C. 199; 8 L. T. 425; 11 W. R. 753.

An owner of a steam threshing-machine lent it to hire to a farmer, and sent his man with it, who superintended it. The machine was erected within a distance of twenty-five yards from the highway, but there was no evidence to shew that the owner directed it to be so erected, and he was himself not present at the time. Being convicted under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 70:—Held, that the conviction was bad. Harrison v. Leaper, 5 L. T. 640.

—— Tricycle capable of being Propelled by Steam.]—A tricycle was capable of being propelled by the feet of the rider, or by steam as an auxiliary, or by steam alone. There was no smoke, nor escape of steam into the air, nor anything to indicate that it was being worked by steam, nor anything which could frighten horses, or cause danger to the public using the highway beyond any ordinary tricycle. The weight was about two hundredweight, and the tires of the wheels about one and a half inch in width. The tires being of indiarubber, no injury would be done to the surface of the road by working the machine on it:—Held, that the tricycle was a "locomotive" within the definition in s. 38 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), and was therefore subject to the rules and regulations for the use of locomotives on highways prescribed by ss. 28 and 29 of that act, by the Locomotives Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 70), s. 12, and the Locomotives Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 83), ss. 3, 4, 7. Parkyns v. Preist, 50 L. J., M. C. 148; 50 L. J., Q. B. 648; 7 Q. B. D. 313; 30 W. R. 13; 45 J. P. 751.

Licence—Steam Roller being "Used."]—A steam-roller crossing one county to perform work in another is, whilst passing over highways in its journey, being "used" within the meaning of s. 32 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, and requires a licence in cases in which the county authority have made by-laws rendering a licence necessary. London County Council v. Wood, 66 L. J., Q. B. 712; [1897] 2 Q. B. 482; 77 L. T. 312; 46 W. R. 143; 61 J. P. 567.

Exemption from Licence—Agricultural Purpose.]—A traction engine that draws a threshing-machine from one farm to another along the highway is used "solely for agricultural purposes" within s. 32 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878, and therefore does not require a licence. Marsh v. Baker, 55 J. P. 583.

A locomotive which is sometimes let out by its owners to farmers for the purpose of carrying straw and manure for use in farming operations, and which is sometimes used by the owner himself for the purpose of carrying for hire straw and manure to be used exclusively on farms, and is not used for any other purpose, is within the exemption in s. 32 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, as being "a locomotive used solely for agricultural purposes," and may be so used without a licence from the county authority. Ellis v. Hulse, or Jesse v. Hales, 58 L. J., M. C. 91; 23 Q. B. D. 24; 60 L. T. 836; 37 W. R. 557; 53 J. P. 598.

—— Tramway.]—The steam engines authorised by statute to be used on tramways are not locomotives within the meaning of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, s. 32, and, therefore, do not require to be licensed by the county authority. Bell v. Stockton Tramways Co., 51 J. P. 804.

Not Consuming Smoke—Onus of Proof.]—Upon a charge under s. 30 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878, of unlawfully using a locomotive not consuming as far as practicable its own smoke, the onus of proof that it does so consume its smoke lies on the defendant. Pitt-Rivers v. Glasse, 55 J. P. 663.

Regulation of Railways—Rate of Speed.]—The S. railway company obtained the leave of parties interested in the soil of a highway and in streets of a town adjoining their terminus, and laid rails thereon, and ran their railway engines and carriages over such street to a place beyond their terminus. No express power so to use the highway was given by any statute:—Held, that the Locomotives Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 83), s. 4, applied, and that the company could not go at a greater speed than two miles an hour, this being a case of driving a locomotive along a public highway within the meaning of that act. L. & S. W. Ry. v. Myers, 45 J. P. 731.

—— Gates for Level Crossings.]—The provisions of the Highways Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 71, as amended by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 45, s. 1, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 55 (for the better regulation of railways), s. 9, by which the proprietors of a railroad which crosses a highway at a level crossing are compelled to put up gates at such crossing, do not apply to a private line of railway, on private property, used by the proprietors exclusively for their private purposes. Matson v. Baird, 3 App. Cas. 1082; 39 L. T. 304; 26 W. R. 835—H. L.

A declaration stated that the railway of a railway company crossed a public highway on a level, yet the company, in contravention of the statutes in that behalf, did not keep the gates across the highway at the crossing point constantly closed, whereby two horses of the plaintiff, which were lawfully upon the highway, escaped from the highway into and upon the railway, and were by a locomotive engine and train run over and killed. Plea, that the horses were not lawfully upon the highway when the injury was done. The horses had leaped a hedge into a turnpike road, and had strayed thence into a new road formed by the company, leading across the railway into an old highway, and one of the gates at the crossing being open, had got upon the line:—Held, that the company being required by their act, and by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 55, s. 9, to keep the gates constantly closed, the horses were as against them lawfully on the highway, and the plaintiff might recover. Fawcett v. York and North Midland Ry., 16 Q. B. 610; 20 L. J., Q. B. 222; 15 Jur. 173.

Regulation of Locomotives—Shoes on Wheels.]—By the Locomotives Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 70), s. 3 (repealed by 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, s. 28), every locomotive used on a highway and drawing any waggon shall have the tires of the wheels thereof not less than nine inches in width, and the wheels shall be cylindrical and smooth-soled, or used with shoes or other bearing surface of a width not less than nine inches. A locomotive was used on a highway, having the tires of the two driving-wheels eighteen inches wide. Upon the tires were strips or shoes nine inches and three quarters in width, measured across the tire parallel to the axis of the wheel, and three inches broad and one inch thick. The shoes were placed alternately on each edge of the tire, and in the centre they touched and overlapped one another by about one inch and a quarter. There was thus always a bearing surface of at least nine inches in width on the road:—Held, that no shoes or bearing surface would comply with the statute unless they were similar to the tires of the wheels prescribed, viz. uniform smooth-surfaced bands of the width of nine inches at least round the whole circumference of the wheels; that these bands must be continuous and unbroken (save in so far as the joints of the material used might render perfect continuity impossible); and that the engine in question did not comply with the statute. Body v. Jeffery, 47 L. J., M. C. 69; 3 Ex. D. 95; 38 L. T. 68; 26 W. R. 356.

The question of what are "shoes" within the meaning of s. 3 (repealed) of the Locomotives Act, 1861, is a question of fact to be determined by the justices. Edmunds v. Savin, 26 W. R. 755.

By the Locomotives Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 70), s. 3 (repealed), every locomotive used on a highway and drawing any waggon shall have the wheels cylindrical and smooth-soled, or used with shoes or other bearing surface of a width not less than nine inches. An engine was so used, which had its wheels fitted with shoes four inches and a half broad, placed parallel to one another, and three inches apart, and bolted obliquely across the whole breadth of the wheel, so that when a length of less than nine inches of one shoe was in contact with the ground the deficiency was made up by the length of contact of the next shoe with the ground:—Held, that the bearing surface not being continuous, the engine was not in conformity with the act. Stringer v. Sykes, 46 L. J., M. C. 139; 2 Ex. D. 240; 36 L. T. 152; 25 W. R. 273.

—— Person preceding Locomotive on Foot.]—The 3rd section of 28 & 29 Vict. c. 83, which, as amended by 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, s. 29, requires one of the three persons employed to conduct a steam locomotive on a public highway to precede such locomotive on foot by twenty yards, and in case of need to assist horses, or carriages drawn by horses, in passing the same, is not the less complied with because such person, whilst preceding the locomotive on foot, leads a horse and cart of his own. Davis v. Browne, 48 L. J., M. C. 92; 40 L. T. 557.

Liability for Injuries caused by.]—An action is maintainable by a person who had sustained an injury through his horses being frightened by a traction steam-engine used on a highway, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 70, the jury finding that the engine was likely to frighten horses, and that the defendant knew it. Watkins v. Reddin, 2 F. & F. 629.

—— Indictment.]—Persons using a traction engine and trucks on a highway may be indicted for a nuisance if they create a substantial obstruction and occasion delay and inconvenience to the public substantially greater than would arise from the use of carts and horses. Reg. v. Chitteden, 15 Cox, C. C. 725; 49 J. P. 503.

—— When no Negligence.]—The defendant was possessed of a traction engine, which was propelled by steam power. Whilst it was being driven by the defendant's servants along a highway, some sparks escaping from it set fire to a stack of hay of the plaintiffs standing on a neighbouring farm. The engine was constructed in conformity with the Locomotive Acts, 1861, 1865; at the time of the accident it was being driven at a proper pace, and the defendant's servants were guilty of no negligence in the management of it:—Held, that the defendant was liable to compensate the plaintiffs for the injury done to the stack, upon the ground that the engine, being a dangerous machine, an action was maintainable at common law, and the locomotive acts did not restrict the liability of the defendant. Powell v. Fall, 49 L. J., Q. B. 428; 5 Q. B. D. 597; 43 L. T. 562—C. A.

—— Negligent Management of by Bailee—Liability of Owner.]—The defendant, who was the owner of a traction engine, to which his name and address were affixed, as required by the Locomotives Act, 1865, s. 7, let the same for three months. Through the negligent management of the engine whilst it was being used upon a highway by the hirer, personal injuries were occasioned to the plaintiff, who was being driven in a carriage upon the highway:—Held, that the defendant was not liable in respect of such injuries. Stables v. Eley (1 Car. & P. 614), as reported, disapproved of. Smith v. Bailey, 60 L. J., Q. B. 779; [1891] 2 Q. B. 403; 65 L. T. 331; 40 W. R. 28; 56 J. P. 116—C. A.

d. Extraordinary Traffic.

i. What is.

Meaning of.]—"Extraordinary traffic," within the meaning of s. 23 of the Highways and Locomotives Amendment Act, 1878, is not confined to the carriage of unusual materials, nor to carriage for unusual purposes, but it includes all traffic which is so exceptional as regards the ordinary user of the road, either in respect of its quality, its quantity, or its frequency, as substantially to increase the burden imposed on the road by ordinary traffic, and cause damage and expense thereby beyond what is common. Pickering Lythe East Highway Board v. Barry (8 Q. B. D. 59) disapproved. Hill v. Thomas, 62 L. J., M. C. 161; [1893] 2 Q. B. 333; 4 R. 565; 69 L. T. 553; 42 W. R. 85; 57 J. P. 628—C. A.

The object of the section is not to prohibit extraordinary traffic, but to throw the expense of repairing the damage done thereby on those who cause it. Ib.

How Estimated.]—In determining what is "extraordinary traffic" within the meaning of s. 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, the justices should not take into account the ordinary traffic of the district, but only that of the particular road in question. Hill v. Thomas (supra) followed. Etherley Grange Coal Co. v. Auckland District Highway Board, [1894] 1 Q. B. 37; 9 R. 88; 69 L. T. 702; 42 W. R. 198; 58 J. P. 102—C. A.

Semble, that the surveyor in determining whether a person has carried extraordinary traffic, with a view to certifying for extraordinary expenses, is wrong in merely comparing that person's traffic with the traffic on part of the highway he is bound to repair. Reg. v. Williamson, 45 J. P. 505.

Conveyance of Stone.]—Justices having made an order upon the appellants to pay the expenses of repairing a highway as extraordinary expenses within s. 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, it appeared that the road, called Carter's hill, was used solely for agricultural traffic, and was in the parish of S., which, with some other parishes in the respondent's district, was situate upon a range of hills. There were several stone quarries upon this range of hills within the respondent's district, from which, for many years, the surrounding country, including the appellants', had drawn stones for the repair of the highways, the stone traffic being a recognised business there; but until 1882 there had been no stone taken from the parish of S. In 1882 a stone quarry was opened in S. at the top of Carter's hill, and the stone was conveyed by the appellants for the repair of their highways down Carter's hill in the manner customary in the stone traffic, that is, in heavy waggons with the wheels chained, and damage was in consequence done to the road:—Held, that the evidence warranted the justices in coming to the conclusion that the traffic was extraordinary on this particular road, and that the order therefore was right. Tunbridge Highway Board v. Sevenoaks Highway Board, 33 W. R. 306; 49 J. P. 340.

The appellant was summoned under s. 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, for extraordinary expenses incurred by the respondents in repairing a highway between 1883 and 1890 by reason of the damage caused by extraordinary traffic and excessive weight passing along the same. It appeared that in 1883 the appellant had begun to use the road in question for carrying stone from a certain quarry in stone carts, and had continued to use it regularly for the same purpose until 1890, and that in consequence extraordinary expense was incurred in repairing it. The road was in 1883, and had since always remained, an ordinary country road used for ordinary light country traffic, and had never been adapted for or made to bear any other traffic, though stone had occasionally been carted from the quarry along the road prior to 1883, but not in sufficient quantities to cause any unusual damage to the road. The justices having found as a fact that the traffic was extraordinary and the weight excessive during the whole of the said period, and that extraordinary expenses had been incurred in repairing the road by reason of the damage caused by such extraordinary traffic and excessive weight, convicted the appellant:—Held, that the appellant had been properly convicted, and that the length of time which had elapsed before proceedings were commenced did not in any way diminish his liability to pay the amount of such expenses as were proved to the justices to have been incurred by reason of excessive traffic and weight having been carried over the road during the above-mentioned period. Whitehead v. Sevenoaks Highway Board, 61 L. J., M. C. 59; [1892] 1 Q. B. 8; 65 L. T. 855; 56 J. P. 214.

Upon the hearing of a complaint made by a highway board under the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 23, for the purpose of recovering from the appellant extraordinary expenses incurred by the board by reason of traffic conducted by him, it appeared that he was owner or occupier of stone quarries in the district, and that the stone was conveyed in heavy loads over the highways, so as to make the cost of repairing them much larger than if they had been subject to ordinary agricultural traffic; but that the stone traffic was a recognised business in the neighbourhood, and the waggon loads of the usual weight in such traffic. The justices having upon these facts, found, first, that the traffic was not extraordinary; secondly, that the weights were excessive; and thirdly, that the expenses were extraordinary:—Held, that the first finding, which was warranted by the evidence, shewed that the expenses were not "extraordinary" within the meaning of the section, and that they could not be recovered from the appellant. Wallington v. Hoskins or Hookins, 50 L. J., M. C. 19; 6 Q. B. D. 206; 43 L. T. 597; 29 W. R. 152; 45 J. P. 173.

Haulage of Timber in Timber District.]—In a group of twenty parishes there were large woods which came to maturity after ten or seventeen years' growth, and one or other wood was cut every year, and the timber hauled over one or other highway each winter. Before the haulage the roads were in fair repair, and the other traffic was chiefly caused by donkey carts or passengers. The haulage over one and a half mile caused extra expense of 12*l.* 10*s.*, for which the respondents were summoned under 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, s. 23. The justices found that the weights were not excessive, and held that there was not extraordinary traffic, this being the ordinary trade of the district:—Held, that the justices were justified by the evidence in coming to their decision. Raglan Highway Board v. Monmouth Steam Co., 46 J. P. 598.

Traffic caused in building a House.] — Materials for building a house were carried by the respondent over a highway, and he was summoned under s. 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, by the appellants, to recover the amount of expenses incurred by them by reason of the damage to the highway. The justices dismissed the summons, subject to a special case in which they found that the traffic conducted by the respondent was, in aggregate weight and quantity, excessive and extraordinary as compared with the ordinary traffic along the highway, which was light agricultural traffic, that the highway had been damaged thereby, that the amount expended on the highway by reason thereof was in excess of the average expense of repairing highways in the neighbourhood, and was an extraordinary expense incurred by reason of such damage, but that the traffic did not materially differ in character from that to be expected on the highway:—Held, that the respondent was not liable for the damage to the highway. Pickering Lythe East Highway Board v. Barry, 51 L. J., M. C. 17; 8 Q. B. D. 59; 45 L. T. 655; 30 W. R. 246; 46 J. P. 215.

Traction Engine.]—The appellant employed on a highway a traction engine drawing two waggons for the carriage of materials and goods used for ordinary purposes on his estate (the engine being of less weight than was allowed by s. 28 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, and having its wheels constructed in accordance with the provisions of that section), and thereby did damage to the highway beyond that caused by the ordinary wear and tear:—Held, that this was "excessive weight" and "extraordinary traffic," the damage caused by which was properly chargeable upon the appellant under s. 23 of the act. Aveland (Lord) v. Lucas, 49 L. J., C. P. 643; 5 C. P. D. 351; 42 L. T. 788; 28 W. R. 571; 44 J. P. 360—C. A.

—— Branch Road—Conveyance of Manure to Farm.]—Justices having made an order charging the expenses of repairing a highway upon the appellants as being extraordinary expenses within 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, s. 23, it appeared that the highway communicated at either end with main roads, and was principally used by farmers and occupiers of land adjoining it for ordinary farm traffic. The appellants having been employed to convey a quantity of manure to a farm adjoining the road, carried it there by means of a traction engine and trucks, the engine weighing eight and the truck five tons. The road, which had not been prepared for, and was not adapted to, the weight of traction engines, was, in consequence of such traffic, rendered unfit for use. The carriage of farm material and produce by traction engines was usual in the neighbourhood, though not upon this particular road:—Held, that the order was right, the passage of traction engines and trucks being "extraordinary traffic" upon the particular road. Reg. v. Ellis or Ellis v. Maidstone Sanitary Authority, 8 Q. B. D. 466; 30 W. R. 613; 46 J. P. 295. See also Kent County Council v. Vidler, infra, col. 63.

Locomotives — Road not constructed for Heavy Weights.]—Savin was adjudged to pay 500*l.* for damage done by the excessive weight of his locomotives and carriages along a highway near Oswestry. The highway had not been originally constructed for heavy weights and was not well formed, but owing to the damage done it was reconstructed and properly formed, and the expense of reconstruction could not be separated from the cost of repairs. The quarter sessions affirmed the order, but stated a case:—Held, that the order was right, it being immaterial that his engines were made and used in accordance with the statute. Savin v. Oswestry Highway Board, 44 J. P. 766.

String of Coal Carts—"Mode" of User of Road.]—For sixteen years prior to 1893, the appellants carted coal, every weekday, over a main road between a railway siding and the pumping station at their waterworks, a distance of about a mile and a quarter. In 1893-4 they adopted a plan of sending a string of four or five carts at a time in charge of two or three drivers; the average number of journeys every weekday being five each way. These carts followed each other in the same track. They were drawn by one horse apiece, and the individual loads were not excessive. About 7,855 tons of coal were carted during the year:—Held, that this was extraordinary traffic within s. 23. The mode of user of the road tended substantially to alter and increase the burden imposed by ordinary traffic. The definition of Bowen, L.J., in Hill v. Thomas ([1893] 2 Q. B. 333, 343) followed. Wolverhampton Corporation v. Salop County Council, 64 L. J., M. C. 179; 43 W. R. 494.

Large Number of Carts.]—W., owner of ironstone mines, sent his traffic to the railway station along a highway, in carts of the ordinary size and weight, but they made about seventy journeys per day. The other traffic was agricultural, and very small, and W.'s carts caused the chief traffic here. Other owners of mines sent their traffic by a private railway, and not over the highway in carts:—Held, the justices were wrong in holding that W. caused extraordinary traffic merely because he had many carts to send. Reg. v. Williamson, 45 J. P. 505.

Semble, the surveyor was wrong in merely comparing the traffic of W. with the traffic on part of the highway he was bound to repair. Ib.

ii. Persons Liable.

Persons contracting for Delivery of Materials, but not controlling the Carriage thereof.]—A purchaser who enters into contracts for the supply of materials to be delivered at a certain price, has no property in the goods until they are delivered, does not employ or pay the persons conveying them, and does not direct or control the mode of carriage or the road by which they are to be carried, is not a person "by whose order" such traffic is conducted within the meaning of s. 23 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878, and, such traffic being "extraordinary" in the statutory sense, is not liable for the expenses incurred in repairing the road in consequence of such excessive user. Kent County Council v. Gerard (Lord), 66 L. J., Q. B. 677; [1897] A. C. 633; 77 L. T. 109; 46 W. R. 111; 61 J. P. 804—H. L. (E.)

Employer or Contractor.]—Where contractors have the direction and regulation of traffic upon a highway which they carry out by using traction engines, regulating the number of waggons attached to each engine and the weight of each waggon, and giving orders as to the time the vehicles shall start, they are persons "by whose order such weight or traffic has been conducted," within the meaning of s. 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, notwithstanding that their employers indicate the time during which they will be ready to receive the goods which the contractors have undertaken to deliver. Colchester, Wemyss & Co. v. Gloucestershire County Council, 66 L. J., Q. B. 290.

W. bought timber near a railway station and contracted with a person to convey part of it, he himself sending the rest. The timber was conveyed in broad-wheeled waggons in sixty-seven loads, each load from three to five tons weight. The surveyor estimated that this caused 21*l.* extra expenses in repairs, and summoned W. under s. 23 of the Highways Amendment Act, 1878. The justices held that it was extraordinary traffic, and that whether W. or the contractors conveyed it was of no consequence, and made an order on W. for 21*l.*:—Held, by the court, that the justices were right. Williams v. Davies, 44 J. P. 347.

The owner of quarries had been ordered to pay a sum for damage caused by excessive weight and extraordinary traffic. Counsel admitted that the principle of the preceding case was conclusive against him. He, however, asked for leave to appeal, as that case was also under appeal. The court gave judgment for the respondents, and gave leave to appeal. Northumberland Whinstone Co. v. Alnwick Highway Board, 44 J. P. 360.

Contractor or Sub-Contractor.]—A person who is under a contract to supply ballast for the construction of a railway, and who employs different traction engine proprietors to draw the ballast from time to time to the places where it is required, giving a separate order on each occasion to the particular traction engine proprietor employed, is liable, under s. 23 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878, as the person by whose order extraordinary traffic has been conducted, for extraordinary expense, incurred in repairing the highway. Kent County Council v. Vidler, 64 L. J., M. C. 77; [1895] 1 Q. B. 448; 14 R. 240; 72 L. T. 77; 43 W. R. 273; 59 J. P. 548—C. A.

L. was a contractor with the government to erect a rifle-range, and employed D., a sub-contractor, to cart the stone. Nothing in the contract between L. and D. specified the mode of conveying the stone. D. used traction engines, and caused excessive injury to the highway:—Held, that L. was not the person liable under the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878, s. 23, but that D. was liable, being the only person by whose orders the excessive weights were carried. Lapthorn v. Harvey, 49 J. P. 709.

B. was employed by a contractor, C., to build a bridge over the H. railway for the railway company, and in doing so used a traction engine of nine tons to draw two trucks loaded with bricks, each truck being eight tons, and caused damage for several days which amounted to 137*l.* On a proceeding under 42 & 43 Vict. c. 77, s. 23, for causing extraordinary traffic:—Held, that B. was liable though employed by C., and that the remedy was applicable, though under the Railway Clauses Act, 1845, s. 58, the company might be proceeded against to make good all such damage. Barnett v. How Highway Board, 46 J. P. 805.

iii. Recovery of Expenses.

Summary Procedure founded on Tort.]—The summary procedure provided by section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, for recovery of expenses incurred in repairing damage to roads caused by extraordinary traffic from the person by whose order it has been conducted, is founded on tort. Proceedings under the section cease on the death of the person in whose lifetime and by whose order the damage was caused. Story v. Sheard, 61 L. J., M. C. 178; [1892] 2 Q. B. 515; 67 L. T. 423; 41 W. R. 31; 56 J. P. 760.

Surveyor's Certificate—Time within which Summary Proceedings may be Taken.]—A complaint was preferred against G. on the 7th December, 1881, by a highway board to recover 322*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* for extraordinary expenses under the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 23. The damage was done before the 25th March, 1879, the surveyor made his certificate on the 19th May, 1879, and payment was demanded on the 15th September, 1881. By s. 36 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, all expenses under the act may be recovered before a court of summary jurisdiction in manner provided by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, and by the 11th section of that act, "where no time is already or shall hereafter be specially limited for making any such complaint, or laying any such information in the act or acts of parliament relating to each particular case, such complaint shall be made and such information shall be laid within six calendar months from the time when the matter of such complaint or information respectively arose":—Held, that the six months' period of limitation within which a complaint may be preferred to recover extraordinary expenses under the 23rd section of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, must be reckoned from the date of the surveyor's certificate and not from the time payment is demanded. Pool and Forden Highway Board v. Gunning, 51 L. J., M. C. 49; 46 L. T. 163; 31 W. R. 30; 46 J. P. 708.

Certain extraordinary traffic took place in the year ending March, 1880. The expense of 21*l.* thereby incurred was demanded from C. in November, 1880, and in March, 1881; the surveyor's certificate being signed in February, 1881. The summons for nonpayment was in April, 1881:—Held, that the six months' limitation dated from the certificate and demand of payment, and not from the time when the repairs were made, and therefore that the summons was in time. White v. Colson, 46 J. P. 565.

The certificate of a surveyor of a highway board for extraordinary expenses incurred in repairing a highway within the district of the board is a good certificate, although it does not apportion the amount of extraordinary expenses incurred in repairing each particular road. On December 7, 1893, the surveyor of the W. highway board gave a certificate that extraordinary expenses to the extent of 285*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* had been incurred in repairing certain highways owing to acts of one N. No proceedings were taken to recover the same within six months from the date of the certificate. On May 31, 1894, the surveyor gave a certificate that extraordinary expenses to the extent of 202*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.* had been incurred in repairing a highway owing to acts of N. Proceedings having been taken to recover the latter sum:—Held, that the justices were right in excluding evidence as to the extraordinary expenses alleged to have been incurred by the highway board prior to December 7, 1893, on the ground that the certificate of December 7, 1893, being a good certificate, proceedings to enforce payment of the amount alleged to be due should have been taken within six months from the date of such certificate. Pool and Forden Highway Board v. Gunning (51 L. J., M. C. 49) approved and followed. Wirrall Highway Board v. Newell, 64 L. J., M. C. 181; [1895] 1 Q. B. 827; 15 R. 309; 72 L. T. 535; 43 W. R. 328; 59 J. P. 183.

Finding of Justices—Appeal.]—The H. Company manufactured peat moss from a moor of 3,000 acres, and having works near a railway station were charged under 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, s. 23, with causing 44*l.* extraordinary expense by their traffic. Their five drays were lighter than those used in other traffic, which was ordinary agricultural traffic, and passed each day over the highway. The justices found that this was a recognised industry, and that the traffic was not extraordinary:—Held, the justices' decision in dismissing the case could not be interfered with. Lower Strafforth Highway Board v. Hatfield Chase Co., 57 J. P. 567.

Surveyor, Appointment of—Evidence.]—J. was not appointed district surveyor under seal, but only by minute of the rural sanitary committee signed by the chairman, but not countersigned by the clerk of the board. L. being summoned for damage caused by extraordinary traffic, set up the defence that the appointment of J. and his certificate and the proceedings were void:—Held, that as J. had acted de facto as surveyor the objection to J.'s appointment was rightly overruled, and the order on L. was valid. Lancaster v. Harlech Highway Board, 52 J. P. 805.

e. Other Offences on.

Waggon, Cart, or other such Carriage without Owner's Name on it.]—An information was laid against the respondent for using a cart on the highway without having his name painted thereon, as required by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 76. The cart was a light spring cart with two wheels, used by the respondent in his business as an agricultural implement maker, in which he frequently carried agricultural implements to market, and drove his family about from place to place, and for which he paid duty under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 14, s. 18. The magistrates dismissed the information:—Held, that the "cart or carriage" contemplated by the 76th section of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, was "ejusdem generis" with a waggon, and that this was not such a cart, and that the magistrates were therefore right. Danby v. Hunter, 49 L. J., M. C. 15; 5 Q. B. D. 20; 41 L. T. 622; 28 W. R. 228; 44 J. P. 283.

Driving two Carts—Attaching Rein.]—5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 77, provides that a person may act as the driver of two carts on a highway, provided that the carts shall not be drawn by more than one horse each, and the horse of the hinder cart shall be attached by a rein in length not exceeding four feet to the back of the foremost cart:—Held, that the provision was substantially complied with when a driver seated in the first cart had a rope attached to the head of the last horse passed over the back and fastened to the body of the first cart about the centre, and the last horse's head drawn close up to the back of the first cart, so that he had full command of both horses. Robertson v. Burkitt, 7 W. R. 50.

Driver not having Direction of Horses—Carriage "passing" upon a Highway—Carriage not in Motion.]—A carriage is "passing" upon a highway within the meaning of s. 78 of the Highway Act, 1835, where, in the course of a journey from one place to another, it is at a standstill. The driver of such carriage is therefore liable to the penalty imposed by that section if, negligently or wilfully, he is at such a distance from the carriage that he cannot have the direction and government of the horses drawing the same. Phythian v. Baxendale, 64 L. J., M. C. 174; [1895] 1 Q. B. 768; 15 R. 324; 72 L. T. 465; 43 W. R. 412; 18 Cox, C. C. 119; 59 J. P. 217.

Riding Furiously.]—The Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 78, enumerates various acts and omissions by persons on highways having charge of carriages and animals, and also by persons interrupting others; amongst them, if any person, riding any horse or beast, or driving any sort of carriage, shall ride or drive the same furiously, so as to endanger the life or limb of any passenger, then follow the words: "Every person so offending in any of the cases aforesaid, and being convicted of any such offence," shall "for every such offence forfeit any sum not exceeding 5*l.*, in case such driver shall not be the owner of such waggon, cart, or other carriage; and in case the offender be the owner of such waggon, cart, or other carriage, then any sum not exceeding 10*l.*" W. was convicted by justices of riding furiously on horseback along a highway, and fined a sum less than 5*l.*:—Held, that the penalty under 5*l.* was applicable to all offences mentioned in the section, whether the offenders were drivers of carriages or not; and that the conviction was right. Williams v. Evans, 1 Ex. D. 277; 35 L. T. 864.

—— Bicycle is a Carriage.]—A person, riding a bicycle on a highway at such a pace as to be dangerous to the passers-by, may be convicted of furiously driving a carriage, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 78. Taylor v. Goodwin, 48 L. J., M. C. 104; 4 Q. B. D. 228; 40 L. T. 458; 27 W. R. 489.

Racing.]—A right of highway does not include a right to race; and a person who had been a party to a hurdle race is jointly liable for putting the hurdles on the ground, although he took no actual part in the race. Sowerby v. Wadsworth, 3 F. & F. 734.

Right to Remove Driver.]—Where the driver of a waggon committed an offence within 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 60, in the view of a justice, and placed himself before the board on which his master's name was painted, so as to prevent the discovery of the owner, and the justice stopped the horses and laid hands on the driver, and removed him from his position before the board, and thereby informed himself of the ownership:—Held, that this was a trespass, and gave the driver a right of action. Jones v. Owen, 2 D. & R. 600; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 139. See 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 78.

Destroying Surface of Way—Footpaths.]—By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72, a penalty is imposed upon anyone who shall "wilfully destroy or injure the surface of any highway":—Held, that a footway across a field is a highway within the meaning of this section. Brackenborough v. Thorsby, 19 L. T. 692.

Breaking up without Statutory Authority—Prescription.]—The corporation of P., who had no parliamentary powers for the purpose, supplied water to the adjoining urban district of F., and claimed the right to enter upon and break up the streets of F., whenever occasion should require for the purpose of repairing their water pipes, relying, as regarded some of the streets, on alleged irrevocable licences granted by the predecessors of the local board of F. (i.e. the surveyors of highways), and as regarded other streets on prescription:—Held (1) that the claim of the corporation was to commit a nuisance; (2) that it was not in the power of the surveyors of highways to grant the alleged licences; (3) that, therefore, as a grant could not be presumed, the corporation could not obtain the right claimed by prescription. Preston Corporation v. Fulwood Local Board, 53 L. T. 718; 34 W. R. 196; 50 J. P. 228.

As to Breaking-up Streets.]—See further, WATER (WATER COMPANIES).

Sufficiency of Fence within Highways Act.]—A contractor for the construction of a railway made an excavation within five yards of, and fenced it off from, a highway. A horse attached to a cart containing a load of a ton weight, came in contact with the fence, which gave way, and the horse was killed by the fall into the excavation:—Held, that the fence was sufficient within s. 70 of the General Highways Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), and that there was no legal duty imposed upon the contractor to construct a fence of such strength as to withstand such a shock as that described. Blakeley v. Baker, 39 L. T. 359.

Removal of Dust and Cinders—Under Paving Acts.]—Ashes falling from a furnace of a brass-founder, and containing particles of metal, were subjected to a process whereby a portion of the metal was extracted. The residue, having been given to the apprentices as a perquisite, was by them sold to a brass-refiner, for the purpose of extracting a further quantity of metal. The plaintiff, who was employed by the brass-refiner, whilst conveying the ashes from the brass-founder's premises for this purpose, was apprehended by the defendant under 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix., which gives a power of apprehending all persons who, not being employed by or contracting with the commissioners under the act, shall carry away any dust, cinders or ashes within the district:—Held, that the ashes in question were not dust, cinders or ashes within the meaning of the act. Law v. Dodd, 1 Ex. 845; 17 L. J., M. C. 65.

Offences of Obstruction.]—See ante, OBSTRUCTION (cols. 37 et seq.).

f. Proceedings.

When One Conviction a Bar.]—W. was summarily convicted under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 78, for that he, being driver of a carriage on a highway, by negligence and wilful misconduct, to wit, by striking a horse ridden by H., caused hurt and damage to H.; he was afterwards convicted, on the same facts, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 42, for unlawfully assaulting H.:—Held, that the first conviction was a bar to the second. Wemyss v. Hopkins, 44 L. J., M. C. 101; L. R. 10 Q. B. 378; 33 L. T. 9; 23 W. R. 691.

Appeal against Conviction.]—In appealing against a conviction under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72, on information by the surveyor, it is not necessary that the notice of appeal provided by s. 108 should be personally served upon the convicting justices. Reg. v. Yorkshire (N. R.) JJ., 1 New Sess. Cas. 574; 7 Q. B. 154; 14 L. J., M. C. 91; 9 Jur. 425.

Leaving the notice at the dwelling-house is sufficient. Ib.

A party appealing against a conviction by two justices upon complaint of the surveyors, for an offence under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 47, must serve notice of appeal, under s. 105, on both the justices. A notice addressed to both the justices and surveyors, and served on the latter, and on one justice only, is not sufficient. Reg. v. Bedfordshire JJ., 3 P. & D. 21; 11 A. & E. 134; 9 L. J., M. C. 8; 4 Jur. 85.

Local Venue.]—The provisions of the Highways Act, 1835, s. 109, as to local venue are abolished by the Rules of Court, 1875, Ord. XXXVI., r. 1. Phelips v. Hudham District Board, 1 Cab. & E. 67.

—— Notice of Action.]—The provision of the above section as to notice of action does not apply where the principal object of the action is an injunction. Ib.

Constitution—Time for Proceedings.] — By 54 Geo. 3, c. 91, s. 1, overseers of the poor are to be appointed on the 25th March, or within fourteen days next after. By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 6, surveyors of highways are to be appointed at the same time. By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 10, waywardens shall be elected in every parish forming part of a highway district at the meeting and time and in the manner at and in which surveyors of highways would have been chosen if the act had not passed. By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, s. 10, the first meeting of the highway board shall be held at such time as may be appointed by the provisional or final order of the justices, so that the time appointed be not more than seven days after the expiration of the time limited by law for the election of waywardens. A provisional order constituting a highway district ordered that waywardens should be elected for each of the parishes, and the final order made on the 7th April, 1865, confirming it, ordered that the first meeting of the highway board should be held on the first Thursday after the 25th March :—Held, that the quarter sessions were not bound to appoint on a day after the expiration of the time limited by law for the election of waywardens, and therefore the order was valid. Reg. v. Lindsey JJ., 6 B. & S. 892 ; 35 L. J., M. C. 90 ; L. R. 1 Q. B. 68 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 314 ; 13 L. T. 524 ; 14 W. R. 179.

By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 8, and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, s. 12, no objection shall be made at any trial or in any legal proceeding to the validity of any order after the expiration of three calendar months from the making of the order :—Held, that an objection to the validity of an order was made within three calendar months, if made on moving for a rule nisi for a certiorari within that time, though the rule was not returnable, and cause not shewn till after the three months. Ib.

—— Appointment of Districts.]—An ancient borough, having liberties and franchises, with charters containing non-intromittent clauses, was not a borough within the exception in 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 2. It was wholly surrounded by a county, and maintained its own poor and highways :—Held, that the justices of the county might take the proper proceedings in quarter sessions for making it a part of a highway district, under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 5 ; and that they had jurisdiction to hear a complaint by the waywarden against the overseers of the poor of the borough, for not paying over to the treasurer of the highway board the sum ordered by the precept of the board to be levied in the borough. Giles v. Glubb, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 389 ; 13 L. T. 526.

The following description of the borough, "The several parishes, townships, tithings, hamlets, or places of Liskeard parish, &c., E., &c., shall be united, &c.," in the order constituting the highway district, was not such an imperfect description as to vitiate it. Ib.

A provisional order for forming a highway district constituted the township of E. and certain other parishes and places a highway district, and directed that one waywarden should be elected for each of the parishes, townships and places. E. was divided into three hamlets, each of which maintained its own highways. The separate hamlets were not named in the order : —Held, that the provisional order and the final order based on it were bad, as the provisional order did not state whether any or what waywardens were to be elected for the three hamlets. Reg. v. Yorkshire, W. R., JJ., 34 L. J., M. C. 227 ; 12 L. T. 580 ; 13 W. R. 966.

Existing after Dissolution of Highway District.]—By the dissolution of a highway district, in respect of which a highway board had been constituted under the Highway Act, 1862, the highway board, though it ceases to have any control over the highways in its district, does not cease to exist as a corporate body for the performance of its other duties, such as those of suing or being sued, and of acting generally for the purpose of winding up its affairs. Reg. v. Essex JJ., 11 Q. B. D. 704 ; 49 L. T. 394 ; 32 W. R. 220—C. A. Affirming 52 L. J., M. C. 124 ; 47 J. P. 725.

—— Right to Notice of Action.]—The members of a board for the repair of the highways in a parish having resolved that the surveyor should be directed to open the locus in quo to the public, on the suggestion that there was an ancient right of footway over it, the surveyor did in pursuance of such resolution remove a gate obstructing such supposed right of footway ; and an action being brought against the members of the board and the surveyor :—Held, that they were entitled to notice of action, it being admitted that the act was done bonâ fide. Smith v. Hopper, 9 Q. B. 1005 ; 16 L. J., Q. B. 93 ; 11 Jur. 302.

Election of Members—Waywardens.]—At a vestry meeting for the election of a waywarden, according to 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 10, A. and B. were duly proposed and seconded as candidates for election. A vote of those present at the meeting was then taken, when A. had a majority of votes, and a poll was demanded on behalf of B. It was then observed that no account had been taken of the plurality of votes, and a second vote was accordingly taken, when B. had a majority. A poll was demanded on behalf of A., and fixed for a later day. On the day appointed for the poll the vestry was closed, in consequence of a notice having been affixed to the vestry door without the authority of B., that he declined to stand as waywarden, and no poll was taken. B. then received a certificate of his having been duly elected waywarden, signed by the chairman of the meeting at which the votes were taken, according to 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, s. 19, and proceeded to take his seat at the highway board :—Held, that there had been no valid election, since it appeared that the ratepayers had not wilfully abstained from voting, but were misled by the notice. Reg. v. Cooper, 39 L. J., Q. B. 273 ; L. R. 5 Q. B. 457.

—— Refusal of Poll—Effect of.]—A parish claimed to be exempt from being included in a highway district, under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 5, by reason of its highways being under the superintendence of a board established under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 18. The 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, passed in July, 1862, and the highway board was constituted at a vestry meeting in November, 1862, by a majority of two-thirds of the vestrymen present, the chairman having refused to grant a poll which was demanded at the meeting:—Held, that a poll ought to have been granted, and that, therefore, the highway board, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, was not properly created, and so the parish was not exempt from being included in the highway district under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 5. Reg. v. How, 33 L. J., M. C. 53; 9 L. T. 385.

—— Demand of Poll.]—At a vestry meeting held to elect waywardens for eleven townships, different candidates were successively and separately nominated, proposed and seconded, and, after show of hands, declared by the chairman to be duly elected waywardens for each township. After waywardens had been thus elected for all the townships, an elector demanded a poll in respect of the sixth and seventh townships in order of election. The chairman ruled that the demand was too late, and refused a poll. On a rule for a mandamus to the defendants to reassemble the meeting, and proceed to an election of waywardens for the two townships:—Held, that the proceedings in respect of each township were a separate election, and that the demand for a poll was too late, as it should, in each case, have been made upon the declaration of the show of hands. Reg. v. Thomas, or St. Asaph (Vicar), 52 L. J., Q. B. 671; 11 Q. B. D. 282; 47 J. P. 792.

Jurisdiction—Removal of Obstructions.]—A highway board under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, has no authority to determine whether a disputed highway is or is not a highway, or to order the removal of an obstruction from a disputed highway. Mill v. Hawker, 43 L. J., Ex. 129; L. R. 9 Ex. 309; 30 L. T. 894; 23 W. R. 26. Affirmed, 44 L. J., Ex. 49; L. R. 10 Ex. 92; 33 L. T. 177; 23 W. R. 348—Ex. Ch.

—— Personal Liability of Members.]—The 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, by s. 9, sub-s. 6, protects the members of the board from liability by reason of any "lawful act done by them in execution of any of the powers of the board"; but if the board, acting as a corporation, orders the surveyor to commit a trespass on private property for the purpose of removing an obstruction from a disputed highway, such an order is ultra vires, and the members of the board who concur in giving the order are personally liable, and may be sued for the trespass, though they have acted bonâ fide. Ib.

Construction of Dumbwell—"Drain"—Watercourse.]—A dumbwell, or shaft sunk into a porous stratum of chalk or gravel, into which surface water from a highway is conducted by pipes, and from which it percolates away through the subsoil, is not a "drain or watercourse" within the meaning of s. 67 of the Highway Act, 1835, and a highway authority having the powers of that act is consequently not authorised by that act to construct such a dumbwell in private land near to the highway as part of its drainage system, and to clean it out when necessary. Croft v. Richmansworth Highway Board, 58 L. J., Ch. 14; 39 Ch. D. 272; 60 L. T. 34—C. A.

Liability—Injury caused by Heap of Stones.]—A highway board are liable for damages in respect of an injury caused by a heap of stones projecting into the road, which had been placed there by one of their servants. Tucker v. Axbridge Highway Board, 53 J. P. 87.

Recovery of Expenses—Bill in Parliament.]—A board of waywardens of a highway who have incurred expenses in opposing a bill in parliament has no power under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, s. 32, to charge the parishes in the district or any of them with such expenses, even though the opposition was successful and the result beneficial to the district, the board having no legal authority to incur such expenses. Reg. v. Kingsbridge Highway Board, Cornish, Ex parte, 18 L. T. 554; 16 W. R. 1115.

—— Allowance of Law Expenses.]—Law expenses incurred in resisting a rule for a certiorari to remove the allowance, by a justice, of the accounts of the preceding waywardens, were expenses which a wayward might insert in his account, and which the justices might allow, if they thought proper. Rex v. Fowler, 3 N. & M. 826; 1 A. & E. 836.

All expenses bonâ fide incurred by a wayward, in the execution of the duty imposed upon him, might be inserted in his account, and might be allowed or disallowed by the justices in their discretion. Ib.

—— Costs of Indictments.]—A township was included in a highway district formed under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61. The highway board indicted B. for an obstruction caused by him in a street in the township. B., having removed the indictment by certiorari, was upon the trial found guilty, and paid the taxed costs. There were extra costs, which the highway board charged on the township:—Held, that the costs of the indictment, including the extra costs, were expenses of repairing and keeping in repair the highway, which the surveyor of the highways would have been justified in incurring under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, ss. 6, 27, and which, therefore, the highway board, who is placed in the same position as the surveyor by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 17, had properly charged on the township; and, per Cockburn, C.J., and Crompton, J., if not, they were expenses in relation to such highways, within 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61. s. 20. Reg. v. Heath, 6 B. & S. 571; 12 L. T. 492; 13 W. R. 805, sub nom. Heath v. West Eddisbury Highway Board.

c. Surveyors.

i. Election and Appointment.

For two Townships in one Parish.]—A sessions found that the parish of M. consisted of two townships, M. and K. N.; that, from the earliest period within living memory to 1799, surveyors were appointed for these townships, one for each; that from that time, to save expense, there had been one appointment of two surveyors for the parish at large, one of them always being an inhabitant of M., and the other of K. N.; and that each acted as surveyor in his own township; that distinct rates had been made for each township, and applied distinctly to the repairs of each; that the surveyors kept distinct accounts, but that these, as well as the rates (before they were taken to the magistrates), were examined and allowed at a general parish vestry; and that the occupiers of land had been rated, in respect of their occupation, to the repair of the highways of that township in which the houses they resided in were situate:—Held, sufficient evidence that each township was immemorially bound to repair the roads in it, and consequently, that the appointment of surveyors for each township was proper. Rex v. King's Newton, 1 B. & Ad. 826; 9 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 54.

By Parish divided into several Tithings.]—Where a parish was divided into eight tithings, each of which before 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, maintained its own highways separately, and after the passing of that act each of the tithings elected one or more persons as surveyors, who formed a board for the parish, but rated the tithings separately as before the act:—Held, that the parish at large had no power to form a board under s. 18, and that a rate made by them was bad. Reg. v. Bush, 1 P. & D. 586; 9 A. & E. 820; 8 L. J., M. C. 39.

By Magistrates on Refusal or Neglect of Parish.]—The appointment of a surveyor of highways by justices at a special sessions, upon neglect or refusal on the part of a parish to nominate and elect a surveyor, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 11, is invalid, if made at the same sessions at which the neglect or refusal appears. Reg. v. Best, 5 D. & L. 40; 2 B. C. Rep. 90; 2 New Sess. Cas. 655. S. C., nom. Surrey JJ., 16 L. J., M. C. 102; 11 Jur. 489.

The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 6, which enacts that the inhabitants of a parish maintaining its own highways shall proceed to an election of surveyors of highways at their first meeting in vestry for the nomination of overseers of the poor in every year, requires the vestry to be one of which due notice has been given, in pursuance of 58 Geo. 3, c. 69, s. 1. Ib.

Who may Vote.]—In the election of a surveyor of highways, an inhabitant occupying property liable to be assessed to the highway rate is entitled to vote, though he has never been actually rated to the highway rate. Reg. v. Kershaw, 6 El. & Bl. 999; 26 L. J., M. C. 19; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1139; 5 W. R. 53.

Demand of a Poll.]—At a vestry held under 58 Geo. 3, c. 69, for the purpose of electing surveyors of highways, of which public notice had been given, it was agreed that the vote should be taken by a show of hands, leaving it open to any one to propose that the votes should be taken according to the statute. A. and B. were respectively proposed and seconded for the office of surveyor, and on a show of hands, A. had a majority. It was then proposed and seconded, on behalf of B., that the votes should be taken according to the statute. No objection was made; and on the votes being so taken, B. had a majority, and was declared duly elected. A. then demanded a poll of the whole parish:—Held, that the meeting having agreed to a poll being taken according to the statute, no one was entitled afterwards to demand a poll of the whole parish; that the election of B. was valid, and that a mandamus for another meeting to elect would not lie. Reg. v. Hillingdon (Vicar), 18 Q. B. 718.

ii. Powers and Duties.

a. Personal Liability generally.

Injury to a Bank on the Roadside.]—A surveyor of highways is liable to a reversioner for subtraction of a portion of his bank by the roadside, although the property was the better fo what the surveyor had done. Alston v. Scales, 9 Bing. 3; 2 M. & Scott, 5; 1 L. J., M. C. 95.

Lowering of Soil—Under Local Police Act.]—Action against the commissioners for executing the Oldham Police Act, for entering the plaintiff's close and lowering the soil. Plea, justifying the acts as done in lowering a street under powers given by that act substantially the same as the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34 (the Towns Improvement Act), s. 51. On the trial, it appeared that the close was part of a new street; that the commissioners had caused it to be paved and lowered in a manner that would have been justified if it had been an old street, or had been previously brought under their management:—Held, that the powers given to the commissioners were not applicable to such a new street, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Brown v. Clegg, 16 Q. B. 681.

Removal of a Fence—Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50.]—To justify a surveyor of highways in taking down a fence, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 69, two things must concur: first, the fence must be within fifteen feet of the centre of the road; and, second, it must be on the road. Evans v. Oakley, 1 Car. & K. 125.

A road was nine feet wide; and there being a piece of uninclosed land at the side of it, also nine feet wide, which land was so rough and uneven that no carriage ever did or could go over it, the owner of the adjoining field took this land into his field, and put a fence round it. The surveyor of highways took down the fence:—Held, that he was not justified in so doing under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 69, as the fence was not on the road. Ib.

Sects. 6 and 63 of 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, did not authorise the surveyor to widen a road to thirty feet by removing a fence, unless the fence supposed to be an encroachment was actually upon the highway. Lowen v. Kaye, 6 D. & R. 21; 4 B. & C. 3; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 123.

Pulling down Cottage.]—In an action for pulling down a cottage, it appeared that the plaintiff had been convicted, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 69, of building the cottage so as to encroach on the highway, but which was not in fact an encroachment within the meaning of the act; and the defendant justified as surveyor of the highways:—Held, that s. 69 required the surveyor, after a conviction, to remove the encroachment without a warrant; and therefore the conviction, though erroneous, was a defence. Keane v. Reynolds, 2 El. & Bl. 748; 2 C. L. R. 245; 18 Jur. 242.

Power to lop Trees on Lands adjoining.]—The power given by s. 65 of the Highway Act, 1835, to the surveyor of highways to "lop" trees growing on lands adjoining a highway, does not authorise him to cut off the tops of such trees, but only the lateral branches. Unwin v. Hanson, 60 L. J., Q. B. 531; [1891] 2 Q. B. 115; 65 L. T. 511; 39 W. R. 587; 55 J. P. 662—C. A.

Removal of Obstruction—Malicious Damage.]—T. was the occupier of a residence which communicated with an adjoining highway by means of a gateway; an inclosed drain and brickwork were put down at the gateway for the purpose of convenient access to his residence and also for the purpose of allowing the free passage of water running by the side of the highway. The drain and brickwork, with the earth covering the same, formed a nuisance and an obstruction to the highway. The surveyor of highways for the parish within which T.'s residence was situate, took up and removed the drain and the brickwork, and in so doing damaged them. The surveyor having been charged upon an information before justices with committing damage, injury and spoil upon T.'s property, against the provisions of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 52, they found that the surveyor had acted bonâ fide, but that he did not do the act complained of under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do it, and they convicted him of the offence charged:—Held, that the conviction was wrong, and that the information ought to have been dismissed; for he was not a private individual, but the surveyor of highways having a control over, and an interest in, the drains laid for carrying off the water, and that in dealing bonâ fide with the drains he was not guilty of wilful or malicious damage. Denny v. Thwaites, 46 L. J., M. C. 141; 2 Ex. D. 21; 35 L. T. 628.

Semble, that as he, according to the finding of the justices, acted bonâ fide, they ought, upon the facts stated, also to have found that he acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do what was complained of in the information. Ib.

Trespass—Compensation for Injury.]—Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 54, a surveyor of highways may enter on adjoining lands, and cut drains therein, without tendering amends for the damage caused thereby; and an action will not lie against him for so doing, the tendering of amends not being a condition precedent or concurrent; and the surveyor is not bound to have the amount of damages and compensation ascertained within twenty-one days after the injury is committed. Peters v. Clarkson, 1 New Sess. Cas. 519; 8 Scott (N.R.) 384; 7 Man. & G. 548; 13 L. J., M. C. 153; 8 Jur. 648.

The amount of compensation to be paid can be settled only by the justices at a special session for the highways. Ib.

—— In obtaining Materials for Repairs.]—See post, cols. 102 et seq.

—— Wrongful Distress for Rate.]—Where a highway rate was made, payment of which was refused by a person, and application thereupon made for a distress warrant to justices, who declined to act until a rule of the court was made absolute, calling upon them to do so:—Held, that although no action would lie against the justices it might well lie against the surveyor who levied the distress. Freeman v. Read, 4 B. & S. 174; 32 L. J., M. C. 226; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 149.

Replevin by A. against B. for taking the goods of A. Plea, that after the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, two justices made their warrant in writing directed to the surveyors of the highway (waywardens) of the parish, and to the constable of that parish, reciting that by a rate A., occupier of lands in the parish, was duly assessed to the repair of the highways of the parish in a sum which had been demanded, but that A. had refused to pay, and that he had been summoned and had not appeared, whereupon the waywardens were commanded to levy the amount by distress and sale of his goods. The plea then stated that B. was constable, and that C. and D. were surveyors (waywardens), and that the warrant being delivered to C. and D. and to B., the latter, in aid of C. and D., seized the goods of A.:—Held, that the plea was neither in form nor in substance a plea under the statute; and that it was not a good plea at common law, inasmuch as it did not allege that the justices had jurisdiction over the subject matter in respect of which the warrant was granted. Morrell v. Martin, 3 Man. & G. 581; 4 Scott (N.R.) 300; 11 L. J., M. C. 22.

—— Obedience to Orders.]—At a meeting of the members of a highway board it was resolved that a path running through land in the occupation of the plaintiff was a highway, and that the plaintiff be directed to remove a lock from a gate placed across it. The surveyor of the board was afterwards ordered by them to remove the lock, and did so. On the trial of an action of trespass brought by the plaintiff against the members of the board in their personal capacity and the surveyor, in which they justified, Kelly, C.B., nonsuited the plaintiff on the ground that neither the members of the board nor the surveyor were liable individually. No evidence was, therefore, given in support of the plea of justification. The court of exchequer having set aside the nonsuit and ordered a new trial on the ground, first, that assuming that the resolution was illegal the members of the board who concurred in it were personally responsible; secondly, that the fact that the surveyor was, by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 16, bound to obey the orders of the board, did not excuse him if in obeying their orders he did an unlawful act:—Held, on appeal (the court expressing no opinion as to the liability of the members of the board), that the surveyor was liable, and that the judgment setting aside the nonsuit must therefore be affirmed. Mill v. Hawker, 44 L. J., Ex. 49; L. R. 10 Ex. 92; 33 L. T. 177; 23 W. R. 348—Ex. Ch. Affirming (as to surveyor) 43 L. J., Ex. 129; L. R. 9 Ex. 309; 30 L. T. 894; 23 W. R. 26.

Non-Repair.]—An action for a personal and pecuniary damage resulting from the non-repair of a county bridge will not lie against the county surveyor, either at common law or under 43 Geo. 3, c. 59. M'Kinnon v. Penson, 9 Ex. 609; 23 L. J., M. C. 97; 18 Jur. 513; 2 W. R. 262—Ex. Ch.

No action lies against a surveyor for damage resulting from an accident caused by his neglect to repair the highway. Young v. Davis, 7 H. & N. 760; 31 L. J., Ex. 250; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 286; 6 L. T. 363; 10 W. R. 524. Affirmed, 2 H. & C. 177; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 79; 9 L. T. 145; 11 W. R. 735—Ex. Ch.

Negligence — Third Party contracting to supply Labour—No Interference.]—When a surveyor of highways has been ordered by a vestry to do certain works on a highway, and during the performance of those works an accident occurs in consequence of the road being left in a dangerous condition, the surveyor is guilty of neglect of a statutory duty under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 56, and will be liable in an action for damage notwithstanding that he has contracted with a third party for supplying the necessary labour, and has not personally interfered with the work. Taylor v. Greenhalgh, 24 W. R. 311—C. A. Reversing 43 L. J., Q. B. 168; L. R. 9 Q. B. 487; 31 L. T. 184.

A vestry resolved that part of a highway should be raised, and ordered the surveyor of highways to employ men to do it. He contracted with G. to do the work. G. employed and paid his own men, and proceeded with the work. The surveyor employed men to cart materials to the ground, and determined the levels; but beyond exercising a general superintendence on behalf of the vestry did not personally interfere with the work. G. left the road in such a state that the plaintiff in driving along the road by night was overturned and injured. The surveyor did not give any direction that the road should be left in such a state:—Held, that he was liable. Pendlebury v. Greenhalgh, 45 L. J., Q. B. 3; 1 Q. B. D. 36; 33 L. T. 472; 24 W. R. 98—C. A.

H., the appellant, was surveyor of highways to a local board. S. was his foreman, and R. was a carter, acting under directions of S. A highway was being repaired, and R. laid two loads of stone upon it so as to cause an obstruction, and left them there in unprotected heaps at night. Damage to a horse and cart occurred. H. was summoned under s. 56 of the Highway Act, 1835, and, at petty sessions, convicted in a penalty. S., on cross-examination before the justices, said, "H. had not given instructions to place the stone. . . . I gave instructions. H. knew nothing about it":—Held, upon a case stated (without expressing any definite opinion upon the abstract proposition as to the appellant's responsibility under any circumstances without personal knowledge of the proceedings of his subordinates), that on the findings of fact in the case there was nothing to shew personal knowledge or negligence on the part of the appellant, and the conviction must be quashed. Hardcastle v. Bielby, 61 L. J., M. C. 101; [1892] 1 Q. B. 709; 66 L. T. 343; 56 J. P. 549.

Hire of Labourers.]—A surveyor of turnpike roads is not personally liable to answer the labourers; but they must look to the commissioners, or their treasurer. Pechin v. Pawley, 1 W. Bl. 670.

Right to Notice of Action—In what Cases.]—Where surveyors had been appointed, but in an informal manner, and bonâ fide believing themselves to be such surveyors, and to have been duly appointed, cut down a tree which overhung the highway and was a nuisance to it:—Held, that they were entitled to notice of action, as for a thing done in pursuance of the act. Huggins v. Wayday, 15 M. & W. 357; 16 L. J., Ex. 136.

The members of a board for the repair of the highways in a parish, having resolved that the surveyor should be directed to open the locus in quo to the public on the suggestion that there was an ancient right of footway over it, the surveyor did, in pursuance of such resolution, remove a gate obstructing such supposed right of footway; and an action being brought against the members of the board and the surveyor:—Held, that they were entitled to notice of action, it being admitted that the act was done bonâ fide. Smith v. Hopper, 9 Q. B. 1005; 16 L. J., Q. B. 93; 11 Jur. 302.

An action was brought against a surveyor for allowing and causing a heap of gravel, which had been placed for the purpose of repair of the highway, to remain upon it, without taking any care or precaution to guard against damage to persons passing along it, contrary to his duty in that behalf:—Held, that the action was brought for a "thing done in pursuance of, or under the authority of," the statute, and therefore that he was entitled to notice of action. Davis v. Curling, 8 Q. B. 287; 15 L. J., Q. B. 56; 10 Jur. 69.

In pursuance of a resolution at a parish vestry, that it would be advantageous if a weighing machine was erected to check the weight of materials purchased for the highways, the surveyors caused a machine to be placed on the highway:—Held, that although the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, gave no express power to erect weighing machines, the surveyors were acting in pursuance of the act, so as to entitle them to notice of an action brought for injuries sustained by a person in driving over a heap of earth excavated for the weighing machine. Hardwick v. Moss, 7 H. & N. 136; 31 L. J., Ex. 205; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 804; 4 L. T. 802.

—— Action to recover Money paid for Rate.]—The surveyors of highways of a parish made a rate which was entered in the rate-book as a composition of 1*s.* in the pound, agreed to be taken by the surveyors, &c., in lieu of statute work to be performed and done by several inhabitants and occupiers of land, hereditaments, &c. The rate was not signed by the surveyors, nor allowed by justices of the peace, nor published as required by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50. An inhabitant paid the amount at which he was assessed, and afterwards discovering that the rate was bad, commenced an action to recover the money paid:—Held, that although the rate was bad, the surveyors were entitled to the protection afforded by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 109, and that the action was not maintainable, inasmuch as the plaintiff had not given to them any notice of action. Judge v. Selmes, 40 L. J., Q. B. 287; L. R. 6 Q. B. 724; 24 L. T. 905; 19 W. R. 1110.

Period of Limitation.]—A reversioner of land declared against a surveyor for digging his close, separating a portion of it from the residue, and keeping it so separated, and adding such portion to the public road. The separation was by a wall which was begun more than three calendar months before the action. It was at that time very low, but formed a complete division between the parcels of land. After the commencement of the three months the wall was raised and finished:—Held, that, as there was a complete separation before that period, the raising of the wall was not such an act of severance as would take the case out of the limitation in 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 81, which required all actions for things done in pursuance of that statute to be commenced within three calendar months after the fact committed. Wordsworth v. Harley, 1 B. & Ad. 391; 9 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 50.

By s. 109 of the Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), no action is to be brought against any person for anything done under that act after three months after the fact committed for which such action was brought. The Public Health Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63), s. 117, constitutes the local board of health surveyor of highways, and by s. 139 of that act every action against any inspector or any person acting under the general board of health, or the officer of health, clerk, surveyor of nuisances, or officer acting under a local board for anything done under the provisions of the act, is to be commenced within six months after the accrual of the cause of action:—Held, that an action of trespass against a local board of health for an act done as surveyor of highways which was commenced less than six months though more than three months after the alleged trespass, was not too late. Taylor v. Meltham Local Board, 47 L. J., C. P. 12.

By a local act passed in 1862, the corporation of Salford were constituted surveyors of highways within the borough, having and being subject to all such powers and liabilities as any surveyors of highways had or were subject to by virtue of the law for the time being in force. Sect. 109 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50 (the Highway Act of 1835), limits the period within which any action may be brought for anything done under the authority of that act to three months after the fact committed for which the action is brought. Sect. 5 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, limits the period within which any action may be brought for anything done under the authority of local acts to two years after the cause of action. By the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 144, urban authorities (including by s. 6 corporations of boroughs) are constituted surveyors of highways within their district, having and being subject to all the powers, duties and liabilities (so far as the same are not inconsistent with the provisions of that act) of surveyors of highways under the law for the time being in force. Sect. 264 limits the period within which actions may be brought for anything done under that act to six months after the cause of action accrued; and by s. 341, all powers given by that act shall be deemed to be in addition to and not in derogation of any other powers conferred by statute, and such other powers may be exercised in the same manner as if that act had not passed. In an action against the corporation for negligence, as surveyors of highways, commenced more than three, but less than six months after the cause of action accrued:—Held, that the defendants were entitled to rely on the limitation of three months provided by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, and therefore that the action could not be maintained. Taylor v. Meltham Local Board (supra) distinguished. Burton v. Salford Corporation, 52 L. J., Q. B. 668; 11 Q. B. D. 286; 49 L. T. 43; 31 W. R. 815; 47 J. P. 614.

An urban authority constituted the surveyor of highways by s. 144 of the Public Health Act, 1865, is not liable to be sued for negligence in the management of highways, unless the action be commenced within three months; the limitation under s. 109 of the Highways Act, 1875, and not that under s. 264 of the Public Health Act, 1875, being applicable. Taylor v. Meltham Local Board (47 L. J., C. P. 12) and Kay v. Atherton Local Board (42 J. P. 792) overruled. Burton v. Salford Corporation (11 Q. B. D. 286) followed. Graham v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation, 62 L. J., Q. B. 315; [1893] 1 Q. B. 643; 4 R. 358; 69 L. T. 6; 41 W. R. 424; 57 J. P. 596—C. A.

b. Penalty for Neglect of Duties.

Non-Repair.]—By the Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 20, if a surveyor shall neglect his duty in anything required of him by that act, for which no particular penalty is imposed, he shall forfeit for every such offence any sum not exceeding 5*l*. By s. 94, if any highway is out of repair, justices may order a view, and if satisfied thereof upon the view, may convict the surveyor who is liable for the repair in any penalty not exceeding 5*l*., and shall make an order appointing a time for the necessary repair. Justices convicted a surveyor, under s. 20, upon evidence in the ordinary way, of neglecting his duty by neglecting to repair a footpath for which he was liable:—Held, that the justices could convict for non-repair only upon adopting the course provided by s. 94; and that this conviction was therefore bad. Robinson v. Stevenitt, 38 L. T. 611.

—— Denial of Obligation, Effect of.]—Where, on the hearing of a summons against the district surveyor for the non-repair of a highway in South Wales, he denies on behalf of the inhabitants of the parish the obligation to repair, justices may direct an indictment to be preferred against the parish. Reg. v. James, 3 B. & S. 901; 32 L. J., M. C. 211; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1126.

Securing Causeways with Posts.]—The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 24, requiring parish surveyors to secure horse causeways and foot causeways by posts, from being passed over by waggons, applies to the protection of causeways lying side by side with public roads, and being parts of such roads, from the wheels of carriages passing along those roads; therefore surveyors are not bound to secure the ends of those causeways with posts. Ellis v. Woodbridge, 29 L. J., M. C. 183; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1017; 2 L. T. 237; 8 W. R. 437.

Neglect of Specific Orders.]—Where magistrates directed a surveyor of highways to remove a nuisance from the highway, and to fence a pit that was dangerous, and on his neglecting to do so, convicted him in a penalty for having "wilfully neglected his duty in not removing, or causing to be removed, nuisances in and upon a highway in the parish, &c., and not duly guarding a dangerous pit lying on the highway":—Held, that the conviction was not warranted by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 20, or s. 73, and that it could not be supported. Morgan v. Leach, 10 M. & W. 558; 12 L. J., M. C. 4.

Proceedings—Viewer's Report.]—Where an information is laid under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 94, that a highway is out of repair, and the magistrates, pursuant to that section, appoint a viewer, who reports it out of repair, the magistrates, at the special sessions, are not bound by that report, but may exercise their discretion, whether they will convict the surveyor or not. Reg. v. Wilts JJ., 8 D. P. C. 717.

c. Collection of Rates.

It is the duty of outgoing surveyors of a parish to collect an outstanding highway rate, when, during their term of office, the parish is incorporated into a new highway district under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, and a highway board and district surveyor are appointed. Reg. v. Bluffield, 11 L. T. 337.

The words "and then remaining unpaid," in s. 43, mean remaining unpaid at the end of seven days from the appointment of the district surveyor. Ib.

d. Accounts.

Time for—Mandamus.]—Where a surveyor of the highway has improperly allowed the time for producing and passing his accounts to elapse, the court will compel him to produce them by mandamus. Rex v. Lewis, 1 D. P. C. 530.

Action against Predecessors.]—A surveyor of highways could not maintain an action against the late surveyor for the balance remaining in his hands, until his accounts had been settled and allowed, or disallowed in the manner pointed out by 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 48. Heudebourck v. Langton, 10 B. & C. 546; 3 Car. & P. 566; 8 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 134.

Action against co-Surveyor.]—A. and B. being co-surveyors of the highways of a parish, it was agreed between them that A. should deliver up the rate-book to B., and that B. should pay A. out of the moneys he should collect under the rate, 15*l.* which A. had advanced beyond the amount collected by the previous rate. The book was accordingly delivered to B., who collected more than 15*l.*, but expended the whole in the repair of the roads, and did not pay A. the 15*l.*:—Held, that A. might maintain an action to recover it. Luckhard or Liddard v. Holmes, 2 C. M. & R. 586; 1 Tyr. & G. 9.

Right to recover Account Books.]—Churchwardens and overseers had not such a property in the account-books of a late surveyor of the highways as to enable them to maintain trover for them; and their remedy was under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 48. Addison v. Round, 7 Car. & P. 285.

Allowance of Expenses.]—Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 111, it is not necessary for a surveyor of highways, at the expiration of his year of office, to obtain the sanction of the inhabitants in vestry to expenses reasonably incurred in defending indictments, or prosecuting appeals, and the allowance thereof by two justices, previously to laying his accounts before justices at a special sessions for the highways. It is sufficient that such expenses have either been agreed to at a vestry or allowed by two justices. Townsend v. Read, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 317; 30 L. J., M. C. 245; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 39; 5 L. T. 180; 9 W. R. 940.

—— Power of Justices.]—Justices, sitting at a special sessions for highways, have no power, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 44, to allow charges in the surveyor's accounts which are illegal by reason of the provisions of s. 46. Barton v. Piggott, 44 L. J., M. C. 5; L. R. 10 Q. B. 86; 31 L. T. 404; 23 W. R. 233.

A surveyor of highways having charged in his accounts certain items for work and materials and team hire, which were illegal under s. 46, the justices in special sessions, on complaint made to them, after examining the surveyor on oath, made an order, under s. 44, allowing the accounts:—Held, that the charges were made illegal by s. 46; and the justices had therefore no discretion under s. 44, and the order allowing the accounts was bad. Ib.

—— Under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78.]—An allowance of a surveyor's account at special sessions is irregular, as they have not first been carried before a single justice, though the vestry did not desire it, and though no notice was taken of the omission, on the accounts being discussed at the special sessions. Rex v. Goodenough, 2 Ad. & E. 463.

The special sessions under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, have no authority to examine a surveyor's accounts, unless those accounts have been first examined by a single magistrate, and by him referred to the sessions for judgment. Rex v. Yorkshire, North Riding, JJ., 6 B. & C. 152; 5 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 63.

—— Rights of outgoing Surveyor.]—A.'s year of office as surveyor of highways in a township expired on the 25th of March, 1863, when B. was appointed his successor, pursuant to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, and at the next special sessions (on the 1st of April), A. verified and passed his accounts, which shewed a balance of 24*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.* in his hands due to the township. At this time there were debts owing by A. as such surveyor. On the 10th of April, a highway board was formed under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, for a district, which included the township; and on the 4th of May the board appointed a district surveyor. B. never acted as surveyor at all:—Held, that A. was an outgoing surveyor, and as such liable to account to the board; but that he was entitled to the same allowances for disbursements from the board as he would have been entitled to if he had paid over the balance to his immediate successor in office, B. Wrexham Highway Board v. Hardcastle, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 177.

Recovery of Disbursements.]—A surveyor of trustees of a turnpike trust having for several years suppressed, in his accounts, liabilities incurred by him on their behalf, which he actually paid, the trustees passed and settled each account successively, except the last:—Held, that he could not recover the sums so paid for any year but the last. Cave v. Mills, 7 H. & N. 913; 31 L. J., Ex. 265; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 363; 6 L. T. 650; 10 W. R. 471.

Surveyors of highways' accounts for 1856 shewed a balance due to them of 211*l.* 14*s.* 10½*d.*, and their accounts for 1857 shewed a balance due to them of 205*l.* 5*s.* 1¼*d.* For the next three years, ending March, 1860, new surveyors were appointed, and the balance of 205*l.* 5*s.* 1¼*d.* was omitted in the accounts for those three years, and undischarged. The surveyors for the year commencing March, 1860, paid the balance out of moneys received by them, and entered such payment in their accounts:—Held, that they were not justified in doing so, and that the justices were right in disallowing that payment in their accounts. Taylor v. Stansfield, 6 L. T. 26.

—— Method of recovering Balance.]—The defendant, as surveyor of highways, had incurred legal expenses in defending appeals against orders for stopping up highways without the previous sanction of the parish. At a meeting of the vestry, where his accounts were gone into, the items for these expenses were objected to, and opposition was threatened to be made to his accounts before the justices. The defendant ultimately offered to pay 50*l.* in discharge of the attorney's bill for costs, if no opposition were offered to the passing of his accounts before the justices; the vestry accepted the offer, and the plaintiff and other vestrymen signed a minute to this effect. They also entered and signed a minute at the foot of the defendant's account, that the 50*l.* was to be paid to his successor in office, who happened to be the plaintiff. The accounts were passed without opposition; but the defendant did not pay the 50*l.* The plaintiff consequently sued him for it in a county court:—Held, that there was no evidence of any contract with the plaintiff alone to entitle him to maintain an action alone for the 50*l.*; and that, if the 50*l.* was to be treated as part of the balance of the public money in the hands of the outgoing surveyor, the method of recovering it was not by action, but by summary application under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 103. Kilham v. Collier, 21 L. J., Q. B. 65; 15 Jur. 1175.

Penalty for Neglect—Assistant Surveyor.]—An assistant surveyor to a highway board, appointed in pursuance of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 18, is not liable to a penalty for not making out his accounts and laying them before the justices at the special highway sessions; s. 44 applying only to an ordinary surveyor of highways, where no board and assistant surveyor to the board have been appointed. Adams v. Lakeman, El. Bl. & El. 615; 27 L. J., M. C. 307; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 854; 6 W. R. 650.

Proceedings—Appeal against Order of Justices.]—Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, ss. 44 and 105, no appeal lies, on the part of the surveyor of the highways, against an order of justices, a highway sessions allowing part of his accounts, and disallowing the rest, and ordering him to pay over to his successor the amount disallowed. Reg. v. Leicestershire JJ., 8 El. & Bl. 557; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 280; 6 W. R. 62.

An inhabitant of a parish gave notice of appeal to the quarter sessions against the allowance of the surveyor's accounts. At the sessions the court dismissed the appeal for want of jurisdiction, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, and ordered the appellant to pay the costs:—Held, that the sessions had, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 5, jurisdiction to order the payment of costs. Reg. v. Paduick, 8 El. & Bl. 704; 27 L. J., M. C. 113; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 360; 6 W. R. 224.

A complaint made by an inhabitant of a parish against the accounts of the surveyor of highways at the special sessions for highways, is the subject of an appeal to one of the superior courts under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, even though the sessions make no order on such complaint otherwise than by allowing the surveyor's accounts. Townsend v. Read, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 308; 30 L. J., M. C. 223; 4 L. T. 447; 9 W. R. 659.

There is no appeal to the quarter sessions, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 44, against the allowance at special sessions of the accounts of a surveyor of highways. Reg. v. Yorkshire (W. R.) JJ., 1 G. & D. 198; 1 Q. B. 624; 10 L. J., M. C. 137; 5 Jur. 824.

5. Repair of.

a. Obligation to Repair.

i. County Authority.

Maintenance of Main Roads under 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77.]—The Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), by s. 13 enacts that any road which has "between the 31st of December, 1870, and the date of this act ceased to be a turnpike road, and any road which, being at the time of the passing of this act a turnpike road, may afterwards cease to be such, shall be deemed to be a main road; and one-half of the expenses incurred from and after the 29th of September, 1878, by the highway authority in the maintenance of such road shall as to every part thereof which is within the limits of any highway area, be paid to the highway authority of such area by the county authority of the county in which such road is situate out of the county rate." The corporation of the borough of Rochdale was the highway authority of the Rochdale highway area. Under ss. 47—50 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), the obligation to repair all public highways within the area of the "town" was imposed upon the corporation, and the turnpike trustees were forbidden to collect any toll or lay out any money on any road within that area. By a local act in 1872 the boundaries of the borough were enlarged and all the provisions of the acts relating to the "town" were made applicable to the enlarged area of the borough. The effect was that further portions of turnpike roads were for the first time brought within the area of the borough and within the operation of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847:—Held, that these further portions being only parts of turnpike roads, had not ceased to be "turnpike roads" and were not to be deemed to be "main roads," within s. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878; and that the county authority were not liable to pay half the expenses of their maintenance. Lancaster JJ. v. Rochdale Corporation, 53 L. J., M. C. 5; 8 App. Cas. 494; 49 L. T. 368; 32 W. R. 65; 48 J. P. 20—H. L. (E.)

The Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, s. 13, provides for the maintenance of roads which have since the 31st of December, 1870, ceased to be turnpike roads. A provision in turnpike acts coming into operation before the 31st of December, 1870, that turnpike trustees shall not spend money or levy toll upon certain portions of turnpike roads does not prevent such portions of the roads from being still turnpike roads on the 31st of December, 1870, within the meaning of s. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878. An agreement under the Local Government Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 98), s. 41, made before the 31st of December, 1870, between turnpike trustees and a corporation, under which the turnpikes upon certain portions of turnpike roads were removed, and the repair of such portions was undertaken by the corporation, does not operate to make such portions cease to be part of a turnpike road, and therefore these portions also come under the operation of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, s. 13. West Riding JJ. v. Reg., 53 L. J., M. C. 41; 8 App. Cas. 781; 49 L. T. 786; 32 W. R. 253—H. L. (E.)

In 1855 a portion of a turnpike road was included in an improvement district under a local act incorporating the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34). Thereupon, by virtue of ss. 47—51 of the latter act, the maintenance of this portion of the road became vested in the improvement commissioners, and the turnpike trustees ceased to have power to collect tolls or lay out money upon it. In 1877 the turnpike trust expired. The commissioners were the "highway authority" for the district, and the district was a "highway area" within the meaning of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77),

s. 13 :—Held, that notwithstanding the operation of ss. 47—51 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, the road only "ceased to be a turnpike road" and became a "main road" within the meaning of s. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, upon the expiration of the turnpike trust; and that since that event happened after 1870, the county authority was liable to pay to the commissioners one half of the expenses incurred by them in the maintenance of the portion of the road within their district, as provided by s. 13. Lancaster JJ. v. Newton Improvement Commissioners, 56 L. J., M. C. 17; 11 App. Cas. 416; 55 L. T. 615; 35 W. R. 185; 51 J. P. 68—H. L. (E.)

—— Converting macadamised into paved Road.]—Converting a macadamised road into a paved road does not come within the term "maintenance" of the road as used in s. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77); and therefore a highway authority cannot recover half the expenses thereby incurred from the county authority under that section. Leek Improvement Commissioners v. Staffordshire JJ., 57 L. J., M. C. 102; 20 Q. B. D. 794; 36 W. R. 654; 52 J. P. 403—C. A.

—— Scavenging.]—By s. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, disturnpiked roads are to become main roads, and half of the expense of maintenance is to be contributed out of the county rate. Certain main roads passed through the borough of Burnley :—Held that the expense of so much of the scavenging (i.e. watering, removing refuse and scraping) as was necessary for the maintenance of the roads came within the above section. Burnley Corporation v. Lancaster County Council, 54 J. P 279.

—— Removing Snow.]—The main roads within the district of a highway authority became impassable from snow, which the highway authority removed, and they claimed one half the expense of doing so from the county authority under the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, s. 13 :—Held, that this was an "expense incurred in the maintenance" of such roads within that section, and that the county authority were liable. Amesbury Union v. Wilts JJ., 52 L. J., M. C. 64; 10 Q. B. D. 480; 31 W. R. 521; 47 J. P. 184.

—— Tramways — Agreement with Local Authority.]—By a local tramways act it was provided that in case steam power should be used on the tramway, the tramway company should repair the whole extent of that part of a main road over which their lines passed, but that the company might make such contracts and agreements for the repair of the road with the local authority of the borough as might be approved by the board of trade. It was also provided that no contract or agreement to be entered into under the act should operate to lessen the liability of the company under s. 28 of the Tramways Acts, 1870. The road authority of the borough entered into a contract with the company, by which the expenses of maintenance and repair of the road were divided between them. In an action by the borough road authority against the county authority for contribution under s. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878 :—Held, that the county authority were liable to pay out of the county rate one half of the expenses incurred by the borough authority under the contract. Over Darwen Corporation v. Lancashire JJ., 58 L. T. 51; 36 W. R. 140.

—— "County Authority" — Highway in Borough.]—By the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, s. 13, half the cost of maintenance of a road that has ceased to be a turnpike road is to be paid "by the county authority of the county in which such road is situate"; and by s. 38 the word "county" in that act is to have the same meaning as it has in the Highway Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), s. 2, which provides that, for the purposes of that act, "all liberties and franchises except boroughs shall be considered as forming part of that county by which they are surrounded." The highway authority of the borough of Over Darwen in Lancashire claimed contribution in respect of the maintenance of part of a road in the borough that had ceased to be a turnpike road from the county authority of the county of Lancaster :—Held, that the word "county" in s. 13 of the act of 1878 is a geographical term; and that the county authority of Lancaster, by which county the road in question is surrounded, is liable to contribute as "the county authority of the county in which such road is situate." Over Darwen Corporation v. Lancashire JJ., 54 L. J., M. C. 51; 15 Q. B. D. 20; 51 L. T. 739—C. A.

Under 51 & 52 Vict. c. 41—Footpaths by the side of Main Roads in Urban Districts.]—Upon a case stated for the opinion of the court raising the questions whether under ss. 13 and 15 of the Highways (Amendment) Act, 1878, and s. 11 of the Local Government Act, 1888, the county council were liable for payment of the costs of the repairs, maintenance and improvement of the footways by the sides of main roads in urban as well as in rural districts, and for the lighting of streets and roads which are "main roads" :—Held (the lighting question being abandoned), that by the old highway acts the words "main road" included footpaths, and there was no section in the amending act of 1878 expressing that it did not apply to footpaths within urban districts. Sect. 11 of the Local Government Act, 1888, meant what it purported to say, namely, that every "main road" should be maintained entirely by the county council, and therefore they were, under those acts, liable for the maintenance and repairs of the footpaths. Warminster Local Board, In re, Wiltshire County Council, In re, 59 L. J., Q. B. 434; 25 Q. B. D. 450; 62 L. T. 902; 38 W. R. 670; 54 J. P. 375.

Where under s. 11 of the Local Government Act, 1888, an urban authority undertake the maintenance and repair of the main roads within their district, the liability of the county council of the county to contribute to the costs of such maintenance and repair includes the costs of the maintenance and repair of paved footways at the side of disturnpiked roads, which were constituted main roads by s. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878. Warminster Local Board and Wilts County Council, In re (59 L. J., Q. B. 434; 25 Q. B. D. 450), approved. Burslem Corporation and Staffordshire County Council, In re, 65 L. J., Q. B. 1; [1896] 1 Q. B.

24 ; 73 L. T. 651 ; 44 W. R. 356 ; 59 J. P. 772—C. A.

Sect. 11 of the Local Government Act, 1888, by which every road in a county which is constituted a "main road" under s. 13 of the Highways Act, 1878, is, if repairable by the highway authority, to be wholly maintained and repaired by the county council, imposes upon the county the duty of maintaining and repairing, in an urban sanitary district, the footways at the side of such main roads. Warminster Local Board and Wilts County Council, In re (59 L. J., Q. B. 434 ; 25 Q. B. D. 450), approved. Derby County Council v. Matlock Bath Urban District Council, 65 L. J., Q. B. 419 ; [1896] A. C. 315 ; 74 L. T. 595 ; 60 J. P. 676—H. L. (E.)

—— Annual Payment by County Council—How determined.]—In default of agreement, the annual sum payable by a county council to a borough in respect of the maintenance and repair and reasonable improvement connected with the maintenance and repair of the main roads within and under the control of such borough must be determined by arbitration of the local government board, as provided by s. 11, sub-s. 3, of the Local Government Act, 1888. The court has no jurisdiction to determine the principle upon which such annual sum is payable. Bedford Urban Sanitary Authority, In re, 64 L. J., Q. B. 26 ; [1894] 2 Q. B. 786 ; 10 R. 485 ; 71 L. T. 433 ; 58 J. P. 786.

—— Trust Funds for Maintenance—Parts of Roads repairable by different District Councils—"District."]—Funds were left in trust to be applied for the maintenance, repair, lighting, watching and watering of certain roads which were claimed to be retained as main roads under the provision of s. 11, sub-s. 2, of the Local Government Act, 1888, by certain district councils. The roads in question had been divided up in places into lengths which were locally situate in two adjoining districts, though for purposes of repair certain parts of the roads were divided transversely and not longitudinally, the effect of which was that different district councils repaired parts of the roads not within their districts, and were, on the other hand, relieved of the duty of repairing parts of the roads within their districts. In a dispute between the district councils and the county council as to the control of such roads :—Held, that the district councils were entitled to retain as main roads those portions which they repaired ; that in arriving at the amount to be paid by the county council in respect of these roads, the existence of the trust funds ought to be taken into consideration so far as they were applied for the maintenance and repair of the roads, but not so far as they were applicable to lighting, watching and watering ; and that the word "district" in s. 11, sub-s. 2, of the Local Government Act, 1888, ought, in dealing with these main roads, to be treated as denoting a district of jurisdiction or administration, and not merely as denoting a geographical area. Middlesex County Council v. Willesden and Hendon District Councils, 60 J. P. 630.

Vesting in County Council—Agreement to repair—Tramways Act.]—An agreement between a county council and a highway board under s. 11 of the Local Government Act of 1888, by which the highway board became bound to repair roads, does not take away from the county council their rights and liabilities as the "road authority." Stockport Highway Board v. Cheshire County Council, 61 L. J., Q. B. 22 ; 65 L. T. 85 ; 39 W. R. 606 ; 55 J. P. 808.

—— Adoption of s. 20 of 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77.]—The maintenance of main roads throughout a county remains a "general county purpose" within s. 11, sub-s. 1, and s. 68 of the Local Government Act, 1888, and chargeable on the exchequer contribution fund appropriated under that act for "general county purposes," although the county council may by resolution adopt the provisions of s. 20 of the Highways Act, 1878, and throw the expense of maintaining main roads on the hundreds. Reg. v. Dolby, 61 L. J., Q. B. 826 ; [1892] 2 Q. B. 736 ; 67 L. T. 619.

Sea Wall for Protection of Main Road—Repair by Highway Authority—Recovery of Expense from County Council.]—As a highway authority is under no legal obligation to protect a highway adjoining the sea by the erection of a sea wall, the expense of maintaining such a wall cannot be recovered, in the case of such highway being a main road, from the county council. Kent County Council v. Sandgate Urban Council, 61 J. P. 517—C.A.

ii. Parish or District.

Generally.]—The inhabitants of a parish are primâ facie bound to repair a highway of common right. Rex v. Great Broughton, 5 Burr. 2700.

Unless by prescription they can throw the onus on particular persons by reason of their tenure. Rex v. Sheffield, 2 Term Rep. 106 ; 1 R. R. 442.

When Repairs undertaken by Mistake.]—The inhabitants of a parish are not bound to repair a way used by the public, and repaired by the parish for more than twenty years, if there is no owner who could dedicate the way to the public, and the repairs by the parish are shewn to have been begun and continued under a mistaken notion of the liability of the inhabitants to repair. Rex v. Edmonton, 1 M. & Rob. 24.

The inhabitants are bound by such repairs, if made with a full knowledge of the facts, and with the intention of taking upon themselves the public duty. Ib.

Road not adopted by Parish.]—A road dedicated to and used by the public becomes a highway which the parish must repair, although neither such dedication nor such user has been adopted or acquiesced in by the parish. Rex v. Leake, 2 N. & M. 583 ; 5 B. & Ad. 469. See also Reg. v. Dukinfield, 4 B. & S. 158, ante, col. 20.

Extent of Repairs.]—A parish bound to repair a road, must make it reasonably passable at all times of the year. Reg. v. High Halden, 1 F. & F. 678.

—— Highway across a River.]—Where a public way crosses the bed of a river which washes over it at every high tide, and leaves a deposit of mud, semble, that the parish is not bound to make it good. Rex v. Landulph, 1 M. & Rob. 393.

Destruction of Road—Effect of.]—An indictment charged that a part of a highway was out of repair. Part of the road had, at the time when the indictment was preferred, been destroyed by the encroachments of the sea, and the surface of the existing road was in good repair up to where the same had been so destroyed, at which part the road was terminated by a perpendicular cliff, caused by successive encroachments:—Held, that there was no obligation on the parish to provide an available carriage road down to the beach, the encroachments of the sea having destroyed the road, so that the subject of repair was not in existence. Reg. v. Hornsea, Dears. C. C. 291; 2 C. L. R. 596; 23 L. J., M. C. 59; 18 Jur. 315; 2 W. R. 274; 6 Cox, C. C. 299.

A highway ran along the slope of a hill, beneath which was a valley, the slope being at right angles to the valley, and very precipitous. A landslip of considerable magnitude occurred on the slope, and about 252 yards of the highway was carried off into the valley below, and its place being filled up with stones and other débris, no trace of the old metalled road remained, but the line of it was known and admitted. An engineer, who had inspected the locus in quo, reported that it was practicable to form a permanent and passable road along the whole tract, and of a similar character, at a moderate outlay:—Held, that there was no such total destruction of the road as would relieve the parish from liability to repair. Reg. v. Greenhow, 45 L. J., M. C. 141; 1 Q. B. D. 703; 35 L. T. 363.

New Road substituted for Old.]—Where a new road was made pursuant to a writ of ad quod damnum, and the parish could be at no further expense with regard to the old one, it was held that the inhabitants ought in future to repair the new; but that where the new road lay in another parish, the person who sued out the writ, and his heir, ought not only to make it, but keep it in repair. Vennor, Ex parte, 3 Atk. 766.

Road situate in different Counties.]—If a parish is situate, part in one county and the rest in another, and a highway lying in one part is out of repair, an indictment against the inhabitants of that part only is bad; the indictment must be against the whole parish. Rex v. Clifton, 5 Term Rep. 498; 2 R. R. 657.

If a parish lies in two distinct counties, an indictment for not repairing the highway may be brought against that part of the parish in which the ruinous road lies. Rex v. Weston, 4 Burr. 2507. And see 5 Burr. 2700.

Liability of One Parish for Another—Prescription.]—Semble, there is no sufficient authority for holding that one parish can be liable by prescription to repair a highway in another parish. But at all events there must be shewn to have been a sufficient consideration, which existed contemporaneously with such liability. Reg. v. Ashby Folville, 35 L. J., M. C. 154; L. R. 1 Q. B. 213; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 520.

Extra-parochial Places or Hamlets.]—The 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 2, does not subject places formerly extra-parochial parishes to the common-law liability to indictment for nonrepair of highways. It only subjects them to the operation of that act as highway parishes liable to be put into a highway district. Reg. v. Central Wingland, 46 L. J., M. C. 282; 2 Q. B. D. 349; 36 L. T. 798; 25 W. R. 876.

Though the inhabitants of a parish are liable, as of common right, to repair all highways therein, yet, where an indictment stated, that a way was an ancient common highway, and that a certain part, situated in an extra-parochial hamlet, was out of repair, and that the inhabitants of such hamlet ought to repair it:—Held, that such indictment was bad, as it did not allege that the inhabitants of the hamlet were immemorially bound to repair, nor that the hamlet did not form part of a larger district, the inhabitants of which were bound to repair; and it is doubtful whether the inhabitants of the hamlet would be liable to repair at common law, even if the indictment had contained the latter allegation. Rex v. Kingsmoor, 3 D. & R. 398; 2 B. & C. 190; 26 R. R. 307.

A parish contained four townships, each of which had been accustomed from time immemorial to maintain its own highways. There was, from time immemorial, in one of the townships a hamlet, the owners and occupiers in which had never in the memory of man paid highway rates, nor done team work, nor paid any composition in lieu thereof. There were now no public roads in the hamlet which could be repaired by it:—Held, that these circumstances were insufficient by themselves to establish a custom exempting the occupiers in the hamlet from contribution to the repair of highways without its limits. Reg. v. Rollitt, 44 L. J., M. C. 190; L. R. 10 Q. B. 469; 24 W. R. 26. S. C., nom. Rollett v. Corringham Overseers, 32 L. T. 769.

Townships and other Districts.]—The primâ facie liability to repair roads attaches to a parish only, and not to any township, or other district, although it is no part of any parish. Reg. v. Midville, 3 G. & D. 522; 4 Q. B. 240.

—— Exemption by Statute—New Roads.]—If the inhabitants of a township bound by prescription to repair are expressly exempted by an act of parliament from repairing new roads to be made within the township, the duty falls on the rest of the parish. Rex v. Sheffield, 2 Term Rep. 106; 1 R. R. 442.

—— Of Public Highways.]—By an act for more effectually cleansing, lighting and watching, &c., the township of Little Bolton, it was enacted, by s. 63, "That the trustees or commissioners of such of the several roads as pass within the township of Little Bolton should be exonerated and discharged from the repairs of such parts of the said roads respectively as lie within the township of Little Bolton, and the same should from thenceforth cease to belong to the said turnpike roads, or to be under the control of the trustees thereof, and should thereafter be repaired and maintained by the trustees for executing that act: Provided, that such portions of the turnpike roads leading from, &c., to, &c., as pass and lie within the said township of Little Bolton, should, until such portion of such last-named turnpike road, by the erection of houses and buildings on each side thereof, be made to form a street communicating with the present public street called Chorley Street, in Little Bolton aforesaid, belong to such last-mentioned turnpike road, and be under the management of the trustees, and should be kept in repair and maintained by the trustees, in the same manner as they would have been liable to maintain the same in case that act had not been passed." It was further enacted by s. 64, "That every person who should be rated or assessed for the purposes of that act, in respect of any messuage, building, land, tenement or hereditament, within the said township of Little Bolton, should be in respect of the same messuage, &c., exonerated, released and discharged from the payment of all rates and assessments whatsoever, and performance of statute duty, or composition for the same, for or in respect of the repair and amendment of all or any of the public highways in the said township of Little Bolton, or any costs, charges, or burthens in respect thereof." Upon the trial of an indictment against the inhabitants of the township of Little Bolton, for the nonrepair of a highway (authorised to be made under a former act and the recited act), within the township, the jury found specially, that the highway was out of repair; that the township of Little Bolton, until the passing of the act above set out, had been used to repair such of the highways within it as would otherwise be repairable by the inhabitants of the parish at large; and that the portion of the road indicted, at the time of making the presentment, was not, by the erection of houses and buildings on each side thereof, made to form a street communicating with a certain public street called Chorley Street:—Held, that the inhabitants of the township were liable to the repair of this highway, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 64. Little Bolton v. Reg., 12 L. J., M. C. 104.

—— When other Persons specially Liable.]—By a navigation act the proprietors of the navigation were required to keep a road in repair, and were declared to be liable to indictment if it was out of repair:—Held, that this enactment did not relieve the township from their common-law liability to repair the road. Reg. v. Brightside Bierlow, 13 Q. B. 933; 4 New Sess. Cas. 47; 19 L. J., M. C. 50; 14 Jur. 174.

Highways created by Statute—Within a Town.]—The 1 & 2 Vict. c. ii., for better paving the town of M., by s. 23 required the commissioners to repair all or any streets which had hitherto been dealt with under the act. The limits of the act were not defined. In pursuance of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 7, the county was divided into highway districts, one of which included that part of the parish of M. "not within the town of M." Since 1862, certain highways in the parish of M. had been lighted by the commissioners; before they were so lighted they were not within the town. Upon complaint against the highway district board:—Held, that the highway was within the town if there was a continuous row of houses so as to form a congregation of human habitations, and that the fact of lighting the highways was not conclusive as to their being in the town. Milton-next-Sittingbourne Commissioners v. Faversham Highway Board, 10 B. & S. 548.

—— Street not a Highway—Wrong Decision of Commissioners—Lapse of Time.]—The commissioners appointed in pursuance of the South Wales Turnpike Act, 1844 (by which act, also, the roads of the county of Glamorganshire were vested in the defendant board), directed that a certain road, situated within the borough of S., should be continued as a turnpike road, and in 1845 a toll-gate was erected on it, at which tolls have been collected up to the present time. In the year 1850 a provisional order was made, by which the Public Health Act, 1848, was applied to the borough of S., and a local board of health for the borough was appointed. By the 68th section of that act it is provided that all present and future streets, being highways without any district, shall vest in and be under the management of the local board of health, and that board is directed to repair these roads. By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 42, s. 13, it is declared that the word "highway" in the above section shall mean "any highway repairable by the inhabitants at large":—Held, that though the road in question was in fact a street, it was not a "highway repairable by the inhabitants at large," and therefore had not become vested in the local board of health, but had remained vested in and subject to the powers of the defendant board. Nutter v. Accrington Local Board (4 Q. B. D. 375) distinguished. The commissioners having done certain acts more than thirty years before, which had ever since been acted on, the court refused to review their decision, though it appeared wrong. Swansea Improvement Co. v. Glamorganshire Roads Board, 41 L. T. 583.

—— Non-compliance with Regulations—Effect of.]—By a local act, passed in 1823, which was to be in force for twenty-one years, and the preamble of which stated that making and maintaining a turnpike road would be of advantage to the public, trustees were appointed, who were enabled to make the turnpike road, and required to erect sufficient fences where it passed through private lands. The act did not expressly declare that the road should be a highway, but it enabled all persons to use it on payment of toll. Part of the turnpike road was formed upon an existing road, which had been made under an inclosure act, but which had never been declared to be completed, as provided by 41 Geo. 3, c. 109, s. 9. The turnpike road was completed and opened to the public in 1833, and had for fourteen or fifteen years since that time been used by the public. A coach had at one time travelled over it. Part of the road passed through a parish, and was out of repair; no repairs had ever been done upon it by the parish. While the turnpike act continued in force, an indictment was preferred and found against the parish for nonrepair:—Held, that at all events, during that time, the road was a common Queen's highway; and that the want of compliance with the provisions of 41 Geo. 3, c. 109, s. 9, did not prevent it from having all the incidents of a common highway, when adopted and used as such by the turnpike trustees. Reg. v. Lordsmere, 15 Q. B. 689; 4 New Sess. Cas. 205; 19 L. J., M. C. 215; 15 Jur. 82.

—— Expiration of Local Act.]—Under a local act, passed in 1827, and which was to be in force for twenty-one years, enabling commissioners to make and maintain a public highway from W. to N., the road was made only from N. to L., where it joined a private road. The local act was repealed in 1844. During the existence of the act, the part so made was treated as a highway repairable by the parish; and after the repeal of the act, the public continued to use it as before; and although portions of it were not kept in sufficient repair, rates for the repair of it had been made by the parish:—Held, that there was evidence from which the sessions might find, that after the expiration of the local act the road became a highway compulsorily repairable by the parish. Reg. v. Thomas, 7 El. & Bl. 399; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 713; 5 W. R. 321.

—— Contribution to Repair out of Highway Rate.]—An act of parliament authorised trustees to establish a ferry and make certain highways in connection therewith. The trustees were also empowered to take tolls, out of the proceeds of which the ferry and roads were to be maintained. No limit of time was specified by the act for the expiration of the trust. The act also provided that, in case the works thereby authorised should not be executed within the space of ten years all the powers and authorities thereby given should cease and determine, save only as to so much of the work as should have been completed within that time. The trustees established the ferry and made all the roads specified in the act but one. The funds arising from the tolls becoming insufficient for the repair and maintenance of the roads so made, an application was made by the trustees to justices for an order for contribution to the repair of one of the roads so made, out of the highway rate under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, s. 1:—Held, that the trust created by the act was a turnpike trust within the meaning of 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59; and, secondly, that, inasmuch as the act merely authorised and did not compel the making of the roads thereby specified, and contemplated that all the works might not be executed, the construction of the whole system of roads authorised to be made was not a condition precedent to the roads that were made becoming highways, and consequently that an order of contribution to the repair of the road in question might be made under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, s. 1. Rex v. Cumberworth (infra) overruled. Reg. v. French, 48 L. J., M. C. 175; 4 Q. B. D. 507; 41 L. T. 63—C. A. Affirming 26 W. R. 437.

—— Necessity of completing whole Road.]—Where, by an act, trustees were authorised to make a road from one point to another, the making of the entire road is a condition precedent to any part becoming a highway repairable by the public; trustees empowered by act to make a road from A. to B. (being in length twelve miles) had completed eleven miles and a half of such road to a point where it intersected a public highway:—Held, that the district in which the part so completely lay was not bound to repair it. Rex v. Cumberworth, 3 B. & Ad. 108; 1 L. J., M. C. 86.

So, where trustees under a turnpike act are empowered to make a road from A. to B., and a branch from that road to C., the public are not compellable to repair the main road, though complete in its whole extent, till the branch is finished. Rex v. Cumberworth, 4 A. & E. 731; 1 N. & P. 197; 2 H. & W. 439; 6 L. J., M. C. 21.

Where, by an act, trustees are authorised to make a main line of road from one point to another, and a portion only of the road is completed, the district through which the part completed is situate is not bound to repair it, although made by the trustees, and used by the public and repaired by the district for upwards of thirty years, and although it is of great utility to the public. Rex v. Edge Lane, 6 N. & M. 81; 4 A. & E. 723; 1 H. & W. 737; 5 L. J., M. C. 91.

A new road had been made by virtue of an act of parliament, and traversed the highway; by the act it was enacted, that the new road should be completed, and that the lands constituting the former road (unless leading over some moor or waste ground, or to some village, town or place to which the new road did not lead) should be vested in trustees and sold:—Held, that the trustees could not make a partial destruction of the road, and that, if the old road led to a single house, the same remained subject to the public right. Wilkinson v. Bagshaw, Peake, Ad. C. 165.

—— Private Ways.]—A power in an act to continue private ways does not alter the liability of parties to repair them. Anon., Lofft, 465.

Alteration of Highway District—Subtraction of Parish.]—The provisions in 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 39, for altering a highway district by subtracting from it any parish by order of the county authority are not repealed by 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, s. 3, providing for the formation of highway districts coincident in area with rural sanitary districts, and, by s. 4, for the exercise by the rural sanitary authority of the powers of a highway board within their district, and for the dissolution of the existing highway board. Therefore, although by an order made under 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, the area of a highway district may have become coincident with the area of a rural sanitary district, and the rural sanitary authority have been duly authorised to exercise the powers of a highway board, they cannot enforce contribution to the expenses of the board from a parish which has been duly subtracted from the district by an order under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 39. Sheppy Union v. Elmley Overseers, 55 L. J., M. C. 176; 17 Q. B. D. 364; 35 W. R. 15; 50 J. P. 343.

Local Road and Drainage Commissioners—Transfer of Local Powers to District Councils.]—Sect. 25 of the Local Government Act, 1894, by which all the powers, duties and liabilities of any highway authority in the district and highway boards are transferred to the rural district councils, is applicable to local highway commissioners, such as the Marshland Smeeth and Fen district commissioners, who had been constituted both highway and drainage commissioners under local inclosure acts dating from 1796; and the expenses raised by an acre rate under the said local acts are not to be deemed "highway expenses in whole or in part defrayed in any parish or other area out of any property or funds other than rates" mentioned in s. 29 (d) of the Local Government Act, 1894, but are to be defrayed in manner directed by the Public Health Act, 1875, as made applicable by the said s. 29. Marshland Smeeth District Commissioners and Marshland Rural Council, In re, 65 L. J., Q. B. 185; 73 L. T. 563; 59 J. P. 824.

Sea Wall for Protection of Main Road—Obligation of Highway Authority to Maintain.]—See Kent County Council v. Sandgate Urban Council, ante, col. 88.

iii. On Inclosure.

Owners Adjoining New Road.]—Where the commissioners of a turnpike road directed a public road across open common fields, inclosed and divided by a private act, to be made, and then allotted the land:—Held, that one, whose lot adjoined to this open road, and who had inclosed it, was not bound to repair it. Rex v. Flecknow, 1 Burr. 461; 2 Ld. Ken. 261.

Liability of Occupier—Ratione Clausuræ.]—The liability to repair a highway ratione clausuræ is in the occupier of the lands inclosed, not in the owner as owner. Reg. v. Ramsden, El. Bl. & El. 949; 27 L. J., M. C. 296; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 169.

Such liability, however, does not accrue where either the highway is not immemorial, or where the adjoining land inclosed has not, before the inclosure, been used for passage. Ib.

Private Road.]—If the commissioners, under an inclosure act, set out a private road for the use of the inhabitants of nine parishes, directing the inhabitants of six of those parishes to keep it in repair, no indictment can be supported against the latter for not repairing, it not concerning the public. Rex v. Richards, 8 Term Rep. 634; 5 R. R. 489.

A private road, set out under an inclosure award, may upon proof of sufficient user by the public before the passing of the Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), be deemed to be a highway which the parish or township is compellable to repair, though the award provides that such road is for ever thereafter to be kept in repair by the owners or occupiers of the adjoining land. Reg. v. Bradfield, 43 L. J., M. C. 155; L. R. 9 Q. B. 552; 30 L. T. 700; 22 W. R. 693.

Dedication to Public.]—An award under an inclosure act in 1816, set out certain public roads and private occupation roads. One of the occupation roads was a soft road, it had no gate at either end, and the public used it without any interference. On two occasions the inhabitants had repaired it by subscription:—Held, that there had been sufficient dedication and user to render the parish liable to repair, although they had never adopted the road. Reg. v. Horley, 8 L. T. 382; 11 W. R. 433.

In 1771 commissioners, under an inclosure act, were empowered to set out public and private roads, the former to be repaired by the township, the latter by such persons as the commissioners should direct. The public roads were to be sixty feet wide between the fences. The commissioners in their award described a road as private and eight yards wide; but in setting it out they left a space of sixty feet between the fences; and they directed both the public and private roads to be repaired by the township. The centre only of the sixty feet was ordinarily used as a carriage road, and the township repaired it. The space said to be encroached upon was at the side of this road; and there was a diversity of evidence as to the use made of this space by the public, and its condition since the time of the award:—Held, that the commissioners had exceeded their authority in awarding that private roads should be repaired by the township; but that on the whole of this evidence it was a proper question for the jury whether or not the road in question, though originally intended to be private, had been dedicated to and adopted by the public. Rex v. Wright, 3 B. & Ad. 681; 1 L. J., M. C. 74.

Declaration by Justices.]—Under 41 Geo. 3, c. 109, s. 9, a road continued, as well as a road newly made, under the award of commissioners of inclosure, must be declared by justices in special sessions to be fully completed and repaired, before the inhabitants of the district are liable to repair. Rex v. Hatfield, 4 A. & E. 156.

Transfer of Liability to adjoining Township.]—Where commissioners under an inclosure act for township A. set out an old road belonging to township B. of an increased width, and directed it to be repaired in future by A., without any dispute as to boundary, so as to give them jurisdiction to alter or settle it:—Held, that their award was of no avail to shift the liability to repair the road from B. to A. Reg. v. Nether Hallam, 3 C. L. R. 94; 6 Cox, C. C. 435.

Alteration of Old Road.]—By an inclosure act, incorporating 41 Geo. 3, c. 109, the commissioners for inclosing certain common lands were authorised to stop up, divert or alter any public ways over the waste, with the concurrence of two justices. They were also empowered to set out new ways, which, when certified by two justices to be complete, were to be repaired by the parish. Before the inclosure acts, a private bridle-way led across a common. There was no definite track where the land lay open. The commissioners ordered the common to be closed, and set out a road thirty feet wide, with the same termini and in the same line as the old bridle-way, and in their award directed that it should be a public bridle-way, and a private carriage road for certain persons, who should keep it in repair. The road was set out accordingly. On the trial of an indictment against the parish for not keeping it in repair, no order or certificate of justices was proved:—Held, that the old public way was never effectually stopped; that the defined road set out was, in effect, the same way; and that the parish was still liable to repair it as a bridle-road, and was not exonerated by the fact that it was now set out as a private carriage road also. Reg. v. Cricklade, St. Sampson, 14 Q. B. 735; 19 L. J., M. C. 169; 14 Jur. 690.

On trial of an indictment for nonrepair of a public carriage-way, it appeared that inclosure commissioners, by their award made in 1840, set out a public highway which ran in the same track as and included, but straightened and widened, an ancient highway. The indicated road passed through allotable land on both sides of it, except that on one side, in one part, there was an old inclosure. The parish had repaired the road both before and after the award. No steps had been taken by the commissioners for putting the road into complete repair pursuant to 41 Geo. 3, c. 109, s. 9, and there never had been any declaration by justices at their special sessions that the road had been fully and sufficiently formed, completed and repaired:—Held, that the parish was not liable in respect of the nonrepair of the road. Reg. v. East Hagbourne, 1 Bell, C. C. 135; 28 L. J., M. C. 71; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 346.

Reservation of Mines to Lord of Manor—Effect upon Assignees.]—Commissioners, acting under the powers conferred on them by a local inclosure act for inclosing commons, set out public highways over the land, and directed that they should be maintained by the inhabitants and occupiers of the township in which they were situated, and that it should be lawful for all persons to use the same. The act reserved to the lord of the manor, his successors and assigns, in the widest terms, all rights belonging to the manor, and all mines, minerals and quarries under the commons, with power to do every act necessary for the draining, winning and working such mines, minerals and quarries, as fully and freely as he or they could have had, held, used or enjoyed the same in case the act had not been made, without paying any damages or making any satisfaction for so doing. The assignees of the lord of the manor worked the mine so as to injure one of the roads set out by the commissioners. In an action against them by the local board, on whom the duty of repairing the road fell, to recover the expense of doing so:—Held, that the reservation to the lord of the manor must be taken to be subject to the public right created by the statute, and did not protect the assignees from liability. Benfieldside Local Board v. Consett Iron Co., 47 L. J., Ex. 491; 3 Ex. D. 54; 38 L. T. 530; 26 W. R. 114.

iv. Persons Liable Ratione Tenuræ.

Statute.]—By the Local Government Act, 1894, s. 25, sub-s. 2, where a highway repairable ratione tenuræ appears on the report of a competent surveyor not to be in proper repair, and the person liable to repair the same fails, when requested so to do by the district council, to place it in proper repair, the district council may place the highway in proper repair, and recover from the person liable to repair the highway the necessary expenses of so doing.

Immemorial Usage.]—An indictment for non-repair of a road on a liability ratione tenuræ cannot be sustained, where the tenement on which the liability is charged originated within time of legal memory. Rex v. Hayman, M. & M. 401; 31 R. R. 742.

Whether a liability to repair a highway ratione tenuræ must be immemorial, quære. Per Denman, C.J. Reg. v. Beeby, 8 L. J., M. C. 38.

Covenant by Former Owner.]—On an indictment charging a party with a liability to repair a highway ratione tenuræ, the defendant gave in evidence an ancient deed between certain inhabitants of the parish and the former owner of his land, whereby the former gave to the latter that land, in consideration of his repairing an existing highway; the grantee covenanted to repair it, and it was stipulated that if, through his neglect to repair, the parish were indicted, there should be a right of re-entry, and the agreement should be void:—Held, that this deed did not constitute a liability ratione tenuræ, if any could be created after the time of legal memory. Ib.

Evidence of Prescription.]—Indictment for not repairing a highway, alleging the defendant's liability ratione tenuræ. A special verdict found that the defendant's land adjoined the sea; that anciently a highway went over this land, and that his predecessors had repaired it; that within living memory the sea encroached, and that the ancient highway was covered by the sea; that his predecessors had, from time to time, gradually removed the ancient highway as the sea encroached, and appropriated other parts of the estate for the site of a highway, so as to keep a highway along the sea-coast, and that they had always repaired such highway; that the highway mentioned in the indictment passed over a different part of the estate from that formerly occupied by any part of the ancient road; that the sea had, shortly before the finding of the indictment, made an encroachment on and washed away part of the highway alleged to be out of repair, and washed away the earth, so that the residue of the road was too narrow for passage, and was made to stand at the edge of a precipitous bank:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to judgment. Reg. v. Bamber, D. & M. 367; 5 Q. B. 279; 13 L. J., M. C. 13; 8 Jur. 309.

Upon the trial of an indictment for not repairing a highway, which it is alleged the defendant is bound to repair ratione tenuræ, an award, made under a submission by a former tenant for years of the premises, can neither be received as an adjudication, the tenant having no authority to bind the rights of his landlord, nor as evidence of reputation, being post litem motam. Rex v. Cotton, 3 Camp. 444; 14 R. R. 780.

Evidence of reputation is inadmissible to shew a liability in the occupiers of land to repair a road ratione tenuræ. Reg. v. Wavertree, 2 M. & Rob. 353.

A defendant was indicted for non-repair of a highway, which it was alleged he was liable to repair ratione tenuræ. Evidence was given of the conviction of a former owner and occupier of the lands in respect of which the liability was said to arise, for the non-repair of the same highway, shewing that he had pleaded guilty to a presentment against him alleging his liability to repair the highway. Repairs by occupiers of the same lands subsequently to this conviction were also proved; and evidence was given that the defendant purchased these lands after public notice of the liability to repair the highway, and that he was the owner and occupier of the same:—Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury of immemorial usage and liability ratione tenuræ. Reg. v. Blakemore, 2 Den. C. C. 410; 21 L. J., M. C. 60; 16 Jur. 154.

Owner indicted—Character of Road altered.]—An owner of lands, which were alleged to be chargeable with the repair of an ancient highway, was indicted for non-repair ratione tenuræ. In 1854 a turnpike act was passed, when the trustees took up the paving-stones with which the road was formed to the width of nine feet, and laid down a macadamised road fifteen feet wide, more costly to maintain. They also made certain deviations in its course. Upon the expiration of the act the road fell into decay, and the indictment was preferred:—Held, first, that the ancient character of the road having been destroyed, the liability to repair ratione tenuræ was at an end; secondly, that the occupiers of the lands were the persons liable to be indicted, not the owner. Reg. v. Barker, 59 L. J., M. C. 105; 25 Q. B. D. 213; 62 L. T. 578; 17 Cox, C. C. 26; 54 J. P. 615—C. C. R.

v. Owners or Occupiers Generally.

Liability to Indictment.]—See Reg. v. Barker, supra.

Public or Owner of Soil.]—Public highways are generally repairable by the public; an owner of land in the suburb of a town who allows the public to pass over his land, but who does not make a road at his own expense, nor propose to dedicate a highway to the public by notice under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, nor undertake to keep the road in repair for twelve months with a view of throwing the future care and expense of the highway on the surveyor and the general rate under the same act, is not liable to be compelled to sewer and pave the road as a street under the 69th section of the Public Health Act, 1848. Healey v. Batley Corporation, 44 L. J., Ch. 642; L. R. 19 Eq. 375.

Lessor of Tithes.]—Quære, whether a person is liable to be rated to the repair of the highways where he lets his tithes from year to year to the several occupiers of the land from which they issue. Rex v. Buckinghamshire JJ., 2 D. & R. 689; 1 B. & C. 485.

Adjoining Owner—Expense of Paving Street.]—In 1798, by a local act, trustees were appointed to repair, &c., the streets of a township, and to levy rates on the inhabitants, who on paying them were to be exempt from all other charges for paving, &c., the streets. In 1816 A. laid out a street on his land, which in 1819 became dedicated to the public by user. In 1823, by another local act, the former act was repealed, and trustees were appointed for similar purposes, as it was provided that all persons should be exonerated from statute duty and compositions and all liability for highway repairs, that surveyors should be appointed who were to be in the position of surveyors of highways, all costs to be paid by the trustees out of rates to be levied by them, and the trustees authorised to pave, &c., present and future streets, and when any new streets already or thereafter laid out and made were properly paved, &c., an application by the owners of adjoining houses to declare them public, whereupon they were to be public and repaired by the trustees, and where any streets then or thereafter set out on private property had been opened and used for three years, to cause them to be paved, &c., whereupon they should be deemed public. In 1851 the Public Health Act, 1848, was applied to the township, and the local acts repealed as far as the liability of the surveyors, the powers of the trustees to pave, and liability of owners to reimburse them; and the local board having duly paved the street before mentioned, called on A. to contribute as an adjoining owner, under s. 69 of the last-mentioned act, which excepts highways defined by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 42, s. 13, to be highways repairable by the inhabitants at large. Rates had been paid in respect of the premises under the local acts, but the street had never been paved, &c., never been dedicated under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, and no steps taken by the trustees or the local board to make it public:—Held, that the first local act did not prevent a dedication to the public, that the second only applied to streets then in course of construction or afterwards constructed, and that therefore the street was a highway within the exception in s. 69 of the Public Health Act, 1848, and A. not liable. Hirst v. Halifax Local Board, 40 L. J., M. C. 43; L. R. 6 Q. B. 181; 19 W. R. 279.

To Keep up Fences.]—Semble, that there is no general law imposing the obligation on the owner or occupier of lands abutting on a public road to keep up the fences. Potter v. Parry, 7 W. R. 182.

On Removal of Encroachments.]—If there has been an encroachment on a highway, and a person removes it, and repairs that part of the highway which was injured by the encroachment once, and then leaves it to the trustees or parish to repair in future, he will not be liable in future. Rex v. Skinner, 5 Esp. 219.

But if the proprietor of the adjoining land has for any length of time repaired, it is evidence of his liability, unless he gives positive evidence of encroachment. Ib.

Under Special Agreement.]—A highway board agreed with a gas company that if the highway board would give the gas company a licence to open a highway in their jurisdiction, the gas company should make good the surface of the road, and would pay to the highway board 1*s.* per yard of the highways so broken up:—Held, that the contract was valid; for that the agreement of the highway board to allow the gas company to interfere with the surface of the road was a good consideration, and the contract was not illegal and did not necessarily contemplate the creation of a nuisance by the gas company. Edgware Highway Board v. Harrow District Gas Co., 44 L. J., Q. B. 1; L. R. 10 Q. B. 92; 31 L. T. 402; 23 W. R. 90.

Under Particular Statutes — Transfer of Liability.]—Where the burden of repairing a highway is transferred, by a public act of parliament, from the parish to other persons, if the parish is indicted for not repairing this highway, there is no occasion for a special plea stating who are bound to repair it, but the exemption may be taken advantage of under the general issue of not guilty. Rex v. St. George, Hanover Square, 3 Camp. 222; 13 R. R. 792.

—— When Township still Liable.]—By a navigation act, the proprietors of the navigation were required to keep a road in repair, and were declared to be liable to indictment if it was out of repair:—Held, that this enactment did not relieve the township from their common-law liability to repair the road. Reg. v. Brightside Bierlow, 13 Q. B. 933; 4 New Sess. Cas. 47; 19 L. J., M. C. 50; 14 Jur. 174.

—— Proceedings to Enforce—Validity.]—A navigation company, holding lands partly occupied as a wharf, were directed by statute to uphold and repair a road between certain points of the navigation; it was enacted, that they should be liable to indictment for any default in so doing; and they were empowered to take tolls for goods carried along the line of navigation (over and above lock dues which were payable to them), and were required to apply such tolls to the making and repairing of the road. By a subsequent act, a canal company (whose works would interfere with the revenue of the navigation company) was required to purchase the navigation, and the navigation company's lands, and all rights thereto belonging (including the right to the tolls to be applied towards the repair of the road), and it was enacted, that the canal company should for ever after repair the road, and should be liable to indictment for non-repair, and should indemnify the navigation company from the maintenance of the road, and from indictment for non-repair; the conveyance of the premises to be subject to such condition, with power of re-entry by the navigation company in default of compliance. The canal company purchased the lands and navigation, and took a conveyance according to the statute:—Held, first, that a count, stating these facts, and that the canal company, by reason of the premises, and by force of the statute, became liable to repair (averring non-repair), was sufficient to charge the company. Reg. v. Sheffield Canal Co., 13 Q. B. 913; 4 New Sess. Cas. 25; 19 L. J., M. C. 44; 14 Jur. 170.

Held, secondly, that the company was properly charged by such count with breach of an obligation to repair, and that it was not requisite to charge them specifically with disobedience. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that a count, stating the road to have been made under the first-mentioned act, and alleging that the company, under and by virtue of the last-mentioned act, ought to have repaired, was not too general, both statutes being public. Ib.

But that a count merely stating the existence and non-repair of the road, and that the company, by reason of the then tenure of certain lands and tenements in the parishes, ought to have repaired, was not maintainable. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that the company was rightly charged with liability to repair generally, and not merely to the extent of the tolls, though in fact the tolls received were inadequate to the cost of repair; and this whether the company had or had not other adequate sources of revenue. Ib.

In the Case of Railway Companies.]—See RAILWAY.

vi. Jurisdiction to Determine.

Order of Justices — Conclusiveness of.] — Justices have jurisdiction under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 18, to order a highway board to repair a highway if the waywarden of the parish denies the fact that such road is a highway; and although the denial, if not made bonâ fide, will not oust their jurisdiction if they are satisfied that the road is really a highway, yet their decision that the denial is not made bonâ fide is not conclusive, and may be reviewed by the court. Reg. v. Odell, 21 L. T. 556.

An order of magistrates under 34 Geo. 3, c. 64, for dividing a road lying partly in one parish and partly in another by a transverse line, for the purpose of repair, such order pursuing the form given by that statute, is conclusive as to the liability of each parish to repair the portions of road allotted to them; and it is not open to either parish, on an indictment for the non-repair of the portion so allotted, to impeach the jurisdiction of the magistrates by producing evidence to prove that no part of the road ever was within such parish. Reg. v. Hickling, 7 Q. B. 880; 2 New Sess. Cas. 117; 14 L. J., M. C. 177; 9 Jur. 1075.

Where there was no evidence that the boundary of two hamlets passed through the middle of two public roads, the road cannot be divided by a transverse line by order of justices, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 58. Reg. v. Perkins, 14 Q. B. 229; 19 L. J., M. C. 105; 14 Jur. 362.

The proviso of s. 58 does not apply to cases in which there is a divided common-law liability to repair, but to cases of a liability ratione tenuræ or clausuræ. Ib.

—— Appeals against Orders.]—A complaint having been made to justices that certain roads alleged to be highways under the jurisdiction of a highway board were out of repair, a summons was issued against such board. Upon the hearing, a land surveyor was appointed to view and report on the state of the roads in question. The report was duly made, and the justices, upon the evidence and admissions before them, ordered the highway board to do the repairs. The highway board neglected to obey this order; and the justices appointed such land surveyor to put the highway in repair, and ordered the board to pay the expenses. At several hearings before the justices, the highway board never denied that they were liable to repair the roads in question. The board appealed to quarter sessions against the order upon them for the expenses of repairing the roads. The following were the grounds of appeal:—"1. That the said justices had no jurisdiction to make the said order. 2. That the said order is contrary to law. 3. That the said order is contrary to the evidence. 4. That the justices wrongfully admitted evidence of witnesses other than the persons appointed by them under s. 18 of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61. 5. That at the time of the making of the said order the said highways had been put into a state of complete and effectual repair. 6. That the sum mentioned in the said order to be spent in putting the said roads into repair is excessive. 7. That the said highway board was and is not liable to repair the said highways, and that the liability to repair the said highways was at all the hearings before the said justices recited in the said order, and also at the time of the hearing when the said order was made, and at the time of the making thereof, disputed." Upon the appeal it was contended on behalf of the board that the roads in question were not highways, and the order was quashed on that ground:—Held, that the highway board were entitled to appeal to quarter sessions against the order, but were not entitled on the appeal to raise the question whether the roads were highways—(1) because they were stopped by their admissions before the justices; (2) because their grounds of appeal gave no notice that the point would be taken; and (3) because the question was not open to them when the order appealed against was made. Illingworth v. Bulmer East Highway Board, 52 L. J., Q. B. 680; 48 J. P. 37.

Held, also, that the quarter sessions, by deciding the question, did not thereby necessarily decide that it was open to the highway board to raise it. Ib.

b. Obtaining of Materials.

Right of Inhabitants to Take.]—The right for the inhabitants of a township to take stones from the land of another person for the purpose of repairing the highways, is profit à prendre, and cannot therefore be claimed by custom; neither can it be claimed by prescription, as inhabitants are incapable by that description of taking such an easement, unless under a grant which would incorporate them. Constable v. Nicholson, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 230; 32 L. J., C. P. 240; 11 W. R. 698.

Trespass by Surveyor.]—A surveyor cannot justify a trespass under a prescriptive right, or a custom, to take stones from the waste, whether adjoining the sea-shore between high and low water mark, or otherwise, for the purpose of repairing the highways of a parish. Padwick v. Knight, 7 Ex. 854 ; 22 L. J., Ex. 198.

Licence from Magistrates.]—A licence may be granted to get materials for the repair of the highways under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 54, although the materials when got must be carried away by an "avenue to a house," the exception of such an avenue (inter alia) in the section referring only to the digging or getting of the materials, not to the carrying of them away when got. Ramsden v. Yeates, 50 L. J., M. C. 135 ; 6 Q. B. D. 583 ; 44 L. T. 612 ; 29 W. R. 628 ; 45 J. P. 538.

The licence granted by justices to the surveyor to get materials from inclosed lands for the repair of the highways, in accordance with s. 54 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, is limited to the necessities of that particular occasion in respect of which the application for the licence is made. Manvers (Earl) v. Bartholomew, 48 L. J., M. C. 3 ; 4 Q. B. D. 5 ; 39 L. T. 327 ; 27 W. R. 167.

Justices in special sessions, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 54, granted in 1866 to the surveyor of highways a licence to take materials for the repairs of the highways from lands in the parish of which plaintiffs were the owner and occupier respectively. Materials had been got under that licence down to 1877, when the plaintiffs gave notice to the present surveyor not to get any more. The defendant continued to do so nevertheless, and the plaintiffs brought an action of trespass against him :—Held, that the defendant had no right to enter upon the land, inasmuch as the licence granted by the justices only extended to the necessities of the particular occasion in respect of which it was granted Ib.

—— Place should be Specified.]—A highway surveyor applied under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 54, for an order to take materials for highway repairs out of a wood of H. The wood consisted of thirteen acres, and was part of a larger wood of a hundred acres :—Held, that the order was bad for not specifying the part of the wood where the materials were to be taken. Hooper v. Hawkins, 51 J. P. 246.

—— Right to Compensation.] — Under the Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 51, justices are entitled to grant the surveyor of highways a licence to gather stones upon inclosed land within the parish for the repair of its highways, without making any compensation to the owner for the value of such stones. Alresford Rural Sanitary Authority v. Scott, 50 L. J., M. C. 103 ; 7 Q. B. D. 210 ; 45 L. T. 73 ; 29 W. R. 741 ; 45 J. P. 619.

Sufficiency of Amends.]— Surveyors having broken a new way over the plaintiff's land, in order to carry such materials for repair, in a case where an old, but circuitous road existed before, and having, after the damage done, and after an action brought against them, paid money into court by way of amends :—Held, under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 27, that the sufficiency of such amends could not be questioned at nisi prius, the statute having referred the quantum of amends, if not agreed upon, to the decision of justices of the peace. Boyfield v. Porter, 13 East, 200 ; 12 R. R. 324.

The amount of satisfaction can only be ascertained by the justices at a special session. Peters v. Clarkson, 7 Man. & G. 548 ; 8 Scott (N.R.) 384 ; 1 New Sess. Cas. 519 ; 13 L. J., M. C. 153 ; 8 Jur. 648.

—— Contract for Materials.] — A highway board contracted with the plaintiff for the supply of materials to repair, during 1866, the roads in one of the parishes in their district. On 24th of March, 1866, the parishioners passed a resolution adopting the Local Government Act, 1858. The board continued to repair the roads up to the 26th July with materials supplied by the plaintiff, who brought an action to recover their value :—Held, that he was, under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 41, entitled to recover. Driver v. Kingston Highway Board, 24 L. T. 480 ; 20 W. R. 20.

Purchase of Materials by Surveyor — Non-liability of Successor.]—A surveyor of highways who, in accordance with the provisions of the Highway Act, 1835, contracts for the purchase of materials to be used in the repair of the parish roads, and raises the necessary sum by the levy of the highway rate, is personally and solely liable for payment ; and his successor in office is not liable therefor, although such materials were in fact used in repairing the roads. Frodingham Iron and Steel Co. v. Bowser, 64 L. J., Q. B. 12 ; [1894] 2 Q. B. 791 ; 10 R. 498 ; 71 L. T. 433 ; 59 J. P. 54.

Removal of Shingle.]—A highway board is not entitled under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, ss. 51, 52, to remove shingle for the repair of the highways from below high-water mark, so as to cause increased danger of encroachment by the sea. Pitts v. Kingsbridge Highway Board, 25 L. T. 195 ; 19 W. R. 884.

A special custom to take shingle from the beach above high-water mark for the repairing of the highways of the parish, is bad as to such portion of the beach as is private property, being a custom of a profit à prendre in another man's land. Ib.

—— Injunction.]—The plaintiff, by virtue of a grant from the crown, made 36 Hen. 8, claimed, as lord of the manor of C., to be entitled to the beach or shore of the sea between high and low water mark. The defendants, the surveyors of highways, took the stones to mend the highway of the parish. Upon a bill filed by the plaintiff against them, the defendants put in their answer, denying the right claimed by the plaintiff, and insisting upon their right to take the stones by custom, and also by prescription, and also under the Highways Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50 ; and upon a motion to dissolve the injunction obtained by the plaintiff :—Held, that the rights claimed by the plaintiff were legal, and must be decided by an action ; that the court must consider which of the two parties were likely to sustain most injury ; that, notwithstanding the want of distinct evidence respecting injury, the court, to prevent a possible mischief, would grant an injunction, and give the plaintiff leave to bring an action, but it refused to say that he must do so. Clowes v. Beck, 20 L. J., Ch. 505.

Working of Gravel Pits.]—By a private act passed in 1764 for the purpose of extinguishing the right of common over the commonable lands in a manor and parish, of which lands S. was then in possession as lessee of the lord of the manor, it was enacted that the surveyors of highways of the parish might at all times thereafter cut, dig and carry away any quantity of gravel for the repair of roads within the parish from any pit or pits then in the possession of S., without payment, and the surveyors were thereby required to fence in the pits, and to repair the fences as occasion should require. These lands included a field of nine acres, in which one of the pits was situated. The field having become vested in the plaintiff, he sought to restrain the surveyors from extending the pit laterally so as to destroy the surface:—Held, that the right conferred by the act was to work the gravel in the ordinary manner of working a gravel pit, and that consequently the surveyors were entitled to extend the area of the pits, although the surface was thereby destroyed. Ellis v. Bromley Local Board, 45 L. J., Ch. 763; 35 L. T. 182; 24 W. R. 716—C. A.

Where gravel pits had been opened on rectory land, and gravel taken therefrom by the surveyors of the highways, for the purpose of their repair, without sloping down the ground as required by 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 31:—Held, that neither the taking such gravel, and omitting to slope down, nor neglecting to compel the surveyors to slope down, could be considered waste on the part of the rector. Huntley v. Russell, 13 Q. B. 572; 18 L. J., Q. B. 239; 13 Jur. 837.

—— Extinguishment of Surveyor's Title.]—A gravel pit and a road to it were allotted to surveyors of highways under a local act. The surveyors continued to take gravel from the pit till 1837, but from that year till 1863 they took no steps whatever to assert their rights over either the road or the pit. In 1837, the tenant of the plaintiff's predecessor in title filled up part of the pit with rubbish, and from that year till 1863 took the surface of it into regular cultivation. In 1839, another such tenant ploughed up the remaining portion of the pit, and from that time till 1863 this portion of the pit and the whole of the road were taken into cultivation by the plaintiff's tenants. In 1844, one of the plaintiff's tenants, who was in the occupation of the greater portion of the surface of the pit, was elected surveyor of highways, and held the office for one year:—Held, first, that the plaintiff had by his tenants been in actual possession of the gravel pit and road from 1837 to 1863, so that the title of the surveyors to the soil and their right to dig gravel had become extinguished by twenty years' adverse possession. Smith v. Stocks, 10 B. & S. 701; 38 L. J., Q. B. 306; 20 L. T. 740; 17 W. R. 1135.

Held, secondly, that the fact that the tenant occupying a portion of the pit had been elected surveyor after possession had been taken made no difference, as the character of the previous possession was not altered during the tenant's year of office. Ib.

—— Transfer of Right to County Council—Main Road.]—A highway was duly declared a main road. Before that time the highway surveyor was entitled to take gravel from a pit for repairs. The county council, under s. 11 of the Local Government Act, 1888, claimed the same right:—Held, that the right to do so passed to the council with the duty to repair the highway. Norfolk County Council v. Bittering Highway Surveyor, 58 J. P. 497.

Sale of Exhausted Gravel Pits—Pre-emption of Adjoining Owners.]—Where, under the Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 48, an exhausted gravel pit is offered for sale to the owner of adjoining lands to whom the statute gives the right of pre-emption, it is the duty of the justices at the special sessions, in fixing the price to be paid by him, to consider his interests as well as those of the parish. They are, therefore, while in the interests of the parish fixing a minimum below which the land shall not be sold, yet in his interests to fix a price fair for him to pay, and not to take as a standard of value a price which might be obtained on a sale by auction, or to some person who for some private or personal reasons would give an extraordinary price. Reg. v. Drayton-in-Hales Highway Board, 45 L. J., M. C. 126; 1 Q. B. D. 608; 35 L. T. 251; 24 W. R. 756.

—— Appeal to Sessions—When it Lies.]—An appeal to the quarter sessions, under s. 105, lies against the consent or determination of justices under s. 48. Ib.

c. Fines for Nonrepair.

Application of.]—The fine, which the court, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 96, may order to be imposed on defendants convicted on an indictment for the non-repair of a highway, to be applied pursuant to the directions of the statute, can only be applied towards the repair and amendment of such highway; and if, after conviction and order, and before payment of the fine, the defendants effectually repair the road, they are entitled to a stay of further proceedings on the order; and the prosecutors cannot claim the fine on behalf of third parties for repairs done previously to the conviction. Reg. v. Barnard Castle, 1 Q. B. 246; 10 L. J., M. C. 53; 5 Jur. 799.

—— Apportionment.]—If a parish, consisting of two districts which are bound to repair separately, is convicted for not repairing the road in one of the districts, the other district having no notice of the indictment, the court will consider it as being substantially the conviction of the one district; and, if the fine is levied on all the inhabitants of the other, will grant a special mandamus for the rate to be levied on the district bound to repair the indicted part of the road. Rex v. Townshend, 2 Dougl. 421.

To whom Payable.]—Fines for not repairing roads ratione tenuræ were formerly payable to the surveyor of the parish highways. Rex v. Wingfield, 1 W. Bl. 602.

Verdict of Guilty—Mode of Repair.]—A verdict of guilty had been found against a parish upon an indictment for nonrepair of a highway, and the parish afterwards neglected to repair with hard materials. An application was then made for the imposition of a fine for such neglect, when it appeared that the road never had been repaired with hard materials, probably not at all; that it was continued into an adjoining parish, which denied that it was a highway; and further, that it was so little used that the repair required would be a useless expense:—Held, that these facts were no answer to the application, and did not excuse the parish from the consequences of the verdict. Reg. v. Claxby, 3

C. L. R. 986 ; 24 L. J., Q. B. 223 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 710 ; 3 W. R. 451.

The court will not prescribe the particular mode of repair, but when it appears a certain amount is necessary to put the highway in a substantial state of repair, a fine of that amount will be imposed. Ib.

Winter Months.]—The court will not make a rule for a fine for nonrepair of a road absolute in the winter months ; but will enlarge the rule till Easter term. Reg. v. Walton, 4 Jur. 195.

Wrongful Levy—Application to Reimburse.]—An application under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 47, for a rate to reimburse two inhabitants of a parish on whom a fine for the nonrepair of a highway had been levied, after a conviction upon an indictment against the parish for nonrepair, ought to have been made within a reasonable time after such levy, before any material change of inhabitants. Rex v. Lancashire JJ., 12 East, 366.

In the Case of Surveyor.]—See ante, cols. 79, 80.

d. Liability for Damages.

Parish.]—No action for the nonrepair of a highway lies against a vestry appointed under the Metropolitan Local Management Act, 1855. Parsons v. St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green, Vestry, 37 L. J., C. P. 62 ; L. R. 3 C. P. 56 ; 17 L. T. 211 ; 16 W. R. 81.

Surveyors.]—An action for a personal and pecuniary damage resulting from the nonrepair of a county bridge will not lie against the county surveyor either at common law or under 43 Geo. 3, c. 59. McKinnon v. Penson, 9 Ex. 609 ; 23 L. J., M. C. 97 ; 18 Jur. 513 ; 2 W. R. 262—Ex. Ch.

No action lies against a surveyor for damage resulting from an accident caused by his neglect to repair the highway. Young v. Davis, 7 H. & N. 760 ; 31 L. J., Ex. 250 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 286 ; 6 L. T. 363 ; 10 W. R. 524. Affirmed on appeal, 2 H. & C. 177 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 79 ; 9 L. T. 145 ; 11 W. R. 735—Ex. Ch.

Improvement Commissioners.]—The commissioners under 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34, Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, are liable to an action, in their corporate capacity, at the suit of a person who has suffered damage from a highway, within the limits of their special act, being allowed by them to remain in a dangerous condition. Hartnall v. Ryde Commissioners, 4 B. & S. 361 ; 33 L. J., Q. B. 39 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 257 ; 8 L. T. 754 ; 11 W. R. 963.

Local Boards.]—An action for personal injuries sustained by one of the public owing to the nonrepair of a highway, does not lie against a local board of health. Gibson v. Preston Corporation, 10 B. & S. 942 ; 39 L. J., Q. B. 131 ; L. R. 5 Q. B. 218 ; 22 L. T. 293 ; 18 W. R. 689.

By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 42, s. 13, the term "highway" in the Public Health Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63), s. 68, by which highways are vested in the local board, shall mean "any highway repairable by the inhabitants at large" :—Held, that the words "repairable by the inhabitants at large" are used in contradistinction to repairable by individuals ratione tenuræ. Ib.

A local board, being the highway authority of the district, are not liable for damages caused to a person in consequence of the highway being out of repair, where such nonrepair is a mere nonfeasance. Gibson v. Preston Corporation (L. R. 5 Q. B. 218) followed and approved. Cowley v. Newmarket Local Board, 62 L. J., Q. B. 65 ; [1892] A. C. 345 ; 1 R. 45 ; 67 L. T. 486 ; 56 J. P. 805—H. L. (E.)

—— Where Obligation to Repair.]—Where a statute empowers the corporation of a town to maintain and repair the highways of the town, and the corporation allows one of the highways to fall into disrepair, in consequence of which a member of the public is injured, such failure to repair being a nonfeasance and not a misfeasance, the injured party cannot maintain an action against the corporation, but the remedy (if any) is by indictment. Bathurst Borough v. Macpherson (4 App. Cas. 256) distinguished : Cowley v. Newmarket Local Board ([1892] A. C. 345) followed. Sydney Municipal Council v. Bourke, 64 L. J., P. C. 140 ; [1895] A. C. 433 ; 11 R. 482 ; 72 L. T. 605 ; 59 J. P. 659—P. C.

The effect of a contract made in pursuance of s. 29 of the Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), by a tramway company with the road authority for the maintenance by the latter of the roadway and lines, is to transfer to the road authority the liability primâ facie imposed by s. 28 upon the company for drainage occasioned by the roadway being out of repair. Howitt v. Nottingham Tramways Co. (12 Q. B. D. 16) approved. Alldred v. West Metropolitan Tramways, 60 L. J., Q. B. 631 ; [1891] 2 Q. B. 398 ; 65 L. T. 138 ; 39 W. R. 609 ; 55 J. P. 824.

The transfer of an obligation to repair a highway to a public corporation does not of itself render such corporation liable to an action in respect of mere nonfeasance. To establish such a liability the legislature must have used language indicating an intention that this liability should be imposed. Bathurst Borough v. Macpherson (4 App. Cas. 256) distinguished. Pictou Municipality v. Geldert, 63 L. J., P. C. 37 ; [1893] A. C. 524 ; 1 R. 447 ; 69 L. T. 510 ; 42 W. R. 114—P. C.

—— Where also Sewer Authority.]—C., who was the owner of certain cottages in a public highway, received a notice from the defendants under the Public Health Act, 1875, requiring him to connect the drains of his cottages with the main sewer, and in compliance therewith he dug a trench in the road and made the connection to the satisfaction of the defendants' surveyor, and he then filled up the trench. The soil afterwards subsided, and the subsidence was the cause of an accident to the plaintiff while driving in a pony cart. The defendants were the sewer authority and the highway authority of the district. In an action for damages for personal injuries :—Held, that the defendants were not liable as the sewer authority, on the ground that the notice did not constitute C. their agent ; nor as the highway authority, on the ground that no action would lie against a local board for personal injuries arising from the nonrepair of a highway. Steel v. Dartford Local Board, 60 L. J., Q. B. 256—C. A.

A local authority which, under the Public Health Act, 1875, has vested in it both the highways and the sewers of the district, and the control and management of the same, is not civilly liable for an injury caused by a sewer grating that projects beyond the road surface if the grating is in proper repair and condition, and the accident is attributable solely to the non-repair of the highway. The fact that the local authority has the control of the sewers as well as of the highways does not render the local authority liable. Kent v. Worthing Local Board (10 Q. B. D. 118) overruled; Moore v. Lambeth Waterworks (17 Q. B. D. 462) discussed; Cowley v. Newmarket Local Board (1 R. 45) followed. Oliver v. Horsham Local Board, 63 L. J., Q. B. 181; [1894] 1 Q. B. 332; 9 R. 111; 70 L. T. 206; 42 W. R. 161; 58 J. P. 297—C. A.

The municipality of B., incorporated under New South Wales Acts No. 13 of 1858 and No. 12 of 1867, and having thereunder the care, construction, and management of the roads and streets within their municipality, constructed therein a barrel drain into which ran an open drain, the brickwork of which having broken away, and not having been repaired, a hole was caused, into which the plaintiff's horse fell. In an action claiming damages against the municipality (a) for negligence in constructing the street, (b) for negligence in keeping and maintaining the street, and not repairing the drain, gutter, or sewer in the said street (plea, the general issue), the chief justice directed the jury that the defendants under their act of incorporation were not liable for the result of any mere nonfeasance; that if they thought fit to construct a sewer, and they did the work in so negligent a manner as to bring about the accident, they were liable for that misfeasance: but if they constructed the sewer properly in the first instance and it became defective afterwards they were not bound to repair it; and further, that if the defective state in which the drain was arose from the operation of the weather, or wear and tear, it having been properly constructed originally, they were not liable. Verdict for defendants:—Held, on motion for a new trial, that as regards (b) there was misdirection. The barrel drain was not only made by the defendants, but the sole control and management of it were by the statute vested in them. By reason of their construction of that drain and their neglect to repair it, whereby, as an indirect but natural consequence, the dangerous hole was formed, which was left open and unfenced, they caused a nuisance in the highway for which, whatever their statutory obligation to repair may have been, they were liable to an indictment, and also to an action by the plaintiff who sustained direct and particular damage from their breach of duty. Bathurst Borough v. Macpherson, 48 L. J., P. C. 61; 4 App. Cas. 256—P. C.

A local board had vested in them, under the Public Health Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63), s. 43, a sewer which ran under a highway, of which, by virtue of the act, they were surveyors. A grid or grating in the highway, used for the purpose of carrying the surface water from the road into the sewer, was allowed by the board to get out of repair, by reason of which a horse of the plaintiff was injured:—Held, that, whether the local board was liable or not, as surveyors of the highway, the grid must be taken to be part of the sewer, and they were liable, as owners of the sewer and grid, for their negligence in not keeping the latter in repair. White v. Hindley Local Board, 44 L. J., Q. B. 114; L. R. 10 Q. B. 219; 32 L. T. 460; 23 W. R. 651.

—— Liability for Negligent Workmanship.]—A local board of health, which was both the highway authority and the sewer authority of the district, employed a contractor to construct a pipe-sewer under a highway within the district. The contractor in the laying the pipes dug a trench, which he afterwards filled in with earth, and the roadway was apparently made good. The work was done under the directions and to the satisfaction of the surveyor of the local board. Some months after it was finished, a subsidence of the soil in the trench took place without any assignable cause, leaving the road apparently sound. The plaintiff's horse, in consequence of the surface giving way, fell into the trench, and was injured:—Held, that there was evidence that the work of filling in the trench had been negligently and improperly done, and that the local board, either as the sewer or the highway authority, or as both, was responsible. Smith v. West Derby Local Board, 47 L. J., C. P. 607; 3 C. P. D. 423; 38 L. T. 716; 27 W. R. 137—C. A.

Occupier of House—Coal Shoot.]—A. was injured by the giving way of a grating in a public footway, which was used for a coal shoot and for letting light into the lower part of the premises adjoining. These premises were at the time of the accident under lease to B., who covenanted to repair and keep in repair all except the roofs, main walls and main timbers. At the time of the demise the grating was unsafe; but there was no evidence that the landlady had any knowledge of its unsafe state; and the jury found that no blame was attributable to her for not knowing it:—Held, that no action was maintainable against the landlady. Gwinnel v. Eamer, L. R. 10 C. P. 658; 32 L. T. 835.

At the time of the accident A. was not passing along the way, but was standing on the grating to talk with a person at the window above it:—Held, that he was not making an improper use of the grating. Ib.

—— Structure Part of Highway.]—A row of houses stood a few feet from a raised causeway, the centre of which was a carriage road, the sides being foot pavement. The ground-floor of the houses was on a lower level than the causeway. There was a continuous structure, consisting of flagstones and gratings, from the row of houses to the foot pavement, with which it was on a level; an outer door of each house opened upon this structure; it had been dedicated to the public, and used by them as part of the highway for foot passengers. The carriage and foot roads on the causeway were repaired by the parish. The structure became in a bad state of repair, and, owing to this, R. fell through one of the gratings forming part of it, and was killed:—Held, in an action by his administrator against the lessee of the houses, that the structure was part of the highway, and that the parish was bound to repair it, and that, therefore, the action against the lessee was not maintainable. Robbins v. Jones, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 221; 33 L. J., C. P. 1; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 9 L. T. 523; 12 W. R. 248.

—— Defective Lamp.]—The occupier of premises adjoining a highway is bound to keep them in such a state of repair that they shall not endanger passers by. The occupier does not discharge himself of this duty by employing a competent person to repair the premises. Tarry v. Ashton, 45 L. J., Q. B. 260; 1 Q. B. D. 314; 34 L. T. 97; 24 W. R. 581.

Therefore, where the defendant had a lamp and lamp iron projecting from his premises over the street, and had given orders to a competent contractor to repair it, but the contractor had done the work badly, by reason of which the lamp fell and injured the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant was liable. Ib.

e. Indictment for Nonrepair.

i. Generally.

Exclusiveness of Remedy.]—The court will not entertain an application for a mandamus to repair a road, because the remedy is by indictment. Reg. v. Oxford and Witney Turnpike Roads Trustees, 12 A. & E. 427; 4 P. & D. 154; 6 Jur. 216, n.

Nature of Offence—Wall supporting Highway out of Repair.]—Where a highway is supported by a wall, and such wall becomes dangerous by reason of nonrepair, the inhabitants of the place in which such highway is situate, if liable to repair the highway, can be convicted upon an indictment for nonrepair, it being a question for the jury whether the wall forms part of the highway or not. Reg. v. Lordsmere (Inhabitants), 54 L. T. 766; 16 Cox, C. C. 65; 51 J. P. 86—C. C. R.

On an indictment for the nonrepair of a highway in the ordinary form, a parish cannot be convicted for not rebuilding a sea-wall, washed away by the sea, over the top of which the alleged way used to pass. Reg. v. Paul (Inhabitants), 2 M. & Rob. 307.

Form of—Sufficiency of Allegations.]—It must be affirmatively stated that the road is within the district which is bound to repair it. Rex v. Upton, 6 Car. & P. 133.

Stating a road to be out of repair, "from and through" a place, excludes the terminus. Ib.

An indictment charged that the defendants removed a culvert in the parish of S. opposite to a mill there, in a highway there, leading from S. to H.:—Held, on motion in arrest of judgment, that it sufficiently appeared that the culvert removed was in the parish of S. Rex v. Knight, 7 B. & C. 413; 1 M. & Ry. 217; 6 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 19.

An indictment for not repairing one side of a road should state a liability to repair it to the middle. Rex v. St. Pancras, Peake, 286. And see Rex v. Eardisland, 2 Camp. 494.

An indictment against the parish of B. for not repairing a road leading from A. to B., is exclusive of B. and therefore bad; and it is not aided by a subsequent allegation that a certain part of the same highway, situate in B., is in decay. Rex v. Gamlingay, 3 Term Rep. 513; 1 Leach, C. C. 528.

An indictment charged that the inhabitants of the township of Bondgate in Auckland, Newgate in Auckland, and the borough of Auckland, in the parish of St. Andrew, Auckland, were immemorially liable to repair a highway in the town of Bishop Auckland, in the parish of St. Andrew, Auckland, and no consideration was laid:—Held bad, in arrest of judgment, as not shewing that the highway was in the defendant's district. Rex v. Bishop Auckland, 1 A. & E. 744; 1 M. & Rob. 286.

Held to be no objection that the inhabitants of the three townships were charged conjointly. Ib.

If a parish is indicted for the nonrepair of a pack and prime way, and it is proved that the way is a carriage-way, this is a misdescription of the way. Rex v. St. Weonard, 6 Car. & P. 582.

It is not necessary to state the termini; but if they are stated, they must be proved. Ib.

A road had been repaired by a parish, and persons on horseback had used it; but there was no evidence that any carriage had ever gone along the whole length of it:—Held, that the parish could not be convicted of nonrepair of it on an indictment stating it to be a way for carriages; and that there should have been a count charging it to be a way for horses. Rex v. St. Weonard, 5 Car. & P. 572.

An indictment stated, that there was a queen's highway for carriages, "leading from the town of A. in the county of B. towards and unto the village of E. in the same county," a part of which was out of repair. The part of the road charged to be out of repair was a portion of a lane called F. lane, and it was proved that, to go from the town of A. to the village of E. with a carriage, a person must go four miles along the C. turnpike road, then all along F. lane, and then across the W. turnpike road, and for a short distance go along a road which goes from the W. turnpike road to the village of E.:—Held, that the road was not misdescribed. Reg. v. Steventon, 1 Car. & K. 55.

Indictment for nonrepair of a highway within certain limits, charging a corporation with a prescriptive liability to repair all common highways, within such limits, "excepting such as ought to be repaired according to the form of the several statutes in such case made," is bad, for want of shewing that the highway was not within any of the exceptions. Rex v. Liverpool Corporation, 3 East, 86; 6 R. R. 546.

A count, stating the defendant's liability to arise by virtue of an agreement with the owners of houses alongside of it, is also bad; for the parish, who are primâ facie bound to the repair of all highways within their boundaries, cannot be discharged from such liability by an agreement with others. Ib.

Indictment stated that, from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, there was a queen's common highway leading from T. to E.; that part of the same common highway was and yet is out of repair; and that the inhabitants of the parish ought to repair the same. On the trial, it appeared that the highway had been made within living memory:—Held, no variance; for that, in an indictment against a parish, it was not material whether the way was immemorial or not; and the antiquity of the road was not so averred in the indictment as to become an essential part of the description. Reg. v. Turweston, 16 Q. B. 109; 20 L. J., M. C. 46; 15 Jur. 650; 4 Cox, C. C. 349.

It appeared also that the way from T. to E. referred to in the indictment led from T. into the turnpike road from Buckingham to Brackley; then lay, for a short distance, along that road, and then branched off to E. This was the direct way between T. and E.:—Held, that the way was properly described as from T. to E. Ib.

Upon the trial of an indictment against the inhabitants of the township of H. for the non-repair of a highway, a prior judgment of quarter sessions upon a presentment by a justice under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, for non-repair of the same highway by H. was put in. The presentment alleged that the highway was in H., and that H. was liable to repair it. It also appeared by the judgment that two of the inhabitants of H. had appeared, and pleaded guilty, and that a fine was imposed. The presentment did not state how the township was liable to repair:—Held, that although it might be bad for this reason on demurrer or error, yet that, having been submitted to by the defendants, they were exclusively bound by it. Reg. v. Haughton, 1 El. & Bl. 501; 22 L. J., M. C. 89; 17 Jur. 455; 1 W. R. 164; 6 Cox, C. C. 101.

Where a magistrate presented a road in the township of F. upon information upon oath of the surveyor for the township of C., it was held that the presentment was bad, as the surveyor of one township had no power under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 24, to give information as to a road in another township. Rex v. Flyingdales, 7 B. & C. 438; 1 M. & Ry. 176; 6 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 27.

An indictment against a township for the non-repair of a highway must aver that the road in question was a road which, but for the custom, would have been repaired by the parish. Reg. v. Colling, 2 Cox, C. C. 184.

Where, between the finding of an indictment for non-repair of a road and plea pleaded, the statute, upon which alone the indictment could be supported, was repealed, and afterwards the indictment was proceeded with and a conviction obtained, the court arrested the judgment. Reg. v. Denton, 16 Q. B. 832; 1 Dears. C. C. 3; 21 L. J., M. C. 207; 17 Jur. 453.

Indictment stated that a part of the highway, from W. to M., at a place called A., and extending thence to L. highway, was out of repair. The evidence was that the place mentioned as A. was in fact a place called B.:—Held, no material variance; the erroneous description relating to a terminus not of the road, but only of the part out of repair. Reg. v. Warerton, 2 Den. C. C. 340; 17 Q. B. 562; 21 L. J., M. C. 7; 16 Jur. 6.

Variances and misdescriptions in the indictment are the subject of amendment under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 1. Reg. v. Sturge, 3 El. & Bl. 734; 23 L. J., M. C. 172; 18 Jur. 1052; 2 W. R. 477.

Pleas—Sufficiency of.]—To an indictment against a parish for non-repair of a highway lying within it, a plea that the inhabitants of another parish have repaired, and been used and accustomed to repair, and of right ought to have repaired, is ill, as it does not shew any consideration. Rex v. St. Giles, Cambridge, 5 M. & S. 260; 17 R. R. 320.

On an indictment against a parish for non-repair of a highway, it is not essential, in support of a plea, that the several townships in it have been accustomed from time immemorial to repair their own highways, to shew by direct affirmative evidence that there have been ancient highways in each of the townships. The existence and several repair of ancient highways in one township may be inferred from their existence and several repair in the other township. Reg. v. Barnoldswick, 3 G. & D. 545; 4 Q. B. 499; 12 L. J., M. C. 44.

But in a plea by the inhabitants of a county, that the inhabitants of a particular township have immemorially repaired the highway at the end of a county bridge, situate within the township, it is not necessary to state any consideration for such prescription. Rex v. Yorkshire (W. R.). JJ., 4 B. & Ald. 623; 23 R. R. 421.

So on indictment against the inhabitants of a parish for not repairing a road, a plea, that the inhabitants of a particular district within the parish have immemorially repaired all the roads within that district, of which the road indicted was one, is a good plea, although it does not state any consideration for the liability of the inhabitants of the district. Rex v. Ecclesfield, 1 B. & Ald. 348; 1 Stark. 393; 19 R. R. 335.

To an indictment against the inhabitants of a parish for non-repair of a highway within it, a plea, stating that the parish was immemorially divided into seven townships, the inhabitants of which respectively were immemorially bound to repair the highways within their respective townships; and that part of the highway indicted was within the township of G. B., and that the residue, &c., was within the township of L. B., and that the respective parts ought to be repaired by the inhabitants of the respective townships, is bad; without specifying what part of the highway lay within one township, and what part within the other. Rex v. Bridekirk, 11 East, 304; 10 R. R. 514. And see Rex v. Taunton, 3 M. & S. 465.

In a plea by a parish to an indictment for the non-repair of a highway, they must shew, not merely that they are not liable, but who is liable to repair it. Rex v. Eastington, 1 N. & P. 193; 5 A. & E. 765; 2 H. & W. 373; 6 L. J., M. C. 17.

Indictment against a parish for non-repair of a highway. Pleas (1) except as to part, not guilty. (2) As to such part that one H. (an inhabitant) was liable ratione tenuræ to repair what had been a part of such highway until stopped up and enclosed by E., whilst owner of the farm, now in the possession of H., without legal authority, and who then, in lieu thereof, set out a new road, part of the highway alleged to be out of repair, by reason of which such part so set out ought to be repaired by the said H.:—Held, bad on demurrer. Reg. v. Largarshall, 2 W. R. 411.

Where to an indictment against a parish for not repairing a road the defendants pleaded that there was a township within the parish, that the road lay within that township, and that, by immemorial custom, that township was bound to repair all roads which, but for the custom, would be repairable by the parish; but the plea omitted to aver that the road in question was one "which, but for the custom, the parish would be liable to repair," and the jury finding the existence of the custom, gave a verdict for defendants:—Held, that the court could not give judgment non obstante. Held, however, that the want of the above averment in the plea made it bad in arrest of judgment. Rex v. Eastrington, 5 Ad. & E. 765; 1 N. & P. 193; 6 L. J., M. C. 17.

Replication.]—To an indictment for non-repair of a highway in parish A., it was pleaded that the parish of G. was bound from time immemorial to repair such highway, in consideration of levying and receiving rates in respect of certain lands of parish A., adjoining to such highway. Replication, that the agreement referred to in the plea was put an end to by notice:—Held, that the replication was a good answer to the plea. Reg. v. Ashby Folville, 35 L. J., M. C. 154; L. R. 1 Q. B. 213; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 520.

ii. Against what Parties.

Urban Sanitary Authority.]—An indictment for non-repair of a highway will lie against an urban sanitary authority under s. 10 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878. Reg. v. Wakefield Corporation, 57 L. J., M. C. 52; 20 Q. B. D. 810; 36 W. R. 911; 16 Cox, C. C. 439; 52 J. P. 422.

Parish Council.]—A parish council cannot be indicted for the non-repair of a highway. Reg. v. Shipley Parish Council, 18 Cox, C. C. 531; 61 J. P. 488.

iii. Evidence of Liability.

Agreement to execute Repairs.]—Where township A. was liable by custom to repair the highways within it, and was indicted for non-repair, the defence set up was, that township B. was liable; and an agreement was produced, made between the owners of the soil of the two townships, in 1591, by which the owner of township B. agreed to repair the roads in township A.; and it was agreed that a lawyer should be elected to carry the agreement into effect; it was proved also, that township B. had repaired the road up to within a short time of the trial:—Held, that on such evidence it was not incumbent on the judge to leave it to the jury to presume that legal instruments had been executed, casting the liability on township B. Rex v. Scarisbrook, 1 N. & P. 582; 6 A. & E. 509; 1 W., W. & D. 246; 6 L. J., M. C. 103.

Repairs by Adjoining Owners.]—Evidence of repairs to a highway by the owners of the adjoining lands is inadmissible upon an indictment against the inhabitants of the place in which such highway is situate, unless liability on the part of such owners to repair the highway, ratione tenuræ, has been specially pleaded. Reg. v. Lordsmere (Inhabitants), 54 L. T. 766; 16 Cox, C. C. 65; 51 J. P. 86—C. C. R.

Immemorial User.]—An indictment, describing the way as immemorial, is not supported by proof of a highway extinguished as such sixty years before by an inclosure act, but since used by the public, and repaired by the district charged. Reg. v. Westmark (Tithing), 2 M. & Rob. 305.

On an indictment against a township for non-repair of a common and ancient highway, it was proved that the lane had always been used as a common highway, but it was admitted that the township had never repaired this particular highway, and that it had been repaired by private persons occasionally:—Held, that the highway being in use previously to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 23, proof of repair by the township was not necessary to support a conviction. Reg. v. Newbold, 19 L. T. 656; 17 W. R. 295.

Where, in an indictment against a township for the non-repair of a road, the prescription stated and proved was, that its inhabitants had been immemorially used to repair all roads situate within it, which, but for such usage, would be repairable by the parish at large:—Held, that this placed the township in the situation of a parish, and that it was necessary for the defendants to prove with certainty that some other persons were liable, in order to exonerate themselves from their liability to repair. Rex v. Hatfield, 4 B. & Ald. 75; 22 R. R. 631.

Evidence of a previous conviction of the inhabitants of a particular district in a parish for the non-repair of one of the highways in such district is admissible to prove that the district is liable by immemorial custom to repair all the highways within its limits, for the repair of which the inhabitants of the whole common law parish would otherwise be primâ facie liable. Reg. v. Lordsmere (Inhabitants), 54 L. T. 766; 16 Cox, C. C. 65; 51 J. P. 86—C. C. R.

Custom.]—To charge a township with liability by custom to repair a highway within it which would otherwise be repairable by the parish comprising such township, it is not necessary to prove that such highway has been hitherto repaired by such township. Reg. v. Ardsley (Township), 47 L. J., M. C. 65; 3 Q. B. D. 255; 38 L. T. 71; 26 W. R. 405.

Without such proof a jury may infer the custom from other evidence; such as that the parish at large has never done any repairs, nor appointed surveyors, nor levied highway rates. Ib.

An indictment against a township, for non-repair of a road, charged the township with a liability, by custom, to repair all common and public highways within it:—Held, that the custom so laid might exist; and that it need not be confined to highways which, but for such custom, would be repairable by the parish. Reg. v. Heage, 1 G. & D. 548; 2 Q. B. 128; 10 L. J., M. C. 145; 6 Jur. 367.

Repair by Third District, whether for Parish or Township.]—Indictment of a parish for non-repair of a highway; plea that the parish was divided into townships, in two of which existed a custom for the township to repair all the highways within it, which, but for the custom, would be repairable by the parish. Replication, traversing the custom. Proof that the parish had no surveyor of highways; that the township had; that repairs had been done of the highways within the township, under the direction of the township surveyor; but on cross-examination it appeared that the particular road had been repaired by a third district, N.:—Held, that it ought to have been left to the jury to say what was the character of the repairs done by N., whether for the parish or for the township. Rex v. Crosthwaite, 6 L. J., M. C. 18.

Plea of Guilty to former Indictment.]—On an indictment against a parish for non-repair of a highway, a plea of guilty to a former indictment against the same parish for non-repair of the same highway is conclusive evidence that it is a public way. Rex v. Whitney, 7 Car. & P. 208.

—— As to Part of Highway.]—Indictment against a township for not repairing an ancient highway. On the trial a record of an indictment against an adjoining township for non-repair of a part of the same line of road, and to which that township had submitted, was received:—Held, that it was properly received as evidence that the whole highway was ancient. Reg. v. Brightside Bierlow, 13 Q. B. 933; 4 New Sess. Cas. 47; 19 L. J., M. C. 50; 14 Jur. 174.

—— Prior Judgment.]—Upon the trial of an indictment against the inhabitants of the township of H., for the non-repair of a highway, a prior judgment of quarter sessions, upon a presentment by a justice under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, for non-repair of the same highway by H., was put in. The presentment alleged that the highway was in H., and that H. was liable to repair it. It also appeared by the judgment that two of the inhabitants of H. had appeared and pleaded guilty, and that a fine was imposed:—Held, conclusive evidence that the highway was in H., and that H. was liable to repair it. Reg. v. Haughton, 1 El. & Bl. 501; 22 L. J., M. C. 89; 17 Jur. 455; 1 W. R. 164; 6 Cox, C. C. 101.

The fact of the fine imposed by the sessions not being shewn to have been paid, did not prevent the judgment from acting as an estoppel, no fraud being imputed. Ib.

A recital in a private act (since repealed), that the road was in D., is at most only evidence, and that fact is not admissible against the estoppel. Ib.

Admissibility limited by Indictment.]—Evidence that a parish did not put guard fences at the side of a road, is not receivable on an indictment which charges that the king's subjects could not pass as "they were wont to do," if no such fences existed before. Rex v. Whitney, 7 Car. & P. 208.

Disputing Order of Justices.]—An order of justices, determining the liability of certain parishes for the repair of a common highway, cannot be disputed on the indictment for non-repair by production of evidence to prove that no part of the road was within one of such parishes. Reg. v. Hickling, 7 Q. B. 88; 2 New Sess. Cas. 117; 14 L. J., M. C. 177; 9 Jur. 1075.

iv. Orders of Justices.

Directing an Indictment—Ministerial Duty.]—The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95, imposes a ministerial, and not a judicial, duty upon justices to direct an indictment to be preferred for non-repair of a highway, where the liability to repair is simply denied by the party summoned before them. Reg. v. Surrey JJ., 1 B. C. C. 70; 21 L. J., M. C. 195; 16 Jur. 641.

—— Validity of.]—An order made by such justices is good, although it subsequently appears that one of them is interested in the subject-matter of the order. Ib.

Where justices at special sessions make an order, directing an indictment to be preferred for non-repair of a highway, the order must state that the special sessions were held within the "division in which the highway was situate." Reg. v. Martin, D. & M. 386; 2 Q. B. 1037; 13 L. J., M. C. 45; 8 Jur. 36. S. P., Reg. v. Hickling, 7 Q. B. 890; 15 L. J., M. C. 23.

Jurisdiction—Where Liability denied.]—Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95, if, on the hearing of a summons respecting the repair of a highway, the duty, liability, or obligation to repair is denied by the surveyor, the justices are bound to order an indictment to be preferred against the parish, and have no jurisdiction to inquire whether the highway is one which the parish is liable to repair. Reg. v. Arnould, 8 El. & Bl. 550; 27 L. J., M. C. 92; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 162; 6 W. R. 61.

Where the liability of a parish to repair a road has been denied, and an indictment preferred under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95, and a verdict of not guilty found, and a fresh information laid before justices, upon which they declined to order another indictment:—Held, that they were justified in refusing to order another indictment. Bartlett, Ex parte, 3 El. & El. 253; 30 L. J., M. C. 65; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1196; 3 L. T. 316; 9 W. R. 54.

Where upon information and summons, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 94, a parish denies its liability to repair a road, upon the ground that it is not a highway, the justices, before directing an indictment, should hear evidence upon the question of highway or no highway, upon which question their jurisdiction depends. Reg. v. Johnson, 34 L. J., M. C. 85; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 467; 11 L. T. 706; 13 W. R. 309.

Under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 19, which enacts, that when on the hearing of a summons under s. 18, respecting the repair of any highway, the liability to repair is denied by the waywarden on behalf of his parish, the justices shall direct a bill of indictment to be preferred, at the next assizes or quarter sessions, against the inhabitants of the parish for the non-repair, the power to direct an indictment to be preferred does not arise where the liability to repair is denied on the ground alone, that the road is not a highway, and the liability is admitted, if the road is in fact a highway, and the denial of the road being a highway is made bonâ fide. Reg. v. Farrer, 35 L. J., M. C. 210; L. R. 1 Q. B. 558; 14 L. T. 515; 14 W. R. 777; 10 Cox, C. C. 261.

In order to give the justices such a power, the liability must be denied on some ground other than that the road is not a highway, such as that some one else is bound to repair. Ib.

The expression in s. 19, when the liability to repair is denied, is to bear the same construction as the expression if the duty or obligation of such repairs is denied in 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95. Ib.

When on the hearing of a summons under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 68, South Wales Highway Act, s. 40, against the district surveyor for the non-repair of a highway in a parish, the liability to repair is disputed on behalf of the parish, the justices have power to direct an indictment to be preferred under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95. Reg. v. James, 3 B. & S. 901; 32 L. J., M. C. 211.

Complaint having been made under s. 10 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), to a county authority that the highway authority of a highway area within their jurisdiction had made default in repairing certain highways within their jurisdiction, the county authority were, after due inquiry and report by their surveyor, of opinion that it was bonâ fide denied by the highway authority that the ways were highways, and thereupon held that they had no jurisdiction to make an order:—Held, that by the terms of the above section it was the duty of the justices to make an order, and that a mandamus must issue ordering them so to do. Reg. v. Farrer (supra) discussed. Reg. v. Cheshire JJ., 50 L. T. 483; 48 J. P. 262.

Where proceedings are taken before justices for the non-repair of a highway in a parish forming part of a highway district under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, a bonâ fide admission by the waywarden of the parish that the road is a highway which the parish is bound to repair, is binding on the highway board, and it is not competent for them after such an admission to deny these facts so as to oust the jurisdiction of the justices. Loughborough Highway Board v. Curzon, 55 L. J., M. C. 122; 17 Q. B. D. 344; 55 L. T. 50; 34 W. R. 621; 50 J. P. 788—C. A.

Appeal to Quarter Sessions.]—See Illingworth v. Bulmer East Highway Board, 52 L. J., Q. B. 280; 48 J. P. 37.

Appeal to Court of Appeal—Special Case stated by Quarter Sessions.]—See S. C., 53 L. J., M. C. 60; 32 W. R. 450—C. A.

—— Removal of Indictment by Certiorari.]—An indictment for non-repair of a highway preferred and found at the assizes by an order of justices, made under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95, may be removed by certiorari. Reg. v. Sandon, 3 El. & Bl. 547; 2 C. L. R. 1699; 23 L. J., M. C. 129; 18 Jur. 401; 2 W. R. 374.

v. Trial.

Practice.]—On the trial of an indictment for non-repair of a highway, counsel for the defendants not allowed to sum up. Reg. v. Field, 2 F. & F. 498.

Practice as to pleading by inhabitants of a township. Reg. v. Stamhall, 1 F. & F. 363.

—— Appearance.]—Where inhabitants of a parish are indicted for non-repair of a highway, and appear and plead not guilty by two surveyors, it is not competent to one only to appear and retract the plea of not guilty, and plead guilty; the other appearing and pleading by a clerk of his attorney. Reg. v. Langley, 2 F. & F. 170; 8 Cox, C. C. 366.

vi. Costs.

Jurisdiction to Order and Award.]—Where justices have directed an indictment against a parish, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95, for non-repair of a highway, and the judge of assize directs payment of the costs out of the parish highway rate, he must ascertain the amount of costs, and order payment of the sum so ascertained. Reg. v. Clark, 5 Q. B. 887; D. & M. 687; 1 New Sess. Cas. 143; 13 L. J., M. C. 91; 8 Jur. 489.

Where the judge's order is only to pay the costs generally, the court cannot enforce such an order by mandamus. Ib.

An order for the costs can only be made when the road is proved affirmatively to be a highway, and the court will not go into that question on affidavit. Reg. v. Down Holland (Township), 2 New Sess. Cas. 177; 15 L. J., M. C. 25; 9 Jur. 1077.

Where a parish are acquitted on an indictment on the ground of there being no highway, the court is not bound to award costs under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95. Reg. v. Paul (Inhabitants), 2 M. & Rob. 307.

—— Out of what Funds.]—A judge's order for costs of the prosecution of an indictment for non-repair of a highway, should state on the face of it out of what funds the costs are to be paid; and where it did not do so, the court set the order aside. Reg. v. Watford, 4 D. & L. 593; 1 B. C. Rep. 336; 11 Jur. 332.

A judge has no power to direct the costs of an indictment for non-repair of a road, preferred by the direction of justices, to be paid out of the highway rate, except where there is a highway, and the liability to repair it is in dispute. Reg. v. Heanor, 6 Q. B. 745; 1 New Sess. Cas. 460; 14 L. J., M. C. 38; 9 Jur. 105.

Where Order directing Indictment Void.]—An order directing an indictment for non-repair of a road under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, ss. 94, 95, must shew on the face of it that it was made at a special session for the highways held within the division in which the road is situate. If it does not it is void, and an order for costs made under s. 95, by the judge who tried the cause, will be set aside. Reg. v. Hickling, 7 Q. B. 890; 2 New Sess. Cas. 117; 15 L. J., M. C. 23. S. P., Reg. v. Heytesbury, 8 L. T. 315.

Where Indictment not Tried.]—If an indictment is preferred, and the defendants plead guilty, the judge will not direct the prosecutor's costs to be paid, as the indictment was not tried before him. Reg. v. Vowchurch, 2 Car. & K. 393.

Upon an indictment for non-repair of a highway, preferred under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95, by an order of justices against the inhabitants of a parish, a judge of assize has power to make an order for the costs of the prosecution, although the defendants pleaded guilty, and there is no actual trial of the indictment. Reg. v. Haslemere, 3 B. & S. 313; 32 L. J., M. C. 30; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 573; 7 L. T. 382; 11 W. R. 115.

When Jury disagrees.]—An indictment for non-repair of a highway came on to be tried at the assizes, when the jury was discharged without a verdict, they being unable to agree:—Held, that the judge could not direct the costs of such trial to be paid out of the highway rate. Reg. v. Heytesbury, 8 L. T. 315.

When Indictment defective.]—An order was made by justices for an indictment to be preferred for the non-repair of a highway called Quaker Lane. Before the justices, it was sought to fix the defendants with liability to repair the highway as a cart and carriage-way. The indictment contained counts for a cart and carriage-way, and also for a pack and prime way. At the trial the jury found that it was not a cart and carriage-way, and the defendants admitted that it was a pack and prime way, and contended that it was not out of repair, and the jury found that as a pack and prime way it was not out of repair:—Held, that the prosecutor was not entitled to his costs under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95. Reg. v. Cleckheaton, 11 L. T. 305.

If, upon the trial of an indictment for the non-repair of a highway ordered by justices, it appears that the road indicted is not the road set out in the order of justices, and the prosecution fails in consequence, the judge has no jurisdiction to certify for the costs. Reg. v. Fifehead, 3 Cox, C. C. 59.

Discretion of Judge.]—A prosecutor obtained a summons under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 94, calling upon the parish surveyors to shew cause why a highway should not be repaired. The surveyors denied the liability of the parish to repair, and the magistrates ordered an indictment against the inhabitants of the parish, which was preferred, and was tried as a traverse on the crown side of the assizes, and the defendants found guilty:—Held, that the prosecutor was entitled to an order to have his costs paid out of the highway rate, and that the statute as to this was imperative, and left no discretion whatever in the judge. Reg. v. Yorkhill, 9 Car. & P. 218.

Justices must have had Jurisdiction.] — To enable a judge before whom an indictment preferred by order of justices under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95, for non-repair of a highway, is tried, to make an order for the costs of "such prosecution" to be paid out of the rate under that section, it is necessary that the prosecution be one which the justices had jurisdiction to order, and be the one which they did order. Reg. v. Lee, 45 L. J., M. C. 54; 1 Q. B. D. 198; 34 L. T. 445; 24 W. R. 550.

Therefore, where an indictment, charging the inhabitants of a township with the nonrepair of a general highway, was amended at the trial so as to charge them in respect only of a limited highway:—Held, that the judge had no power to order the costs to be paid out of the rate levied in the township, the prosecution of the amended indictment not being "such prosecution" within s. 95. Ib.

Under Highway Act of 1862—Verdict of Not Guilty.]—Under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 19, the court has no power to direct the costs of an indictment for nonrepair of a road, preferred by the direction of justices against the inhabitants of a parish, to be paid by them where the jury has found a verdict of not guilty on the ground that the road was a private road, and not a highway. Reg. v. Buckland, 6 B. & S. 397; 34 L. J., M. C. 178; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 821; 12 L. T. 380; 13 W. R. 715; 10 Cox, C. C. 116.

When Prosecution Vexatious—New Trial.]—Where defendants were convicted on an indictment for nonrepair of a highway, and obtained a rule for a new trial upon terms as to the prosecutor's costs, and upon the second trial they were acquitted:—Held, that they were not entitled to costs, although the judge certified under the Highway Act, 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 64, that the prosecution was vexatious. Rex v. Salwick (Inhabitants), 2 B. & Ad. 136; 1 L. J., M. C. 14.

By the General Highway Act, 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 64, the court before which any indictment for nonrepair of a road is tried, may award costs to the prosecutor if the defence appears to have been frivolous, or to the defendant if it appears that the prosecution was vexatious. This section applies only to cases tried in the ordinary course; and where on an indictment removed by the defendant by certiorari, the court above had ordered a new trial, and the prosecutor's costs of both trials to abide the event, it was held, that this special rule took away the authority of the judge to certify in favour of the defendant. Rex v. Salwick (Inhabitants), 2 B. & Ad. 136.

When Defence Frivolous.]—Upon an indictment for not repairing a highway, removed by the prosecutor, if the judge at nisi prius certifies that the defence was frivolous, the prosecutor will have his costs notwithstanding the defendants have obtained a rule nisi to arrest the judgment. Rex v. St. John, Margate, 6 M. & S. 130.

By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 98, it shall be lawful for the court before whom any indictment shall be preferred for not repairing highways, to award costs to the prosecutor, to be paid by the person so indicted, if it shall appear to the court that the defence made to such indictment was frivolous or vexatious:—Held, that a plea of not guilty to an indictment for nonrepair of a highway, is not a defence within the meaning of the section, and that no order for costs can be thereupon made. Reg. v. Denton, 5 B. & S. 821; 34 L. J., M. C. 13; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 172; 11 L. T. 371; 13 W. R. 143.

Where an indictment for not repairing a turnpike road has been preferred at the quarter sessions, and removed by certiorari into the queen's bench, that court has power, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 98, to award to the prosecutor costs incurred previously to the removal of the indictment, if the defence has been frivolous or vexatious in the opinion of the judge trying the cause. Reg. v. Preston, 7 D. P. C. 593. Overruling 2 M. & Rob. 137.

—— Enforced by Attachment.] — Where a certificate has been granted under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 98, that the defence to a road indictment, removed by certiorari into the queen's bench, is frivolous, and costs have been awarded against the defendants, the payment of such costs may be enforced by attachment. Reg. v. Pembridge, 3 G. & D. 603; 3 Q. B. 901; 12 L. J., Q. B. 47; 6 Jur. 1037.

In such case the judge may certify for the costs of a special jury. Ib.

On Removal by Certiorari.]—Where an indictment ordered by justices to be preferred at the next assizes against the inhabitants of a township, is removed by them by certiorari into the queen's bench, and is tried at nisi prius, and a verdict is found for the defendants, the judge has no power, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95, to order the payment of the costs of the prosecution out of the highway rate; the section giving the power only to the judge of assize, that is, the judge sitting under the commission of oyer and terminer. Reg. v. Ipstones, 9 B. & S. 106; 37 L. J., M. C. 37; L. R. 3 Q. B. 216; 17 L. T. 497; 16 W. R. 538.

5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95, points out three tribunals for the trial of indictments for nonrepair of a highway—the quarter sessions, the judge of assize sitting under a commission of oyer and terminer, and the judge sitting at nisi prius, when the indictment is removed into this court by certiorari; and the judge trying an indictment so removed has power to make an order for the costs of the prosecution, to be taxed by the officer of this court, without specifying the amount. Reg. v. Erdisland, 2 W. R. 553.

A judge who tries at nisi prius an indictment for non-repair removed by certiorari, has no power under the above section to award costs. Reg. v Paul (Inhabitants), 2 M. & Rob. 307.

A complaint was made to magistrates under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 94, that a way alleged to be a highway was out of repair; and the magistrates ordered an indictment against the inhabitants of the parish, which was found and removed by certiorari, and, on the trial, defendants were acquitted on the ground that it was not a highway. The prosecutor applied for costs to be paid out of the highway rate under s. 95. It was objected that this provision as to costs only applied where the existence of a highway was not disputed, and also that it did not apply when the indictment was removed by certiorari. The judge refused the order. Reg. v. Chedworth (Inhabitants), 9 Car. & P. 285.

Semble, that ss. 95 and 98 of the act are distinct in their operation and not to be connected. Ib.

Semble, that the magistrates are not bound to make their order in terms exactly following those of the information. Reg. v. Chedworth (Inhabitants), 9 Car. & P. 285.

—— Effect of Recognizance.]—A prosecutor removing an indictment for nonrepair of a highway by certiorari is only liable for costs by virtue of the recognizance required by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 5, and if he has not entered into such a recognizance, costs cannot be recovered against him. Reg. v. East Stoke, 6 B. & S. 536; 34 L. J., M. C. 190; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 809; 13 W. R. 737.

The proper remedy for such a default is that given by s. 7, which provides that in that case the certiorari may be disregarded. Ib.

—— Who Entitled.]—Several persons were held entitled to costs under 5 Will. & M. c. 11, as prosecutors of an indictment, removed by certiorari, for not repairing a highway, one as constable of the manor within which the highway lay, the others as parties grieved, they having used the way for many years in passing and repassing from their homes to the next market town, and being obliged, by reason of the want of repair, to take a more circuitous route. Rex v. Taunton, St. Mary, 3 M. & S. 465. And see Rex v. Bird, 2 B. & Ald. 522.

—— By one Inhabitant—Effect of.]—Where one inhabitant of a parish has removed an indictment against it for the nonrepair of a road, and has entered into the usual recognizance for costs, in case a verdict of guilty should pass, the other inhabitants of the parish will not be permitted to plead guilty to the indictment. Rex v. Laxborough, 1 D. P. C. 527.

Taxation.]—An order of sessions for payment of costs of a prosecution for non-repair of a highway is bad, unless the amount of costs is ascertained and ordered by the same sessions. The sessions cannot refer the costs to be taxed by their officer after the sessions. Reg. v. Lambeth (Surveyors), 3 C. L. R. 35; 3 W. R. 74.

Mode of Recovery.]—The costs of an indictment against a parish for non-repair of a highway ordered to be paid to the prosecutor by the quarter sessions, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95, are not recoverable by distress against the surveyor, but are to be paid out of the rate made and levied in pursuance of the act. Tryddyn, In re, 23 L. J., M. C. 45. S. C., nom. Reg. v. Eyton, 3 El. & Bl. 390; 18 Jur. 399.

—— Duty of Surveyor.]—It is the duty of the surveyors who are in office when such an order for costs is made, or of their immediate successors in office, to pay the costs out of any funds then in their hands, or, if they have none, to make a rate for the purpose of putting themselves in funds. Ib.

Treble Costs under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 81.]—The Highway Act, 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 81, did not entitle a surveyor of highways to treble costs after verdict, but only in cases of nonsuit, discontinuance, or judgment on demurrer. Ward v. Bateman, 1 C. & M. 485; 3 Tyr. 221; 2 L. J., Ex. 16.

vii. Other Matters.

Discharge from an Indictment.]—In order to be discharged from an indictment for not repairing a highway, the parties must produce an affidavit that the road is actually repaired since the conviction, and is likely to continue so. Rex v. Loughton, 3 Smith, 575.

The inhabitants of a parish cannot be discharged from an indictment for the non-repair of a highway, until it is ascertained whether the repairs effected will stand during the winter. Rex v. Witney, 5 D. P. C. 728; 1 W. W. & D. 381.

Quashing an Indictment.]—An indictment against a parish for not repairing a highway cannot be quashed on an affidavit that the way was then in repair; but the defendant must plead guilty, and pay a nominal fine. Rex v. Lincombe, 2 Chit. 214.

Setting aside an Award.]—The court will not entertain an application for setting aside an award founded on an indictment at the assizes for not repairing a road, though the question in dispute is of a civil nature. Rex v. Cotesbatch, 2 D. & R. 265.

New Trial—On what Grounds.]—Where the defendant has been acquitted on an indictment for not repairing a road, the court will not grant a new trial; yet they will, in very special circumstances, suspend the entry of judgment, so as to enable the parties to have the question reconsidered upon another indictment, without the prejudice of the former judgment. Rex v. Wandsworth, 1 B. & Ald. 63; 18 R. R. 434.

After a verdict for the defendant upon an indictment for the non-repair of a highway, the court refused an application for a new trial, on the ground of the improper rejection of evidence, but suspended the judgment in order that another indictment might be preferred. Rex v. Sutton, 2 N. & M. 57; 5 B. & Ad. 52; 2 L. J., M. C. 75.

After a verdict of not guilty, upon an indictment for obstructing a highway, the court will not grant a new trial upon the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, although the judge who tried the case reports that he is dissatisfied with the verdict. Reg. v. Johnson, 2 El. & El. 613; 29 L. J., M. C. 133; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 553; 8 W. R. 236.

Or on the ground of the misdirection of the judge. Reg. v. Russell, 3 El. & Bl. 942; 23 L. J., M. C. 173; 18 Jur. 1822; 2 W. R. 555.

Where a verdict of not guilty has been returned upon an indictment for non-repair, a new trial will not be granted; but under very special circumstances the court may order all proceedings upon the judgment to be suspended, so as to give an opportunity for the question to be again raised upon a fresh indictment. Rex v. Wandsworth (1 B. & Ald. 63) approved. Reg. v. Southampton County, 56 L. J., M. C. 112; 19 Q. B. D. 590; 57 L. T. 261; 16 Cox, C. C. 271; 52 J. P. 52.

See further, CRIMINAL LAW (NEW TRIAL).

Removal by Rule Nisi.]—The rule for removing an indictment for non-repair of a road, from an inferior jurisdiction, is nisi in the first instance. Rex v. Leeds (Inhabitants), 5 D. P. C. 123.

Agreement by Parishioner to stay Proceedings on Presentment—Action for Breach.]—A part of the inhabitants of a parish entered into an agreement with a parishioner who had presented a road in it for want of repair, that he should stay proceedings on that presentment; that the inhabitants should allow him a sum of money towards the expenses of repairing the road; and that the statute duty of himself and certain inhabitants should be done therein:—Held, that a declaration in which it was averred that part of the inhabitants had performed the agreement, but that the parishioner had not repaired the road or withdrawn the presentment, was bad. Jefferies v. Greenman, 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 13.

6. RATES.

a. Validity of.

Concurrent Rates.]—Concurrent rates for repairs of highways are invalid if made for the same period of time; but a second rate may be made where a former rate for the same purpose has not been wholly collected. Reg. v. Best, or Reg. v. Surrey JJ., 2 New Sess. Cas. 655; 5 D. & L. 40; 16 L. J., M. C. 102; 11 Jur. 489.

—— Under General and Local Acts—Right to alter Ambit of Township.]—Commissioners under a local act had power from time to time to ascertain and fix the limits of a township for the purposes of the act, and were authorised to levy rates not exceeding a certain amount for, among other objects, paving and repairing the roads and streets within such limits:—Held, that the commissioners could from time to time diminish as well as enlarge the ambit of the township for the purposes of the act; and that their powers of rating within the ambit so fixed were not exclusive of those of the highway surveyors under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50. Villers v. Hargreaves, 5 W. R. 595.

Additional Rate—Title of.]—A single rate exceeding 10*d.* in the pound, made under s. 111 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, as an additional rate to defray the expenses of defending an indictment, need not shew by its title that it is such additional rate. Reg. v. Uttermere, 4 W. R. 205.

Signature of Surveyor and Allowance.]—The signature of the surveyor, and allowance by justices, were by inadvertence inserted in the middle of a highway rate, instead of at the end:—Held, that this was no allowance of the rate in respect of matters which followed such signature and allowance, and therefore that the justices had no jurisdiction to enforce the rate by issuing a distress warrant for the amount of an assessment which appeared in a part of the rate subsequent to the signature and allowance. North Staffordshire JJ., In re, Skelton (Surveyor), Ex parte, 1 B. C. C. 211; 2 C. L. R. 130; 23 L. J., M. C. 17; 17 Jur. 1165; 2 W. R. 80.

Where a highway rate, made by a waywarden of a highway district under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, s. 33, has been published like a poor rate, it is not necessary that it should also have been signed and allowed by justices like a poor rate. Worthington v. Gill, 49 J. P. 629.

Publication—No Church in Highway Parish.]—The hamlet of H. was a highway parish within the meaning of the Highway Act, 1835, but for ecclesiastical and poor law purposes it formed part of the parish of K. Notices of a highway rate for H. were published by posting them in public and conspicuous places in H. Notice was not posted on the door of the parish church of K.:—Held, that this was a good publication. Reg. v. Wolferstan, 62 L. J., M. C. 148; [1893] 2 Q. B. 451; 5 R. 561; 69 L. T. 429; 42 W. R. 176; 58 J. P. 133.

—— Proof of.]—The production of the rate book is not sufficient evidence of the due publication of a highway rate, although it is primâ facie evidence in the case of a poor rate. Bird v. Adcock, 47 L. J., M. C. 123; 26 W. R. 634.

General Highway Rate—Exempted District.]—A local act exempted a district from all rates towards paving and lighting the rest of the parish:—Held, that a general highway rate on the whole parish was not void, though part of the money thus raised might be applied to paving the rest of the parish. If that should be a misapplication, it might be ground of appeal, but would not make the rate void. Richardson v. Tubbs, 4 C. B. 304; 16 L. J., C. P. 171.

—— Public Works of Paving.]—By s. 216, sub-s. 3, of the Public Health Act, 1875, it is provided that "where no public works of paving, water supply and sewerage are established in the district, the cost of repair of highways in the district shall be defrayed out of a highway rate to be levied throughout the whole district by the urban authority as surveyor of highways." The appellants, a local district board, made a general district rate, and a highway rate, and demanded the same from the respondents, who had constructed two compensation reservoirs in connection with the supply of water for the town of B. The respondents contended that the local board had no power to levy a highway rate because in 1880 they laid down in their district a curbstone (about 300 yards long) as a coping to a cinder pathway of a carriage road:—Held, that putting down the curbstone did not constitute the establishment of public works of paving within the meaning of s. 216, sub-s. 3, of the Public Health Act, 1875, and therefore the appellants were entitled to levy a highway rate. Oxenhope District Local Board v. Bradford Corporation, 47 L. T. 344; 31 W. R. 322; 47 J. P. 21.

Urban District—Part of Parish excluded—Amount.]—By s. 29 of the Highway Act, 1835, no highway rate to be levied or assessed shall exceed at any one time the sum of 10*d.* in the pound, or 2*s.* 6*d.* in the pound in the whole in any one year, without the consent of four-fifths of the inhabitants assembled at a specially called meeting. By s. 216 of the Public Health Act, 1875, where parts of a district are not rated for works of paving, water supply and sewerage, or for some of them, the cost of repair of highways in those parts shall be defrayed out of a highway rate to be separately assessed and levied in those parts by the urban authority as surveyor of highways; provided that where part of a parish is included within an urban district, and the excluded part was, before the constitution of that district, liable to contribute to the highway rates for such parish, such excluded part shall, for all highway purposes, be treated as forming part of such district. The hamlet of G. was formerly a "parish" maintaining its own highways. Prior to 1875 part of the hamlet was formed into a local government district, called the inner district, with a local board, and became an urban district under the Public Health Act, 1875. Part of the hamlet, called the outer district, was excluded from it. The local board of the inner district repaired the highways in the outer district, and separately assessed a rate of 3*s*. 4*d*. in the pound on the inhabitants of the outer district, without first obtaining the consent of four-fifths of them. The appellants objected to the validity of the rate:—Held, that the consent of four-fifths of the inhabitants of the outer district was rendered unnecessary by s. 216 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and that the rate was valid. Dyson v. Greetland Local Board, 53 L. J., M. C. 106; 13 Q. B. D. 946; 48 J. P. 596—C. A. Affirming 48 L. T. 636.

Before the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34, the borough of A. was divided into a town and country district, each maintaining its own highways. That act was incorporated in a local act for the improvement of the borough of A. except so far as anything in the former act was varied or otherwise provided for by this. By the latter act the mayor, aldermen and burgesses of A. were empowered to cause any street in the borough to be sewered and paved at the expense of the adjoining landowners, and certify the same when completed to be a public highway, and that it should be lawful for them from time to time to make a rate for the maintenance of such highways upon the occupiers of all houses and lands within the borough. By 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34, s. 48, commissioners (that is, the persons or body corporate intrusted to execute any local improvement act incorporated with this) shall be the surveyors of all highways within the limits of such local act, and shall have within those limits all the powers of surveyors, and the inhabitants of the district within those limits shall not be liable to highway rates in respect of roads within other parts of the parish in which the district is situated. By s. 49 the commissioners are to be indictable for non-repair of any public highway within the limits of such local act in the same manner as the inhabitants thereof, or of any parish or other district therein, were liable before the passing of such act:—Held, that the mayor, aldermen and burgesses of A. were bound as commissioners under 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34, to rate the whole borough for the repair of highways, paved and certified under the local act, and likewise to rate the whole for repair of the public highway not so paved and certified, and that a rate upon the country district alone, for repair of the highways within it (not proved or certified), was bad. Slater v. Ashton-under-Lyne Corporation, 18 Q. B. 398; 21 L. J., M. C. 185; 16 Jur. 992.

Exercise of Statutory Powers—Construction.]—By a local act for improving a town, and repairing the highways, commissioners were invested with the powers, provisions and authorities contained in 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, and by a subsequent section were enabled to make a rate of not more than 8*d*. in the pound in any one year. A subsequent local act, amending and altering the former, recited the rate of 8*d*., and empowered the commissioners to raise it to 1*s*. and 1*s*. 6*d*.:—Held, that, under the words "powers, provisions and authorities," the justices of the peace for the borough had no authority to order and allow a rate under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 45. Higgins v. Green, 10 M. & W. 703; 12 L. J., M. C. 27.

According to Amount.]—In a cognizance for a highway rate, made for the purposes mentioned in 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, ss. 30 and 45, such rate must have been expressly alleged to be an equal assessment of 9*d*. in the pound on the yearly value of the lands, &c. The statement of its being an equal assessment of 9*d*. in the pound upon all occupiers of lands within the parish was not sufficient. Morrell v. Harvey, 6 N. & M. 35; 4 A. & E. 684; 1 H. & W. 728; 5 L. J., M. C. 69.

b. Liability to.

Property or Premises "Usually rated."]—The words "usually rated," in 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 27, refer not to legal ratability, but to rating in point of fact, and to the practice of rating in the particular parish, not in the country generally. Reg. v. Rose, 6 Q. B. 153; D. & M. 300; 13 L. J., M. C. 155; 8 Jur. 777.

On appeal against a surveyor's rate on timber woods, the sessions found for the appellant, subject to a case, which stated that the woods were not liable to poor rate, that from 1809 down to the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, they had not been rated to the highways; and that timber woods of a like description had always been rated to the highways in the majority of parishes in the country and neighbourhood, but in some they had not been so rated since 1809:—Held, that the woods were not shewn to be chargeable under s. 27. Ib.

—— Mines.]—Mines not ratable to the relief of the poor opened into a parish since the passing of that act are ratable to the highway rate, if mines of a similar description were before the act usually rated to the highways in that parish. Reg. v. Randall, or Saunders, 4 El. & Bl. 564; 24 L. J., M. C. 57; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 255; 3 C. L. R. 822; 3 W. R. 177.

Tithes and Commutation Rents.]—An owner of tithes, which are retained by the occupier of the land under prospective compositions from year to year, is ratable to the repair of the highways as an occupier of tithes. Chanter v. Glubb, 4 M. & Ry. 334; 9 B. & C. 479; 7 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 114.

Where an inclosure act directed that all great tithes, payable to the rector of a parish, should be extinguished, and that the commissioners should ascertain the nett value of such tithes, and affix a fair, clear, annual rent or sum of money per acre in lieu of such tithes, and as an adequate compensation for the same to the rector:—Held, that the rector was, in respect of such rents, ratable to the repair of the highways. Rex v. Lacy, 5 B. & C. 702; 8 D. & R. 457; 5 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 6.

Exemptions—Hamlet repairing its own Highways—Sufficiency of Evidence.]—The parish of A. contained several hamlets all included in the poor rate for the parish, with one set of overseers. M., one of these hamlets adjoining the parish of B., had, so far as living memory extended, been assessed to the property and income tax, land tax and assessed taxes, as part of B. The occupiers of land in M. had at various times held the offices of guardian of the poor, overseer, churchwarden and dike reeve for A., and had never held similar offices in B. M. had time out of mind paid poor rates, church rates, sewer rates and tithes to A. So far as living memory and evidence of reputation went, the occupiers of lands in M. had always been assessed, and had contributed to the highway rates of B., and the highways in M. had always been repaired by B. until 1841, when, by private arrangement with the surveyors of the highways of B., the lands in M. ceased to be assessed in that parish; and the highways in M. had still been repaired by the occupiers of lands in M. without any rate, the surveyors of the highways of B. expressly reserving to themselves the right of assessing the lands in M. to the highway rates at any future time:—Held, that M. was assessable to the highway rates for A., there not being sufficient evidence to warrant the conclusion, that M. was a hamlet repairing its highways separately. Dawson v. Willoughby Highways (Surveyor), 5 B. & S. 920; 34 L. J., M. C. 37; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 240; 11 L. T. 597; 13 W. R. 287.

H. and others, the owners and occupiers of lands in the hamlet of G., in the township of W., had been immemorially exempt from the repair of the highways, by reason of their repairing a particular road in the hamlet, but had always been rated to the relief of the poor. W. was included in a highway district under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, and a precept to the overseers of W. was duly made, and they made a uniform rate of 1*s.* on all the lands in W., being 8*d.* for poor rate and 4*d.* for highway rate, and H. was rated like others:—Held, that H., by reason of his former exemption, continued exempt from the highway rate, and that he ought to have been rated at 8*d.* only in the pound. Heath, In re, 35 L. J., M. C. 113; L. R. 1 Q. B. 218; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 355; 13 L. T. 669; 14 W. R. 388.

—— Of a Tithing.]—A tithing, consisting of two farms, had from time immemorial repaired its own highways, and had never contributed to the repairs of highways in other parts of the parish in which it was situate, although rated to the poor rate:—Held, that these facts afforded sufficient evidence of exemption from the primâ facie liability to the repairs of the highways in the parish at large. Freeman v. Read, 4 B. & S. 174; 32 L. J., M. C. 226; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 149. S. C., previous judgment of court on case stated, 7 W. R. 556.

—— Trial of Validity.]—A rule under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 5, is not the proper remedy to try the validity of an exemption from a highway rate. Reg. v. Shropshire JJ., 3 New Sess. Cas. 641.

—— Under Particular Statutes.] — By a paving act, commissioners were authorised to impose a paving rate for paving and repairing the streets, squares, &c., within a city, and certain suburban parishes, upon the occupiers of houses, buildings, lands, &c., "except all arable, meadow, and pasture land without the walls of the city, and also except all that messuage, &c., together with the barns, stables, &c., and grounds thereunto belonging, situate, &c., and now in the tenure of possession of S. T., called or known by the name of B. farm." A part of the grounds so exempted was afterwards occupied by a company for the purposes of their railway:—Held, that such part was still exempt from the rate. Todd v. L. & S. W. Ry., 7 Man. & G. 336; 8 Scott (N.R.) 56.

By an act for improving a particular portion of a parish, it was provided that every inhabitant or owner who should be assessed to the rates made under that act, for any lands or tenements within the limits of the act, should be released and free from all rates and assessments towards the paving and lighting any other street, road or place within the parish in respect of such lands or tenements:—Held, that this did not exempt an occupier of premises assessed within the local district from being assessed in a general highway rate imposed upon the whole parish, although a portion of such rate might be expended in paving parts of the parish out of the district. Richardson v. Tubbs, 4 C. B. 304; 16 L. J., C. P. 171.

Exemption by reason of Liability to Repair ratione tenuræ — Extinction of Liability and Exemption.]—An exemption from time immemorial of the owner or occupier of property from the payment of general highway rates by reason of his liability, ratione tenuræ, to repair a particular road, ceases with his liability to repair that road. Heath v. Weaverham Overseers, 63 L. J., M. C. 187; [1894] 2 Q. B. 108; 10 R. 274; 70 L. T. 729; 42 W. R. 478; 58 J. P. 557.

County Rate — Borough Extended.]—By a local act passed in 1874, the limits of the borough of Middlesborough were extended. By s. 20 of that act it was enacted that the extended area "shall be exempt from all county rates save only in respect of the purposes for which any county rates are now leviable within the existing borough." At the time of the passing of that act general county rates were leviable within the existing borough for all purposes for which general county rates could be levied in any part of the riding. By s. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, any road which has ceased to be a turnpike road in manner described by the act shall be deemed to be a main road, and one-half of the expense incurred by the highway authority in the maintenance of such road shall be contributed out of the county rate:— Held, that as within the borough existing at the time of the passing of the local act general county rates were leviable for all purposes, the saving of such liability rendered the exemption in s. 20 inoperative; and therefore the inhabitants of the extended area of the borough were not exempt from liability to pay county rates for the maintenance of a road under s. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878. Middlesborough Overseers v. Yorkshire, (N. R.) JJ., 12 Q. B. D. 239; 32 W. R. 671—C. A.

Apportionment between Adjoining Parishes—Jurisdiction of Justices.]—The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 58, enacts that where the boundaries of parishes pass across or through the middle of a highway, justices in special sessions may, on complaint, summons and hearing, apportion the future liability to repair between the parishes; proviso, that in the case of such highway the repairs of any part of which belong to any body politic or corporate, or to any person by the reason of tenure of any lands, or otherwise howsoever, the same proceedings may be adopted. Two justices made an order of apportionment in the form given in the schedule, which form does not contain any express finding as to boundary. On appeal against this order, evidence was heard on the question whether or not the highway was upon a parochial boundary; the appellants denied the jurisdiction of the justices, because, as they contended, the highway did not appear to be on such boundary; the respondents argued that, even if it were not so, the justices had jurisdiction under the proviso. The sessions confirmed the order, but stated a case setting forth the facts on the question of boundary, and the objection taken to the jurisdiction, and adding, that if the court should be of opinion that under the circumstances stated the road could not be divided by order of justices under the statute, the order of sessions was to be confirmed; if not, both orders to be quashed:—Held, that the court, though the order of justices was made in the statutory form, and confirmed at sessions, might go into the whole question raised by the case; namely, whether there was evidence of a boundary intersecting the highway, or if not, whether upon the evidence the two justices appeared to have had jurisdiction under the proviso. Reg. v. Perkins, 14 Q. B. 229; 19 L. J., M. C. 105.

Held, also, that the case did not come within s. 58, as the evidence did not show a boundary intersecting the highway, and that the proviso did not apply. Ib.

c. Recovery.

By one of two Surveyors.]—By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 34, for levying and recovering highway rates, the surveyor shall have the same powers, remedies, and privileges, as the overseers of the poor in the parish have by law for the recovery of any rate made for the relief of the poor; and s. 6 empowers parishes to appoint "one or more persons to serve the office of surveyor." Two persons were appointed under the act:—Held, that a demand of a rate and application for a warrant of distress were sufficient, though made by only one of the persons so appointed, in his own name. Morrell v. Martin, 8 Scott, 688; 6 Bing. (N.C.) 373; 4 Jur. 891.

See also SURVEYORS, ante, cols. 72 et seq.

Warrant of Commitment — Validity.] — The 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, s. 2, enacts, that after examination and adjudication of a complaint by any two justices all subsequent proceedings to enforce obedience thereto may be enforced by either of the justices, or any other justice for the same county, in like manner as if done by the same two justices who had heard and adjudged the complaint:—Held, that a warrant of commitment, which recited that a party had been summoned before two justices to show cause why he should not pay rates (not stating that they were the same justices who granted the warrant), was bad for not showing that the same justices who issued the summons also adjudicated upon the case. Ramsden, In re, 2 New Sess. Cas. 427; 1 B. C. Rep. 133; 15 L. J., M. C. 113; 10 Jur. 879.

Mandamus to Issue Distress Warrant—When Liability Doubtful.]—On an application to justices for a distress warrant to levy a highway rate upon A. as occupier of premises, he claimed to be exempt, by reason of having never contributed to the repair of the highways or been rated, but having always repaired so much of a highway as was within his premises, and half a bridge at the extremity of the highway. He showed no origin for the exemption, but insisted that he was protected by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 33. The justices refused a warrant. On an application to the court for an order on the justices to issue the warrant, held, too doubtful a question to justify the court in acting under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 5, and left the applicants to move for a mandamus, or to try the question by having another rate made, and against which A. might appeal (the objection that he ought to have appealed having been waived by consent). Reg. v. Browne, 13 Q. B. 654.

The court would not compel a magistrate by mandamus to issue a warrant for a parish highway rate, under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, ss. 45, 67, made upon the occupier of lands within his district, if it appeared that, in the magistrate's belief, and in fact, there was a legal doubt as to the occupier being liable to contribute to the repairs of the parish highways. Rex v. Greame, 2 A. & E. 615.

The court refused to award a mandamus commanding justices to enforce, by issuing a warrant of distress, a highway rate assessed upon land which had never been rated before, and the liability of which to be rated was denied. Rex v. Somersetshire JJ., 4 N. & M. 394; 2 A. & E. 632.

—— Neglect to Appeal.]—After a highway rate has been regularly made and assessed, and an occupier of premises included in such rate has neglected to appeal within the time allowed by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, for that purpose, he cannot afterwards successfully set up a claim to exemption from that particular rate; and the court will grant a rule to compel the issuing of a distress warrant for the amount where the justices applied to for that purpose refused to issue their warrant, after hearing the grounds of such exemption, even though the claim of exemption appears to be a substantial one. Reg. v. Oxfordshire JJ., 6 D. & L. 288; 3 New Sess. Cas. 640; 18 L. J., M. C. 222; 14 Jur. 575.

Of a Paving Rate—County Court Proceedings.]—A paving rate, imposed under authority of an act of parliament, is not an incorporeal hereditament, and may, therefore, be sued for in a county court. Baddeley, In re, Baddeley v. Denton, 4 Ex. 504; 19 L. J., Ex. 44.

—— Reimbursement of Expenses—Previous Notice.]—An act for paving and improving a town appointed commissioners, and authorised them to pave new streets, and provided that the expenses of such new pavements should be paid and reimbursed to the commissioners by the owners or occupiers of the land adjoining the streets, and empowered the commissioners to recover such expenses by action. A subsequent section commencing, "Provided always, and be it enacted," directed that, before the commissioners should cause the streets to be paved, they should in the first place give notice to the owner or occupier of every house, land, &c., adjoining the street, requiring him to pave the same as the commissioners should direct; and if he should for six months neglect to pave pursuant to the notice, then it should be lawful for the commissioners, and they were required, to cause the same to be done, and to recover the expenses from such owner or occupier:—Held, that the giving of this notice was a condition precedent to the commissioners executing the paving themselves and charging the expenses on the owner or occupier, and that it must be averred in the declaration in an action brought for the recovery of such expenses. Salford Corporation v. Achers, 16 M. & W. 85; 16 L. J., Ex. 6.

—— Refusal to pay—Offence under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78.]—Commissioners under an act for lighting and paving the parish of Bathwick were empowered to levy rates, and power was given to justices for the county of Somerset to enforce payment of them by distress. A charter of incorporation was granted by Queen Elizabeth to the city and borough of Bath. Before 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, passed, the parish of Bathwick was situate partly in Somerset and partly in the city of Bath; but, by s. 7, the whole parish was included within the city of Bath. An inhabitant of the parish of Bathwick was duly assessed under the local act, and the amount not being paid, a magistrate for the city and borough of Bath refused to grant a warrant of distress:—Held, that the refusal to pay these rates was an offence against the provisions of the local act within the meaning of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 31, and that the justices for the city and borough of Bath had jurisdiction to enforce the payment of them. Reg. v. Sutcliffe, Bathwick, In re, 3 New Sess. Cas. 634; 18 L. J., Q. B. 301; 13 Jur. 840.

Liability of Collector for Balance in Hand—Sufficiency of Demand.]—A collector of highway rates had in his hands a balance arising from the sale of goods of A., distrained for non-payment of rates, after satisfying the rates and the costs of distress and sale. A person came and demanded the balance, and on being asked if he had authority from A. to demand it, said he had a written authority in his pocket, but refused to produce it, saying there was no need for him to show it:—Held, that this was not a sufficient demand within 27 Geo. 2, c. 20, s. 2, to entitle A. to sue the collector for such balance. Charrington v. Johnson, 13 M. & W. 856; 14 L. J., Ex. 299.

d. Appeal against Distress.

Notice of.]—The notice of appeal required by 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 80, against a distress for non-payment of a highway rate, might be within six days after the levy, and need not be within six days after the granting the warrant of distress. Rex v. Devon JJ., 1 M. & S. 411.

The notice of appeal need not disclose the grounds upon which the appellant objects to the regularity of the distress. Ib.

B. TURNPIKE ROADS.

1. GENERALLY.

Meaning of.]—The legal meaning of the words "turnpike road" is a road on which parties have by law a right to erect gates and bars for the purpose of taking toll, and of refusing the permission to pass to all persons who refuse to pay. Northam Bridge and Roads Co. v. London and Southampton Ry., 6 M. & W. 428; 1 Railw. Cas. 665; 9 L. J., Ex. 165; 4 Jur. 892.

The words "turnpike road" in the Railways Clauses Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 50, mean a road which is repaired by tolls payable by passengers for the use of the road. Reg. v. East and West India Docks and Birmingham Junction Ry., 1 C. L. R. 496; 2 El. & Bl. 466; 22 L. J., Q. B. 380; 17 Jur. 1181; 1 W. R. 409.

Within 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59.]—A turnpike road is within 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59 although made and maintained under a local act comprising the making and maintaining sea-defences and other objects. Reg. v. Worthing and Lancing Turnpike Roads (Trustees), 3 El. & Bl. 989; 2 C. L. R. 1678; 23 L. J., M. C. 187; 18 Jur. 907; 2 W. R. 478.

Completion of—Certificate of Justice.]—The 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 87, gives an appeal to any person who shall think himself aggrieved by anything done by any two justices in pursuance of that act or any local turnpike act; and declares that the determination of the sessions shall be final and conclusive, and that no proceeding to be had in pursuance of that act shall be removed by certiorari. The sessions, on appeal against a certificate of two justices, that a turnpike road made under a local act had been completed, and was fit to be travelled upon, having decided that the certificate was void in point of law, and having refused to go into the merits of the appeal in point of fact, the court refused to grant a mandamus to them to hear the ground that their decision was contrary to the local act. Rex v. Yorkshire, (W. R.) JJ., 5 B. & Ad. 1003.

Extent of 26 Geo. 2, c. 64.]—Where a turnpike act described "the roads from A. to the town of B., and from thence to C.":—Held, that the road through B. was excluded. Hammond v. Brewer, 2 Ken. 33; 1 Burr. 376.

Conversion into Main Roads.]—See infra, 8, col. 175.

2. TRUSTEES AND COMMISSIONERS.

a. General Powers and Duties.

Statute.]—56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, s. 25, confers on rural district councils the power of highway authorities, &c.

Transfer of Powers to District Councils—District Commissioners incorporated under Local Acts.]—By certain local acts district commissioners were, before 1875, incorporated for the enclosure, drainage, and making and repair of certain roads extending into several rural parishes and one urban parish, and by these acts the highway expenses were to be defrayed by an acre-rate. Upon a case stated:—Held, that the powers, &c., of the district commissioners as the highway authority within their district had been transferred, as regards the rural parishes, to the rural district council of the district including such parishes, and that the highway expenses of that council as to such parishes ought to be defrayed as general expenses and not by acre-rate; and that the urban district council for the district comprising the urban parish within the district of the commissioners were entitled, exclusively of the commissioners, to exercise within such parish the powers, &c., of surveyors of highways. Marshland, Smeeth, and Fen District Commissioners and Marshland Rural District Council, 73 L. T. 563; 59 J. P. 824.

—— Highway Commissioners for Isle of Wight.]—By virtue of s. 25 of the Local Government Act, 1894, the Isle of Wight highway commissioners have ceased to exist, and their powers, duties, and liabilities are now vested in the district council of the rural districts of the island. Although the district council has become the actual highway authority, the expenses still have to be defrayed by the county council. Isle of Wight Highway Commissioners, In re, 72 L. T. 569; 59 J. P. 438.

Necessary Oath.]—If a person is named in a turnpike act as one of the trustees of a turnpike road, and has acted as such, and been recognised as a trustee by the plaintiff in an action for the balance of his salary against one of the trustees, the judge will take him to be a good trustee, and will not allow evidence to be given on the part of the plaintiff to show that such person has not taken the oath prescribed to be taken by trustees of roads before they act as such. Pritchard v. Walker, 3 Car. & P. 212.

Power to Divert Roads.]—Under a turnpike act, the trustees had power to turn roads through private grounds, making satisfaction to the owners; and if they could not agree, they were enabled, on giving notice to the owners, to summon a jury to ascertain the damage, and to order such sum, so ascertained, to be paid to the owners; the court quashed an inquisition of the jury and an order of the trustees because it did not appear on the face of the proceedings that any notice had been given to the owners of the land. Rex v. Bagshaw, 7 Term Rep. 363.

Power to Stop Roads.]—The exception in the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126. s. 86, does not take away from the trustees of a road the power of stopping up the roads therein mentioned, but leaves them at their discretion to do so or not:—Held, therefore, that the trustees were justified in stopping up and giving to the owner of the adjoining land an old road leading to a church, &c., to which the new road was a longer way. De Beauvoir v. Welch, 7 B. & C. 266; 1 M. & Ry. 81; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 78.

—— Necessary Conveyance of Land.]—An order for stopping up a road under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, where the site of the old road was taken in exchange for that of the new, was valid, although no conveyance to the trustees was executed. Allnut v. Pott, 3 M. & Ry. 439, n.; 1 B. & Ad. 302.

The clause in s. 84, directing a conveyance to the trustees where lands are purchased by them, does not apply where the vendors were sui juris, and acting in their own right. Ib.

Reservation of Private Right over Abandoned Highway—Liability to repair.]—Where turnpike trustees, on the construction of a new turnpike road, stopped up part of an ancient highway, along which it was originally intended that the turnpike road should be carried, but from which they had diverted it and resolved that the remaining portion of the old road "should be kept open as a private way only for the use of A. to join the private way leading to his house and lands":—Held, that the part of it so kept open was no longer a highway, and that the parish was not indictable for its non-repair Reg. v. Ifield, 4 W. R. 458.

Taking of Buildings—Compensation.]—By a turnpike act trustees were authorised to enter upon and take lands, and to pull down certain houses, buildings, &c., "making or tendering satisfaction to the owners or proprietors of all private lands, houses, buildings, &c., so taken, for any loss or damage they may sustain thereby"; and it was also provided. that they should not be authorised to take other buildings without the consent "of the owners or proprietors thereof, or other persons interested therein":—Held, first, that compensation was to be made in the case of premises taken under the former clause, not only to the owners of the fee-simple in the lands and buildings, but also the lessees of the same for terms of years. Lister v. Lobley, 7 A. & E. 124; 6 N. & M. 340; 2 H. & W. 12; 6 L. J., K. B. 200.

Held, secondly, that the trustees were not bound by the above clause to make or tender compensation before or at the time of entering upon or taking the lands, or pulling down the houses. Ib.

Contracts—Intra Vires—Sinking of Well.]—Where any five or more trustees under a turnpike act were authorised to make turnpikes, with such suitable outbuildings and conveniences as they should think necessary on the intended line of road, and the owner of the soil next adjoining a toll-house (erected in pursuance of the act) contracted with one of the trustees, on behalf of the rest, to sink a well for the convenience of the toll-house, the expense to be borne by each party equally:—Held, that the sinking the well was within the authority of the trustees; that the contract entered into by one of them on behalf of the rest was valid; that the action to recover a moiety of the expense of the well was rightly brought in the name of the clerk of the trustees; and that the consent of the trustees, through the medium of one, that the well should be sunk, was a good consideration to support the action. Newman v. Fletcher, 1 D. & R. 202.

—— When Interested in — Penalty.] — A trustee who holds the office of treasurer, which may be made an office of profit, is within the penalty of the act, though he makes no profit of it in his own person. Delane v. Hillcoat, 4 M. & Ry. 175; 9 B. & C. 310; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 4.

A. having contracted with the trustees of a turnpike road to repair the road for a specific sum, B., one of the trustees, let out to A. his horse and cart for 5*s.* a day, and they were used in the repair of the road. In an action against B. for the penalties:—Held, first, that B. was liable to the penalty imposed by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 65. Towsey v. White, 7 D. & R. 810; 5 B. & C. 125; 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 61.

Held, secondly, that the notice of action, not stating that B., when he let out his horse and cart, was acting as a trustee, was bad. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that, the notice being bad, the plaintiff was barred, not only of his right to costs, but of his right to sue. Ib.

The proviso in s. 143 of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, is not confined to that part of the section which immediately precedes it, but extends to the whole matter in the section; and, therefore, if a party seeking to recover the penalties imposed by that act omits to give the requisite notice, or to commence his action within the prescribed time, he is not merely barred of his right to costs, but of his right of action altogether. Cobbett v. Warner, 1 H. & N. 388; 26 L. J., Ex. 11—Ex. Ch.

Removal of Clerks.]—The 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 42, empowering commissioners of turnpike roads to remove their clerks, &c., must be taken in conjunction with s. 39, which requires certain notices to be given when it is intended to revoke any order of the commissioners. And, therefore, where commissioners had discharged a clerk by a resolution made without such notice, a mandamus was granted to restore him, although at a former meeting the commissioners had ordered proper notices to be given of a meeting for the purpose of such discharge, and the notices had not been given, nor the meeting held, owing to the misconduct, as was alleged, of the clerk himself. Rex v. Wrexham and Denbigh Roads (Trustees), 5 A. & E. 581.

Accounts—Power to Inspect.]—A turnpike act directed that the trustees should keep books, in which they should enter their accounts, and also their orders and proceedings, and that all persons should have access to such entries. By a subsequent local act it was directed, that the trustees should keep a book, in which they should enter their accounts, which book should be open to the inspection of the trustees, or of any creditor on the tolls. The 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 73, re-enacted the latter provision as to all turnpike road accounts; and s. 72 directed, that all trustees of turnpike roads should keep a book of their orders and proceedings, which should be open to the inspection of any of the trustees, and should be read as evidence in courts as there directed. The act also provided, that the enactments therein contained should extend to all other turnpike acts, except where by that act it was otherwise ordered:—Held, that these clauses of the general and of the second local act superseded the provisions of the original act, and limited the power of inspection at first given to the whole public, confining it to trustees, and to trustees and creditors in the respective cases of orders and accounts. Rex v. Northleach and Witney Roads (Trustees), 5 B. & Ad. 978.

—— Signature of—Admissibility.]—Printed copies of the annual accounts of a turnpike trust, made up from the original statements, signed by the chairman of the trustees, and returned pursuant to 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 78, were produced from the office of the clerk of the peace and tendered in evidence. They were not signed by the chairman:—Held, inadmissible, either as primary or secondary evidence. Pardoe v. Price, 13 M. & W. 267; 14 L. J., Ex. 212.

Resolution not Signed till Subsequent Meeting—Validity.]—A resolution of the trustees of a turnpike road, although entered in the book kept by them, was not signed by the chairman of the meeting at which it was passed; but at a subsequent meeting the resolution was referred to and confirmed, and the entry of such confirmation was signed by the then chairman:—Held, sufficient evidence, under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 72, that such resolution had been passed. Reg. v. Ifield, 4 W. R. 458.

In respect of Repairs.]—See infra, col. 140.

b. Proceedings by and against.

Parties—Liability of Treasurer.]—Where a turnpike act directed that if any person had a cause of action against the trustees, he should sue the treasurer:—Held, that the action against the treasurer was substituted only for such action as might be maintained against the whole body of trustees, and that an action would not lie against him for the act of five trustees, though they formed a quorum. Everett v. Cooch, 7 Taunt. 1.

Where the trustees under a road act are sued in the name of their clerk, in pursuance of 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 74, the property of the clerk is not liable to be taken in execution to satisfy the judgment. Wormwell v. Hailstone, 4 M. & P. 512; 6 Bing. 668; 8 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 264.

A clerk to turnpike trustees is not personally liable under a clause, by which they may sue and be sued in his name. Emery v. Day, 4 Tyr. 695; 1 C. M. & R. 245; 3 L. J., Ex. 307.

Recovery of Costs in Actions.]—The 4 Jac. 1, c. 3, enacts, that in any action of trespass, or ejectione firmæ, or any action whatsoever, wherein the plaintiff might have costs in case judgment should be given for him, if the plaintiff be nonsuited, the defendant shall have judgment to recover his costs. A mortgagee of turnpike tolls brought ejectment to recover the tollgates, &c., and one of the trustees of the road was admitted to defend as landlord. The plaintiff having been nonsuited, the defendant signed judgment for costs:—Held, that the judgment was right, for that, assuming the statute to make it a condition to the defendant's right to costs that the plaintiff would have had his costs if he had succeeded in the particular action, still the case was within the statute, inasmuch as the plaintiff might have had his costs, even if the defendant, as a trustee of the road, was protected from personal liability by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 74. Cobbett v. Wheeler, 3 El. & El. 358; 30 L. J., Q. B. 64; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 260; 3 L. T. 554; 9 W. R. 140.

Action by Trustees—Claim for Calls—Validity of Agreement.]—In order to proceed for calls under 9 Geo. 4, c. 77, against parties who have agreed to subscribe money for the making or repairing a highway, the agreement must be in writing, and must be substantially the same as the form given in the schedule of 3 Geo. 4, c. 126. Meigh v. Clinton, 3 P. & D. 211; 11 A. & E. 418; 9 L. J., Q. B. 92.

The 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 82, is only repealed by 9 Geo. 4, c. 77, ss. 6, 7, as to so much as relates to the payment and recovery of the sum subscribed for the making of a turnpike road. Ib.

Evidence of being a Trustee.]—By 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 134, where any action shall be brought by or against any trustee of a road, evidence of the trustee having acted as such, together with the act of parliament by which he was appointed, or the order, or a copy of the order for his appointment or election, in case he was appointed or elected by the trustees, shall be sufficient proof of his being a trustee:—Held, that the words, "in case he was appointed or elected by the trustees," applied to cases where there was an appointment or election de facto by the trustees, in contradistinction to an appointment by the road act; and, therefore, proof of a party having acted as trustee, and of an order made by the trustees for his appointment or election, was sufficient, even under a local act, whereby the appointment of new trustees, on death or removal, was required to be under the hands and seals of five of the old trustees, and although it was shown that the order for such appointment was not so made. Doe d. Baggaley v. Hares, 4 B. & Ad. 435; 1 N. & M. 237; 2 L. J., K. B. 88.

Action against Trustees—Liability for Negligence.]—The trustees appointed under a public road act are not responsible for an injury occasioned by the negligence of the men employed in making or repairing the road. Duncan v. Findlater, 6 Cl. & F. 894 ; 1 Rob. 911.

The funds raised by such act cannot be charged with compensation for such an injury, the persons employed on the road being in the situation of servants to the trustees. Ib.

The trustees of a turnpike road converted an open ditch, which used to carry off the water from the road, into a covered drain, placing catchpits, with gratings thereon, to enable the water to enter the drain. Owing to the insufficiency of such gratings and catchpits, the water, in very wet seasons, instead of running down the ditch as it formerly did before the alterations by the trustees, overflowed the road and made its way into the adjoining land and injured a colliery :—Held, that the trustees were liable for such injury, if they were guilty of negligence in respect of such gratings and catchpits. Whitehouse v. Fellowes, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 765 ; 30 L. J., C. P. 305 ; 4 L. T. 177 ; 9 W. R. 557.

Held, also, that a fresh damage to the owner's colliery, occasioned by the trustees continuing such insufficient gratings and catchpits, was a distinct cause of action. Ib.

—— Time for bringing Action.]—Therefore, an action brought in respect of it within three months from the time of such fresh damage, although more than three months from the first damage, was not defeated by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 147, which limits the action against such trustees to "three months after the fact committed." Ib.

—— Delay.]—A road was altered in 1855 in a manner which the plaintiff considered likely to retard the escape of water in time of flood, and thus to aggravate the mischief done by floods to his property, and especially to do him serious damage on the occurrence of great floods, such as might be expected every twenty or thirty years. While the works were in progress in February, 1855, he threatened proceedings to stop them. After their completion slight floods occurred, in 1855 and 1856, without doing serious mischief ; and in 1857 a great flood occurred, shortly after which, in December, 1857, he filed a bill to have the road restored to its condition before 1855, and to have compensation for the damages done by the flood of 1857 :—Held, that the fact of no serious damage being done in the interval did not excuse the delay, and that he was not entitled to have the bill retained pending a trial. The bill accordingly dismissed with costs, without prejudice to any proceedings at law. Wicks v. Hunt, 1 Johns. 372.

—— Specific Performance — Right of Pre-emption in Adjoining Owner.]—It is no defence to a suit for specific performance against trustees of a turnpike road, that the land they have contracted to sell is liable to pre-emption by the owner of the adjoining land under the General Turnpike Act (3 Geo. 4), c. 126, s. 39, even where the offer required has not, through inadvertence, been made to such owner, and it is in evidence that the owner insists on his right, the purchaser making no objection to the title, and being content to take such estate as the trustees could convey. Barrett v. Ring, 2 Sm. & G. 43.

—— Injunction—Proposed Deviation.]—Commissioners proposed turning an inclined road or ship-way, leading from a town to the seashore, from the north-east to the north-west. This, so far from producing any injury, would make a more convenient landing-place : — Held, that whether they were authorised or not, the court would not interfere in the matter. Ryde Commissioners v. Isle of Wight Ferry Co., 30 Beav. 616.

Liability to Information.]—Commissioners of roads, by exceeding their authority, render themselves liable to an information. Rex v. Rogers, 2 Ken. 373.

3. Repair of Roads.

Mandamus to Compel.]—A mandamus does not lie to compel the repair of a turnpike road. Reg. v. Oxford and Witney Roads (Trustees), 4 P. & D. 154 ; 12 A. & E. 427.

Liability of Treasurer or Surveyor.]—When a turnpike road is out of repair, the proper person to be summoned and proceeded against, in the first instance before justices at special sessions, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 94, is the treasurer or surveyor, or other officer of the turnpike road. Reg. v. Trafford, Gorton (Surveyors), In re, 5 El. & Bl. 967 ; 25 L. J., M. C. 70 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 399 ; 4 W. R. 260 ; 7 Cox, C. C. 76.

—— Jurisdiction to Summon.]—A single justice has no authority, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 94, to summon the surveyor of turnpike roads for non-repair. George v. Chambers. 11 M. & W. 149 ; 2 D. (N.S.) 783 ; 12 L. J., M. C. 94 ; 7 Jur. 836. S. P., Reg. v. St. Albans JJ., 1 C. L. R. 536 ; 22 L. J., M. C. 142 ; 17 Jur. 531.

Liability of Trustees.]—If trustees under a road act turn a road through an inclosure, and make the fences at their own expense, and repair them for several years, they cannot be compelled to continue such repairs unless there is a special provision in the act to that effect. Rex v. Llandillo Commissioners, 2 Term Rep. 232 ; 1 R. R. 466.

Where the trustees of a turnpike road have formed a new road through private grounds, but have neglected to make proper fences, as required by 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 66, the want of the necessary funds for that purpose is not a sufficient answer to a mandamus commanding them to make the fences. Reg. v. Luton Roads (Trustees), 1 G. & D. 428 ; 1 Q. B. 860 ; 10 L. J., Q. B. 263.

—— Cleansing of Ditches and Drains.]—Under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 113, the obligation to make, scour, cleanse and keep open the ditches, drains and watercourses for keeping turnpike roads dry, and conveying the water from them, is on the trustees, and not on the occupiers of adjoining lands. Merivale v. Exeter Turnpike Road (Trustees), 9 B. & S. 70 ; 37 L. J., M. C. 40 ; L. R. 3 Q. B. 149 ; 18 L. T. 83 ; 16 W. R. 702.

—— Agreement for—Liability of Successors.]—The respective trustees of two different turnpike roads agreed, that the main street of a borough through which street the two roads passed, and which had been treated as common to the two trusts, should in future be repaired by one trust alone, and that the other trust should contribute, annually, a certain sum towards those repairs, as long as the said portion of road should remain common to both trusts, and be repaired as aforesaid. In an action by the repairing trustees to recover from the contributing trustees their share due under the agreement in respect of the repairs :—Held, that the trustees had power to make such an agreement, under 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 78 ; and that the succeeding trustees were bound by the agreement until it was determined by notice from either side. Swinburne v. Robinson, 1 El. & El. 80 ; 28 L. J., Q. B. 4 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 462 ; 7 W. R. 10.

—— Effect of Local Act.]—A local act for repairing a road under the trust of the contributing trustees, passed after the making of the agreement, provided that it should not be lawful for the trustees to apply the tolls or moneys coming to their hands under the act "in repairing or amending any part of the turnpike roads in any town or place which is or shall be paved or repaired by any commissioners or trustees for executing any local act of parliament" :—Held, that the fact that the borough had been brought within the provisions of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, Public Health Act, did not render the agreement void under the local act. Ib.

Liability of Parish—Tolls an Auxiliary Fund.]—Where a turnpike act, after empowering the trustees under it to take tolls, directed that the roads should from time to time be repaired by the trustees out of the money arising by virtue of the act :—Held, that this only made the tolls an auxiliary fund in the hands of the trustees, and that the inhabitants of the township where the road was situate, who by prescription were bound to repair all roads within it, were nevertheless liable to be indicted for non-repair of the road. Rex v. Netherthong, 2 B. & Ald. 179.

Held, also, that such inhabitants might, after conviction, apply by motion for relief against the trustees under 13 Geo. 3, c. 84, s. 33. Ib.

If a turnpike road is out of repair, the inhabitants are liable to be indicted, although the tolls are appropriated by act of parliament to the repairs thereof. In such case they must seek relief from the trustees under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126. Reg. v. Preston, 2 Lewin, C. C. 193.

The 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 68, which recites, that doubts have arisen whether any body politic or corporate, or any particular person or persons liable to repair, by tenure or otherwise, any old turnpike road, ought to repair any new road set out in lieu of the old road, and then enacts, that every body politic or corporate, and person or persons liable to repair any old turnpike road, shall be liable to repair any new road set out in lieu thereof, includes parishes. Reg. v. Barton, 3 P. & D. 190 ; 11 A. & E. 343 ; 9 L. J., M. C. 23.

Obtaining Materials for—"Inclosed Lands."]—The words "inclosed lands," in 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, ss. 97 and 98, meant lands which were actually inclosed and surrounded with fences ; and, therefore, where (before 4 & 5 Vict. c. 51) lands on downs were not fenced off, although private property, a surveyor might take materials for the repairs of a turnpike road, without the order of the justices mentioned in s. 98. But it was otherwise where the land was surrounded by a fence, though out of repair. Tapsell v. Crosskey, 7 M. & W. 441 ; 10 L. J., Ex. 188.

—— Gardens.]—Where there was a power for trustees of a turnpike road to dig for gravel, except in gardens :—Held, that the exception extended to fields planted with garden stuff. Hughes v. Brand, Amb. 105.

—— Order of Sessions—Validity of.]—An order of sessions for digging materials in private soil, by virtue of 29 Geo. 2, c. 67, quashed, because it showed no notice to the occupier, nor what kind of material for repair was wanted, nor in what fields it was intended to search, and did not award a satisfaction to the owner and occupier. Rex v. Manning, 1 Burr. 377 ; 2 Ld. Ken. 561.

Expenses of.]—See infra, cols. 167, 169.

When becoming Main Roads.]—See supra, A. 5, a, i. (ante, cols. 83 et seq.).

4. Tolls.

a. Toll Bars and Houses.

Power to Erect.]—The 9 Geo. 4, c. 77, s. 5, authorises turnpike trustees to build toll-houses, and inclose gardens for them on the sides of the turnpike roads :—Held, that this power is limited to the inclosure of land on the side of the road over which the public has an easement for passage, and does not extend to land adjacent to the road over which the public has no easement, though the land is uninclosed. Beckett v. Upton, 5 El. & Bl. 629 ; 25 L. J., Q. B. 70 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1136 ; 4 W. R. 52.

—— Under a Local Act—Construction.]—By a local act, which was to continue in force for thirty-one years, it was enacted, that it shall not be lawful for the trustees of the turnpike roads to continue or erect any turnpike or toll-gate across the roads, in the towns of T. and W., or in any other town through or into which the roads might pass or be made in pursuance of the act, within the thirty-one years :—Held, that the act was prospective, so as to prohibit as well the continuance of any turnpike gate in the town of T., as it might be at any time during the thirty-one years for which the act was to be in force, as the erection of one in the town, as it was when the act passed. Reg. v. Cottle, 16 Q. B. 412 ; 20 L. J., M. C. 162 ; 15 Jur. 721.

Within a Town—Right to Demand Tolls—Jurisdiction of Magistrates.]—A turnpike act, passed in 1815, forbade the demanding or taking toll from any of the inhabitants of S. at any toll-gate "to be erected in the said town." In 1838 a toll-gate, which had stood in the town since 1815, was moved (about 1,200 yards) to a site outside the town. For several years there was no house between the new site of the gate and the town, but subsequently several houses were built on both sides of the road, though not forming a continuous street. Between 1838 and 1878 no toll was demanded from any inhabitant of S., but in the latter year A., an inhabitant of the town, was called upon to pay toll on driving through the gate. He then summoned the toll-collector for unlawfully demanding toll. The magistrates found as a fact that the toll-gate did not, either when erected or at the date of the complaint stand within the town, and they dismissed the summons:—Held, (1) that the question whether the toll-gate was within the town was a question of fact for the magistrates, and the court could not go behind their finding; (2) that the finding was right in point of fact; and (3) that the omission to demand toll for forty years gave the public no right to exemption. Deards v. Goldsmith, 40 L. T. 328.

Near a Bridge—Rules for.]—By a local act a person was empowered to make a bridge over a river, and to set up gates and take tolls upon or near to the bridge, or at or upon any of its approaches or communications belonging to him, and from time to time to remove such gates to any part of the bridge or approaches. He moved a toll-gate from near the bridge to a point in a private road (which was his property, and led to the bridge) half a mile distant from the bridge:—Held, that, as the toll to be taken was pontage and not toll traverse, the gate must be so approximate to the bridge that the gate-keeper could see if a person passing through it was really going over the bridge, and that therefore toll could not be legally payable at the gate half a mile from the bridge. Royal v. Yaxley, 20 W. R. 903.

Compelling Trustees to Pull Down.]—A toll-house erected by turnpike trustees on a highway was for some years used for the collection of tolls. The toll-bar attached to the house was then taken down, and for twelve years subsequently no toll had been collected at the house, which had been in the occupation of a man employed by the road surveyors for the repair of the road. It was stated by the trustees that they might at some future period again require to use the house on the collection of tolls:—Held, that the owner of the land adjoining was entitled to a mandamus to compel the trustees to pull down the toll-house and remove the materials, for it must be taken to have become useless and no longer required for the purposes of the road within the meaning of 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 57. Reg. v. Greenlaw Turnpike (Trustees), 48 L. J., Q. B. 409; 4 Q. B. D. 447; 40 L. T. 555; 27 W. R. 800.

Sale of Toll-Houses by Trustees.]—A person was indicted for obstructing a highway, having purchased and kept standing a toll-house, not required for the purposes of the road, from the trustees of the turnpike, under 29 & 30 Vict. c. 105, s. 2. This toll-house was situated in the middle of a wide part of the road at the junction with another road. The addition of the site would have been a slight improvement to the road for the purpose of persons driving a particular way, but it would have been of no material benefit or advantage for the chief part of the traffic; and the price paid for the house was 120*l.*:—Held, that assuming the court to have jurisdiction to review the propriety of the sale, the trustees must have a practical discretion under the 29 & 30 Vict. c. 105, s. 2; and that, the price of the house being far beyond the value of the improvement, the trustees were justified in selling the house instead of adding the site to the road. Reg. v. Fox, 35 L. T. 249.

b. Nature and Amount of Tolls.

i. On what Payable.

Generally.]—Toll is not payable for passengers' luggage in an omnibus, or for a sheep and lamb in a basket on the omnibus, or for a man riding a horse, under an act imposing toll separately on carriages, on portmanteaus, trunks, &c., on passengers and travellers, or sheep, lambs, &c., and on horses ridden or not ridden. Portsmouth Floating Bridge Co. v. Nance, 6 Man. & G. 222; 6 Scott (N.R.) 823.

Taxed Cart.]—A local act provided that upon a turnpike road certain tolls should be chargeable "for every horse or other beast drawing any other chaise, chair or caleche, or any taxed cart, a sum not exceeding 3*d.*":—Held, that a cart upon which a tax had been imposed and paid in the previous year was within the enactment, and that no larger toll than 3*d.* could be charged for passing through the toll-gate. Purdy v. Smith, 1 El. & El. 511; 28 L. J., M. C. 150; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 912; 7 W. R. 306.

By a local act of 1852 the trustees of a turnpike road were empowered to take a certain toll "for every horse or other beast drawing any car or chair or other such like carriage with double seats (except a dog cart), or any phaeton, caravan, or taxed cart, or any four-wheeled light carriage, if drawn by one horse or other beast only":—Held, that the words "taxed cart" mean such a cart as comes within the designation of taxed cart in 43 Geo. 3, c. 161, and do not apply to any cart, simply because it is a cart in respect of which a tax is paid. Williams v. Lear, 41 L. J., M. C. 76; L. R. 7 Q. B. 285; 25 L. T. 906.

Locomotive Steam Ploughs.]—A steam engine which, in being taken along a turnpike road for the purpose of working a plough for hire, and on its way to take up a plough to be driven on a farm not occupied by the owner of the engine, having on it the necessary plough-gear, passes through a turnpike gate more than three miles distant from where the plough was, is liable to toll under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 7, s. 1, and is not within the exemption arising from 24 & 25 Vict. c. 70, s. 12, and 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, inasmuch as it is not a horse or a carriage conveying a plough, or a plough itself. Skinner v. Visger, 43 L. J., M. C. 49; L. R. 9 Q. B. 199.

Bicycle.]—A local turnpike act, 3 Will. 4, c. 4, imposed the following tolls:—For every horse, mule, or other beast drawing any coach, sociable, chariot, berlin, landau, vis-à-vis, phaeton, curricle, &c., 6*d.* For every carriage of whatever description, and for whatever purpose, which shall be drawn or impelled, or set or kept in motion by steam or other power or agency than being drawn by any horse or horses, or other beast or beasts of draught, 5*s.*:—Held, that a bicycle was not a carriage liable to toll under the act. Williams v. Ellis, 49 L. J., M. C. 47; 5 Q. B. D. 175; 42 L. T. 249; 28 W. R. 416; 44 J. P. 394.

According to Size of Wheels.]—Amount of tolls payable on breadth of fellies of wheels. Beerling v. Terry, 6 L. T. 186.

A turnpike act of 1861 comprised within the trusts eighteen several roads. It empowered the trustees to demand and take "at the several and respective toll-gates which shall be upon or on the sides of the roads, such tolls as the trustees shall direct, not exceeding for every horse drawing any cart, waggon, &c., with wheels of a less breadth than four and a half inches, 6*d.*," and "for every horse or mule, laden or unladen, and not drawing, 1½*d.*":—Held, that the local act specifically providing for progressive charges in respect of the diminished breadth of waggon wheels, virtually repeals 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 7, and, consequently, that the toll was limited to the sums mentioned in the local act. James v. Dickenson, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 416.

The additional toll to be paid by waggons which are overweight must be according to the progressive proportions named in 12 Geo. 3, c. 82, s. 2; not a gross charge of the highest additional toll incurred upon the gross overweight. Chamberlain v. Longhurst, Cowp. 365.

Where a turnpike act imposed a toll of 1*s.* 6*d.* on every four-wheeled waggon with wheels of a less breadth than six inches, and drawn by four horses; 1*s.* on every such waggon drawn by three horses; 9*d.* by two; and 4½*d.* by one; and so in like proportion on waggons with two wheels drawn by four, three, two, or one horse or horses: —Held, that only those respective sums could be demanded for toll, and that the 13 Geo. 3, c. 84, s. 23, by which one-half more than the tolls payable for waggons with wheels of a less breadth than six inches might be taken, was virtually repealed by the other act. Ridge v. Garlick, 2 Moore, 481.

By a local act, a scale of tolls was prescribed, by which a toll of 4½*d.* was imposed for each horse drawing any waggon drawn by four horses, whether the fellies of the wheels were of the breadth of six inches and upwards, or less. The trustees under this act had, previously to the passing of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, taken and collected the additional toll directed to be taken by 13 Geo. 3, c. 84:—Held, that such increased toll (6¾*d.*) was properly demanded; the case not falling within the exemption contained in 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, ss. 5, 6. Pickford v. Davis, 4 M. & Scott, 683; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 141; 3 L. J., C. P. 263.

Where a turnpike act authorised the trustees to take at each and every toll-bar on the whole line of road a certain scale of tolls; and by another section they were authorised at a meeting, upon notice thereof to be affixed on all the gates, to reduce or advance all or any of the tolls granted by the act:—Held, that the trustees had no authority to reduce or advance the tolls at some gates and not at others. Rex v. Bury and Stratton Roads, 6 D. & R. 369; 4 B. & C. 361.

ii. Exemptions.

The Sovereign.]—A carriage and horses belonging to the queen, driven by her coachman, and used by a member of her household, or his family, with the queen's permission, though not upon her service, are exempt from turnpike tolls. Westover v. Perkins, 2 El. & El. 57; 28 L. J., M. C. 227; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1352; 7 W. R. 582.

Commissariat Stores.]—The exemption from toll in 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, in favour of carts conveying stores for the use of her majesty's forces, applies, although the cart conveying such stores is the cart of a common carrier hired for that purpose by the contractor for such stores, and although the contract contains a power to the officer in command at the depôt to which they are being conveyed of rejecting them, if they should not be of a certain quality. L. & S. W. Ry. v. Reeves, 1 H. & R. 845; 35 L. J., M. C. 239; L. R. 1 C. P. 580; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 786; 14 L. T. 662; 14 W. R. 967.

By 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, any waggon conveying commissariat stores for the use of her majesty's forces is exempt from toll. A contractor for the supply of forage for the use of her majesty's forces at A. was bound by his agreement to keep at A. a supply of forage sufficient for at least fourteen days' consumption. The deputy commissary-general had a right to inspect the forage at the store, and reject all that was of inferior quality. A waggon belonging to the contractor was conveying forage to the store at A., bonâ fide intended to be there delivered in performance of the agreement, and for the use of her majesty's forces:—Held, that the waggon was exempt from toll. Toomer v. Reeves, 37 L. J., M. C. 49; L. R. 3 C. P. 62; 17 L. T. 149; 16 W. R. 83.

Officers and Soldiers on Duty.]—By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 3 (Mutiny Act, 1864), s. 72, her majesty's officers and soldiers on duty are exempt from payment of any duties and tolls in passing along or over any turnpike or other roads or bridges: —Held, that this exemption did not apply to a floating bridge propelled from one side of a river to the other by steam power, and kept in its course by parallel chains laid across the bed of the river. Ward v. Gray, 6 B. & S. 345; 34 L. J., M. C. 146; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 738; 12 L. T. 305; 13 W. R. 653.

Sect. 86 of the Mutiny Act (39 & 40 Vict. c. 8) only exempts from toll carriages employed under and by virtue of s. 68. Hinds v. Thring, 36 L. T. 216.

Volunteers.]—A captain of volunteer infantry dressed in his uniform, and having his arms and accoutrements, according to the regulations of his corps, passing through a turnpike gate in a carriage hired for the purpose of returning from drill, is exempt from toll by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32. Stephenson v. Taylor, 1 B. & S. 95; 30 L. J., M. C. 145; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 602; 4 L. T. 243; 9 W. R. 600.

An omnibus hired by volunteers especially to carry them to a place of exercise is exempt from toll by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, though some of them are not in uniform, or though a person not a volunteer is allowed to sit in it, not paying for his seat. Ib.

Volunteers in uniform, going to attend a voluntary rifle match, at a duly appointed place of rifle practice, but open to all the world, were not entitled to exemption from toll, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 126. Teather v. Turner, 7 L. T. 785; 11 W. R. 425.

The exemption of volunteers from toll contained in 26 & 27 Vict. c. 65, s. 45, does not extend to members of the yeomanry cavalry, and therefore such members are not exempt if they drive instead of ride to the place of meeting of their corps. Humphrey v. Bethel, 1 H. & R. 221; 35 L. J., M. C. 150; L. R. 1 C. P. 215; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 212; 13 L. T. 797; 14 W. R. 457.

Clergymen.]—By 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, no toll shall be taken from any rector, vicar or curate going to or returning from visiting any sick parishioner or on other his parochial duty within his parish:—Held, that a clergyman acting as curate of a parish with the permission of the bishop, though without his licence, was within the exemption, and that the exemption extended to a turnpike not in the parish to which he was going on parochial duty. Temple v. Dickinson,

1 El. & El. 34 ; 28 L. J., M. C. 10 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 363 ; 7 W. R. 13.

The curate of a parish was engaged by the rector of a neighbouring parish to discharge his clerical duties during his temporary absence from illness. There was no licence from the bishop or other authority by which the curate was empowered to perform the duties. He rode through a turnpike-gate on his way to the parish church to perform the ceremony of marriage :—Held, that he was not entitled to the exemption from toll given by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, to the curate of a parish on parochial duty within his parish. Brunskill v. Watson, 37 L. J., M. C. 103 ; L. R. 3 Q. B. 418 ; 18 L. T. 432 ; 16 W. R. 1009.

A clergyman driving out to visit a sick parishioner is exempted from paying toll in respect of his carriage and horse, although accompanied by his wife and family. Layard v. Ovry, 37 L. J., M. C. 148 ; L. R. 3 Q. B. 415 ; 18 L. T. 123 ; 16 W. R. 896.

Minister of Primitive Methodists.]—A minister of the Primitive Methodists had assigned to him, by persons having authority amongst the Primitive Methodists, the Sunday and other services in a district comprising thirteen parishes, of which the parish of F. was one. The days on which and the places at which he was to attend were fixed at regular quarterly meetings of the Primitive Methodists, and were printed on a "plan." The minister, according to this plan, had to preach at F. on three Sundays in one quarter of the year, and on the other Sundays during the quarter at some of the other parishes in his district :—Held, that in going to F. on the Sundays indicated in the plan to conduct the services there, the minister was going to "his usual place of religious worship," within 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, and was therefore exempt from liability to pay tolls. Smith v. Barnett, 40 L. J., M. C. 15 ; L. R. 6 Q. B. 34 ; 23 L. T. 746.

Persons attending Places of Worship — "Parochial."]—A turnpike act exempted persons from toll "in going to and returning from their proper parochial church, chapel or other place of religious worship on Sundays" :—Held, that the word "parochial" extended over the whole clause ; and, therefore, that a dissenter was not within the exemption in going to and returning from his proper place of religious worship, situate out of the parish in which he resided. Lewis v. Hammond, 2 B. & Ald. 206.

Police Constables.]—The exemption from toll granted by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 1, to police constables passing with horses along any turnpike road or bridge, extends to a road or bridge made and erected by a company under an act of parliament. Longland v. Andrews, 3 H. & C. 564 ; 34 L. J., Ex. 90 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 412 ; 12 L. T. 233 ; 13 W. R. 784.

Seafaring Persons.]—By a local act, passed in 1834, the company of proprietors of the Southampton and Itchen Floating Bridge and Roads was incorporated, and tolls were payable for passing over such bridge, there being an exemption from toll in favour of any fisherman or seafaring person being an inhabitant of the parish of St. Mary Extra. By a section in a subsequent act it is enacted that the words "fishermen, seafaring men, and seafaring persons" in the recited acts, or any of them, shall not be deemed or construed to extend to or include any person who shall not be bonâ fide a fisherman, seaman, mariner, sailor or pilot. A. had for many years been engaged upon one of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamships trading between Southampton and Alexandria, and was an inhabitant of the parish of St. Mary Extra. He signed articles like all other seamen employed on board, and was bed-cabin steward. He was liable to do what the captain ordered him to do either above or below deck, but, without special orders, his duties were confined to the bed-cabins. He had occasionally lent a hand in making and shortening sail, and in heaving the capstan when weighing anchor ; but he never kept watch on board and never steered :—Held, that he was a seafaring person within the statute, and so entitled to exemption from toll. Sharp v. Fields, 10 L. T. 338.

"Fodder for Cattle."]—Barley grown on a farm, which was being conveyed to a mill to be ground into meal for feeding pigs upon the farm, and barley meal ground at the mill from barley grown on the farm, which was being conveyed back to be consumed by pigs on the farm, are within the exemption as "fodder for cattle" in 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32. Clements v. Smith, 3 El. & El. 238 ; 30 L. J., M. C. 16 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1149 ; 3 L. T. 295 ; 9 W. R. 53.

Milk.]—Milk does not come within the meaning of the words "or other agricultural produce" in 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, so as to be exempt from toll. Oran v. Gait, 1 L. T. 326.

Cattle going to or returning from Pasture.]—In a turnpike act, imposing tolls on horses, &c., "cattle going to or returning from pasture," and "horses attending cattle returning from pasture," were exempted :—Held, that a horse ridden by the owner of the cattle at pasture, in order to fetch them from pasture, did not come within either of the exemptions. Harrison v. Brough, 6 Term Rep. 706.

Sheep or Cattle going to Pasture.]—The exemption from toll on a turnpike road, contained in 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 25, s. 1, in respect of sheep or cattle going to pasture, is not confined to farmers occupying farms in the locality of a toll-gate. Warmby v. Deakin, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 124 ; 32 L. J., M. C. 201 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 98 ; 8 L. T. 319 ; 11 W. R. 669.

A., who carried on the business of a farmer and cattle dealer, had two pasture fields, one on each side of a toll-bar. Having purchased beasts and sheep at a market, he drove them to the one pasture, and, after keeping them there a day, drove them through the toll-bar to the other pasture, intending the next day to send them to another market on that side of the bar, for sale. The distance between the two pastures along the turnpike road was less than two miles :—Held, that the animals were exempt. Ib.

Manure.]—The provision of 3 Geo. 4, c. 126 ss. 28, 32, which exempts from toll on turnpike roads carriages employed only in carrying manure, and exacts that toll shall not be demanded for them "by reason only of any basket or baskets, empty sack or sacks, or spade, shovel or fork, necessary for loading or unloading such manure, being in or upon any such carriage," is not repealed by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 18, s. 1. Richens v. Wiggins, 3 B. & S. 953 ; 32 L. J., M. C. 144 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1055 ; 8 L. T. 384 ; 11 W. R. 617.

A person drove through a turnpike gate a cart laden with garden produce, packed in baskets, paying the toll, and returned the next morning with the cart laden with manure for land, on the top of which were the baskets empty :—Held, that no toll was demandable on account of these baskets being on the cart. Ib.

A turnpike act for repairing roads exempted carts employed in carrying "mould, dung, soil, marl, manure, or compost employed in husbandry for manuring or improving land" :—Held, that this exemption included soil carried by the owner to be deposited in a place belonging to himself, and there sold for the purpose of its being employed as manure by others. Reg. v. Freke, 5 El. & Bl. 944 ; 25 L. J., M. C. 64 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 162 ; 4 W. R. 264 ; 7 Cox, C. C. 32.

The same construction is applicable to a similar exemption contained in 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 18, s. 1. Ib.

Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 18, s. 1, which provides that no turnpike toll shall be demanded in respect of any horse or carriage conveying manure for land, artificial manure carried by the dealer to the farmer in the dealer's cart is exempt from toll. Foster v. Tucker, 39 L. J., M. C. 72 ; L. R. 5 Q. B. 224 ; 22 L. T. 124.

A cart drawn by horses laden with manure for the manuring of land is exempt from toll. Rex v. Adams, 6 M. & S. 52.

An act exempting carts and waggons, loaded with manure, from toll, exempts them from toll if they are going empty to fetch manure. Harrison v. James, 2 Chit. 547. But see 52 Geo. 3, c. 145.

Uncrushed bones, which are taken through a turnpike to be there crushed and part of them used as manure, and the residue to be afterwards sold and to be used as manure at other places, are exempt from toll under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, and 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 18, s. 1. Pratt v. Brown, 8 Car. & P. 244.

—— Lime.]—Under an exemption from toll, in an act of parliament, for carts carrying compost, or any thing whatever used in the manuring of land, the carriage of lime is not exempt ; the words, "or any thing whatsoever used in the manuring of land," being considered as only applying to the carriage of ploughs, harrows and such like instruments. King v. Gough, 2 Chit. 655.

A clause in a turnpike act exempted from toll all carriages employed in the conveyance of materials for repairing the road, or any of the highways, in the parishes in which any part of the road lay ; and in a subsequent part exempted generally carriages employed in conveying implements of husbandry or manure. In the following clause, the trustees were empowered to compound with persons who resided in one parish, and occupied lands in an adjoining parish. A waggon was passing on the road, laden with lime, from one parish to another, for the purpose of the cultivation of owner's farm, situate in the latter, neither of which was situate in any of those parishes through which the road passed :—Held, that this, being an exemption in the former clause in favour of husbandry, was to be beneficially construed, and that it was not restrained by the subsequent one ; and that, consequently, the owner of the waggon was not liable to the payment of toll. Higginbotham v. Perkins, 3 Moore, 185 ; 21 R. R. 561.

Implements of Husbandry — Engines.] — A steam-engine used exclusively for working a threshing-machine belonging to the same owner, and passing a turnpike-gate at the same time with the threshing-machine, but in a separate cart, is exempted from toll as an implement of husbandry, although the steam-engine is capable of being applied to other purposes. Reg. v. Matty, 8 El. & Bl. 712 ; 27 L. J., M. C. 59 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 238 ; 6 W. R. 213.

—— Threshing-Machines.] — Where a local act engrafted on the exemption of agricultural machines contained in 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, an exception of machines, "let to hire, or travelling for the purpose of being used by any person other than the owner thereof" :—Held, that a threshing-machine, owned by a person who was taking it along the road for the purpose of threshing for hire the corn of a farmer, was within the exception. Rapley v. Richards, 12 W. R. 864.

A turnpike act imposed certain tolls on waggons and carts, and by the interpretation clause included in these words threshing-machines. By 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 4, all the enactments, provisions, matters and things contained in the act are to extend to existing and future turnpike acts, unless expressly referred to and varied, altered or repealed ; and by s. 32, implements of husbandry are exempted from toll. By 9 Geo. 4, c. 77, s. 19, the powers, &c., in the former act are to extend to every local turnpike act as if repeated in it. By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 38, s. 4, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 135, s. 6, implements of husbandry in 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, are to include threshing-machines :—Held, that within the area of the local act, the provisions of the general acts as to threshing-machines were superseded, and that such machines within such area were liable to pay toll. Ablert v. Pritchard, 1 H. & R. 274 ; 35 L. J., M. C. 101 ; L. R. 1 C. P. 210 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 211 ; 14 L. T. 16 ; 14 W. R. 331.

Road Materials.]—A bridge was not a highway within 13 Geo. 3, c. 84, s. 60, by which carriages employed in carrying materials for the repair of any turnpike road or public highway were exempted from toll ; and, therefore, toll was payable for a carriage employed in carrying materials for the repair of a bridge along a turnpike road. Osmond v. Widdicombe, 2 B. & Ald. 49.

—— Public Footpath is a Highway.]—Where a road has been found to have been used for a length of time as a footway to the adjoining lands :—Held, that it is a public highway, and that under the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, materials for the repair of the same are exempt from tolls. Reg. v. Lord, 4 W. R. 83.

Where, under a local act, companies have power to convert streets within their districts into public highways, and to pave, flag and maintain the same, and are entitled to bring materials for that purpose free of tolls :—Held, that they are entitled to bring materials to repair such streets before these are declared public highways, if they have previously been used as highways either for foot-passengers only, or for carriage traffic generally. Ib.

Merely Crossing the Road.]—The act of 4 & 5 Vict. c. 33, is merely a declaratory act, and does not create any new exemption from toll. Harris v. Morrice, 10 M. & W. 260; 12 L. J., Ex. 42.

Passing for Less Distance than One Hundred Yards.]—The 13 Geo. 3, c. 84, s. 34, exempted from toll carriages passing on a turnpike road for a less distance than one hundred yards, whether they quitted the road on the same side on which they entered it, or on the opposite side. Major v. Oxenham, 5 Taunt. 340.

Under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, a carriage is not exempt from toll which passes along one hundred yards of a road from A. to B., for repairing which trustees have been appointed under a local act, although a part of the one hundred yards be a street which, by a subsequent act, the trustees are forbidden to repair. Pope v. Langworthy, 1 N. & M. 647, n.; 5 B. & Ad. 464; 2 L. J., K. B. 170.

Where a turnpike act imposes toll on carriages passing one hundred yards upon a turnpike road, from A. to B., but throws upon the county the repairs of the bridges and approaches to bridges on that line of road, such toll is incurred by a carriage passing one hundred yards along the road, although part of that distance be made up of the approaches to one of the bridges repaired by the county. Bussey v. Storey, 1 N. & M. 639; 4 B. & Ad. 98; 2 L. J., K. B. 166.

By 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, no toll shall be taken on any turnpike road for any horses or carriages which shall not pass above one hundred yards thereon:—Held, that a person who, after crossing a turnpike road from P. to W. at a toll-bar, travelled along a parish road into a turnpike road from P. to C., which was under the same trust, and passed more than one hundred yards thereon, was exempt from toll, inasmuch as the road from P. to C. was not identical with the road from P. to W. Reg. v. Gerrard, 26 L. J., M. C. 148; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 741; 5 W. R. 502. S. C., nom. Gerrard v. Parker, 7 El. & Bl. 498.

The user at different times of portions of the turnpike road, each less than one hundred yards, but, taken together, more than one hundred yards, does not deprive a party of the benefit of the exemption in 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32. Veitch v. Exeter Turnpike Roads (Trustees), 8 El. & Bl. 986; 27 L. J., M. C. 116; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 584; 6 W. R. 290.

An act empowered trustees of a turnpike road leading into a town to collect tolls from persons passing more than a hundred yards along it, and to borrow money on the credit of the tolls. By an act for improving the town, the road trustees were prohibited from repairing a certain portion of it nearest the town, and the town commissioners were to maintain it in future:—Held, that the road trustees might still take the same tolls for passing over that part, and that it still continued part of the same turnpike road for all purposes but that of repair. Phipson v. Harrett, 1 C., M. & R. 473; 5 Tyr. 54; 4 L. J., Ex. 36.

A person is liable to pay toll at a toll-gate on a turnpike road, though he has not travelled one hundred yards on the road before coming to the gate, if, after passing through the gate, he uses the road for a space which, together with that he has passed over previously, exceeds in all the distance of one hundred yards. Horwood v. Powell, 30 L. J., M. C. 203; 4 L. T. 372; 9 W. R. 659.

—— Nature of Exemption.]—The exemption in 13 Geo. 3, c. 84, from payment of toll by a passenger crossing a road, and not going one hundred yards thereon, was confined to carriages, &c., merely crossing the road. Phillips v. Harper, 2 Chit. 412.

"Pass" and "Repass."]—By a turnpike act tolls were authorised to be taken for horses, carts, &c., with a proviso that if the tolls shall have been paid for the passing of any horse, &c., through a toll-gate, such horse, &c., should be permitted to repass during the same day toll free:—Held, that this proviso did not extend to exempt from toll a horse, &c., which had once passed and repassed—the words "pass" and "repass" meaning "going" and "returning." Hill v. Browning, 22 L. T. 712.

Passing Several Times in One Day—Exemption from Second Toll—In what Cases.]—Where a turnpike act imposed a scale of tolls upon horses only, drawing or not drawing carriages, respectively, as the case might be, and by a clause of exemption it was provided that no person should be liable to pay toll more than once for passing and repassing the gates on the same trust at any time in any one day, with the same horses and carriages, through the same toll-gate; but that every person having paid toll once should afterwards pass and repass with the same horses and carriages toll-free during the same day, through the same gate where such toll was paid; and a stage-coach drawn by four horses having passed through a gate on trust, and paid the toll in the morning, and in the evening of the same day the same horses drawing a different coach of the same name, belonging to the same proprietors, driven by the same coachman, but carrying different passengers and parcels for hire, attempted to repass through the gate, and a second toll being demanded and refused, the collector seized one of the horses until it was paid:—Held, in an action for seizing and detaining the horse, that the action could not be sustained, the carriage and horses not being exempted from a second toll. Loaring v. Stone, 3 D. & R. 797; 2 B. & C. 515; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 66. See next case.

By a turnpike act, a toll of sixpence should be demanded and taken for every horse drawing any stage-coach, from the person or persons attending the same. A subsequent clause provided that if any person or persons should have paid the toll for any cattle or carriage passing through the gate, the same person or persons on producing a ticket should be permitted to pass and repass through the same gate with the same cattle or carriage, toll free at any time during the same day. A stage-coach, drawn by four horses, passed through and paid the toll; in the evening of the same day, a different coach, called by the same name, belonging to the same proprietors, and drawn by the same four horses, but driven by a different coachman, and carrying different passengers and parcels for hire, passed through the same gate:—Held, that a second toll was not payable in respect thereof. Norris v. Peate, 10 Moore, 293; 3 Bing. 41; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 134. See preceding case.

A turnpike act imposed a toll, first, upon every carriage drawn by horses; then upon every horse not drawing; and then upon every drove of oxen or cattle: with a proviso "that no more than one toll shall be taken from any person repassing on the same day with the same horses, cattle, beasts and carriages." Where a stage-coach, drawn by four horses, paid the toll in the morning, and in the evening of the same day repassed with the same driver, but with different horses and passengers :—Held, that a second toll was not payable. Waterhouse v. Keen, 6 D. & R. 257 ; 4 B. & C. 200.

A turnpike act imposed tolls, first, upon carriages drawn by horses ; second, upon horses not drawing ; third, upon oxen, &c. ; provided, that all persons having paid once for their carriages, horses, and cattle, returning the same day with the same carriages, horses, and cattle, should pass toll-free. A subsequent act recited, that it was expedient to increase the existing tolls, and re-enacted the provisions of the former act, subject to some alterations, one of which was, that the former tolls should cease, and that instead there should be paid a certain toll for every horse drawing a carriage. Four horses passed a toll-gate in the morning, drawing a carriage, and repassed the same gate in the evening, drawing a different carriage :—Held, that, being the same horses, they were not liable to a second toll. Fearnley v. Morley, 7 D. & R. 832 ; 5 B. & C. 25 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 225.

A turnpike act imposed tolls for every horse drawing any coach, and other tolls upon every horse not drawing ; it provided, generally, that if the tolls had in any one day been paid for the passing of any horse, such horse should on that day be permitted to repass once toll-free ; but enacted, that the toll for horses drawing any stage-coach should be payable every time of passing. The trustees let the tolls, with power to collect them according to the act, and subject to such rules and restrictions as should be made by the trustees ; and the lessee covenanted with the trustees to permit the owners of stage-coaches, waggons, &c., to pass in the following manner, viz. horses drawing any such carriage as therein-before mentioned to be respectively allowed to pass along the road on payment of full toll going and quarter-toll returning at any time during the same day. Horses passed through a gate, drawing a stage-coach, and full toll was paid for them ; they returned the same day, drawing another stage-coach, and the lessee exacted full toll :—Held, that the lessee ought, by his covenant, to have demanded quarter-toll only. Fenton v. Swallow, 1 A. & E. 723.

A turnpike act imposed toll, first, upon every horse, &c., drawing any carriage ; second, upon every horse, &c., not drawing ; and third, upon every score of oxen, &c. : provided that no collector should take from any person more than one toll for the same carriage, horses, beasts, or cattle, passing once, and repassing once in the same day, through the same or any of the gates on the roads, such person producing a ticket denoting that such toll had been paid on that day for such horses, beasts, or cattle. Where the same horses passed and repassed once in the same day, drawing different carriages belonging to the same person :—Held, that only one toll was payable. Jackson v. Curwen, 7 D. & R. 838 ; 5 B. & C. 31 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 227.

Where, by a turnpike act, a certain toll was imposed on carriages, and not on the horses drawing them, with a provision that no person having paid such tolls and producing a ticket should be again liable on the same day ; and by a subsequent act, reciting the former one, the old tolls were repealed, and others imposed in respect of the horses drawing, and not on the carriages ; but all the provisions of the former act were to be continued as fully as if they had been re-enacted :—Held, that, toll having been paid on horses passing with a carriage, no new toll was demandable on the same horses returning the same day, although drawing a different carriage. Gray v. Shilling, 4 Moore, 371 ; 2 Br. & B. 30.

A turnpike act imposed tolls, first, on horses drawing carriages ; second, on carriages fixed to waggons ; third, on horses not drawing ; and fourth, on oxen ; provided that every person having paid the toll on producing a ticket denoting such payment should be permitted to pass and repass once, in the same day, the gates mentioned in such ticket, with the same horses, or other beasts, coach, or other carriages, without being liable to any additional toll. Where the same horses passed and repassed once in the same day, drawing different carriages belonging to the same person :—Held, that only one toll was payable. Chambers v. Williams, 7 D. & R. 842 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 229.

A turnpike act imposing a toll on every carriage and on every horse passing through the gate, and exempting any person from paying more than once in a day for passing or repassing with the same carriage or horse, exempts the traveller from paying a second time in the day for the passage of the same carriage, though drawn by different horses, being the same in number ; and another clause providing, that, in all cases of carriages travelling for hire, the traveller or passenger therein shall be considered as the person paying the toll, and that such payment shall not exempt such carriages repassing with a different traveller or passenger, does not extend to stage-coaches, the carriage itself not being there hired by the respective passengers, but only a conveyance by it ; and therefore such stage-coaches are freed from toll under the former clause by one payment in the day, although returning with different passengers and different horses, the horses being the same in number. Williams v. Sanger, 10 East, 66.

By a turnpike act a certain toll was to be taken at every turnpike on the road from W. to O. for four horses drawing any carriage. A subsequent section provided, that no person should pay toll more than once on the same day for passing or repassing with the same horses or carriages through any of the turnpikes, but that every person, after having paid toll once, and producing a ticket, should pass with the same horses and carriages toll-free during such day : —Held, that a second toll was payable for passing on the same day two toll-gates on the road with the same carriage, but drawn by different horses, for that the clause imposing the toll was clear, and the exempting clause either meant that the horses should be the same, or was too ambiguous to control the previous enactment. Hopkins v. Thorogood, 2 B. & Ad. 916 ; 1 L. J., K. B. 56.

By a local act a toll was imposed on horses drawing carriages ; for default of payment the collector was authorised to distrain any horse or carriage upon which toll was imposed by that act. No person was to pay more than once a day in respect of any carriage or any horse, and no toll was to be taken in respect of any carriage, horse, or beast conveying materials for the road :—Held, that the toll was imposed on the horse only, and not on the combination of horse and carriage ; and that the same horse passing a second time the same day, with a different carriage and passengers, was exempt from toll. Niblett v. Pottow, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 81 ; 4 M. & Scott, 595 ; 3 L. J., C. P. 251.

By a turnpike act, tolls were made payable on horses. By s. 11, it was provided, "except as hereinafter provided to the contrary," only one full toll shall be payable for horses passing and repassing once in the same day. By s. 12, all horses except horses or cattle drawing any stage-coach, waggon, or other stage-carriage, returning the same day, shall, on the production of a ticket denoting payment, pass toll-free. By s. 13, no horse which shall have paid the toll once shall be permitted to return toll-free when drawing "another or different waggon, wain, cart, or other such carriage." By s. 14, horses drawing any postchaise or other carriage travelling for hire shall pay as often as a new hiring takes place. Sect. 15 provided that no additional toll shall be payable in respect of any stage-coach which shall be freed by such ticket on account only of their conveying other passengers or of the horses or cattle drawing the same having been changed:—Held, that, in respect of the same horses passing through the toll-gate with a stage-coach, and returning the same day with a different stage-coach and passengers, only a single toll for each horse was payable, the horses and both coaches belonging to the same proprietor. Skin v. Flay, 1 New Sess. Cas. 561.

By a local act, the trustees of a road were authorised to take tolls at the toll-gates. It was enacted, that if any person should have paid the toll authorised to be taken for the passing of any horse through any of the turnpikes, the same horse should, upon a ticket denoting the payment on that day being produced, be permitted to pass and repass toll-free through the same toll-gate, and also through such other gates, if any, as a ticket for such payment should free, at any time during the same day. It also enacted, that no more than one full toll should be taken in respect of the same horse for passing on the same day through all or any of the toll-gates along the whole line of the road:—Held, that, after payment of one maximum toll, no toll was payable for passing once on the same day with the same horse through any other toll-gate on the whole line of the road. Johnson v. Cocksedge, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 286; 27 L. J., M. C. 314.

A turnpike act of 1861 comprised within the trusts eighteen several roads. It empowered the trustees to demand and take "at the several and respective toll-gates which shall be upon or on the sides of the roads such tolls as the trustees shall direct, not exceeding, for every horse drawing any cart, waggon, &c., with wheels of a less breadth than four and a half inches, 6*d.*"; and "for every horse or mule, laden or unladen, and not drawing, 1½*d.*" "For passing and repassing any number of times on the same day with the same horses, beasts, or carriages liable to toll through any of the toll-gates to be continued or erected by virtue of this act upon any road hereinafter particularly mentioned," it enacted that no "more than the number of tolls hereinafter limited with reference to such road shall be taken—that is to say, two full tolls, and no more, upon the road from A. to B.; two full tolls, and no more, upon the road from C. to D.; two full tolls, and no more, upon the road from E. to F.; one full toll, and no more, upon all the other roads comprised in this act." "And all horses, beasts, and cattle in respect whereof the tolls hereby authorised to be taken shall have been paid at any toll-gate on the roads or on the sides thereof shall, upon a ticket being produced denoting such payment, be permitted, in returning through the same toll-gate, and in going and returning through such other toll-gate (if any) as the ticket for such payment shall free, to pass toll-free at all times on the same day":—Held, that the act did not authorise the trustees to demand two full tolls from a traveller passing through only one gate on a line of road upon which two full tolls were chargeable. James v. Dickenson, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 416.

Held, also, that where a party had paid one full toll on passing a gate, he was not chargeable with two full tolls on passing on the same day through another gate on another of the roads on which two full tolls were demandable; but that he was liable to a second single toll, there being nothing on the ticket to indicate that it freed any other gate. Ib.

Held, also, that a traveller who had paid one full toll on passing through a gate on one of the roads on which one full toll was payable was not entitled to pass toll-free on the same day through a gate on another of the roads upon which one full toll was payable, the one full toll being payable upon "each" of the roads comprised in the act. Ib.

——Waggons—Wharfingers.]—Where a turnpike act imposed a toll on every horse, &c., drawing a carriage of any description, but contained an exception for every person who had paid toll on any carriage, &c., once on that day; and the act contained a further proviso that every stage-coach, diligence, van, caravan, or stage-waggon, or other stage-carriage, conveying passengers or goods for pay or reward, should pay toll every time of passing:—Held, that the waggons of a wharfinger, carrying out the goods brought by a canal to the different consignees, and collecting the goods from persons in the neighbourhood to carry to his wharf, were not stage-waggons within the meaning of the act. Reg. v. Ruscoe, 8 A. & E. 386; 3 N. & P. 428; 1 W., W. & H. 435; 7 L. J., M. C. 94; 2 Jur. 888.

—— Carriage Let to Hire.]—By 10 Geo. 4, c. 59, s. 28, the tolls hereby made payable shall be paid in each of the districts for every horse or beast drawing any stage-coach, van, caravan, waggon, or other carriage conveying passengers or goods for pay, hire, or reward for each time of passing along any of the roads in that district:—Held, that this section only applies where a carriage conveys passengers or goods, and a charge is made in respect of the passengers or goods, and not where the carriage itself is let to hire; and that, therefore, where a van was hired to fetch furniture from H. to L., and toll was paid as the van went out, a second toll was not payable as the van returned loaded. Short v. Hudson, 5 H. & N. 559; 29 L. J., M. C. 208; 2 L. T. 245; 8 W. R. 439.

—— Common Carriers.]—An act, after imposing tolls, exempted any horse, cart, &c., from toll on repassing a gate on the same day if the toll had been once paid, with the proviso, "that the tolls by the act made payable for or in respect of horses or beasts drawing any stage-coach, diligence, van, caravan, or stage-waggon or other stage-carriage, conveying passengers or goods for pay or reward, should be payable and paid every time of passing or repassing along the road." C.

travelled with a caravan, sometimes conveying goods and sometimes passengers; he was not licensed under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 90, but paid the duty on a carriage used by a common carrier:—Held, that he was liable to toll every time of passing and repassing the toll-gate. Comley v. Carpenter, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 378; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 712; 12 L. T. 453; 13 W. R. 812.

A turnpike act provided that no person should be liable to pay toll more than once in a day for passing through the same turnpike with the same horses, but that the tolls should be payable "for or in respect of all stage-coaches and other such public carriages, licensed or not licensed, for every time of passing." A common carrier was travelling from A. to B. and back three times a week, with a light tilted van on four wheels drawn by one horse, and which was chiefly and bonâ fide used in the carriage of goods, but was also occasionally used to carry passengers for hire. He did not travel more than four miles an hour, and paid a duty of 2*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 90, but had no stage-coach licence:—Held, that his van, being principally used in the conveyance of goods, was not "such" a public carriage as a stage-coach, and therefore that he was not liable to pay toll for it for every time of passing the same turnpike. Pearson v. Tazewell, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 384; 13 L. T. 158; 14 W. R. 39.

A carrier was the owner of a four-wheeled van in which he journeyed on certain days and at stated times between Bath and Chippenham, carrying goods occasionally, and passengers, and sometimes both, for payment. He paid the annual duty of 2*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* imposed by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 90:—Held, that he was not chargeable with return toll, as the proprietor of a stage-carriage, under a local act which provided that for or in respect of the horses drawing any stage-coach, stage-waggon, van, caravan, cart, or other stage-carriage for the conveyance of passengers, for payment, hire, or reward, for which toll should have been paid, and which should return on the same day, through the same turnpike-gate or bar, the tolls thereby made payable should be paid every time of passing and repassing through every such gate or bar in like manner as if no toll had been before paid thereat. Eatwell v. Richmond, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 364; 12 L. T. 52; 13 W. R. 429.

c. Evading Payment.

By Misrepresentation—Action for Tolls.]—An action for turnpike tolls lies where a party has frequently passed through the gate misrepresenting facts which led the collector to believe he was not entitled to receive toll, and consequently demanded no toll at the times he passed through. Maurice v. Marsden, 19 L. J., C. P. 152.

Forfeiture for—When done bonâ fide.]—Quære, whether 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 139, which imposes a forfeiture not exceeding 10*l.* upon any person who "shall pass through any turnpike gate" "without paying the toll appointed to be paid at such gate," is applicable to a party passing without violence through a gate and not paying the toll, though demanded, under an erroneous impression that he is exempt from toll. Per Lord Denman, C.J., and Erle, J., it is not; per Patteson and Coleridge, JJ., it is. Reg. v. Irving, 11 Q. B. 429.

Successful Arrangement to avoid Liability.]—A person going in a carriage from his own house to a town drove along a parish road; he then used a private road, without any express licence from the owner, and by that way entered the turnpike road; he then used the turnpike road for eighty-six yards, and then by parish roads reached the town, and returned the same route. He could not, by any other route, have gone to the town without becoming liable to pay turnpike tolls:—Held, that, assuming that he used this route because, by using any other, he would become liable to pay toll, this was not an evasion of payment of toll, but a successful arrangement to avoid becoming liable to payment. Veitch v. Exeter Turnpike Roads (Trustees), 8 El. & Bl. 986; 27 L. J., M. C. 116; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 584.

Leaving Carriage on Road.]—By 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 41, if any person shall leave upon a turnpike road any horse, cattle, beast, or carriage whatsoever, by reason whereof the payment of any toll or duties shall be avoided or lessened, he shall forfeit any sum not exceeding 5*l.* A gentleman was driven by his coachman from his house along a turnpike road up to but not through a turnpike gate. He then got out and walked through the gate to a railway station beyond it, and went away by a train, and his coachman drove the carriage back to his house:—Held, that he had not left his carriage upon the road within the meaning of the act, and had not therefore incurred the penalty imposed. Stanley v. Mortlock, 39 L. J., M. C. 150; L. R. 5 C. P. 497; 22 L. T. 758; 18 W. R. 1139.

Connecting Two Openings in Fence by a Road.]—The occupier of land adjoining a turnpike road made an opening through the fence which separated his land from the turnpike road, and another opening through the same fence at a few yards' distance. He also made a road over the land in his occupation, connecting the two openings in the fence, between which was a toll-gate, at which the trustees of the turnpike road were authorised to take tolls. By means of the two openings in the fence, and the road connecting them, he was able to use the turnpike road without passing through the gate:—Held, that in doing so with intent to evade the payment of toll he did not incur any liability to the penalty imposed by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 41. Harding v. Headington, 43 L. J., M. C. 59; L. R. 9 Q. B. 157; 29 L. T. 833; 22 W. R. 262.

Evidence of Evasion.]—Two one-horsed carts went through a turnpike-gate and returned. The horses were then unyoked and put to another vehicle of the same owner, from which the horses that had drawn it some distance on the turnpike road were removed before reaching the gate. The driver on passing the gate with the second vehicle paid only a smaller toll, contending that he was not liable to pay in respect of the two horses so yoked to the second vehicle, as they had paid toll and were allowed to pass through the gate four times per day on the payment of one toll, under a local turnpike act:—Held, that there was evidence on which a justice might find that this was done to evade the payment of toll, and on which he might convict under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 41. Hartley v. Bowlzer, 11 L. T. 767.

—— Admissibility of.] — A person having been convicted of forcibly passing a turnpike-gate without paying toll:—Held, that the sessions properly rejected evidence that the gate had been unlawfully erected, the admissibility of such evidence being a question expressly within the discretion of the justices at sessions. Rex v. Cambridge JJ., 1 D. & R. 325.

Conviction for — Warrant of Distress.] — A local act gave power "to take toll at each and every of the several turnpikes or toll-gates (before mentioned), or turnpike, or toll-gate, or toll-house which shall be erected in, upon, across, or on the sides of the roads, or any of them, by virtue of the act." A warrant of distress issuing upon a conviction under this statute and 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 41, stated, that "J. B., at the parish of C., in the Isle of Wight, &c., with a carriage, did unlawfully, &c., pass through a toll-gate then and there situate, by means whereof a payment of a toll, to wit, &c., then and there legally due and payable by J. B. in respect of carriage, was avoided, contrary to the statute in such case made and provided":—Held, that the warrant sufficiently described the offence. Barnes v. White, 1 New Sess. Cas. 504; 1 C. B. 192; 9 Jur. 182; 14 L. J., M. C. 65.

The warrant went on to state, "that by reason thereof J. B. should forfeit 2*l.* 2*s.*" The warrant then went on to order a distress to be made, and directed that one-half of the fine should be paid to the informer, and the other moiety to the treasurer of the commissioners for amending the roads and highways: — Held, first, that a demand of the fine was not necessary to be made upon J. B. to authorise the issuing of the warrant. Ib.

Held, secondly, that the appropriation of the second moiety of the fine was rightly made. Ib.

Appeal against Convictions — Time for.] — Under 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 87, notice of appeal is to be served within six days after the cause of complaint. A conviction having taken place on Monday, the 2nd May, a notice of appeal served on the following Monday, the 9th May, held too late. Reg. v. Middlesex JJ., 2 D. (N.S.) 719; 12 L. J., M. C. 59; 7 Jur. 396.

d. Composition for Tolls.

Legality of Agreement.]—A lessee of turnpike tolls compounded with a person using the road for tolls for three years:—Held, that such an agreement was not prohibited by 3 Geo 4, c. 126, s. 55. Stott v. Clegg, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 619; 32 L. J., C. P. 102; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 945; 7 L. T. 714; 11 W. R. 366.

e. Toll Collectors.

Action against — Notice of.]—A notice of action under an act against a toll-gate keeper "for demanding and taking of the plaintiff toll for and in respect of certain matters and things particularly mentioned and exempted from the payment of toll, in and by a certain act of parliament entitled," &c., is uncertain and bad. Freeman v. Line, 2 Chit. 673.

If a turnpike-keeper levy an extra toll, and upon adjudication by two magistrates (under the Bath act) it is determined that the toll was not due, the money may be recovered back in an action for money had and received, and notice of action need not be given; for where a power is given to justices to determine, it is final, unless an appeal is expressly given. Parsons v. Blandy, Wightw. 22.

—— Venue.]—A turnpike act enacted, that no action should be commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of the act until twenty-one days' notice should be given to the clerks of the trustees, or after sufficient satisfaction or tender thereof made to the party aggrieved, or after six calendar months next after the fact committed; and that every such action should be brought in the county or place where the matter should arise, and not elsewhere; and the defendant should and might at his election plead specially, on the general issue, not guilty, and give evidence that the same was done in pursuance and by the authority of that act. In an action against a toll collector to recover the amount of tolls improperly collected by him:—Held, that the venue should have been laid in the county where the tolls were collected, and that he was entitled to twenty-one days' notice of action. Waterhouse v. Keen, 6 D. & R. 257; 4 B. & C. 200.

Taking Tolls Unlawfully — Indictment — Evidence of Exemption.]—Before 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 50, which abolishes the proceedings by indictment, the question of exemption from toll could not be tried on an indictment against the turnpike-keeper for extortion in taking the toll, unless the ground of exemption was specified to him at the time when the toll was taken. Rex v. Hamlyn, 4 Camp. 379.

—— Conviction, Sufficiency of.]—A conviction stated, that "a collector did demand and take from J. L., at a gate on a turnpike road, a toll, to wit, the toll or sum of 4*d.*, as and for a toll payable by J. L. at such gate, for a horse drawing a cart upon two wheels only, and which cart was drawn by such one horse only, and driven by him in, along, and over the turnpike road, and for which horse drawing such cart a certain toll, to wit, the sum of 6*d.*, was payable by J. L., the toll or sum of 4*d.*, so demanded and taken by the collector, being a less toll than he was authorised to take for the cause aforesaid by virtue of the powers of any act, or of the orders and resolutions of the trustees or commissioners of the turnpike road, made in pursuance thereof, contrary to the form of the statute":—Held, a sufficient conviction, though no provisions of any particular turnpike act, or orders or resolutions of trustees or commissioners, were set forth or referred to. Stamp v. Sweetland, 2 New Sess. Cas. 90; 8 Q. B. 13; 14 L. J., M. C. 184; 9 Jur. 939.

—— Summons for—Jurisdiction of Justices.]—The Highway Archway Turnpike Act (50 Geo. 3, c. 88) did not create a highway within the operation of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126. Where, therefore, a toll was demanded from a horseman passing along the highway, which he contended he was not liable to pay, and thereupon he paid the toll, and summoned the toll collector under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 53, for demanding and taking a toll which he was not authorised to take, and the justices dismissed the summons upon the ground that they had no jurisdiction:—Held, that they were right in so doing. Potter, Ex parte, 16 L. T. 350.

Appeal.]—A party convicted under 4 Geo. 4, c. 96, s. 87, of having taken too large a toll, and adjudged to pay a penalty of 41*s.*, may appeal to the quarter sessions. Rex v. Hants JJ., 1 B. & Ad. 654.

—— Costs Payable by Informer.]—On appeal by a party convicted under this section, the informer is the party appealed against, within the meaning of the statute; and the justices having ordered him to pay 10*l.* for costs, the court granted a mandamus to them to issue a warrant for levying the same on the goods of the informer. Ib.

Right of Action—Illegally Appointed.]—A collector or a renter of turnpike tolls, though illegally appointed without the forms prescribed by the act of parliament, may still recover, upon a count for an account stated, the amount of the tolls for which he has credited the defendant passing through the gate; no objection being made to the plaintiff's title by the trustees or creditors of the turnpike. And the plaintiff having sent to the defendant an account of the tolls due, who not long after sent 5*l.* inclosed in a letter to the plaintiff, in which he stated that she should have the remainder next week, is evidence of such an account stated, and a recognition of the intestate's title to be accounted with for the tolls. Peacock v. Harris, 10 East, 104; 10 R. R. 231.

Prosecution by—For Burglary.]—If a person employed by the trustees of turnpike tolls to collect them, lives in the toll-house rent free, the property in the house in an indictment for burglary may be laid in the person so employed. Rex v. Camfield, 1 M. C. C. 42.

f. Letting Tolls.

Mode of—To Highest Bidder.]—By 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 55, the trustees are empowered to let the tolls by auction; but to prevent undue preference, a minute-glass is to be turned thrice after each bidding; and it declares, that, if no other person bids, the last bidder is to be the farmer or renter. Trustees put up tolls subject to other conditions, one of which was, that unless there should be three biddings there should be no letting, unless the trustees thought proper to take less than three biddings; and that the trustees should have a reserved bidding. There was one bidding only, which was made by the plaintiff; whereupon the trustees declared that if there was no advance, they should be obliged to make a reserved bidding. The minute-glass was turned thrice, and there was no further bidding. The plaintiff insisted that, under the express terms of the act, he was the purchaser, and he filed a bill for a specific performance:—Held, that he was not entitled to relief, and the bill was dismissed, but without costs. Levy v. Pendergrass, 2 Beav. 415.

—— Notice of Amount Realised.]—Trustees of a turnpike road were authorised to let the tolls, upon giving notice of their intention to do so, and the notice was to state the amount which the tolls produced during the preceding year, clear of the expenses of collecting:—Held, that this direction was sufficiently complied with, where the notice merely stated the amount received by the trustees during the preceding year, although during part of that time the tolls were let for a greater sum than they had actually produced, and no expenses were allowed for collecting during that part of the year. Newman v. Ring, 15 L. J., Ch. 365.

Agreements for—By whom made—Validity.]—An agreement for the letting of tolls, signed by the clerk of the trustees, and by the lessee or farmer of the tolls, is valid under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 57, and therefore can be enforced by the trustees notwithstanding it has not been signed by the sureties; their execution of the agreement being a formality for the benefit of the trustees, which they may waive without prejudice to their rights against the lessee or farmer of the tolls. Markham v. Stanford, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 376; 8 L. T. 277.

A. agreed in writing to pay the rent of tolls which he had hired "to the treasurer of the commissioners":—Held, that no action for rent could be maintained in the name of the treasurer. Pigott v. Thompson, 3 Bos. & P. 147.

By 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, s. 57, all contracts signed by the trustees for letting of tolls, or by their clerk or treasurer, shall be valid, although not by deed or under seal, and, by s. 74, the trustees may sue and be sued in the name of their clerk or clerks for the time being. The trustees of a turnpike road having appointed two persons to act as their clerks:—Held, that a contract for letting tolls signed by one was not sufficient, as both filled the office jointly. Bell v. Nixon, 2 M. & Scott, 534; 9 Bing. 393; 2 L. J., M. C. 44.

In an action by the clerk of the trustees of a turnpike road against a surety for a lessee of the tolls, the declaration stated, that, at a public meeting of the trustees for letting the tolls, the lessee was the best bidder, and that the trustees declared that he should become tenant of the tolls on the terms and conditions mentioned in an agreement; and that, by an agreement made by and between the trustees and the lessee and his sureties, which agreement was in writing, and was duly signed by D., treasurer to the trustees, and by the lessee and his sureties, the lessee and his sureties severally and jointly agreed with D., that they or one of them should and would pay to D., his successors and executors, or to whom any five of the trustees should direct, the instalments of money therein mentioned; and that, on failure of payment, the trustees might enter into the toll-houses and take the tolls. The declaration stated that the lessee entered into the receipt of the tolls, and paid certain instalments; but that the residue was not paid to D. and the trustees:—Held, that the agreement, as stated, was an agreement by the lessee with D. in his individual capacity, on which the trustees could not sue. Hellings v. Pratt, 6 Jur. 914.

By an agreement, reciting that at a meeting of the trustees for letting by auction the tolls of a turnpike road, N. was the highest bidder, the clerk, on behalf of the trustees, agreed to let, and N. agreed to take, the tolls. The agreement was signed by the clerk to the trustees:—Held, first, that the agreement, though made by the clerk, and not by the trustees, was a sufficient compliance with 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, ss. 55, 57. Shepherd v. Hodsman, 18 Q. B. 316; 21 L. J., Q. B. 263; 16 Jur. 948.

Held, secondly, that s. 57 of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, was not affected by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, by which a lease, required by law to be in writing, of any tenements or hereditaments, shall be void, unless made by deed. Ib.

—— Contract with Sureties—Joint or Several.]—By a memorandum of an agreement between the trustees of a turnpike road and N., the trustees agreed to let and he to take the tolls for a year at a certain rent; and N., as renter of the tolls, and D. as his surety, severally promised the trustees that N. should pay the rent at the appointed times, and perform the conditions annexed to the agreement:—Held, that the contract was several and not joint, and that the trustees could not sue the parties jointly for arrears of the rent. Lee v. Nixon, 1 A. & E. 201; 3 N. & M. 441; 3 L. J., K. B. 160.

—— Actions upon—Pleadings.]—In an action for rent payable under an agreement with the trustees of turnpike roads, demising tolls and toll-houses, the declaration need not shew that the forms required by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 55, were observed in the letting. Willington v. Browne, 8 Q. B. 169; 15 L. J., Q. B. 23; 9 Jur. 271.

A declaration against the sureties of a farmer of tolls under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, need not set forth a compliance with all the requisites contained in s. 55 as to the letting of such tolls. It is sufficient to state that they were duly let under the act. Oldroyd v. Crampton, 5 Scott, 256; 4 Bing. (N.C.) 24; 3 Hodges, 261; 7 L. J., C. P. 57.

In an action by a trustee of a turnpike road against a lessee of tolls for rent, he pleaded, that, after the demise to him, and before any rent became due, the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 33, passed, which took away certain of the tolls, and therefore the lease was void:—Held, bad, on general demurrer. Harris v. Morrice, 10 M. & W. 260; 12 L. J., Ex. 42.

Plea, to an action on a covenant for rent due for turnpike tolls, that, before it became due, the trustees entered into and upon a part of the tolls, and ejected, expelled, put out and removed the defendant from the possession thereof, and kept and continued him so ejected. Replication, that the trustees did not enter into or upon the said part of the tolls, or eject the defendant from the possession thereof, as alleged:—Held, that this replication was good on special demurrer, although it put in issue not only the expulsion but also the entry, the latter being immaterial and impossible; and that the defendant having mixed up the entry and expulsion as constituting the eviction, the plaintiff had a right to follow him, and to accept the issue as tendered. Palmer v. Gooden or Goden, 8 M. & W. 890; 1 D. (N.S.) 673; 11 L. J., Ex. 424.

Right of Trustees to vary Tolls let—Notice to Mortgagees.]—The trustees of a turnpike road acting under a general and special act, lease the tolls of a particular district, upon which tolls there is a mortgage, it being stated when the tolls are let that a certain gate would be moved and the tolls taken in future under the then new (special) act. Lists are affixed to the toll gates, and the gate in question is moved. Up to the time of the gate being so moved, the lessee takes the tolls under the general acts, and since that time according to the scale put up by the trustees, and likewise takes a full toll at two gates, including that which had been moved, where before the gate was moved full toll was not taken, and only half toll could be taken at one gate under the affixed scale. The trustees then give notice of a meeting to consider the propriety of reducing so much of the tolls as were in excess of those previously taken at the gates in question; the lessee attends the meeting, and objects to such proposition; the meeting is adjourned, and the lessee files a bill, and moves for an injunction to restrain the trustees from making any order reducing or altering the tolls, on the ground that the trustees are bound by the lease not to prejudice the plaintiff's rights, and that the mortgagees must have notice under the acts of parliament regulating turnpike roads:—Held, first, that trustees of a turnpike road, being public officers, are not debarred from varying the tolls, because they lease them. Next, that what was intended to be done was only to restore the previously existing state of the tolls, and was, although a detriment to the plaintiff, damnum sine injuriâ. It could not be assumed that the trustees were neglecting their duty, and therefore not giving notice to the mortgagees rather showed that no reduction was intended. Motion refused with costs. North v. Thompson, 5 W. R. 176.

g. Mortgage of Tolls.

By Trustees—Validity of.]—A mortgage executed by A., B., C., D. and E., as trustees of a turnpike road, is not invalidated by shewing that A., who had acted as a trustee for many years, had not been appointed under seal, as required by the local act. Doe d. Baggaley v. Hares, 1 N. & M. 237; 4 B. & Ad. 435; 2 L. J., K. B. 88.

—— Statutory Authority to make—Construction.]—Trustees of a turnpike road being desirous of obtaining an act authorising the making a new road connected with the former, the plaintiff agreed to advance 2,000*l.* for the purpose of making the new road, upon having the payment secured by a mortgage of the tolls of both roads. The trustees obtained an act which authorised the making of the new road, repealed the act under which the old was made, and placed both roads under one system of management, treating them for most purposes as one road. By this act it was provided, that the tolls of the old road should be applied, first, in paying the expenses of obtaining the act; secondly, in paying the interest on mortgages of the tolls receivable under the old act; thirdly, in repairing the old road; and, fourthly, in paying the principal of the old mortgages. And that the tolls of the new road should be applied, first, in paying the expenses of obtaining the act; secondly, in making and repairing the new road; thirdly, in paying the interest of money borrowed on the tolls of the new road; and, fourthly, in paying the principal of moneys borrowed under the repealed act, or borrowed on the tolls of the new road. A party advanced 2,000*l.*, and a mortgage was made to him of the tolls, toll-houses, &c., in such a form that it was doubtful whether it extended to the tolls of the new road:—Held, in the context of the act, that it did not take away the power of mortgaging given by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 81; that the trustees, therefore, had power to mortgage the tolls of the old road as well as the new road, for moneys borrowed for the purposes of the new road, and that the party, having advanced his money on the faith of having a security on both roads, was entitled in equity, if not at law, to a security on the tolls of the old road as well as of the new. Crewe (Lord) v. Edleston, 1 De G. & J. 93; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1061.

—— Of Toll-houses.]—The trustees of a public turnpike act, which empowers them to erect toll-houses, and mortgage the tolls, and which declares that there shall be no priority among the creditors, have no power to mortgage the toll-houses or gates. Fairtitle d. Mytton v. Gilbert, 2 Term Rep. 169; 1 R. R. 455.

If in fact they have made such a mortgage, and an ejectment is brought against them by the mortgagee, they are not estopped by their deed from insisting that the act gives them no such power. Ib.

—— Money "Borrowed and taken up at Interest."]—The trustees of a turnpike being indebted to their clerk in 81*l.*, for business done as a solicitor, gave him a mortgage for 80*l.*, which recited the consideration to be money advanced by him to them:—Held, that the mortgage was valid under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 81, the transaction being equivalent to money "borrowed and taken up at interest" by the trustees. Doe d. Jones v. Jones, 5 Ex. 16; 19 L. J., Ex. 284.

Secured Creditor—Priority.]—Trustees under a turnpike act having demised to one of several mortgagees such proportion of the tolls arising from the road and of the toll-houses and toll-gates for collecting the same, as the sum advanced by him bore to the whole sum raised on the credit of the tolls, the mortgagee brought ejectment for the toll-houses and toll-gates, in order to repay himself the interest due to him:—Held, that he might well maintain his action, notwithstanding a clause in the act that all the mortgagees should be creditors upon the tolls in equal degree. Doe d. Banks v. Booth, 2 Bos. & P. 219; 5 R. R. 575.

"Priority of Charge."]—By a turnpike act the tolls were subject to the payment of moneys borrowed and to be borrowed thereupon. The trustees granted mortgages of such tolls, in the form given by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 81, conveying to each creditor such proportion of the tolls, and the toll-gates and toll-houses, as the money advanced by him bore, or should bear, to the whole sum due or to become due on that security. By a subsequent act for making a new branch road, the former act was continued, and tolls were granted in respect of the new branch, to be applied like the former, and to be subject to the debts incurred on the credit of the former tolls; and it was enacted that all moneys due on such credit should be entitled to "a preference and priority of charge and payment" before any moneys advanced under this act for making the new branch:—Held, that the words "priority of charge" did not prevent this mortgagee from acquiring a legal estate in the subjects mortgaged, and that he might recover the toll-houses and gates in ejectment, only remaining accountable to the other mortgagees for such portion of the tolls as they were entitled to in respect of their advances. Doe d. Thompson v. Lediard, 4 B. & Ad. 137; 1 N. & M. 683; 2 L. J., K. B. 12.

Rights of Mortgagees.]—The 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 49, enables a mortgagee whose mortgage is under s. 81 to recover on his own demise only, the toll-gates and toll-houses in ejectment, although there are prior unsatisfied mortgages at the same time upon the tolls, toll-gates, and toll-houses. The first mortgagee under this statute is in a different situation from an ordinary mortgagee, as he does not take the whole legal estate; and, therefore, the objection that at law a subsequent mortgagee has no estate cannot prevail. Doe d. Watton v. Penfold, 3 Q. B. 757; 3 G. & D. 235; 12 L. J., Q. B. 70; 6 Jur. 948. See Doe d. Levi v. Horn, 3 Q. B. 757; 3 G. & D. 239; 12 L. J., Q. B. 72; 7 Jur. 38.

Ejectment by a mortgagee to recover possession of the toll-gates. After the commencement of the ejectment, another ejectment on the demise (laid earlier than in the first action) of another mortgagee was commenced. Judgment went by default, in the second ejectment; and before trial the sheriff gave the plaintiff in the second ejectment possession under a habere facias possessionem:—Held, that the plaintiff who had commenced his ejectment first was entitled to the verdict. Doe d. Butt v. Rous, 1 El. & Bl. 419; 22 L. J., Q. B. 111; 17 Jur. 502.

—— Claims on Toll Fund.] — See infra, APPLICATION OF FUNDS.

Assignment of Validity.]—An assignment of a mortgage of tolls according to the form prescribed by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 81, has no validity unless produced and notified to the proper clerk or treasurer, and by him entered in the book kept for that purpose within two months from its date. Doe d. Jones v. Jones, 5 Ex. 16; 19 L. J., Ex. 284.

The fact of the clerk having prepared or attested the execution of the transfer is evidence from which a jury may infer a notification to him. Ib.

Where the trustees held meetings, and had separate clerks at several places within their district:—Held, that the clerk of the place in which the mortgage was made and entered was the proper clerk to receive the notification, although the mortgage included the tolls of the whole district and the clerk was himself the mortgagee. Ib.

A. made a voluntary assignment of turnpike bonds to B., in trust for himself for life, and after his death for his nephew. He delivered the bonds to B. but did not observe the formalities required by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 81, to make the assignment effectual:—Held, on his death, that no interest in the bonds passed by the assignment, and that B. ought to deliver them to his executors. Searle v. Law, 15 Sim. 95.

—— Secondary Evidence of—When Allowed.]—Where an assignment of turnpike tolls had been executed by way of mortgage to A.:—Held, in an action by his personal representative after his death against the trustees for arrears of interest, that a search for the security in the office of A.'s solicitor, where his papers had been deposited, except some deposited in a suit against A.'s representative in the office of one of the masters in chancery and also in the latter office, without finding the security among any of such papers, was sufficient evidence of its loss to let in secondary evidence, and that entries in a book of the trustees, indorsed "Mortgage Book," containing an abstract of the names of the creditors, the amounts of their securities and the interest due upon them, was good secondary evidence of such security. Pardoe v. Price, 13 M. & W. 267; 14 L. J., Ex. 212.

Nature of Security — Mortmain Act.] — A mortgage of turnpike tolls is an interest in land within the Mortmain Act (9 Geo. 2, c. 36). Ashton v. Langdale (Lord), 4 De G. & S. 402; 20 L. J., Ch. 234; 15 Jur. 868.

—— Statute of Limitations.]—Turnpike tolls are within the Statute of Limitations (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), and consequently more than six years' arrears of interest are recoverable on a mortgage of them. Mellish v. Brooks, 3 Beav. 22.

—— Bonum notabile.]—By 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 81, the trustees of a turnpike may borrow money upon mortgage. The form of mortgage, given in the act, assigns the tolls, toll-gates and toll-houses to the mortgagee, to hold for the residue of the term for which the tolls are granted, unless the mortgage money with interest be sooner repaid:—Held, first, that such a mortgage is bonum notabile where the road and toll-houses are, and not where the deed is at the time of the mortgagee's death. Reg. v. Balby and Worksop (Trustees), 1 B. C. C. 134; 22 L. J., Q. B. 164; 17 Jur. 734; 1 W. R. 150.

Held, secondly, that the deed conferred no legal right on the mortgagee to the payment of the principal or interest; and consequently that a mandamus to pay the money did not lie against the trustees. Ib.

Personal Liability of Trustees.]—The chairman of the trustees of a turnpike road applied to the treasurer of the road to advance to the trust 2,000*l.* as a temporary loan; the treasurer placed the sum required to the credit of the trustees, but he received no such security as is provided by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 81:—Held, that the chairman was not exempted from personal liability by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 24, s. 3, the money not having been borrowed on the credit of the tolls in the manner prescribed by the statutes. Parrott v. Eyre, 3 M. & Scott, 857; 10 Bing. 283; 3 L. J., C. P. 3.

5. Application of Funds.

Arrears of Interest—Order on Parish—Priority of Repairs.]—By a local act the moneys received under the act were to be applied in repairing the roads, and then in paying the interest of the moneys advanced on the credit of the act. After 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, the trustees applied a sum towards payment of former arrears of interest, and the trust funds became thereby insufficient for the repair of the roads:—Held, first, that 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, did not give the trustees a right to apply their funds otherwise than as directed by the local act, and therefore the payment of arrears of interest by the trustees was improper. Reg. v. South Shields Turnpike Roads (Trustees), 3 El. & Bl. 599; 2 C. L. R. 1506; 23 L. J., M. C. 134; 18 Jur. 1115.

Held, secondly, that the justices had power to make the order on the parish notwithstanding the improper application of the funds; but the court concurred with the quarter sessions that it was not necessary nor expedient to cast on the present occupiers in the parish the burden of payment of former arrears of interest, and therefore affirmed their order. Ib.

The trustees of a turnpike road have no power to apply their funds in payment of arrears of interest upon moneys secured upon the tolls in priority to the necessary repair of the roads. Ib.

Trustees of a turnpike road who, by their local act, are to apply the tolls in keeping down the interest of the principal sum borrowed on the credit of the act, and then in keeping the road in repair, are not justified in paying off old arrears of interest when the road is out of repair, before defraying the expense of the repairs, but only the interest periodically falling due. Reg. v. Hutchinson, 4 El. & Bl. 200; 3 C. L. R. 104; 24 L. J., M. C. 25; 18 Jur. 1116; 3 W. R. 70.

By a turnpike act the trustees were to apply all moneys received by them by virtue of the act upon the roads included in the act; first, in paying the expenses of and incident to the obtaining of the act; secondly, in paying and discharging any interest which might from time to time be owing in respect of money which might have been borrowed on credit of the tolls authorised to be taken by former acts thereby repealed; thirdly, in keeping the roads in repair; fourthly, in paying and discharging any interest on money which might be borrowed on the credit of the tolls; fifthly, in reducing and discharging the principal moneys borrowed on the credit of the tolls authorised to be taken by former acts; and, lastly, in reducing and discharging the principal moneys which should thereafter be borrowed:—Held, that a mortgagee of the tolls authorised to be taken by the former acts had no right of action against the trustees whatever for the arrears of interest due to him, whether the expenses of obtaining the act had been paid or not, or whether the trustees had or had not in their hands sufficient money for the payment of such arrears of interest. Pardoe v. Price, 16 M. & W. 451; 16 L. J., Ex. 192.

—— When Priority Allowed — Special Provisions.]—By a turnpike act the tolls were to be applied, in the first place, in payment of the costs of the act; in the next place, in paying and discharging all interest now due and owing, and which shall hereafter become due, upon any mortgage or securities of the tolls, and in defraying the expenses of erecting toll-houses, &c., and of widening, repairing, &c., the roads; and, lastly, in reducing, paying off and discharging the several sums of money due on any mortgage or securities, and also other debts now due or hereafter to become due:—Held, that the trustees were at liberty to apply the tolls in payment of arrears of interest in priority to the repairs of the road, and that the funds not being sufficient for both, no order could be made upon them by justices to contribute towards the repairs, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 94. Burton Turnpike Trustees v. Wincanton Highway Board, 39 L. J., M. C. 155; L. R. 5 Q. B. 437; 22 L. T. 605; 18 W. R. 1027.

A turnpike act (4 Vict. c. xxxv.), after reciting that the principal sum borrowed on the credit of the tolls under former acts still remained unpaid, together with arrears of interest thereon, and that such sums could not be paid, nor the interest thereon discharged, nor the road kept in repair, without further powers, enacted that all moneys received by the trustees should be applied in the first place in paying and discharging any interest which might from time to time be owing in respect of any money borrowed on the credit of the tolls; secondly, in maintaining and keeping the roads in repair; and thirdly, in reducing and paying off the principal sums borrowed. On an application under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, for an order for contribution from the highway rates:—Held, that the act did not authorise the payment of arrears of interest before repairing the road. Market Harborough and Bramton Turnpike Trustees v. Kettering Highway Board, 42 L. J., M. C. 137; L. R. 8 Q. B. 308; 28 L. T. 446; 21 W. R. 737.

Money borrowed—Sinking Fund.]—Money borrowed by the commissioners of a turnpike road, on the security of the tolls, after 12 & 13 Vict. c. 87, to pay off a debt contracted before that act, is not money borrowed after the passing of the act, within the meaning of the act; and therefore the sinking fund, directed by that act to be set aside out of the tolls to pay off such money, comes within 13 & 14 Vict. c. 79, and will not have priority over all other payments out of the tolls. Chatham Local Board v. Rochester Pavement and Road Commissioners, 35 L. J., M. C. 81; L. R. 1 Q. B. 24; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 47; 13 L. T. 273; 14 W. R. 51.

Insufficiency of Fund — Apportionment.]—When the roads of a turnpike trust pass through several parishes, and the funds of the trusts applicable to the repairs of the roads are insufficient, the funds ought to be apportioned to the roads in each parish according to the amount of repairs in each parish, and not according to the mileage in each; and the deficiency thus left in each parish may be supplied by contribution out of the highway rates, under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, s. 1. Brighton Turnpike Roads Trustees v. Preston Surveyors, 39 L. J., M. C. 33; L. R. 5 Q. B. 146; 22 L. T. 92; 18 W. R. 574.

6. Application of Highway Rates to Repairs.

Under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59.]—The 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, which provided for the application of highway rates to the repairs of turnpike roads when the revenues of the turnpike trusts were insufficient, applies to turnpike roads not in existence at the time when it was passed. Sunk Island Turnpike Road Trustees v. Patrington, 1 B. & S. 747; 31 L. J., M. C. 18.

—— Turnpike Trust, what is.]—A turnpike trust is not the less a turnpike trust within 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, because the funds of it are derived from other sources than from tolls taken on the road. Ib.

A turnpike trust may be within the provisions of 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, although the road was made and the tolls are taken under a public general statute. Ib.

—— Jurisdiction of Justices.]—Justices can make an order for a portion of the highway rate to be applied to a turnpike road authorised to be made, where part only has been completed and opened to the public. Roberts v. Roberts, 3 B. & S. 183; 7 L. T. 320; 11 W. R. 35.

By a local act, subsequent to 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, the trustees of a turnpike trust were directed to apply the trust funds (after discharging the expenses of the obtaining the act), first, in the management of the roads, salaries of officers, &c., but not exceeding in any year 300*l.*; secondly, in the maintenance and reparation of the roads, but so that the amount expended for these purposes should not exceed yearly 1,600*l.*; and, lastly, in paying off a debt due from the trust. The revenue of the trust was in excess of the expenditure, so that there was a small sum applicable to the reduction of the debt; but desirous to apply a larger sum to this purpose, the trustees obtained an order of justices under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, s. 1, on the grounds that the funds of the trusts, although sufficient for the repair of the roads, if applied as directed by the local act, would be insufficient if the sum proposed to be applied to the liquidation of the debt were paid:—Held, that the justices had no jurisdiction to make the order. Weardale District Highway Board v. Alston Turnpike Trust Trustees, 35 L. J., M. C. 173; L. R. 1 Q. B. 396; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 563; 14 L. T. 546; 14 W. R. 988.

Contribution Order—When Trustees entitled to.]—A private act (5 Geo. 4, c. xciv.), after authorising trustees to establish a ferry across the river Arun at Littlehampton, in Sussex, and make roads in communication therewith, provided that the roads when made, as well as the ferry, should be maintained and repaired out of the tolls thereby authorised to be taken. The act specified no limit of time for the expiration of the trust, but it was provided that if the execution of the authorised works should not be completed within the space of ten years, all the powers and authorities given should cease and determine, save only as to so much of the work as should have been completed within that time. The ferry was established, and all the roads made with one exception; but the funds derived from the tolls being insufficient to keep one of the roads so made in repair, an order was made by justices in special sessions, under the provisions of 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, s. 1, for contribution out of the highway rates towards the repair of such road:—Held, that the road in question was a turnpike road within 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, and that as the funds of the trust were inadequate to keep it in repair the justices had a discretion to appropriate a portion of the highway rate towards its maintenance. Reg. v. French, 48 L. J., M. C. 175; 4 Q. B. D. 507; 41 L. T. 63—C. A. Affirming 26 W. R. 437.

Held, also, that the completion by the trustees of the whole system of roads specified in 5 Geo. 4, c. xciv., was not a condition precedent to the right to call upon the parish to contribute towards the repair of the roads that had been made. Ib.

A turnpike act (5 Vict. c. lxix., s. 1) prohibited the trustees from taking any toll on a certain part of their roads, between a town and a bridge; but enacted, by s. 2, that in case the trustees keep and continue in good repair that part of the road, then it shall be lawful for them to take on such part of the road the tolls specified. The trustees kept this part of the road in repair and took thereon the tolls specified, which were sufficient to pay for the repairs of that part of the road. But the tolls taken throughout the trust being insufficient to meet the repairs of the road within it, the trustees, under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, s. 1, applied for a contribution order upon the parish in which the above part of the road was situate:—Held, that the trustees were not entitled to an order. Market Harborough Trustees v. Market Harborough Highway Board, 42 L. J., M. C. 139; L. R. 8 Q. B. 327; 28 L. T. 660; 21 W. R. 844.

The hamlet of W., within and part of a parish, was, by a local act, constituted the town of W., and placed under the management of commissioners, and the surveyor of the highways was required to pay a proportion of the highway rates to the commissioners, W. continuing liable to contribute to the parish rates. By another local act, for maintaining a turnpike road from W. to L., and sea defences for protecting such road and the lands adjoining from the future encroachments of the sea, trustees were appointed to carry the act into effect, with power to levy and assess rates upon the owners of the land; and the powers conferred by the former local act were not to be affected, except that the commissioners were to be relieved from maintaining and protecting so much of the road as was within W. The Public Health Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63) was afterwards applied to W., and a local board was appointed which was to execute the office, and have all the powers of surveyors of highways, except where such powers might be inconsistent, and the inhabitants of any district were not to be liable to highway rate or other payment, not being toll, in respect of making or repairing roads or highways within any parish, township, or place, situate beyond the limits of such district. Portions of the turnpike road being out of repair, and the revenues accruing to the trustees under the local act being insufficient to keep it in repair, and preserve the embankments, an order was made upon the surveyor of the highways of the parish for payment of a portion of the highway rates to the trustees, to be laid out in the repair of the portion of the turnpike road within the parish, and this order being appealed against:—Held, first, that the road in question was a turnpike road within 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59. Reg. v. Worthing and Lancing Turnpike Road, 3 El. & Bl. 989; 2 C. L. R. 1678; 23 L. J., M. C. 187; 18 Jur. 907; 2 W. R. 478.

Held, secondly, that by the local act, the management of the road was transferred from the commissioners to the turnpike trustees, the latter having the ordinary right to seek relief from the parish in case of the deficiency of the funds, and the parish being liable to an indictment for non-repair of the road. Ib.

Held, also, that the local board of health was made the surveyors of the highways within the district, and empowered to make a highway rate for the purpose of contributing towards the deficiency of the turnpike funds, and that the order appealed against was therefore invalid. Ib.

A turnpike act provided for the application of the tolls to payment of the expenses of the act, salaries, interest of debt, repairs of road not exceeding 800*l.*, reduction of principal debt, and further repairs of road. The estimated revenue of the trust was 1,087*l.*, and expenditure 1,017*l.*: and after allowing for salaries, interest and 800*l.* towards repairs, the surplus, 83*l.*, was applied towards reduction of principal debt. That left a deficiency of 217*l.* to be raised by parochial contributions, and the sum of 22*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.* was the contribution claimed from a parish:—Held, that the justices might make an order for payment of such contribution from the parish. Mawby v. Hopkinson, 10 L. T. 27.

An order for the payment of a portion of the parish highway rate, to cover the repairs of a turnpike road, and including expenses which had been already, and before information, incurred, is bad. Brown v. Evans, 34 L. J., M. C. 101; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 541; 13 W. R. 680.

—— When Fund misapplied.]—Trustees of turnpike roads have no right to pay off arrears of interest of money borrowed on security of the tolls before providing for the repair of the road, contrary to their local act; and where they had done so:—Held, that an order of special sessions for payment of a contribution out of the highway rate was properly quashed by the quarter sessions. Reg. v. South Shields Turnpike Roads Trustees, 3 El. & Bl. 599; 2 C. L. R. 1506; 23 L. J., M. C. 134; 18 Jur. 1115.

Repairs of Disturnpiked Roads—Main Roads—Liability of County Authority for Half Cost.]—The Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), by s. 13, enacts that any road which has "between the 31st of December, 1870, and the date of this act ceased to be a turnpike road" . . . "shall be deemed to be a main road, and one half of the expenses incurred from and after the 29th of September, 1878, by the highway authority in the maintenance of such road, shall, as to every part thereof which is within the limits of any highway area, be paid to the highway authority of such area by the county authority of the county in which such road is situate, out of the county rate." The corporation of the town and borough of R. was the highway authority of the R. highway area. Under ss. 47—50 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), such portions of the turnpike roads entering R. as came within the area of the "town" were taken out of the turnpike trusts, and the obligation to repair the same was imposed upon the corporation. By a local act in 1872, the boundaries of the borough were enlarged and all the provisions of the acts relating to the "town" were made applicable to the enlarged area of the borough. The effect was that the further portions of the turnpike roads, thus for the first time brought within the area of the borough, were taken out of the turnpike trusts by the operation of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, and ceased to be turnpike roads:—Held, that these portions, being only parts of turnpike roads, had not ceased to be "turnpike roads," and were not to be deemed to be main roads within s. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, and that consequently the county authority was not liable to pay half the expenses of their maintenance. Lancaster JJ. v. Rochdale Corporation, 53 L. J., M. C. 5; 8 App. Cas. 494; 49 L. T. 368; 32 W. R. 65; 48 J. P. 20—H. L. (E.) And see further supra, A, 5, a. i. (cols. 83 et seq.).

Notice of Application for an Order.]—The notice of an intended information before a special sessions to obtain an order for payment of a portion of a highway rate to the trustees of a turnpike road under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, s. 1, need not state what portion of the road is out of repair, or to what purpose the money is to be applied, or that the road is within the division for which the sessions are held. Reg. v. Preston, 3 New Sess. Cas. 333; 12 Q. B. 816; 18 L. J., M. C. 4; 12 Jur. 1068.

Order for Payment of Rate.]—An order of special sessions, directing the payment of a portion of the highway rate to the surveyor, for the purpose of repair of a turnpike road, under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, s. 1, must appear on the face of it to be made at a special sessions holden in and for the division of the county in which the turnpike is situate. Reg. v. Hertfordshire JJ. or Reg. v. Morice or Morrice, 2 D. & L. 952; 1 New Sess. Cas. 585; 14 L. J., M. C. 75; 9 Jur. 731.

An order directed the payment of 9*l.* 5*s.* to the surveyor for the purpose of repairs, being a portion of the rate or assessment levied or to be levied by virtue of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50:—Held, that it was not essential to specify in the order what proportion of the rate was to be paid. Ib.

An order made in pursuance of an information need not adjudicate that the information is true, or that notice was, in fact, given; it is sufficient if it shews that an information has been exhibited, and that the justices proceeded to act upon it. Reg. v. Preston, supra.

Where the order recited an application to the justices to order a portion of the rates "to be levied by virtue of the statutes in that case made and provided, for the repair of the highways within," &c., to be paid, &c.; and the order directed a sum to be paid "out of the rate which shall next be made for the repair of the highways within," &c.:—Held, that the order must be taken to refer to the application, and was therefore warranted by the statute. Ib.

When such order is made on the surveyor of the highways of a hamlet, it is to be considered as stated by reasonable intendment that the hamlet is one maintaining its own highways. Ib.

The order need not set out the state of the revenues of the trust, the length of the roads, or the other particulars into which justices are to inquire by the statute. Ib.

Where an order recited that the surveyors appeared, in pursuance of a notice from the clerk of the turnpike trust, given pursuant to the statute, and there was an affidavit, stating that though such notice was, in fact, given, the surveyors did not appear, but purposely absented themselves, there being no reason to suppose that the order was intentionally false, and the variance being immaterial to the validity of the proceedings:—Held, no objection to the order. Ib.

An order on the parish surveyor, for the repairs of a turnpike road, can only be made under 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, s. 1, upon its appearing to the justices that the turnpike trust funds are insufficient. Reg. v. Trafford, Gorton Surveyors, In re, 5 El. & Bl. 967; 25 L. J., M. C. 70; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 399; 4 W. R. 260; 7 Cox, C. C. 76.

Order on Officer of Turnpike—Authority of Justices.]—Justices at special sessions have no authority to make an order on the treasurer or other officer of a turnpike road to repair the road, or to pay money to be applied to the repairs of it, without having first examined the sufficiency of the funds, nor without giving such officer an opportunity of shewing the condition of the funds. Reg. v. St. Albans JJ., 1 C. L. R. 536; 22 L. J., M. C. 142; 17 Jur. 531.

Where the clerk of the trustees of a turnpike road which was out of repair had been summoned by a single justice, and two justices at a special sessions for the highways, without allowing the clerk to shew cause that the turnpike funds were insufficient, made an order convicting him in a penalty, and ordering him to repair the road:—Held, that though the certiorari was taken away, the order was so entirely without jurisdiction that a certiorari might issue to bring up the order to quash it. Ib.

—— Under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 81.]—Under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 81 (which act has expired), justices might make an order that the parish surveyor shall pay a portion of the rate levied under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, to the trustees of a turnpike road for its repair, when it appeared that the income arising from the tolls was insufficient to defray both the expenses of repair and the interest on money advanced on mortgage of the tolls, although, under the local act constituting the trust, the income arising from the tolls was directed to be expended first in repairs, and afterwards in payment of interest; and although it appeared to them that the income would be sufficient for the purpose of repairs alone. Reg. v. White, 3 G. & D. 284; 4 Q. B. 101; 12 L. J., M. C. 31; 7 Jur. 106.

—— Jurisdiction of Special Sessions.]—Under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 81, s. 1, a special sessions had jurisdiction to make an order on the parish surveyor of the highway to pay a certain sum to the trustees of a turnpike road, although the funds of the turnpike trustees were not exhausted. Reg. v. Berks JJ., 8 D. P. C. 727.

Appeal against Order—Notice.]—By 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59, s. 3, a right of appeal is given against an order of justices made at special sessions for highways in pursuance of that act, the appellant first giving to the justices ten days' notice "within six days after such order, judgment, or determination shall be so made or given":—Held, that notice of appeal must be given within six days after the decision of the justices at special sessions, and not within six days after the service of the order upon the surveyors of highways. Reg. v. Derbyshire JJ., 1 New Sess. Cas. 645; 7 Q. B. 193; 14 L. J., M. C. 84; 9 Jur. 551.

——Interested Justices.]—Where, upon a trial of an appeal to quarter sessions against an order of two justices, directing a sum of money to be paid by the surveyor of highways to the commissioners of a turnpike trust, two justices were present, one of whom was a respondent in the appeal, being one of the justices making the order, and the other was a creditor of the turnpike trust, and one of them voted, the court quashed the order, upon the ground that the justices were interested. Reg. v. Hertfordshire JJ., 1 New Sess. Cas. 490; 6 Q. B. 753; 14 L. J., M. C. 73; 9 Jur. 424.

7. Offences upon.

Permitting Cattle to Wander.]—Horses grazing on the side of a turnpike road, with a man in charge of them, they being under his control, are not liable to be impounded, under 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 75, as "wandering, straying, or lying" about the road. Morris v. Jeffries, 35 L. J., M. C. 143; L. R. 1 Q. B. 261; 13 L. T. 629; 14 W. R. 310.

Drawing Timber otherwise than upon wheeled Carriages.]—A vehicle composed of a rough skeleton of woodwork, fifteen feet long, having two wheels placed behind the centre, the forepart being shod with iron, which in going down hill comes in contact with the ground, retarding its descent, is not a wheeled carriage within 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 121. Radnorshire County Roads Board v. Evans, 3 B. & S. 400; 32 L. J., M. C. 100; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 890; 7 L. T. 677.

A person using such a vehicle for the carriage of straw, cannot be convicted under that portion of the section which imposes a penalty for "hauling or drawing upon any part of a turnpike road any timber, stone or other thing, otherwise than upon a wheeled carriage"; straw not being of ejusdem generis with timber or stone. Ib.

Encroachment—Limitation of Time for Conviction.]—By 9 Geo. 4, c. 77, s. 18, no person may be convicted of an offence against 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 118 (which enacts that any person causing an encroachment within a certain distance of the centre of a turnpike road shall be subject to a penalty), after the expiration of six months from the time when such offence shall have been committed. The period of six months mentioned in the section begins to run from the time that a substantial encroachment of the highway has been caused, and not from the final completion of the encroaching building or other encroachment. Hyde v. Entwistle, 52 L. T. 760; 49 J. P. 517.

Making Tunnel under — Injunction.] — The trustees of a turnpike road which passed over a hill were empowered to lower it when necessary. They applied to restrain an adjoining freeholder from making a tunnel under the road, on the ground that it would obstruct the future improvement of the road. The court, however, held that it had no authority to interfere, and refused the application. Cunliffe v. Whalley, 13 Beav. 411.

8. Conversion into Main Roads.

Application for—District Commissioners under Local Act.]—The commissioners of a district in the fens of Norfolk appointed and incorporated under various local acts for draining and enclosing lands and providing roads, applied to the county council, as the county authority, for an order, under s. 15 of the act of 1878, declaring a certain road in their district to be a main road: —Held, that the act was so framed as to include only the three highway areas mentioned in s. 14, and the highway authority within those areas, and did not extend to include an exceptional area and an exceptional authority. Both the commissioners and their district fell within this category, and the county authority was not bound to make the order sought. Reg. v. Norfolk County Council, 60 L. J., Q. B. 379; 65 L. T. 222; 56 J. P. 7.

Liberties merged in Counties—County Authority—Recorder.]—Liberties merged into counties by the Highways Act, 1862, are revived by the Highways Act, 1878, and so far as that act applies are to be deemed separate "counties." The "county authority" for such liberties are the justices of those liberties in quarter sessions assembled. A recorder of a borough to which such liberties belong, when holding his quarter sessions, represents the justices of such counties in quarter sessions assembled, and he must be deemed to be the "county authority" under the Highways Act of 1878, and be required to exercise the jurisdiction of such "county authority." The plea that there is no machinery for exercising such authority is not sufficient to excuse the authority having such jurisdiction from acting when properly applied to for such purpose. Reg. v. Dover Recorder, 32 W. R. 876; 49 J. P. 86.

Repair of Main Roads.]—See ante, A, 5, a. i.

Conversion of Main Road into ordinary Highway—Application for Provisional Order.]—The 16th section of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, provides as follows: "If it appears to a county authority that any road within their county which, within the period between the 31st of December, 1870, and the date of the passing of this act, ceased to be a turnpike road, ought not to become a main road in pursuance of this act, such authority shall, before the 1st of February, 1879, make an application to the local government board for a provisional order declaring that such road ought not to become a main road." The section further provides that, "subject as aforesaid, where it appears to a county authority that any road within their county, which has become a main road in pursuance of this act, ought to cease to be a main road and become an ordinary highway, such authority may apply to the local government board for a provisional order declaring that such road has ceased to be a main road and become an ordinary highway":—Held, that a road which had ceased to be a turnpike road within the period specified by the first of the above-mentioned provisions, and had become a main road, there being no application for a provisional order before the 1st of February, 1879, was not excluded from the operation of the second of the above-mentioned provisions, and that the local government board had, therefore, jurisdiction to make a provisional order declaring such road an ordinary highway upon an application made subsequently to the 1st of February, 1879. Reg. v. Local Government Board, 54 L. J., M. C. 104; 15 Q. B. D. 70; 53 L. T. 194; 49 J. P. 580—C. A.

C. BRIDGES.

1. Liability to Repair.

a. Public User.

Who Liable.]—Bridges must be repaired by the county when it does not appear who else ought to repair them. Rex v. Yorkshire (W. R.), 5 Burr. 2594; 2 W. Bl. 685; Lofft, 238; 2 East, 342; 6 R. R. 439.

If no one be bound by tenure or prescription to repair a bridge, it shall be repaired by the inhabitants of the county wherein it is situate. Rex v. Oxfordshire, 5 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 127.

Built by Private Person.]—The county is bound to repair a bridge built by a private person, if it is of public utility. Rex v. Yorkshire (W. R.), supra.

But, if he has the benefit of it, he must repair. Ib.

Where an individual builds a bridge which he dedicates to the public, by whom it is used, the county is bound to repair it. Ib.

As a general rule, the county is liable to repair bridges built by private individuals before 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, if the public use such bridges. Reg. v. Ely, 4 New Sess. Cas. 222; 15 Q. B. 827; 19 L. J., M. C. 223; 14 Jur. 956.

The county may be compelled to repair a bridge built in the highway, and used by the public above forty years, though originally erected by a private individual for his own convenience. Rex v. Glamorgan, 2 East, 356, n.; 6 R. R. 450, n.

Where a person, about forty-five years back, erected a mill and a dam thereto for his own profit, per quod he deepened the water of a ford through which there was a public highway, but the passage through which was before the deepening very inconvenient at times to the public, and the miller afterwards built a bridge over it, which the public had ever since used:—Held, that the county and not the miller was chargeable with the reparation. Rex v. Kent, 2 M. & S. 513; 15 R. R. 330.

—— Bridge not built in existing Highways—Acquiescence by County.]—Upon the trial of an indictment against the inhabitants of a county for the non-repair of a bridge built by private owners, but not built in an existing highway, the true effect of the evidence as to the dedication to and the adoption of the bridge by the county is always a question for the jury. The fact that such a bridge is of public utility and is used by the public is not necessarily conclusive against the county on the question of liability, user and utility being only elements for consideration in determining that question; but there need not, in addition to evidence of public user and public utility, be proof of an overt act amounting to a formal adoption by a body capable of representing and binding the county. Reg. v. Southampton County (17 Q. B. D. 424) in part dissented from. Reg. v. Southampton County, 56 L. J., M. C. 112; 19 Q. B. D. 590; 57 L. T. 261; 16 Cox, C. C. 271; 52 J. P. 52.

The owners of land on one side of a river made a road across such land, and built a bridge connecting such road with an existing highway on the other side of the river. They then dedicated both bridge and road simultaneously to the public, who afterwards used the same:—Held, that the bridge not having been erected in an existing highway, the county was not liable for its repair, inasmuch as there was no evidence of acquiescence by the county in the building and dedication of the bridge. The effect of the 21st section of the Highway Act, 1835, is, in the case of county bridges built subsequently to that act, to throw the liability in respect of surface repairs to the roadway of the bridge and approaches upon the highway authority. Where a county of a town has been created by charter and declared to be a separate county, the county in which it was originally situated is not liable for the repair of bridges within its boundaries. Reg. v. Southampton County, 55 L. J., M. C. 158; 17 Q. B. D. 424; 55 L. T. 322; 35 W. R. 10; 16 Cox, C. C. 117; 50 J. P. 773.

In Time of Floods.]—A bridge may be a public bridge which is used by the public at all such times as are dangerous to pass through the river. Rex v. Northampton, 2 M. & S. 262; 15 R. R. 241.

A bridge used only on occasion of floods, and lying out of and alongside the road commonly used, is a public bridge, and the county is liable to repair it. Rex v. Devon, R. & M. 144.

A bar across a public bridge kept locked, except in times of flood, is conclusive evidence that the public has only a limited right to use the bridge at such times. Rex v. Buckingham (Marquis), 4 Camp. 189.

b. Description of Bridge.

Flumen vel cursus aquæ.]—The inhabitants of a county are bound by common law to repair bridges erected over such water only as answers the description of flumen vel cursus aquæ; that is, water flowing in a channel between banks more or less defined, although such channel may be occasionally dry. Rex v. Oxfordshire, 1 B. & Ad. 289; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 354.

Though there cannot be a bridge which the county is bound to repair, where there is no cursus aquæ, yet it is a question of fact in each case, whether an arch thrown over a cursus aquæ is such a bridge or not. Rex v. Whitney, 4 N. & M. 594; 3 A. & E. 69; 7 C. & P. 208; 1 H. & W. 147; 4 L. J., M. C. 86.

The fact of the arch or bridge having no parapets does not of itself prevent its being a county bridge. Ib.

It is not essential to a bridge, in the legal sense of the word, that it should be a structure over water which flows at all times. Reg. v. Derbyshire, 2 G. & D. 97; 2 Q. B. 745; 11 L. J., M. C. 51; 6 Jur. 483.

Semble, that arches ought to pass over some branch or channel of a river in order to come within the legal definition of bridge, and to render the county liable. Rex v. Oxfordshire, 5 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 127.

But arches which have been erected and serve for the purpose of draining lands on each side of a public road at times of inundation, and are not absolutely essential to the passage along the road, will not be considered as bridges, or as forming part of a bridge, unless it shall appear that they have always been repaired by the county. Ib.

And see Rex v. Gloucester, post, col. 185.

Culvert only Necessary.]—Trustees under a turnpike act having built a bridge across a stream where a culvert would have been sufficient, but a bridge was better for the public, the county cannot refuse to repair such bridge on the ground that it was not absolutely necessary. Rex v. Lancashire, 2 B. & Ad. 813; 1 L. J., M. C. 1.

Street.]—A bridge may be so situate as to be a street within the meaning of a statute. Beaver v. Manchester Corporation, 8 El. & Bl. 44; 26 L. J., Q. B. 311; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 23.

Foot-bridge.]—A foot-bridge, formed of three planks, nine or ten feet long, and a hand-rail, and which carried a public footpath across a small stream, was held not to be repairable as a county bridge; that it had been repaired by the commissioners under the local act of parliament. Reg. v. Southampton, 18 Q. B. 841; 21 L. J., M. C. 201; 17 Jur. 254.

New Bridge on Site of Old.]—See cases, post, col. 185.

c. Ratione tenuræ.

Owner or Occupier.]—At common law, the liability to repair bridges, ratione tenuræ, is thrown ultimately on the owner of the land, as between him and the occupier, though primarily, as far as the public are concerned, the occupier may be chargeable. Baker v. Greenhill, 3 Q. B.

148; 2 G. & D. 435; 11 L. J., Q. B. 161; 6 Jur. 710.

Infant.]—An infant seised of lands in the actual possession of his guardian in socage, is not indictable for the non-repair of a bridge ratione tenuræ. Rex v. Sutton, 5 N. & M. 353; 3 A. & E. 597; 1 H. & W. 428; 4 L. J., K. B. 215.

Guardian in Socage.]—The guardian in socage, if in possession of the lands charged with the repairs, is indictable. Ib.

So, any occupier of the lands charged. Ib.

Indictment.]—An indictment, charging an individual with the repair of a bridge by reason of his being owner and proprietor of a certain navigation, is not equivalent to charging him ratione tenuræ, but is erroneous; and, if judgment is given thereon, upon error, it will be reversed. Rex v. Kerrison, 1 M. & S. 435; 14 R. R. 491.

An indictment for not repairing an ancient bridge, describing it as being situate within the parish of P. and M., and averred that the inhabitants of P., and those of the township of M. aforesaid, were liable to repair such bridge, without proceeding to state what part of it was situate in the township of M., and that the inhabitants thereof were liable to repair it:—Held, bad, as no special or sufficient consideration was shewn to render the inhabitants of the township liable to repair, as they could not hold land, and consequently could not be liable ratione tenuræ. Rex v. Penegoes and Machynlleth, 3 D. & R. 388; 2 B. & C. 166; 26 R. R. 294.

Evidence.]—To an indictment against the inhabitants of a county for the non-repair of a foot-bridge, they pleaded that it was parcel of a carriage-bridge, which A. was bound to repair ratione tenuræ. Replication admitted the liability of A. to repair the carriage-bridge, but denied that the foot-bridge was parcel of the same, whereupon issue was joined. The evidence was, that the carriage-bridge mentioned in the pleadings had been built before 1119, and that certain abbey lands had been ordained for the repairs of the same, and the proprietors of those lands (of which those mentioned to be held by A. formed part) had always repaired the bridge so built. In 1736 the trustees of a turnpike road, with the consent of a certain number of the proprietors of the abbey lands, constructed a wooden foot-bridge along the outside of the parapet of the carriage-bridge, partly connected with it by brickwork and iron pins, and partly resting on the stonework of the bridge:—Held, that this (being the bridge mentioned in the indictment) was not parcel of the carriage-bridge which A. was bound by tenure to repair; and, consequently, that the county was liable to repair the foot-bridge. Rex v. Middlesex, 3 B. & Ad. 201; 1 L. J., M. C. 16.

Indictment against a county for not repairing a bridge: plea, that S. was liable ratione tenuræ. The plea is not sustained by evidence that the estate of S. was part of a larger estate, which part he purchased of the former owner, who retained the rest in his own hands, and as well before the purchase as since had repaired the bridge: but where in such case the county was found guilty, the court gave leave to stay the judgment upon payment of costs until another indictment was preferred, in order to try the liability. Rex v. Oxfordshire, 16 East, 223.

An indictment for non-repair of a bridge on a liability ratione tenuræ cannot be sustained where it appears that the tenement on which the liability is charged originated within time of legal memory. Rex v. Hayman, M. & M. 401; 31 R. R. 742.

On an indictment for the non-repair of a bridge ratione tenuræ:—Held, that a record of Edw. 3, setting out a presentment of the Bishop of Lincoln for non-repair of the bridge, and his acquittal by the jury, which was shortly afterwards followed by a grant of pontage from the crown, on the ground that it had been found by inquest that no one was liable to repair the bridge, is admissible to negative any immemorial liability ratione tenuræ. Reg. v. Sutton, 3 N. & P. 569; 8 A. & E. 516; 7 L. J., Q. B. 205.

d. By Prescription.

Corporation.]—As to the liability of a corporation by prescription to repair a bridge, see Rex v. Stratford-upon-Avon Corporation, 14 East, 348.

Hundred.]—A hundred may be charged by prescription with the reparation of a bridge, and this, although it appears that by a statute within the time of legal memory, one of the townships, parcel of the hundred, was then annexed to it. Rex v. Oswestry, 6 M. & S. 361; 18 R. R. 398. See also Reg. v. Chart and Longbridge, infra.

Parish.]—A parish may be indicted for non-repair of a bridge without stating any other ground of liability than immemorial usage. Rex v. Hendon, 4 B. & Ad. 628; 2 L. J., M. C. 55.

A public bridge, repairable by immemorial custom by the inhabitants of a hundred, is not a highway within the meaning of that term in 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 5, and is not repairable under that act by the parish in which it is situated. Reg. v. Chart and Longbridge, 39 L. J., M. C. 107; L. R. 1 C. C. 237; 22 L. T. 416; 18 W. R. 791; 11 Cox, C. C. 502.

By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 5, it is enacted, that the word "highways" shall be understood to mean all roads, bridges (not being county bridges), carriage ways, &c.:—Held, that a bridge of the above description was a county bridge, and repairable by the hundred, within the exception of county bridges. Ib.

County Bridge — When within Municipal Boundary.]—Where a toll-bridge has been built, and a turnpike road made in connection with it under a local act, on the termination of the period of the trust, though the bridge is within the boundaries of a municipal borough, it becomes such a county bridge under 33 & 34 Vict. c. 73, s. 12, as to make it repairable by the inhabitants of the county, unless there is some immemorial usage imposing a liability on the inhabitants of the borough to repair all bridges within its boundaries. A toll-bridge was made over the B. river at W. for the purpose of connecting the back streets of W. with the county districts on the other side of the river. A turnpike road was made in connection with the bridge; both the road and the bridge were constructed under one act. There were separate trusts of the bridge and the road, but the trustees of the one were trustees of the other. This bridge was within the municipal boundaries of the borough of W. On the expiration of the trust the county repaired the road, but the bridge was allowed to fall into disrepair. The county of D., in which the bridge was situated, was thereupon indicted for its non-repair, and was found guilty:—Held, upon the argument for a new trial, that the county was rightly convicted; and that as there was nothing shewn in the case to cast the liability to repair on the borough in which the bridge was situated, on the expiration of the period of the trust affecting the bridge, it became a county bridge repairable by the inhabitants of the county under 33 & 34 Vict. c. 73, s. 12. Reg. v. Dorset (Inhabitants), 45 L. T. 308.

e. When built under Special Authority.

Canal Act—Deepening a Ford.]—A canal company, authorised by an act of parliament to make a river navigable, and to make and enlarge certain navigable cuts, and build bridges and other works connected with the navigation, having for their own benefit made a navigable cut and deepened a ford which crossed the highway, and thereby rendered a bridge necessary for the passage of the public, which was accordingly built at the expense of the company in the first instance:—Held, that the company was bound to maintain it, and that the burden of repair was not to be thrown upon the inhabitants of the county. Rex v. Lindsey, 14 East, 317; 12 R. R. 529.

Act for making River Navigable.]—A company being empowered under a local act to make a river navigable, and to take tolls, and to amend or alter such bridges or highways as might hinder the passage or navigation, leaving them or others as convenient in their room, and they having forty years ago destroyed a ford across the river in the common highway by deepening its bed, and built a bridge over the same place, are bound to keep such bridge in repair, as under a continuing condition to preserve the new passage in lieu of the old one, which they destroyed for their own benefit. Rex v. Kent, 13 East, 220; 12 R. R. 330.

Where certain persons and their successors were authorised by act of parliament to make a river navigable, and to cut the soil of any persons for making any new channel, by virtue of which they cut through a highway, and rendered it impassable, and a bridge was built over the cut, over which the public passed, and which had been repaired by the proprietors of the navigation:—Held, that the proprietors, and not the county, were liable to repair. Rex v. Kerrison, 3 M. & S. 526; 16 R. R. 342.

Alteration of Bridge.]—By 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 5, the inhabitants of a county were compelled to repair no bridge thereafter erected or built by a private person or body corporate, unless under the direction or to the satisfaction of the county surveyor or some person appointed by the justices. By a local act of 1827 a road passing over a bridge was made repairable by trustees; but at no time was the bridge or its approaches actually repaired by them. The road became an ordinary highway. By another local act of the same year a canal company was empowered to make, maintain, and support bridges across their navigation, providing no existing liability to repair a bridge not erected or altered by the company should be affected. The company raised the surface of this bridge, without altering the structure, in order to give the approach to another bridge over their navigation the incline required by their act. They did this without reference to the county surveyor or justices. By 33 & 34 Vict. c. 73, s. 12, where a turnpike road shall have become an ordinary highway, all bridges which were previously repaired by the trustees of such turnpike road shall become county bridges, and shall be kept in repair accordingly:—Held, that by this alteration this bridge had not become repairable by the canal company, and that this general provision of the last act was not limited to those bridges erected by private expense, which alone were repairable by a county under 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 5; nor to bridges which had been actually repaired by trustees. Reg. v. Somerset, 38 L. T. 452.

Indictment—Division of County.]—Indictment against the inhabitants of the Isle of Ely, for non-repair of a public bridge in the Isle of Ely and county of Cambridge, averring that they were liable, but stating no specific reason. Plea, that the bridge was in a public highway, over an artificial cut made in the highway by the adventurers for draining the Bedford Level; that the bridge was rendered necessary by the cut for the purpose of the highway; that the cut was made for the benefit of the lands of the adventurers, and was maintained by the adventurers until a statute, when the property in the cut and its banks, and in the bridge, and in the lands benefited by the cut, which lands had been previously vested in the adventurers, became vested in the corporation of the conservators of the fens, and the cut was from that time maintained by the corporation for their own benefit; and they have repaired and been liable to repair the bridge:—Held, first, that the count was good, as the court must take judicial notice that the Isle of Ely was a division of a county in the nature of a riding, and, as such, primâ facie liable to repair bridges within it. Reg. v. Ely, 4 New Sess. Cas. 222; 15 Q. B. 827; 19 L. J., M. C. 223; 14 Jur. 956.

Held, secondly, that the plea was good, as it sufficiently shewed that the corporation was bound to repair the bridge rendered necessary by the cut maintained for their benefit. Ib.

Turnpike Act—County primarily Liable.]—Where turnpike trustees erected a bridge in pursuance of the power given them by the act, upon a road where there had been no bridge before:—Held, that the county was primarily liable to keep it in repair, even assuming that the trustees had funds in hand applicable to that purpose. Rex v. Oxfordshire, 6 D. & R. 231; 4 B. & C. 194; 3 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 198.

The county or riding is liable to the repair of a bridge built by trustees under a turnpike act; there being no special provision for exonerating them from the common-law liability, or transferring it to others, though the trustees were enabled to raise tolls for the support of the roads. Rex v. Yorkshire (W. R.), 2 East, 342; 6 R. R. 439.

Railways Clauses Act.]—A special act of a railway company (incorporated by the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, so far as it was not expressly varied or excepted) provided, that if after notice the company did, with reasonable expedition, repair a bridge over a turnpike road to the satisfaction of the surveyor of the trustees, the latter might repair and recover the costs; the Turnpike Act, however, was suffered to expire:—Held, that though the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, s. 65, was expressly varied by the special act, yet it revived on the cessation of the turnpike trust, and an order to repair the bridge might be made under it. L. C. & D. Ry. v. Wandsworth Board of Works, 42 L. J., M. C. 70; L. R. 8 C. P. 8.

Where a railway crosses a highway, and the road is carried over the railway by means of a bridge, in accordance with the provisions of s. 46 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, the railway company are bound to keep in repair the roadway upon the bridge, such roadway being part of the bridge which by the section the company are to maintain. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry. v. Bury Corporation, 59 L. J., Q. B. 85; 14 App. Cas. 417; 61 L. T. 417; 54 J. P. 197—H. L. (E.)

During Erection.] — The 49 Geo. 3, c. 84, appointed trustees for taking down the old and building a new bridge over a river, and empowered them to take tolls, and that it should be lawful for them, out of the moneys received, to build a new bridge, and vested the property in the old and new bridge during the continuance of the act, in the trustees; and that as soon as the purposes of the act should be executed, then and from thenceforth the tolls should cease, and the bridge should be repaired by such persons as were by law liable to repair the old bridge:—Held, that during the time the trustees were engaged in executing the powers of the act, and before they had completed them, the county was not liable to repair the bridge. Rex v. Somerset, 16 East, 305.

Proprietor taking Tolls.] — Defendant was proprietor of a bridge and received tolls; the bridge being out of repair and impassable, he established a ferry and took tolls under the acts which authorised the building of the bridge. An action was brought against him by the plaintiff for a mandamus commanding defendant to repair the bridge, and on a case stated the question was, whether the defendant was liable to reinstate the bridge under the acts, and, if so, that judgment might be entered for plaintiff for 40*s.* damages and costs, and that the mandamus might issue:—Held, that under the acts, the defendant having received toll was liable to reinstate the bridge; but the judgment of the court below in so far as it ordered a mandamus to issue should be reversed. Nicholl v. Allen, 1 B. & S. 934; 31 L. J., Q. B. 283; 6 L. T. 699; 10 W. R. 741.

Isle of Wight.]—The Isle of Wight is a division of the county of Southampton, but has no separate commission of the peace. Before 1842, all public bridges in the island, not repairable by tenure, were repaired either by the tithings, parishes or townships in which they were situate, or from rates levied on all the parishes in the island under the following circumstances. The island having been assessed to the general county rate, and appeals against such assessment having been entered, an arrangement was made, in 1774, by consent, under an order of quarter sessions, fixing certain proportions to be paid by the parishes towards the general county rate, but leaving the expense of bridges and the house of correction to be raised by a local rate, the island being adjudged and declared not to be liable to pay to the county rate or county house of correction, and the inhabitants agreeing to erect and maintain houses of correction and bridges within the island at their sole expense. After this arrangement, the practice was for the county quarter sessions, on application of the justices for the Isle of Wight division, to lay a rate, in the nature of a county rate, on every parish in the island, for the repair of the island bridges and bridewell. Till 1842, there had been no instance of the general county rate being applied to the repair of the island bridges. In 1813, a local act appointed commissioners for the repair of the highways in the island, with power to make assessments, and enacted that all bridges previously repaired by any parishes, tithings, divisions, or townships should, for the future, be repaired "in such and the same manner, and by such and the same ways and means," as other bridges usually called county bridges within the island had been accustomed to be repaired. In 1842, and since, the island was assessed generally with the county, and no separate island rate made. Application for the repair of bridges and bridewells in the island had been since that time made to the county quarter sessions:—Held, that all bridges which, at the time of the passing of the act, were repairable by the tithings, parishes or townships in which they were situate, were for the future repairable by the county generally, and that the arrangement of 1774 did not affect the legal liability of the county, and was no answer to an indictment against it for non-repair of such bridges. Reg. v. Southampton, 18 Q. B. 841; 21 L. J., M. C. 201; 17 Jur. 254.

Destruction of Bridge.]—By a local act commissioners were constituted to protect the banks of the Ouse, and by another act commissioners were constituted, under the title of the Middle Level Commissioners, with powers over a large district of land, and who under such powers had built a sluice bridge from bank to bank over the Ouse. The tide having broken in and washed away such sluice bridge and 110 feet of the embankment adjoining, a local act was passed, enacting that the Middle Level Commissioners "shall, with all convenient dispatch after the passing of this act, at their own cost, erect a new bridge, or otherwise provide and make and for ever maintain a good and sufficient continuous road or haling path over and along or near to that part of the west bank of the River Ouse, where recently stood the sluice bridge and roadway made by the commissioners." These commissioners were ready to build a sluice bridge of the dimensions of the old one, if there were any embankments to which to attach it, but declined to make one to connect itself with the embankment in its present unrestored condition:—Held, that the words of the statute limited the duty of the commissioners to the making of a bridge of the limits of the former bridge. Reg. v. Middle Level Commissioners, 10 L. T. 375.

On a covenant to build a bridge in a substantial manner, and to keep it in repair for a certain time, the party is bound to rebuild the bridge, though broken down by an extraordinary flood. Brecknock Navigation v. Pritchard, 6 Term Rep. 750; 3 R. R. 335.

f. Satisfaction of County Surveyor.

Persons within the Act.]—Trustees appointed by a local turnpike act are individuals or private persons within the meaning of 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 5, which renders it necessary to erect county bridges under the direction or to the satisfaction of the county surveyor. Rex v. Derby, 3 B. & Ad. 147; 1 L. J., M. C. 15.

Newly-built Bridges.] — The statute applies only to bridges newly built, not to a bridge merely widened or repaired since its passing. Rex v. Lancashire, 2 B. & Ad. 813; 1 L. J., M. C. 1.

A county bridge having been washed away was, after the passing of 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, rebuilt, wider than before, and, without notice to the county surveyor, by the parish, partly with the old materials, and in the same line of passage over the river:—Held, that the county was liable to repair, and that this was not a new bridge within the meaning of that act. Rex v. Devonshire, 2 N. & M. 412; 5 B. & Ad. 383; 2 L. J., M. C. 74.

A bridge in the Isle of Wight, originally repaired by the tithing in which it was situate, was, after the passing of a local act, wholly rebuilt by order of the justices for the island division. The new bridge was longer than the old, and different in form, and stood higher up the stream. The expense of the building, and of repairs, was defrayed out of the island rate imposed under an arrangement. The conditions, by 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, were not observed in building it:—Held, that the county was liable to repair the new bridge. Reg. v. Southampton, 18 Q. B. 841; 21 L. J., M. C. 201; 17 Jur. 254.

Over Stream of Water.]—A bridge had been built before 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, over a stream of water. The stream was never known to be dry, but in the winter its depth only averaged two and a half feet. It was part of a sheet of water crossing low land, and at the place where the bridge crossed it, it was confined by embankments, to prevent it from overflowing the adjoining meadows. The judge left it to the jury, whether this structure was a bridge over a stream of water; for, if so, it was not necessary that it should be for the convenience of the public under 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 5, but the county was liable to repair it. Reg. v. Gloucester, Car. & M. 506.

Alteration of Bridge.]—By 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 5, the inhabitants of a county were compelled to repair no bridge thereafter erected or built by a private person or body corporate, unless under the direction or to the satisfaction of the county surveyor or some person appointed by the justices. By a local act of 1827 a road passing over a bridge was made repairable by trustees; but at no time was the bridge or its approaches actually repaired by them. The road became an ordinary highway. By another local act of the same year a canal company was empowered to make, maintain and support bridges across their navigation, provided no existing liability to repair a bridge not erected or altered by the company should be affected. The company raised the surface of this bridge, without altering the structure, in order to give the approach to another bridge over their navigation the incline required by their act. They did this without reference to the county surveyor or justices. By 33 & 34 Vict. c. 73, s, 12, where a turnpike road shall have become an ordinary highway, all bridges which were previously repaired by the trustees of such turnpike road shall become county bridges, and shall be kept in repair accordingly:—Held, that by this alteration this bridge had not become repairable by the canal company, and that this general provision of the last act was not limited to those bridges erected by private expense, which alone were repairable by a county under 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 5; nor to bridges which had been actually repaired by trustees. Reg. v. Somerset, 38 L. T. 452.

g. When Bridge Widened.

Obligation to Repair—Evidence.]—A particular parish was bound by prescription to repair an old wooden foot-bridge used by carriages only in times of flood; about forty years before the trustees of the turnpike road built on the same site a much wider bridge of brick, which had been constantly used ever since by all carriages passing that way:—Held, that to an indictment against the county for not repairing this bridge, a plea that the parish had immemorially repaired and still ought to repair the bridge, was not supported by the above facts, and that the burden of repairing the new bridge must be borne by the county at large. Rex v. Surrey, 2 Camp. 455.

—— Liability pro Ratâ.]—Where townships have so enlarged a bridge which they were before bound to repair as a foot-bridge, they will still be liable pro ratâ. Rex v. Yorkshire (W. R.), 2 East, 353, n.; 6 R. R. 447, n.

h. Approaches to Bridges.

At Common Law.] — By the common law, declared by 22 Hen. 8, c. 5, and the subsequent bridge acts, where the inhabitants of a county are liable to the repair of a public bridge, they are liable also to the repair of the highway at the ends of such bridge to the extent of 300 feet; and if indicted for the non-repair thereof, they cannot exonerate themselves, except by pleading specially that some other is bound by prescription or tenure to repair the same. Yorkshire (W. R.) v. Rex, 2 Dow, 1; 5 Taunt. 284; 7 East, 588; 3 Smith, 437; 8 R. R. 688.

Prescriptive Liability — 300 Feet.] — Where there is a prescriptive liability to repair a bridge, it is an intendment of law, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that the liability extends to 300 feet of the approaches at each end of the bridge. Reg. v. Lincoln Corporation, 3 N. & P. 273; 8 A. & E. 65; 1 W. W. & H. 260; 7 L. J., Q. B. 161; 2 Jur. 615, 807.

The presumptive liability to repair the approaches to a bridge is not rebutted by proof that the party has been known only to repair the fabric of the bridge, and that the only repairs known to have been done to the highway have been performed by commissioners under a turnpike road act. Ib.

A new and substantive bridge of public utility, built within the limit of one county and adopted by the public, is repairable by the inhabitants of that county, although built within 300 feet of an old bridge repairable by the inhabitants of another county, who were bound of course under 22 Hen. 8, c. 5, to maintain such 300 feet of road, though lying in the other county. Rex v. Devon, 14 East, 477; 13 R. R. 285.

Under Canal Act.]—The liability imposed on a canal company by a private act of parliament of "making and perfecting" and maintaining and repairing bridges to carry highways over a canal, includes the liability to maintain and repair raised approaches which are necessary at each end of the bridges. Nottingham County Council v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry., 15 R. 35; 71 L. T. 430.

Railway Bridge over Highway.]—When a railway is carried over a highway by means of a bridge, no liability to keep in repair the immediate approaches on each side of the bridge is cast upon the company by reason of any of the provisions in the Railway Clauses Act, 1845, even though the company has lowered the level of the old highway in making the approaches. L. & N. W. Ry. v. Sherton (Surveyor of Highways), 5 B. & S. 559; 33 L. J., M. C. 158; 10 L. T. 648; 12 W. R. 1102.

i. Part of Bridge in Different Counties.

Effect of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76.]—Indictment for the non-repair of a bridge. On a special verdict, it was found, that, until the passing of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, by which a borough was enlarged, the bridge was situated without the borough, in a county, and had always been repaired by that county; the metes and bounds so altered were adopted by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, for the purposes of that act:—Held, that the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, does not change the legal liability of the county; and that, though the bridge is now locally situate within the new limits of the borough, the county is still liable to repair it. Reg. v. New Sarum, 2 New Sess. Cas. 133; 7 Q. B. 241; 15 L. J., M. C. 15; 10 Jur. 176.

Indictment against the inhabitants of B. for non-repair of half of a county bridge. A special verdict found that the bridge was across the river W., in the parish of G.; that parish G. was partly on the right bank, and partly on the left bank of the river; that the whole of that part on the left bank always was in the county of R.; that until 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, the boundary between the counties of B. and R. was the mid-channel of the river to a point in parish G., and thence inland to another point in the mid-channel; and that 470 acres of parish G., between the inland boundary and the river, and the part of the river from the one point to the other, always until 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, were in the county of R.; that a portion of the bridge between the right bank and the centre of the river, and resting upon part of the 470 acres, was out of repair; and the doubt referred to the court was whether the defendants were guilty. By 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 61, the isolated portions of counties described in schedule (M.) to 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64, are annexed for all purposes to counties mentioned in the fourth column of the schedule. The schedule describes "part of point G." as being an isolated part of B., locally situate in B. or R., and to be annexed to B. The verdict stated that there was no part of parish G. to which this description could apply, if not to the 470 acres:—Held, first, that the description in the schedule must be understood to apply to the 470 acres, which had been part of the county of R., and that the statute made the part of the county of B. and the mid-channel the boundary between the counties. Reg. v. Brecon or Brecknockshire, 4 New Sess. Cas. 272; 15 Q. B. 813; 19 L. J., M. C. 203.

Held, secondly, that the liability to repair the bridge within part of G. was, as an incident to the change, transferred to the inhabitants of B. Ib.

Effect of Local Government Act, 1888.]—A bridge at B. was partly within the county of Stafford and partly within the county of Derby. By a local act the expenses of maintaining it were to be borne in equal moieties by the respective county rates. B. was an urban sanitary district partly within the two counties. Under s. 50 (1) (b) of the Local Government Act, 1888, B. became wholly included in the county of Stafford:—Held, that notwithstanding the above section the local act remained in force, and that both counties were still liable to pay equally for repairs. Staffordshire and Derbyshire County Councils, In re, 54 J. P. 566.

Misdescription of Liability.]—An indictment stated, that, from time immemorial, there hath been and still is an ancient bridge; that one part of it was in township A., and the other in parish B.; that the part in A. was out of repair, and that A. was under a prescriptive liability to repair. The bridge consisted of four arches, part of the principal arch and the whole of the other arches being in A., and that in 1806 the principal arch had been widened from nine to sixteen feet at the joint expense of A. and B.:—Held, that there was no misdescription of the township's liability; as, if the prescriptive liability to repair the ancient bridge was well described, it was no answer to shew that there was something else which A. was not bound to repair. Reg. v. Adderbury East, D. & M. 324; 5 Q. B. 187; 13 L. J., M. C. 9; 7 Jur. 1035.

2. PRESENTMENT FOR NON-REPAIR.

The 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 24, empowers every justice of the peace, either upon his own view, or upon information upon oath, to make presentment of any highway not well and sufficiently repaired. By 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 1, all matters and things in the former act contained, relating to highways, shall, so far as applicable, be extended and applied to county bridges, as fully and effectually as if the same, and every part thereof, were herein repeated and re-enacted:—Held, that the enactment, as to presentments of highways, in the former statute, was virtually re-written or re-enacted in 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, as to county bridges, and, therefore, is not repealed, as to county bridges by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, which repeals in terms 13 Geo. 3, c. 78. Reg. v. Brecon, 3 New Sess. Cas. 434; 15 Q. B. 813; 18 L. J., M. C. 123; 13 Jur. 422. S. P., Reg. v. Merionethshire, 6 Q. B. 343; 13 L. J., M. C. 158.

Held, also, that 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 22, does not so far incorporate the provisions of s. 99, as to apply them to county bridges, and does not, therefore, shew that the legislature intended to repeal so much of the 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, as consists of clauses incorporated from 13 Geo. 3, c. 78. Ib.

3. Indictment and Evidence.

Liability—Immemorial Usage.]—A parish may be indicted for non-repair of a bridge, without stating any other ground of liability than immemorial usage. Rex v. Hendon, 4 B. & Ad. 628; 2 L. J., M. C. 55.

—— Public Bridge.]—The inhabitants of a county are bound to repair every public bridge within it, unless, when indicted for the non-repair of it, they can shew by plea, that some other person, or body politic or corporate, is liable; and every bridge in a highway is by 22 Hen. 8, c. 5, taken to be a public bridge for this purpose. Rex v. Bucks, 12 East, 192; 11 R. R. 347.

—— Parish or County—Inspection of Parish Books.] — An indictment had been preferred against a county for not repairing a bridge at the instance of the inhabitants of a parish, and the question intended to be tried was, whether the inhabitants of the parish or of the county were liable to repair it. The court refused to compel the inhabitants of the parish to allow the parties indicted to inspect the parish books and documents relating to the bridge. Rex v. Buckingham JJ., 8 B. & C. 375; 2 M. & Ry. 412; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 346.

"Riding."]—The word "riding" in the Statute of Bridges (22 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 3), is not confined to districts called by that name, but includes any division of a county which corresponds in its definition to a riding. Reg. v. Isle of Ely, 4 New Sess. Cas. 222; 15 Q. B. 827; 19 L. J., M. C. 223.

Non-repair of Approaches.] — Although the inhabitants of the county are in general liable to the repairs of the highway within 300 feet of the bridge as well as of the bridge itself, an indictment which charges merely a non-repair of the bridge is not sufficient to charge them with the not repairing of the highway within that distance. Rex v. Gloucester (Inhabitants), 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 97; Ib., M. C. 120.

Evidence.]—Upon not guilty to an indictment against the inhabitants of a county for not repairing a public bridge, it is competent to the defendants to give evidence of the bridge having been repaired by private individuals. Rex v. Northampton, 2 M. & S. 262; 15 R. R. 241.

—— Of Reputation.] — Indictment against the inhabitants of a county for the non-repair of a public bridge. Plea, that three persons were bound respectively to repair the three northern arches of the bridge, ratione tenuræ. On the trial a witness, who as well as his father and grandfather had been employed in doing repairs to the county parts of the bridge, was asked, "Have you heard them say who was liable to repair the three northern arches?"—Held, first, that evidence of reputation was admissible upon this issue, because, though it involved matter of private right, it also related to matters of public and general interest. Reg. v. Bedfordshire, 4 El. & Bl. 535; 3 C. L. R. 442; 24 L. J., Q. B. 81; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 208; 3 W. R. 205; 6 Cox, C. C. 505.

Held, secondly, that the answer to the question was admissible, because it was not necessarily evidence of reputation of a particular fact; but it might proceed upon a distinct reputation prevailing in the neighbourhood, or upon an admission by the owners of the lands in question that they were liable respectively to repair that part of the bridge ratione tenuræ. Ib.

Judgment—By Default.]—Semble, that a judgment by default, upon an indictment for non-repair of a highway, is not conclusive evidence against the parish, of a liability on their part to repair such highway. Rex v. Whitney, 4 N. & M. 594; 3 A. & E. 69; 7 Car. & P. 208; 4 L. J., M. C. 86.

—— Stay of.] — The court is reluctant to stay judgment on an indictment for not repairing a bridge, and will not stay it generally, but only till further order; and, if the trial of another indictment is not proceeded in with all dispatch, judgment will be given. Rex v. Southampton, 2 Chit. 215.

Costs—Where Defence Frivolous.] — The 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 64, empowered the court trying an indictment for non-repair of a highway, to award costs if the defence was frivolous. The 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 1, enacts, that all matters and things in the act contained relating to highways shall, so far as applicable, be extended and applied to county bridges, as fully and effectually as if the same were repeated and re-enacted:—Held, that the clause as to costs in 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, was substantively re-enacted in 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, with reference to county bridges, and, therefore, was not repealed when the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, repealed in general terms the 13 Geo. 3, c. 78. Reg. v. Merionethshire, 1 New Sess. Cas. 316; 6 Q. B. 343; 13 L. J., M. C. 158; 8 Jur. 778.

The judge who tries an indictment for non-repair of a bridge, removed by certiorari, may certify, after the assizes, that the defence was frivolous, and, by such certificate, award payment of costs to the prosecutor, which will be enforced by the court in banc. Ib.

4. Fines for Non-Repair.

The court cannot impose more than one fine for the non-repair of a bridge. Rex v. Machynlleth, 4 B. & Ald. 469; 23 R. R. 349.

5. Liability for Injuries or Nuisance.

Injury due to Want of Repair—Action for.]—No action will lie by an individual against the inhabitants of a county, for an injury sustained in consequence of a county bridge being out of repair. Russell v. Devon, 2 Term Rep. 667; 1 R. R. 585.

The inhabitants of a county are not liable to be sued, through their surveyor, by an individual for damages in respect of injuries to his person or property, occasioned by a bridge, repairable by the inhabitants of the county, being out of repair. Mackinnon v. Penson, 9 Ex. 609; 23 L. J., M. C. 97; 18 Jur. 513; 2 W. R. 262.

Damage by Locomotives.]—The Locomotive Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 70, s. 7, enacts that where any bridge on a turnpike or other road, carried across any stream, watercourse, or navigable river, canal, or railway, shall be damaged by reason of any locomotive passing over the same, or coming into contact therewith, none of the proprietors, undertakers, directors, conservators, trustees, commissioners or other persons interested in, or having charge of, such navigable river, canal or railway, or of such bridge, shall be liable to repair the damage, &c., but the same shall be repaired to the satisfaction of such proprietors, &c., by the owners or persons having charge of the locomotive at the time of the happening of the damage :—Held, that this provision does not apply to bridges repairable by the inhabitants of a county. Reg. v. Kitchener, 43 L. J., M. C. 9 ; L. R. 2 C. C. 88 ; 29 L. T. 697 ; 22 W. R. 134 ; 12 Cox, C. C. 522.

Use of Swing Bridges—Obstruction.]—A dock company having a swing bridge on a public highway is bound, on the passing of vessels, to use all reasonable means (both as to the number of men employed, and number of ships passed at a time) to prevent unnecessary delay ; and if they do not do all which can be expected of reasonable men, and if any one is obstructed in consequence, such obstruction will render them liable for the injury sustained. Wiggins v. Boddington, 3 Car. & P. 544.

Neglect to Fence Dangerous Place.]—Where a canal company was empowered by a private act of parliament to intersect highways, and to construct bridges to connect the intercepted portions, and the canal and bridges were vested in them as proprietors, and they were enabled to take tolls from boats passing the bridges, and they erected swing bridges, which the boatmen were entitled to open for the purpose of passing, and which, when opened, left the edge of the canal unprotected, and there was not sufficient light or other means of preventing accidents, and the consequence was that while the bridge was lawfully opened at night-time a person fell into the canal and was injured, without any fault on his part :—Held, that the company was liable to an action for the injury. Manley v. St. Helen's Canal and Ry., 2 H. & N. 840 ; 27 L. J., Ex. 159 ; 6 W. R. 297.

See also NEGLIGENCE.

Nuisance—Pulling Down Old Bridge—Prevention of.]—Justices having, under 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, contracted for the building of a new bridge in a different site, in lieu of the old one, which was ruinous ; and having directed the old bridge to be taken down before the new one was passable, for the benefit of the old materials to be used by the contractor in finishing the new bridge ; the court refused a writ of prohibition to them to restrain them from pulling down the old before the new bridge was passable, though there were strong affidavits of the inconvenience and loss to be sustained by the neighbourhood, in being obliged to use a roundabout way in the interval, referring the complainant to the ordinary remedy by indictment, if the pulling down the old bridge, under these circumstances, was a nuisance, and seeing no occasion to interfere by applying a prompt remedy of a novel kind in modern practice. Rex v. Dorset JJ., 15 East, 594 ; 13 R. R. 443.

An injunction granted on an information and bill, upon the ground of public nuisance, to restrain the magistrates of a county from cutting the timbers supporting the roadway of a bridge, which timbers and roadway, at the place proposed to be cut, were within their jurisdiction, but of which the other extremity was within the jurisdiction of a different county. Att.-Gen. v. Forbes, 2 Myl. & C. 123.

—— Bridge in a Public Way—Indictment.]—A bridge built in a public way, without public utility, is indictable as a nuisance ; and so it is if built colourably in an imperfect or inconvenient manner, with a view to throw the onus of rebuilding or repairing it immediately on the county. Rex v. Yorkshire (W. R.), 2 East, 342 ; 6 R. R. 439. And see Rex v. Glamorgan, 2 East, 356, n. ; 6 R. R. 450, n.

6. RATABILITY.

Occupier of Bridge and Toll-house—Repairs under Local Act.]—Mandamus to a justice to issue his distress warrant against the occupiers of Putney Bridge for a highway rate, assessed on them under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 27, in respect of their occupation of the bridge and toll-house, and the land on which the same were erected. Return, that Putney Bridge was paved, repaired, and cleansed under a local act : —Held, that the return was no answer, as s. 113 of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, did not exempt the property from liability to the rate imposed under s. 27. Reg. v. Paynter, 13 Q. B. 399 ; 3 New Sess. Cas. 465 ; 18 L. J., M. C. 169 ; 13 Jur. 281.

Company of Proprietors.] — By a local act a company of proprietors were empowered to build a bridge for the use of the public, and to enable them to do so, to raise money, to be advanced by shares among themselves, and upon mortgage by strangers. They were to take tolls as soon as the bridge was open to the public, which were to be applied in paying the interest on the debt, and the surplus in paying the shareholders to the extent of 7½ per cent. on their shares. The excess was to be applied in paying off the shareholders, and when they were paid off, the surplus over the interest of the mortgages was to be funded until there was a sufficient accumulation to pay off the mortgage debt, and to raise a sum to meet the annual repairs : when that was done the tolls were to cease, and the company of proprietors were to become trustees for the public ; and all the money allowed by the act was raised, but a sum greater than was authorised by the act was required, and was borrowed. The tolls produced 1,500*l.* per annum, and were applied in payment of the interest of the mortgage and in reduction of the second debt, but nothing was paid to the shareholders :—Held, that the company were ratable as beneficial occupiers of this bridge. Reg. v. Blackfriars Bridge, Manchester, 9 Ad. & E. 828 ; 1 P. & D. 603 ; 8 L. J., M. C. 29.

7. OTHER MATTERS.

Duty to Construct—Canal Company.]—A canal company under their act were to make such bridges over their canals as two or more justices should "from time to time judge necessary, and appoint for the use of the owner or occupier of the lands adjoining the canal." The respondent was an adjoining owner, and obtained an order from the justices adjudging necessary and appointing one bridge to be constructed :—Held, that the canal company were bound to erect such a bridge. Birmingham Canal v. Hickman, 56 J. P. 598—C. A.

Liability to strengthen Bridge sufficient for Existing Traffic.]—A dock company being required by statute to build such good and substantial bridges for carriages, horses, and passengers over their cuts, as they should deem necessary, and for ever to keep the same in good repair, built bridges sufficient to carry the traffic of the district as it then existed. Subsequently manufactories were established on a tract of land inclosed by their cuts, in which large boilers and engines of twenty tons weight and upwards were constructed, which the bridges were insufficient to carry :—Held, on rule for mandamus, that the statute did not impose upon the company the duty of providing bridges sufficient to carry such traffic. Reg. v. East and West India Dock Co., 60 L. T. 232 ; 53 J. P. 277.

Liability to Widen.]—The inhabitants of a county are not liable to widen a public bridge by force of their obligation to repair it. Rex v. Devon, 7 D. & R. 147 ; 4 B. & C. 670 ; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 34 ; 28 R. R. 440. Overruling Rex v. Cumberland, 6 Term Rep. 194 ; 3 Bos. & P. 354 ; 3 R. R. 149.

Order of Justices for Widening—Discretion.]—By 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 2, where any county bridge shall be narrow and incommodious it shall and may be lawful to and for the justices at quarter sessions to order such bridge to be widened, improved, and made commodious for the public, provided that no money shall be applied to the amendment or alteration of any such bridge until presentment shall have been made of the insufficiency, inconvenience, or want of reparation of such bridge, in pursuance of the statutes in force concerning public bridges. On an application for a mandamus to justices to order a bridge to be widened, on the ground that it was too narrow for the traffic over it :—Held, that the enactment was discretionary. Newport Bridge, In re, 2 El. & El. 377 ; 29 L. J., M. C. 52 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 97 ; 1 L. T. 131 ; 8 W. R. 62.

Held, also, that by the proviso a presentment was a condition precedent to making such an order. Ib.

Property in Materials.]—If A. grants liberty, licence, power, and authority to B. and his heirs to build a bridge on his land, and B. covenants to build the bridge for public use, and to repair it, and not to demand toll, the property in the materials of the bridge when built and dedicated to the public still continues in B., subject to the right of passage by the public ; and when severed and taken away by a wrong-doer, he may maintain trespass for the asportation. Harrison v. Parker, 6 East, 154 ; 2 Smith, 262 ; 8 R. R. 434.

Fees to Clerk of the Peace.]—The sessions are not authorised to order the payment by the bridgemaster to the clerk of the peace of a percentage on all money raised for the repair of bridges in a particular district, in lieu of all his fees for indictments, presentments, &c., for bridges within it, although such percentage was claimed as an ancient fee, and had been paid without dispute for a long period of time. Rex v. Houldgrave, 1 B. & Ald. 312 ; 19 R. R. 332. And see Rex v. Bird, 2 B. & Ald. 522.

Tolls—Ferry or Bridge.]—A floating bridge, which consists of a vessel propelled by steam from one side of the river to the other, and kept in its course by chains laid down across the bed of one stream, is in substance a ferry, and is not a bridge within the meaning of s. 72 of the Mutiny Act of 1864. Ward v. Gray, 6 B. & S. 345 ; 34 L. J., M. C. 146 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 738 ; 12 L. T. 305 ; 13 W. R. 653.

Restraining Building of New Bridge.]—M. being entitled to lands on both sides of a river, sold and conveyed to L. a piece of land the dimensions of which were minutely given in the conveyance, and which was therein stated to contain 7,752 square yards, and to be bounded on the north by the river, and to be delineated on the plan drawn on the deed, and thereon coloured pink. The dimensions and colouring extended only up to the southern edge of the river, and if half the bed had been included the area would have been 10,031 square yards instead of 7,752. The deed contained various reservations for the benefit of M., but contained nothing express to shew whether the half of the bed was intended to pass or not. M. was at the time owner of a private bridge close by, from which he received tolls. Thirty years afterwards a bridge was projected to cross the river from L.'s land. The plaintiffs, who had succeeded to all M.'s property in the neighbourhood, brought their action to restrain the making the new bridge. If the grant to L. passed half the bed, no part of the new bridge would be over land of the plaintiffs :—Held, that the presumption that the grant included half the bed was not rebutted, and that an injunction could not be granted on the ground that the erection of the bridge would be a trespass ; held, also, that a stipulation in the grant that nothing therein contained should prejudice or affect M.'s right to take tolls over his bridge did not preclude L. taking away custom from that bridge by the erection of a new bridge. Micklethwait v. Newlay Bridge Co., 33 Ch. D. 133 ; 55 L. T. 336 ; 51 J. P. 132—C. A.

The conveyance reserved to M., his heirs, &c., the right of entering upon the land or any part thereof for the purpose of repairing M.'s bridge :—Held, that this did not preclude L. from erecting any structures upon the land, provided he left reasonable access for the purpose of repairing the bridge. Ib.

D. FERRIES.

1. Rights and Obligations of Owners and Lessees.

Rights—Ownership of Land.]—The owner of a ferry need not have the property in the soil on either side of the river. Peter v. Kendal, 6 B. & C. 703 ; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 282 ; 30 R. R. 504.

A ferry is the exclusive right to carry passengers across a river or an arm of the sea from one vill to another, or to connect a continuous line of road leading from one township or vill to another, and not a servitude imposed upon a district or large area of land ; and is wholly unconnected with the ownership or occupation of land. Newton v. Cubitt, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 32 ; 31 L. J., C. P. 246 ; 6 L. T. 860. See S. C., affirmed in Ex. Ch., infra, col. 196.

—— Extent of.]—Quære, whether the exclusive right of the owner of a ferry extends beyond the carriage of passengers by boat. Hopkins v. G. N. Ry., 2 Q. B. D. 224.

—— Injunction to prevent Interference.]—A right of ferry (being in derogation of the common rights of the public) rests upon the corresponding obligation on the part of the grantee of the right to maintain the ferry at all times for the use of the public, this obligation being enforceable by indictment and fine. But an act of parliament empowering a company to ply on Sundays from certain points on the south bank of the Thames, but imposing no obligation to provide means of transport or to maintain their plying places, does not confer an exclusive right against the rest of the world, such as the court of chancery will interfere to protect. Letton v. Goodden, 35 L. J., Ch. 427; L. R. 1 Eq. 123; 14 L. T. 296; 14 W. R. 554.

—— Watermen's Act—Licence.]—The 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. lxxv. (Watermen's Act), s. 38, imposed a penalty upon owners of boats working boats within the limits of the act without a licence. By s. 99, nothing in the act contained shall extend to prejudice or affect the rights and privileges to which the owners of any ferries are entitled:—Held, that the owner of a ferry within the limits of the act might exercise the right of ferry without a licence. Reg. v. Matthews, 5 El. & Bl. 546; 25 L. J., M. C. 7; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1204.

But where the ferry appeared to have been always exercised from a given landing-place in Middlesex to given landing-places in Kent:—Held, that the privilege did not protect the owner of such ferry in working a boat from another landing-place in Middlesex, distant 800 yards from the ancient landing-place in Middlesex. Ib.

Duty.]—An owner of a ferry for carriages is bound to convey carriages and their contents. Walker v. Jackson, 10 M. & W. 161; 12 L. J., Ex. 165.

Liability for Injuries.]—The lessees of a ferry provided steamboats for the conveyance of goods and cattle from A. to B., and also ships for landing and embarking, which were generally sufficient for the purpose:—Held, that they were liable for an injury sustained by the horse of a passenger in consequence of the side rail of the landing slip (of the dangerous state of which they had been forewarned) giving way, although the horse was at the time under the control and management of its owner. Willoughby v. Willoughby, 12 C. B. 742.

2. Grant and Conveyance.

Nature of Grant.]—Under a lease of a ferry describing it as a ferry across the river both ways, a ferry across the river one way only will pass. Pim v. Cruel, 6 M. & W. 234.

—— Charter from Crown—Construction.]—A charter from the crown granting "all our ferriages and passages" over certain rivers conveys only ferries existing at the date of the grant, and does not confer on the grantees the right to create new ferries over those rivers. Londonderry Bridge Commissioners v. M'Keever, 27 L. R., Ir. 464—C. A.

Effect of User.]—From a user of thirty-five years, the jury may presume that a ferry had a legal origin. Trotter v. Harris, 2 Y. & J. 285; 31 R. R. 593.

A variation in the amount of ferriage will not avoid the franchise. Ib.

Ancient Ferry—Limits Ascertained by User.]—The plaintiffs, claiming to be owners of an ancient ferry, sued the defendants for carrying passengers within the line and termini of their ancient ferry, and also for carrying near such line with the intention of evading the ferry. The termini were the Isle of Dogs and Greenwich. On this isle there had formerly been little population, and only one highway, viz. from Poplar to Potter's Ferry; but since 1800 the isle had been thickly populated, and several new roads had been made, some of them in communication with the highway. The new ferry which had been set up by the defendants, and was complained of, was situate 1,280 yards from the old ferry:—Held, that the limits of the old ferry must be ascertained by user: that by the user the old ferry was limited to the line between Potter's Ferry stairs and Greenwich, and did not extend to all parts of the coast of the Isle of Dogs; and that, therefore, the defendants had not carried in the line of the plaintiffs' ferry. Newton v. Cubitt, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 864; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 544; 11 W. R. 468—Ex. Ch.

Held, also, that the defendants had not carried so near the line of the plaintiffs' ferry as to have infringed any right of the plaintiffs. Ib.

Proper Mode of Grant.]—The proper mode of a grant for a ferry is to make it lie from the point where a highway comes down to the water's edge to a point on the opposite side, or to a vill. Ib.

Private Right — Compensation.]—C. claimed compensation against a railway company in respect of injury to land held by him in fee in a city. The injury was occasioned by the works of the company on the other side of a river, which was the boundary between the city and the county, by cutting off communication on the county side with a ferry appurtenant to the land of C. The land belonged to a corporation till 1844, when it was sold to A., who had a lease of it from the corporation. Neither the lease nor the conveyance expressly mentioned the ferry, but leased and conveyed the land with the profits and commodities thereto belonging. There was no evidence as to the original grant of the ferry by the crown, nor as to any conveyance of it by name. The lessees of the land had always, as far as living memory went, kept a boat and taken toll. The landing-place was not shewn to belong to the corporation:—Held, that the ferry, if attached to the land of C., was a private right in respect of which compensation might be awarded; and that the jury was warranted in concluding that the ferry passed to C. by the conveyance of the land, with its profits and commodities. Cooling, In re, or Reg. v. G. N. Ry., 6 Railw. Cas. 246; 14 Q. B. 25; 19 L. J., Q. B. 25; 14 Jur. 128.

3. Disturbance.

Proof of Possession.]—It is sufficient for the plaintiff to prove that he was in possession of a ferry at the time the cause of action arose to entitle him to maintain an action for the disturbance of it. Trotter v. Harris, 2 Y. & J. 285; 31 R. R. 593.

In an action for disturbance of a ferry the payment of any specific sum for passage money need not be proved, although unnecessarily stated. Peter v. Kendal, 6 B. & C. 703; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 282; 30 R. R. 504.

An action for disturbing a ferry being a possessory action, evidence that the plaintiff is in possession is sufficient, and that the ferry had existed for a long time, without proving it to have a legal origin, either by grant or prescription. Ib.

Obstruction after Suit.] — Evidence of an obstruction after the suit, and before the declaration, is sufficient to maintain an action for obstructing a ferry. Foster v. Bonner, Cowp. 454.

Exclusive Ferry — Fraudulent Intent.] — If there is an exclusive ferry from A. to B., it does not prevent persons from going by any other boat from A. directly to C., though it lies near B., provided it is not done fraudulently, and as a pretence for avoiding the regular ferry. Tripp v. Frank, 4 Term Rep. 666; 2 R. R. 495.

Where there is an ancient ferry from A. to B. which leads to a public highway, and another constructs a landing-place in C., a short distance from B., and carries passengers over from A. to C., whence they pass to the same highway upon which the ancient ferry is established, before it reaches any town or village, it is an injury to the ancient ferry, for which an action will lie. Huzzey v. Field, 2 C. M. & R. 432; 1 Gale, 166; 5 Tyr. 855; 4 L. J., Ex. 239.

But where there is a river passing by several towns or places, the existence of an ancient ferry over such river from a particular point on one side to a particular point on the other does not preclude persons from using the river as a public highway from or to all the towns or places on its banks which are not in a line leading from one terminus of the ferry to the other. Ib.

Where the owner of a boat which was accustomed to ply for hire, and to carry passengers across a haven, employed a servant for that purpose, and the servant on one occasion received a passenger on board, and carried him across the haven, near the line of an ancient ferry, and paid the fare over to his master:—Held, that the servant was acting at the time in the course of his master's service, and for his master's benefit, and that the master was answerable for his act, and would have been liable for such act if it had been distinctly proved to have amounted to an evasion of the ferry. Ib.

Corporation having Statutory Powers.] — A corporation empowered by statute to establish and work a steam ferry, but on whom no obligation to maintain has been imposed, has not, like the owner of an ancient ferry liable to such an obligation, the right to maintain an action for an injunction to restrain a person who, without any title, has established a ferry which interferes with the profits of the ferry worked by the corporation. Londonderry Bridge Commissioners v. M'Keever, 27 L. R., Ir. 464—C. A.

Declaration — No Averment of Fraud.] — A count alleged that the defendant, contriving to disturb the plaintiff in the enjoyment of his ferry, injuriously, and against his will, carried passengers across the river, near the plaintiff's ferry, per quod he was deprived of profits of his ferry, and disturbed in the possession of it:—Held, that the count disclosed a good cause of action and was not bad for omitting to aver that the defendant, in carrying near the plaintiff's ferry, either intended to defraud the plaintiff or to set up a new ferry. Blacketer v. Gillett, 9 C. B. 26; 1 L. M. & P. 88; 19 L. J., C. P. 307; 14 Jur. 814.

Plea—Public Convenience.]—In an action for an evasion of an ancient ferry by carrying passengers across the river near thereto, the court refused to allow the defendant to add a plea alleging a variety of circumstances to shew, that, from the altered state of the neighbourhood, public convenience required that which the defendant had done, holding that the plea was clearly bad, and at the most amounting to not guilty. Newton v. Cubitt, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 627; 28 L. J., C. P. 176; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 847.

—— Neglect of Duty.]—Neglect of duty in the owner of a ferry is no answer to an action for disturbance. Peter v. Kendal, 6 B. & C. 703; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 282; 30 R. R. 504.

Ancient Ferry—Use of Boat of less than Four Tons Burthen.]—In an action for the disturbance of a ferry, the first count stated, that the plaintiffs were possessed of a ferry across the river Tyne, between North Shields and South Shields, for the conveyance of carriages and passengers; and that the defendant disturbed this ferry by carrying passengers. The second count stated a right to an ancient ferry. The defendant pleaded not guilty, not possessed, and also that the boat used by the defendant was of less than four tons burthen. The plaintiffs were a company incorporated by statute for establishing a ferry across the river Tyne, within the limits of Tynemouth and the townships of South Shields and Westhoe. Sect. 85 enacted, that, after the ferry shall be established, no other ferry shall be set up and used by any persons across the river Tyne within the limits; and if any person (except the company or persons acting under their authority) shall use any boat or other vessel of the burthen of four tons or upwards in ferrying for hire across the river within the limits, every person offending shall forfeit 5*l.* At the time the statute passed, there was an ancient ferry across the river within the limits which the company, under the power of their act, had purchased of the owners:—Held, first, that the word "burthen" in s. 85 did not mean registered admeasurement, but capacity of carrying. North and South Shields Ferry Co. v. Barker, 2 Ex. 136.

Held, secondly, that the latter part of s. 85 did not limit the general right of ferry, but only added a cumulative remedy by way of penalty. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that there was no variance by reason of the first count describing the ferry generally from North Shields to South Shields, and not from one particular terminus to another. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that the mere act of ferrying passengers was a disturbance of the franchise, although the franchise was not of a prescriptive ferry to the exclusion of all private boats, but simply of a ferry. Ib.

Held, fifthly, that on the purchase of the ancient ferry, and completion of the new ferry, the former became extinct by operation of the statute. Ib.

—— Divisible Rights.]—In an action for disturbing the enjoyment of an ancient ferry, the declaration stated that the plaintiff was possessed of an ancient ferry across the Thames, to and from the Isle of Dogs, from and to Greenwich. The pleas were: not possessed, and that there was no such ancient ferry. The only right proved was an ancient right of ferry from the Isle of Dogs to Greenwich:—Held, that the right alleged was divisible, and that the plaintiff was entitled to have the verdict entered for so much of the right as was proved. Giles v. Groves, 6 D. & L. 146; 12 Q. B. 721; 17 L. J., Q. B. 323; 12 Jur. 1084.

New Ferry to provide for New Traffic.]—The owner of a ferry cannot maintain an action for loss of traffic caused by a new highway by bridge or ferry made to provide for a new traffic. Hopkins v. G. N. Ry., 2 Q. B. D. 224.

Compensation.]—A railway company, under the authority of their act, constructed across a river, half a mile above an ancient ferry, a railway bridge and a foot-bridge, the foot-bridge being used by persons going to the railway station and also to other places. The traffic across the ferry fell off, and the ferry was given up. The owners of the ferry claimed compensation under the Lands and Railway Clauses Acts:—Held, reversing the decision of the queen's bench division, that no compensation could be recovered, first, on the ground that an action could not have been maintained for disturbance of the ferry in respect of the traffic either by the railway or by the foot-bridge, if they had been erected without the authority of an act; secondly, on the ground that, the injury to the ferry being occasioned, not by the construction, but by the working of the railway, the ferry had not been injuriously affected within the Lands Clauses Act or the Railway Clauses Act (Reg. v. Cambrian Ry., L. R. 6 Q. B. 422, overruled). Ib.

See further Lands Clauses Act.

Injunction.]—Where the owner of a ferry obtained an act enabling him to substitute a bridge, and providing that persons evading the tolls by conveying passengers, &c., across, otherwise than by the bridge, should be liable to penalties to be summarily enforced by a justice, under a distress warrant, and in default of distress by commitment of the offender, and a railway company afterwards, having its terminus on the bank, established steamboats for the conveyance of its passengers across:—Held, that, the act giving no remedy by an action, and in a case where penalties might be recovered de die in diem, the court would protect by injunction an infringement of the right; and the court would not simply leave the complaining party to his remedy by distress, in order to try the legal right in replevin, but would direct an issue to try it, and not allow the defendant to object that the alleged wrong was done by a corporation, and require an account to be kept pending an inquiry at law, without prejudice to the legal question by granting the injunction in a case where the injury was not extreme nor irreparable. Cory v. Yarmouth and Norwich Ry., 3 Hare, 593.

Injunction before answer to restrain other ferry boats decreed; granted to stay waste, or where the right appears of record. Anon., 1 Ves. 476.

1. REGULATION OF, IN CONTRACTS, &c.

Weighing and Measuring Abroad.] — The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 6, which abolishes the use of certain weights and measures, and s. 21, which enacts that any contract, bargain, or sale made by any such weights or measures shall be wholly null and void, do not render void a contract entered into in the United Kingdom for the sale of goods to be weighed or measured by the weights and measures mentioned in s. 6, unless such goods are also weighed or measured in this country. Rossetter v. Cahlmann, 8 Ex. 361; 22 L. J., Ex. 128.

Legality—Multiples and Parts of Imperial Measure.]—Under the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, a person may sell, not only by imperial measures, but by multiples and parts of the imperial measures. Bellamy v. Pow, 60 J. P. 712.

A contract for the sale of a certain number of tons of iron by the ton "long weight" is not in contravention of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 74, and 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, as it is a multiple of the standard pound, and consequently such contract is valid. Giles v. Jones, 11 Ex. 393; 24 L. J., Ex. 259; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 982; 3 W. R. 576—Ex. Ch.

Semble, that 5 Geo. 4, c. 74, s. 15, is not repealed by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, and consequently that contracts by local weights may be lawfully made, if the proportion to the standard is expressed, though it is otherwise with respect to measures, all local measures being abolished by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 6. Giles v. Jones, 11 Ex. 393; 24 L. J., Ex. 259; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 982; 3 W. R. 576—Ex. Ch.

—— Corn—Sale of.]—The buyer of corn by any other than the Winchester measure was subject to the penalty of 40*s.*, in addition to the value of the corn so bought, by 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 12. Rex v. Arnold, 5 Term Rep. 353.

A contract for the sale of corn by the hobbet was in contravention of 22 Car. 2, c. 8, s. 2, and therefore an action would not lie for the breach of it. Tyson v. Thomas, M'Clel. & Y. 119.

A sale of wheat by hobbet, which is the denomination of a measure in Wales, if the quantity delivered is to be determined by the weight, is a sale by weight, and not by measure, and therefore not contrary to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 6, which applies to sales by measure, and not to sales by weight. Hughes v. Humphreys, 3 El. & Bl. 954; 23 L. J., Q. B. 356; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 42; 2 W. R. 526.

Where malt was sold by the defendant to the plaintiff by a measure called a hobbet, being a measure established by local custom, without specifying the proportion which that measure bore to the standard, as directed by 5 Geo. 4, c. 74, s. 15, and the parties afterwards settled their accounts inter alia as to the malt:—Held, that, in an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for wages, he might prove the settlement of accounts as a payment of the demand. Owens v. Denton, 1 C. M. & R. 711; 5 Tyr. 359; 4 L. J., Ex. 68.

"Quarters."]—If the reddendum in a hospital-renewed lease is so many quarters of corn, it will be understood to mean legal quarters, reckoning the bushel at eight gallons, although the old leases before 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 12, contained the same reddendum; and although, till lately, the lessees paid by composition, reckoning the bushel at nine gallons. St. Cross Hospital v. Howard de Walden (Lord), 6 Term Rep. 338.

"Bushels."]—A contract described as having been made for a certain number of bushels of corn must be considered as a contract for that number of statute bushels. A bushel, without any other explanation, means a bushel by statute measure. Hockin v. Cooke, 4 Term Rep. 314; 1 Chit. 28 (a).

"Acres" — Evidence.] — A testator devised "forty-five acres of the lands of Dromquin, known as the house division," to A., and "fifty acres of the same lands" to B.:—Held, that extrinsic evidence was not admissible to shew that he meant Irish and not statute acres. By the statutory definition contained in 5 Geo. 4, c. 74, s. 2. the word "acre" has received a legal signification which must be attributed to that word, whether used in a will or other voluntary instrument, or in a contract. O'Donnell v. O'Donnell, 1 L. R., Ir. 284.

Levying Rates on Coals.]—Where, by a navigation act, certain rates were imposed on coals landed within a certain district, which were directed to be paid to the commissioners therein named:—Held, that after the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, the commissioners had power to levy the rates by the ton (they having been previously levied by the chaldron) without first applying to the sessions for an inquisition under s. 14. Goody v. Penny, 9 M. & W. 687; 11 L. J., Ex. 289. See also Mills v. Funnell, 2 B. & C. 899; 4 D. & R. 561; 2 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 190.

Sale of Intoxicating Liquor in Marked Measure.]—By the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 8, all intoxicating liquor which is sold by retail, and not in cask or bottle, and is not sold in a quantity less than half a pint, is to be sold in measures marked according to the imperial standards. A publican, being asked for a pint of beer by a customer, went into an inner room, where he drew the beer into a marked measure and poured it into a jug, which he then brought into the room where the customer was sitting and handed to him. The customer could not see the beer drawn, and never saw it while in the measure. The publican having been convicted of an offence under s. 8:—Held, that the sale was not complete until the beer was handed to the customer, that the beer was not sold in a marked measure as required by the statute, and that the conviction was right. Addy v. Blake, 19 Q. B. D. 478; 56 L. T. 711; 35 W. R. 719; 16 Cox, C. C. 259; 51 J. P. 599.

A customer asked to be served with a "blue" of beer on licensed premises, and the publican handed him a vessel or blue containing beer, saying, "That is two pennyworth." An inspector of weights and measures tested the blue, and finding it contained one-third of a quart, there being no imperial measure answering to one-third of a quart, instituted proceedings against the publican under s. 8, and a conviction ensued:—Held, that the conviction must be affirmed. Payne v. Thomas, 60 L. J., M. C. 3; 63 L. T. 456; 39 W. R. 240; 17 Cox, C. C. 212; 54 J. P. 824.

Deficient Weight—Wrapping Goods Sold in Paper.]—H., a grocer, was charged, under 41 & 42 Vict. c. 49, s. 26, with committing a fraud in using his scales. A. bought sugar, tea, and currants, and in each case a paper bag was weighed along with the article, the total deficiency being forty-six drams. A. knew of the practice, and did not complain:—Held, the magistrate was wrong in convicting H. of fraud, of which there was no evidence. Harris v. Allwood, 57 J. P. 7.

Weighing of Cattle—Erection of Machine in Market.]—See MARKETS AND FAIRS.

2. CREATION BY CUSTOM.

Validity of.]—A custom that every pound of butter sold in a particular market town shall weigh eighteen ounces is bad. Nobell v. Durell, 3 Term Rep. 271.

Effect of Statute upon.]—A declaration stated, that a corporation from time immemorial until the 1st January, 1836 (when the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 9, came into operation), had, by persons by them appointed, the sole and exclusive privilege of measuring, and from the 1st January, 1836, of weighing all coal imported into the port of London, and the right and privilege of appointing to perform such work a sufficient number of fit and proper persons, and of fixing a reasonable rate of payment for such work, to be proportioned previously to the 1st January, 1836, to the measured quantity, and subsequently to that day to the weight of the coals, such payments to be made to the persons who should do the work, and to be for their benefit. The declaration alleged a right and privilege of the corporation, that every owner of a vessel arriving in the port with coals should give notice to the corporation in order that the work might be done by the meters; and that the corporation had fixed a rate of payment for every score of tons weight, and had appointed meters, of whom the plaintiff was one; that the defendant imported several tons of coal into the port; and that, although it was his duty, on the arrival of the vessel, and before landing the coals, to give notice, he did not do so, whereby the plaintiff was prevented from weighing the coals, and earning the amount payable in respect thereof. Evidence was given of a custom to measure all coals imported into the port before the 1st January, 1836, and after that date to weigh them; and that the corporation had ordered that the meters should be paid at a rate per ton on coals weighed instead of per chaldron, as before:—Held, that, the right of the corporation by custom to measure coals imported was not converted by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, into a right to weigh. Smith v. Cartwright, 6 Ex. 927; 20 L. J., Ex. 401.

3. FALSE WEIGHTS OR WEIGHING MACHINES.

Conviction for Possessing—Necessity of Use.]—Justices convicted a person for possessing false weights and an unjust weighing machine. He was receiver of the metropolitan police, and a station-house and all the chattels there were vested in him under 10 Geo. 4, c. 44, s. 16; in the station-house were weights which were light, and a weighing machine which, from an injury, gave light weight; these were used in weighing coals, which were allowed to the constables. The conviction was quashed, because the weights and weighing machine were not being used within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 21, and the station-house was not a store where goods were exposed or kept for sale, nor weighed for conveyance or carriage, and therefore s. 28 was inapplicable. Wray v. Reynolds, 1 El. & El. 165; 7 W. R. 86.

A farmer had in his barn or outhouse a balance or portable weighing machine and two iron weights, which were found by the inspector of weights and measures to be light. The inspector saw no produce about the premises, and could not prove that the farmer exposed or kept for sale, or weighed for conveyance or carriage, any goods or produce. He was convicted by justices under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 28:—Held, that the conviction was wrong. Griffiths v. Place, 20 L. T. 484.

Scales the Property of the Post Office—Jurisdiction of Justices.]—By s. 25 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, every person who uses or has in his possession for use for trade any weight, measure, scale, &c., which is false or unjust, shall be liable to a fine; and by s. 59, where any weight, measure, scale, &c., is found in the possession of any person carrying on trade, or on the premises of any person which are used for trade, such person shall be deemed for the purposes of the act, until the contrary is proved, to have such weight, measure, scale, &c., in his possession for use for trade. The master of a post-office, who also carried on the business of a baker upon the same premises, was supplied by the post office authorities with a pair of scales, which, upon being tested, proved to be false. The scales were the property of the post office, and were supplied solely for the purposes of the post office business:—Held, that the justices had no jurisdiction to hear and determine an information under s. 25 charging the postmaster with having false scales in his possession for use for trade, the act having no application to scales which were the property of a government department. Reg. v. Kent JJ. or Bromley JJ., 59 L. J., M. C. 51; 24 Q. B. D. 181; 62 L. T. 114; 38 W. R. 253; 17 Cox, C. C. 61; 54 J. P. 453.

Incorrect Machine—What is.]—A weighbridge at a railway station, which weighs correctly if properly adjusted before use, found by the inspector, who does not adjust it, to be incorrect, is not a weighing machine found incorrect upon a proper examination within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 28. L. & N. W. Ry. v. Richards, 2 B. & S. 326; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 539; 5 L. T. 792.

At a station of a railway company was a weighing machine working by a spring, and having a dial plate and an index finger, with figures from zero to 560 lbs., which was used for weighing parcels and passengers' excess luggage. The machine becoming disordered, the index stood at 4 lbs. instead of zero:—Held, that the company was properly convicted of having in its possession a weighing machine which was found to be incorrect and unjust. G. W. Ry. v. Bailie, 5 B. & S. 928; 34 L. J., M. C. 31; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 264; 11 L. T. 418; 13 W. R. 203.

A pair of scales had a hollow brass ball hanging upon the weight end of the beam; the ball was constructed with a neck which could be unscrewed so as to allow shot to be placed inside, and being hung by a hook upon the beam, was easily removable. The scales were correct in that state; but if the shot inside the ball was removed the scales were unjust and against the purchaser:—Held, that justices were justified in finding that the ball loaded with shot was no part of the scales, and that consequently they were unjust. Carr v. Stringer, 9 B. & S. 238; 37 L. J., Q. B. 168; L. R. 3 Q. B. 433; 18 L. T. 399; 16 W. R. 859.

Unjustness is a Question of Fact.]—B. was charged with wilfully selling an unjust weighing machine. The machine consisted of a centre pan on a vertical spring, and when articles were put exactly in the centre it weighed correctly, but when put a little on one side it weighed incorrectly. The magistrate convicted, and the quarter sessions on appeal affirmed the conviction subject to a special case:—Held, that it was and must be a question of fact as to whether a weighing machine was unjust, and the justices having found that fact, the conviction must be affirmed. Reg. v. Baxendale, 44 J. P. 763.

H., a grocer, was charged, under 41 & 42 Vict. c. 49, s. 26, with committing a fraud in using his scales. A. bought sugar, tea, and currants, and in each case a paper bag was weighed along with the article, the total deficiency being 46 drams. A. knew of the practice, and did not complain:—Held, the magistrate was wrong in convicting H. of fraud, of which there was no evidence. Harris v. Allwood, 57 J. P. 7.

Where Stamp has become Obliterated.]—When weights or measures have once been duly stamped or sealed under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 22 (repealed), but the stamp or seal has become obliterated by time and use, the person using them is not liable to the penalty imposed by that section for the use of unauthorised weights or measures, provided such weights or measures are otherwise unobjectionable. Starr v. Stringer, L. R. 7 C. P. 383; 26 L. T. 735.

Measures, What are—Earthen Vessels.]—Earthenware jugs or drinking cups ordinarily used as imperial measures by a publican in his business are, although not stamped as measures and exempted by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 21, from being so stamped, nevertheless measures within s. 28. Reg. v. Aulton, 3 El. & El. 568; 30 L. J., M. C. 129; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 238; 3 L. T. 699; 9 W. R. 278.

Churns used for Conveyance of Milk—Measure "for Use for Trade."]—A churn used by a vendor for conveying milk by rail, at his own expense and risk, to a purchaser, is a measure "for use for trade" within s. 25 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, where it is shown that both as between the vendor and the railway company and as between the vendor and purchaser such churn is treated as a measure. The fact that it is so treated as between the vendor and the railway company is sufficient to bring it within the section. Harris v. London County Council, 64 L. J., M. C. 81; [1895] 1 Q. B. 240; 15 R. 98; 71 L. T. 844; 18 Cox, C. C. 65.

Use in "Trade"—Stamping.]—Scales used by a lead smelter for weighing lead, the weights so ascertained being sent to purchasers in invoices, and to carriers by railway in consignment notes, are used for trade purposes within the meaning of s. 19 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, although the purchasers reweighed the lead themselves, and their weights were accepted by the seller. Such scales must, therefore, be stamped. Crick v. Theobald, 64 L. J., M. C. 216; 15 R. 514; 72 L. T. 807; 59 J. P. 502.

Liability to Seizure.]—Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, earthen vessels are liable to seizure if ordinarily used as measures, and if on examination they are found to be unjust. Washington v. Young, 5 Ex. 403; 19 L. J., Ex. 348.

A person, when in the act of selling provisions upon a highway, used for the purpose of weighing the provisions a spring balance which was incorrect, as being against the seller and in favour of the purchaser. No fraud on the public was intended:—Held, that the spring balance could not be seized under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 56, s. 3 (repealed), nor was the seller liable to the penalty imposed by that section upon persons having in their possession false and unjust beams, scales, or balances. Booth v. Shadgett, 42 L. J., M. C. 98; L. R. 8 Q. B. 352; 29 L. T. 30; 21 W. R. 845. Provided for by 41 & 42 Vict. c. 49, s. 25. And see cases post, col. 207.

Proof of Measures.]—Contents of measures are not to be proved but by a production in court. Chenie v. Watson, Peake's Add. Cas. 123.

Action for Deceit—Declaration.]—It is not sufficient, if a declaration, in an action for deceit, charges the defendant with fraudulently selling to the plaintiff divers large quantities of ale and beer, to wit, &c. (specifying the quantities under a videlicet), contained in puncheons and casks, and with deceitfully delivering less and deficient quantities, as the defendant ought to be charged with fraud in selling the liquors in short and defective measures. Miles v. Dell, 3 Stark. 23. See also Frend v. Butterfield, 11 A. & E. 828.

4. Inspectors.

Appointment — Validity of.]—The quarter sessions, acting under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 17, appointed an inspector and superintendents of police to be inspectors of weights and measures, without remuneration:—Held, that there was nothing in 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, which rendered the appointment an excess of jurisdiction, and therefore it could not be questioned, the certiorari being taken away by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 36. Reg. v. Jarvis, 3 El. & Bl. 640; 18 Jur. 1051.

—— Jurisdiction to Make.]—In counties of cities, and counties of towns, to which a court of quarter sessions has been granted under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, the recorder, by s. 105, has the powers relating to inspectors of weights and measures given by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 17, to the magistrates in quarter sessions assembled. Reg. v. Hull (Recorder), 8 A. & E. 638; 3 N. & P. 595; 1 W. W. & H. 385.

The 37 Geo. 3, c. 143, s. 1, by which the justices at their respective petty sessions within the divisions, districts, and other places of the several counties of England, were authorised to appoint examiners of weights and balances, extends only to such divisions, &c., as were known and recognised at the time when the act passed; and therefore such appointment made at petty sessions by two justices for a district which they had, without the consent of the other magistrates, created within the last five or six years, was illegal. Rex v. Devon JJ., 1 B. & Ald. 588.

By a local act commissioners were appointed for a town, but they did not exercise any supervision with regard to weights and measures, except within the market-place. Under 37 Geo. 3, c. 143, and 55 Geo. 3, c. 43, the inhabitants of the parish of the town procured standard weights and measures, and the vestry nominated examiners of weights and measures, who were afterwards appointed by the justices of the county in petty sessions. Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 17, the justices of the county at quarter sessions appointed an inspector of weights and measures for a district comprising the parish. A charter of incorporation and a court of quarter sessions were afterwards granted to the town. The borough justices thereupon appointed an inspector of weights and measures within the borough, which was co-extensive with the parish; and the recorder appointed another person to the office:—Held, that by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 105, the office of inspector of weights and measures was that of a district in the county, and that the power of appointing him was in the county justices at quarter sessions, and not in the recorder. Duly v. Sharood, 6 El. & Bl. 830; 25 L. J., M. C. 122; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 63; 4 W. R. 775.

Acting beyond Special District—Penalty.]—An inspector of weights and measures for a city, appointed by the mayor of the city, knowingly stamped, at his office in that city, weights sent to him for that purpose by a person residing within a district for which another inspector had been legally appointed by the justices of the county:—Held, that he thereby incurred the penalty provided by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 25. Reg. v. Skelton, 1 El. & El. 816; 28 L. J., M. C. 222; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1347; 7 W. R. 447; 8 Cox, C. C. 177.

Powers and Duties—Right of Search.]—An inspector of weights and measures, appointed by the sessions under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 17, and having a general warrant from a magistrate under s. 28 to act as such within his jurisdiction, may, by virtue of such appointment and warrant, enter any shop within his district, at all seasonable times, to examine and seize false weights and measures, and need not have a special warrant from a justice in each individual case. Hutchings v. Reeves, 9 M. & W. 747; 11 L. J., M. C. 109; 6 Jur. 439.

A servant assisting such inspector in the discharge of his duty, but who has not himself received any warrant or authority in writing from the quarter sessions or a justice of the peace, is a person acting in pursuance of the act, and in execution of the powers thereof, so as to entitle him, in an action brought against him for carrying away measures declared false by the inspector, to plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence. Ib.

An inspector of weights and measures does not require a special warrant in order to authorise him to act in each individual case, his general warrant being sufficient for that purpose. Kershaw v. Johnson, 1 Car. & K. 329.

By s. 21, no weight above 56 lbs. is required to be inspected and stamped; but the inspector may still enter places within the meaning of the act in order to inspect, although no weight of 56 lbs. or under be kept therein. Ib.

—— Right of Seizure.] — An inspector of weights and measures duly entered a shop to examine weights and measures and weighing machines. He seized and carried away as forfeited a pair of scales, and detained them after being requested to give them up; the owner sued in a county court, when the jury found that the scales were in fact unjust, that they were a weighing machine, and not a weight or measure, and that the defendant bonâ fide believed that he was acting in pursuance of the act :—Held, that under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, s. 28, weighing machines are not forfeited, though unjust, although weights and measures are; and consequently that the defendant was not authorised to seize the scales. Thomas v. Stephenson, 2 El. & Bl. 108; 22 L. J., Q. B. 258; 17 Jur. 597; 1 W. R. 325.

An inspector is not authorised in seizing any weight without having first compared it with the standard, in order to ascertain whether it is just or not. Kershaw v. Johnson, supra.

Refusal to produce Weights and Measures—Person left temporarily in Charge.]—In the absence of his employer, the respondent was left temporarily in charge of the employer's premises. The premises were visited by the appellant, an inspector of weights and measures, who claimed to inspect the weights and measures on the premises. The respondent refused to produce them. The justices dismissed the complaint, holding that the weights and measures were not "in his possession" within the meaning of s. 48 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878 :—Held, that the justices came to a right conclusion. Smith v. Webb, 60 J. P. 517.

Application of Fees — County Rate.]—The police who are appointed to carry out the provisions of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, are not, when so acting, engaged as constables in the execution of their duty. A private act authorised justices in quarter sessions to direct that fees paid to the police in the performance of occasional duties, or in the execution of their duty for which a fee was receivable, should be paid to the police superannuation fund :—Held, that the fees paid to the police appointed to carry out the provisions of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, were not fees paid to them in the execution of their duty, and consequently could not be carried to the credit of the police superannuation fund, but were properly payable to the credit of the county rate. Reg. v. Kesteven JJ., 58 L. J., M. C. 157; 61 L. T. 51; 37 W. R. 670; 16 Cox, C. C. 680; 53 J. P. 661.

5. Leet Jury.

Validity of Customs.]—A custom in a manor for the leet jury to break and destroy measures found by them to be false is lawful. Wilcock v. Windsor, 3 B. & Ad. 43.

A court leet, holden on the 28th of April, was adjourned, after the jury had been sworn in, till the 15th of December, which day was given them to make their presentments :—Held, that an adjournment of such duration (which was admitted to be according to the custom of the manor) was not unnecessarily unreasonable. Ib.

A custom to swear the jurors at one court leet to inquire and return their presentments at the next court is bad in law. Davidson v. Moscrop, 2 East, 56; 6 R. R. 373.

—— Actions against Jurymen.]—In an action for seizing weights and measures, four defendants pleaded that they were sworn, with divers, to wit, twenty others, as a leet jury, according to the custom of the manor of Stepney; and that it was the custom of the jury so sworn to examine weights and measures within the manor, and seize them if defective; and they alleged that they (the defendants), being on such jury so sworn as aforesaid, examined and seized the plaintiff's weights and measures, which they found defective. There was evidence at the trial that only five of the leet jurors were actually in the plaintiff's shop when the defendants made the seizure there, though the rest were close at hand; but the judge refused to let any question go to the jury on this part of the case, being of opinion that the objection was on the record :—Held, that the objection was on the record, and was valid; it not appearing by the plea that the examination and seizure were made by the jury sworn at the court leet, according to custom. Sheppard v. Hall, 3 B. & Ad. 433; 1 L. J., K. B. 152.

Distress—Justification.]—In an action against an officer and his assistant for distraining the goods of the plaintiff, it appeared that the annoyance jury of Westminster had visited the plaintiff's shop, and had condemned his scales. It further appeared that two only of the jury entered the shop, the rest being in the street, near the door and window :—Held, that the distress was not justifiable unless all the jury were sufficiently near to concur in the condemnation of the scales. Holland v. Heath, 2 Jur. 234.

Obstruction of Jury.]—An avowry stated the holding of a court leet, and an adjournment, and that the jurors proceeded according to the custom of the manor to examine the weights and measures within the manor; and that the plaintiff, not regarding his duty, but contriving to prevent the examination, according to the custom of the weights and measures, while the jurors were proceeding in their examination, knowingly and unlawfully obstructed them; that, therefore, at the court holden by adjournment, it was presented that he obstructed the jury in the execution of their duties in examining the weights and measures within the manor, and that by the judgment of the court he was amerced for his obstruction :—Held, that the presentment was insufficient for not stating what the act of obstruction by the plaintiff was. Frost v. Lloyd, 16 L. J., Q. B. 13; 9 Q. B. 130; 11 Jur. 59.

6. Distance.

Mode of Measurement.]—Under 9 & 10 Vict c. 95, s. 128, which gives the county court a concurrent jurisdiction with the superior courts in cases where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant, the distance is to be measured in a straight line upon a horizontal plane, and not by the nearest practicable mode of access. Lake v. Butler, 5 El. & Bl. 92; 3 C. L. R. 1124; 24 L. J., Q. B. 273; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 499; 3 W. R. 458.

But in the construction of an engagement (a bond) not to open a shop within a mile of a certain spot, the shortest way of access by the footpath is to be taken. Woods v. Dennett, 2 Stark. 89.

So, under a covenant not to keep a public-house within half a mile of a particular spot, the distance must be estimated by the nearest mode of access at the time of the covenant. Leigh v. Hind, 4 M. & Ry. 579; 9 B. & C. 774; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 313.

By a local act the trustees of a turnpike road were prohibited from erecting any toll-gate, or taking any toll, within three miles of Bargate, in the town of Southampton :—Held, that the distance was to be measured in a straight line along the horizontal plane, and not by the road. Jewell v. Stead, 6 El. & Bl. 350; 25 L. J., Q. B. 294; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 783; 4 W. R. 544.

For the purposes of an injunction not to carry on business within a fixed distance from a particular place, that distance must be measured as the crow flies, and not by the nearest practicable route. Duignan v. Walker, 1 Johnson, 446; 28 L. J., Ch. 867; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 976; 7 W. R. 562.

The defendant covenanted with the plaintiff not to carry on the business of a publican within half a mile of the plaintiff's premises. He afterwards carried on business within half a mile if the distance was measured in a straight line, as the crow flies, but not within half a mile if the distance was measured by the nearest mode of practicable access:—Held, that there had been a breach of the covenant. Mouflet v. Cole, 42 L. J., Ex. 8; L. R. 8 Ex. 32; 27 L. T. 678; 21 W. R. 175—Ex. Ch.

A. and B. agreed to enter into partnership as surgeons for three years; and A. covenanted, that after the determination of the partnership he would not at any time practise as a surgeon at No. 28, Dorset Crescent, or within the distance of two miles and a half thereof, measuring by the usual streets or ways of approach thereto, nor reside within the distance of two miles and a half of No. 28, Dorset Crescent, without B.'s consent. Breach, that after the expiration of the term, A. resided within the distance of two miles and a half of the premises:—Held, that the distance was to be measured, not by the most frequented public ways, but by any of the usual public ways. Atkyns v. Kinnier, 4 Ex. 776; 19 L. J., Ex. 132.

In calculating the distance from one place to another by the nearest public thoroughfare, for the purpose of determining whether the definition of a bonâ fide traveller in the Licensing Act, 1874, s. 10, is satisfied, it is proper to measure it across a navigable estuary where there is a public ferry which can be used by any person on payment of a toll. Coulbert v. Troke, 45 L. J., M. C. 7; 1 Q. B. D. 1; 33 L. T. 340; 24 W. R. 41.

The distance of 500 yards from the borders of a county for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction on the courts in criminal cases means 500 yards measured in a direct line from the border, and not 500 yards by the nearest road. Reg. v. Wood, 5 Jur. 225.

"Near"—"Next."]—The word "near" in a penal case must be construed strictly, and is not equivalent to the word "next." Rex v. Hervey, 1 W. Bl. 20.

WILD BIRDS.

Preservation—Authority of Owner or Occupier of Land.]—By the 3rd section of the Wild Birds Preservation Act, 1880, it is provided that any person who between the 1st day of March and the 1st day of August in any year after the passing of the act shall knowingly and wilfully shoot or attempt to shoot any wild bird, or shall use any lime, trap, snare, net, or other instrument for the purpose of taking any wild bird, shall forfeit, &c., but the section is not to apply to the owner or occupier of any land, or to any person authorised by the owner or occupier of any land, killing or taking any wild bird on such land. R. having, with the authority of the occupier of certain land, shot wild birds thereon, which were taken on other lands without the authority of the owners or occupiers thereof, was charged with an offence against the section:—Held, that R. did not come within the exemption contained in the section, and was rightly convicted. Reg. v. Gilham, 52 L. T. 326; 49 J. P. 357.

Foreign Bird—Exemption from Penalties.]—The Wild Birds Protection Act, 1880, s. 3 (repealed), imposes a penalty on any person who shall shoot or take wild birds between the 1st of March and the 1st of August, or who "shall expose or offer for sale, or shall have in his control or possession after the 15th day of March, any wild bird recently killed or taken . . . unless such person shall prove that the said wild bird was either killed or taken, or bought or received during the period in which such wild bird could be legally killed or taken, or from some person residing out of the United Kingdom." The appellant, a poulterer, was summoned, under this section, for having in his possession and exposing for sale some wild birds on the 18th of March, 1881. He proved that he had bought them from S., a salesman in Leadenhall Market, who had bought and received them from a person residing out of the United Kingdom:—Held, that the appellant had not brought himself within the exemption clause, which contemplated a direct purchase or receipt from a person residing out of the United Kingdom. Taylor v. Rogers, 50 L. J., M. C. 132 ; 45 L. T. 314. See now 44 & 45 Vict. c. 51.

I. TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

A. SOVEREIGN.

The probate court has no jurisdiction to inquire into the validity or invalidity of a will of a sovereign of the realm. Geo. III., In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 199; 32 L. J., P. 15; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1134; 11 W. R. 190.

The will of the sovereign has no effect in conveying the demesne lands of the crown. Att.-Gen. v. Windsor (Dean and Canons), 8 H. L. Cas. 369; 30 L. J., Ch. 529; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 833; 2 L. T. 678; 8 W. R. 477.

B. SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Soldiers.]—When a will made by an officer whilst engaged on active military service was signed by him, but not attested, the court required that there should be an affidavit of two disinterested persons, stating in terms the signature to be in his handwriting, and that the form for an affidavit given in the rules should be strictly followed. Neville, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 218; 28 L. J., P. 52.

When a will made by a soldier while engaged on active military service is signed by his mark, before the will can be proved an affidavit must be filed in the registry in compliance with the rules, that the deceased had at the time of its execution a knowledge of its contents. Hackett, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 220; 28 L. J., P. 42.

—— Proof as to.]—A mere averment that the deceased held such a rank in his regiment, was in such a place, and was in actual military service, at the date of writing the paper in question, is not necessarily enough to entitle such paper to be treated as a soldier's testament; but the affidavit should contain a statement of the circumstances full enough to enable the court to judge whether the case falls within the meaning attributed by previous cases to 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 11. Thorne, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 36; 34 L. J., P. 131; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 569; 12 L. T. 639.

Master and Part Owner of Trading Vessel.]—A master and part owner of a trading vessel, in the course of a voyage, arrived at Port Adelaide, whence he wrote, and forwarded by post, a letter, some sentences of which were testamentary. The vessel was subsequently lost at sea:—Held, that he was a mariner at sea, and consequently, that such a letter, being in his handwriting, and testamentary, was entitled to probate. Parker, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 375; 28 L. J., P. 91; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 553.

Mate under Age.]—A mate, whilst on board her majesty's ship "Excellent," which was permanently stationed in Portsmouth harbour, and when under age, executed a will, of which probate was granted to one of the executors named in it. On an application to revoke the probate, the court held that the deceased came under the exception contained in 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 11, as a seaman at sea, and, although a minor at the time, that he had legally executed a will. M'Murdo, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 14; L. R. 1 P. 540; 17 L. T. 393; 16 W. R. 283.

Surgeon in Navy.]—A surgeon in the navy was invalided when on foreign service. On his voyage in a passenger ship, after being so invalided, he wrote a letter signed by him, but not in the presence of two witnesses, giving directions as to the disposition of his personal estate after his death, and died before reaching England:—Held, that the letter was entitled to probate as the "will of a mariner or seaman being at sea," within 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 11. Saunders, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 26; L. R. 1 P. 16; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1027; 13 L. T. 411; 14 W. R. 148.

c. Blind Persons.

When in Conformity with Instructions.]—Will executed by a blind testatrix established, the will being in conformity with the instructions given by the testatrix to her solicitor, though not proved to have been read over to her previously to execution. Edwards v. Fincham, 4 Moore, P. C. 198.

A codicil prepared by a solicitor, appointing him a joint executor, with a legacy, which was read over to the testator, who was blind, and, at the time of execution, of fluctuating capacity, in the presence of the attesting witnesses, pronounced against; there being no direct evidence that it was prepared in consequence of instructions from the testator, or satisfactory proof that at the time of the execution he was cognizant of its contents, and in a condition to exercise, and did exercise, thought, judgment, and reflection respecting the act he was doing. Dufar v. Croft, 3 Moore, P. C. 136.

Acknowledgment of Signature by Testator.]—A testator who is so blind that he can do little more than distinguish night from day, is capable of acknowledging his signature to his will. King v. Berry, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 309.

d. Married Women.

1. In General.

Assent of Husband.]—Will by feme covert good, and provable in the ecclesiastical court if made with assent of her husband. Marlborough (Duke) v. Godolphin (Lord), 2 Ves. 70.

A married woman, having power to dispose of a fund by will, made a will disposing of it, and also of another fund over which she had no power, and appointed her husband her executor, and he proved her will generally:—Held, that as to the latter fund the will was valid, as being made ex assensu viri. Trustees' Relief Act, In re, 16 Sim. 406.

Husband, before marriage, gives bond to enable his intended wife to dispose by deed or will of her freehold estate. She devises during coverture. Her heir-at-law is bound and shall convey to the devisee. Rippon v. Dawding, Ambl. 565.

A general assent to a wife's making a will is not sufficient, but the husband's assent to the particular will which his wife has made ought to be proved. Without the husband's knowledge of the contents of a will made by a married woman, the will cannot be said to be made with his assent. Willock v. Noble, infra.

—— As to Copyholds.]—Feme covert without husband's joining, but in his presence, surrenders her copyhold to use of her will or appointment, and devises it. Quære, whether good. Taylor v. Philips, 1 Ves. 229.

Feme covert cannot at law make will of copyhold lands, surrendered by her before marriage to the use of her will, nor can she declare the uses of the surrender. George v. Jew, Ambl. 627.

Surrender before marriage is void or suspended by marriage. Ib.

—— Realty—Renunciation by Husband.]—Mere renunciation by an intended husband of his marital rights in his wife's real property is not sufficient to clothe her with a testamentary power, or to constitute a valid declaration of trust of the fee. And upon the death of the wife without issue during her husband's lifetime, her heir-at-law, and not her devisee, will be entitled to the land of which she is seised in fee simple. Rippon v. Dawding (Ambl. 565) commented on. Dye v. Dye, 53 L. J., Q. B. 442; 13 Q. B. D. 147; 51 L. T. 145; 33 W. R. 2—C. A.

Power under Wills Act.]—A married woman possesses under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, no greater or different power to make a will than she possessed before that statute. Willock v. Noble, 44 L. J., Ch. 345; L. R. 7 H. L. 580; 32 L. T. 419; 23 W. R. 809.

The 24th section does not, retroactively, operate to give effect to her will as to property which it was not in her power to dispose at the time when the will was made. Ib.

A married woman was entitled to 3,822*l.* consols for her separate use, and, by settlement made on her marriage, she was entitled to 14,000*l.*, if she survived her husband, absolutely, and if she died in his lifetime she had a power of appointing that sum by will notwithstanding coverture. She had also a fee-simple estate over which she had a power of appointment by will. Her husband, who died in her lifetime, bequeathed to her the residue of his personal estate. The wife by will, made in the lifetime of her husband, who consented to her making a will, though it did not appear that he knew the contents of it, after disposing of her separate estate and appointing the fee-simple estate, gave to her niece all the residue of her real and personal estate of which at the time of her death she should have power to dispose. The will was not republished after the husband's death:—Held, that, though the will was valid and effectual so as to pass the consols to which she was entitled for her separate use, and so as to appoint the fee-simple estate, it was not valid or effectual as an exercise of the power of appointing the 14,000*l.*, nor so as to pass the property acquired by her under her husband's will. Ib.

Held, also, that the death of the husband operated as a revocation of any assent he had given to his wife's will. Ib.

Where there is a devise of real estate to a married woman, for her, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, for her and their own use and benefit for ever, free and without the intermeddling or control of her husband:—Held, that a will by the devisee passed the real estate. Hall v. Waterhouse, 5 Giff. 64; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 361; 12 L. T. 297; 13 W. R. 633.

A wife may make a will disposing of property, which she only has in autre droit, as executrix, without her husband's consent. Scammell v. Wilkinson, 2 East. 552.

Sections 8, 24, and 27 of the Wills Act leave unaltered the testamentary capacity of a married woman, though it may give her will, when duly made, a different and more extended operation. The contrary intention required by the 24th and 27th sections of the Wills Act must be one which can be attributed to a testator up to the time of his death. Thomas v. Jones, 1 N. R. 138; 2 John. & H. 475; 31 L. J., Ch. 732; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 6124; 7 L. T. 154; 10 W. R. 853. Affirmed, 1 De G. J. & S. 63; 32 L. J., Ch. 139; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 161; 7 L. T. 610; 11 W. R. 242.

See also cases, post, col. 256.

—— Wife of Convicted Felon.]—The wife of a convicted felon is a feme sole as to the power of disposing by will at least, of property acquired after her husband's conviction. Coward, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 46; 34 L. J., P. 120; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 569; 13 L. T. 210.

Where the husband was attainted of felony, and pardoned on consideration of transportation, and afterwards the wife became entitled to some personal estate as orphan to a freeman of London, this personal estate decreed to belong to the wife as to a feme sole. Newsome v. Bowyer, 3 P. Wms. 37.

A wife whose husband is by act of parliament banished for his life may make a will, and in everything act as a feme sole, and as if the husband was dead. Portland (Countess) v. Prodgers, 2 Vern. 104.

Will made during Coverture—Husband Predeceasing.]—By a marriage settlement personal property was assigned to trustees to pay the income to the wife for her separate use for life, without power of anticipation, and after her death, in case her husband should survive, to pay him so much of the income as she should by deed or will appoint for his life, and subject thereto for the children of the marriage; and in case there should be no children, then upon trust, in case the wife should survive her husband, for her, her executors, administrators, and assigns, for her sole and separate use; but if she should not survive her husband, then for such of her relations as she should, notwithstanding coverture, by deed or will appoint. The wife made a will in exercise of the power during coverture, and survived her husband without having had issue of the marriage:—Held, that the will, made during coverture, was a good disposition of all the property. Bishop v. Wall, 45 L. J., Ch. 773; 3 Ch. D. 194; 25 W. R. 93.

If a wife, with her husband's assent, makes a will of personalty, in which she has an expectant interest, but that interest does not actually vest in her until after her husband's death, she must, to give validity to her will, re-execute it after his death. Willock v. Noble, supra.

So, also, if her will affects property which (by his will made some years before and never altered) he had bequeathed to her absolutely. Ib.

The death of the husband before his wife operates as a revocation of his assent. Ib.

2. Separate Estate.

Rule.]—A feme covert, when not restrained from alienation, has, as incident to her separate estate, and without any express power, a complete right of alienation of that estate by instrument inter vivos or will. Taylor v. Meads, 4 De G. J. & S. 597; 5 N. R. 348; 34 L. J., Ch. 203; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 166; 12 L. T. 6; 13 W. R. 394.

A feme covert may dispose by will of property settled to her "sole and separate use, to be disposed of by her as if sole." She may also dispose by will of property which was hers previous to the marriage, and on her separation was conveyed to trustees for her sole and separate use. White v. Dillon, Wall. Lyn. 302.

Power of disposition by will is incident to trusts for separate uses of feme covert, and husband is a trustee, having taken a transfer. Rich v. Cockell, 9 Ves. 369.

Wife, having specific effects to her separate use, disposes of her separate property by will. After her death her husband sells part of these effects and dies: his representative is accountable to the wife's administratrix with the will annexed. Peacock v. Monk, 2 Ves. 190.

Will, by a wife, of her separate property and its produce, whether derived from her husband or a third person, is good. Fettiplace v. Gorges, 1 Ves. J. 46; 1 R. R. 79.

Where a personal estate is given to the separate use of a feme covert, she is considered as a feme sole, and may dispose of it and all the accrual when beyond seventeen. And where a father gives his daughter a power to dispose of all his real estates, if he had intended to exclude the disability of infancy, he would have taken care to express it, and expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Hearle v. Greenbank, 3 Atk. 709, 714; 1 Ves. 303.

A devise of real estate, without the interposition of trustees, to a married woman and her heirs for her separate use, free from marital control, gives her a right of disposition by will of the equitable fee, in like manner as if she were discoverte. Hall v. Waterhouse, 5 Giff. 64; 6 N. R. 20; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 361; 12 L. T. 297; 13 W. R. 633.

Under Power.]—A wife may, by a deed duly acknowledged to which her husband is a party, acquire a power to dispose by will of her real estates, whether in possession or reversion. Pride v. Bubb, 41 L. J., Ch. 105; L. R. 7 Ch. 64; 25 L. T. 890; 20 W. R. 220.

By a deed of separation made between husband and wife and trustees, and duly acknowledged by the wife, it was agreed that the wife should hold all the real and personal estate of the husband and wife, or either of them in right of the wife, as her separate property, and should have power, by will, to devise or bequeath the same. The husband then purported to convey to a trustee all such real and personal estate, to be held upon corresponding trusts:—Held, that though the wife did not expressly convey real estate vested in her, it was the intention of the deed that she should have power to dispose thereof as if she was unmarried, and accordingly that an estate of which a trustee was seised in trust for her separate use during her life, with remainder to herself in fee, passed by her will. Ib.

Husband conveys lands to a trustee in fee, in trust out of the rents to pay 6*l.* per annum, for the separate use of the wife, and to be at her disposal, then to the use of the husband for life; after his decease, to the use of the heirs of the wife, until the heirs or assignees of the husband should pay to the executors, or administrators, or assigns of the wife, 100*l.* with interest, from the death of the husband, then to the wife for her jointure, remainder over. The wife dies first, and having by her will disposed of this 100*l.*:—Held, the wife had no power to dispose of this money. Sawyer v. Bletsoe, 2 Vern. 328.

If a wife has a power to dispose of money in the life of her husband, she may dispose of it by a writing in nature of a will, though not provided. Ib., 329.

Savings.]—Feme covert may in life of husband dispose of money saved out of her separate maintenance. S. C., 1 Vern. 244.

A feme covert who has pin-money, or a separate maintenance settled on her, may, by writing in nature of will, dispose of what she saves out of it; and such disposition shall bind the husband. Herbert v. Herbert, Pre. Ch. 44.

A wife who lives with her husband and has separate property, over which she has a power of appointment by deed or will, is entitled to dispose, not only of the capital, but also of the savings out of income, and that by a general residuary clause in her will. Humphery v. Richards, 25 L. J., Ch. 442; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 432; 4 W. R. 432.

The income of property settled to the separate use of a wife is not converted into general personalty, nor is the right of control over it abandoned by its being transmitted by the halves of notes of the Bank of England, one half of which only had been received and acknowledged by her before her death, or by being invested in the names of trustees in the purchase of long annuities, without any reference to her settlement or to the source whence the purchase-money arose, or by its being secreted in the house of her husband; but a sum of money found after her death secreted in the house of her husband, without any evidence of the source whence it was derived, was held to be the property of the husband. Ib.

A married woman invested a sum of 525*l.* stock, out of moneys which she had as pin-money, to her separate use, in the names of trustees, in confidence that the fund should be held by them in trust for such persons as she should direct or appoint. She afterwards made a will, giving the interest of the money she had in the stocks to her servant maid for life, and afterwards to the poor of certain parishes. The wife having died, administration, with the will of his deceased wife annexed, was granted to her husband. To a bill filed by the husband alone, as such administrator, against the surviving trustee of the stock, the defendant, by her answer, suggested that the legatees under the will were necessary parties: but the court, without requiring the legatees to be parties to the suit, ordered payment of the stock to the plaintiff, with costs. Musters v. Wright, 2 De G. & Sm. 777.

—— Out of Alimony.]—A married woman to whom alimony has been granted by the ecclesiastical court, may dispose by will, as against her husband, of her savings thereout, in the same manner as if she was a feme sole. Moore v. Barber, 34 L. J., Ch. 667; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 539; 12 L. T. 664; 13 W. R. 935.

Rent-charge for Life — Accumulations.]—A married woman, entitled under her marriage settlement to a rent-charge for life for her separate use, made a will operative to pass separate estate, became a lunatic, survived her husband, and died without having republished her will or made another. Her rent-charge was accumulated by her husband during his life to the amount of 13,000*l.*, which sum on his death was handed over to the trustee of the marriage settlement. The rent-charge and the income of the 13,000*l.* were both accumulated by the trustee after the husband's death:—Held, that the 13,000*l.* and all accumulations passed under the will; but that the rent-charge payable after the death of the husband did not pass. Wilson, In re, Menteath v. Campbell, 26 W. R. 848.

The will purported to be, but was not, in exercise of a power of appointment; the fund purported to be appointed, except so much as passed as separate estate, fell into the general residue:—Held, that the fund which passed by the will was liable to the costs of letters of administration with the will annexed. Ib.

Future Separate Estate—Assent of Husband.]—The will of a married woman who had no personal estate belonging to her for her separate use at the date of the will, made without the assent of her husband, is effectual to dispose of personal estate to her separate use which she afterwards acquires and is entitled to at her death. Charlemont (Earl) v. Spencer, 11 L. R., Ir. 490—C. A.

Separate Estate in Reversion.]—By antenuptial articles, reciting the intended marriage and an agreement to the following effect, the husband agreed to pay to the wife for her sole and separate use during the coverture, or to such person as she should by writing appoint, an annuity of 500*l.*; and also that he, his heirs, executors, and administrators would pay to her, her executors, administrators, or assigns, immediately after his death, the sum of 10,000*l.* for her sole and absolute use and disposal. The wife died in her husband's lifetime:—Held, that she was entitled to the 10,000*l.* for her separate use, and had power to dispose of it by will in her husband's lifetime. Baker v. Ker, 11 L. R., Ir. 3.

Contingent Interest—No Republication.]—By a marriage settlement, the income of certain property was settled on the wife, for her life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation; and the corpus, if there were no children of the marriage, and she survived her husband, on her absolutely, for her separate use; if she should not survive her husband, then as she should by deed or will appoint. She made a will in pursuance of the power in her husband's lifetime, and survived him, but did not republish the will after his death. There were no children of the marriage:—Held, that the will passed her separate property. Bishop v. Wall, 45 L. J., Ch. 773; 3 Ch. D. 194; 25 W. R. 93.

Subsequently acquired Property—Republication when Discovert.]—Testatrix, a married woman, having under her marriage settlement a power of appointment over some 15,000*l.* worth of securities, and being entitled to jewels and furniture for her separate use, by her will in 1883, in exercise of this power and "of all other powers enabling her in this behalf," appointed, gave, and bequeathed "all the property of whatever nature comprised in the said settlement, and over which I have any power of appointment or disposition by will" to trustees upon certain trusts. In August, 1885, the husband of the testatrix died, and she thereupon became entitled to certain real estate, and had 7,500*l.* worth of personal estate; in December, 1885, she made a codicil by which she devised certain real estate therein referred to as having come to her from her late husband, but which did not otherwise refer to or confirm her will. Testatrix died in 1886:—Held, that the will as originally executed was only intended to deal with the property comprised in the settlement, that the codicil merely confirmed the will as it originally stood, and in no way enlarged its scope so as to make it include 7,500*l.* subsequently acquired from her husband, and that as to this amount there was an intestacy. Taylor, In re, Whitby v. Highton, 57 L. J., Ch. 430; 58 L. T. 842; 36 W. R. 683.

Sect. 1, sub-s. 1, of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, gives a married woman power to dispose by will only of property of which she is seised or possessed while she is under coverture. Consequently, notwithstanding s. 24 of the Wills Act, her will made during coverture is not, unless it is re-executed after she has become discovert, effectual to dispose of property which she acquires after the coverture has come to an end. Price, In re, Stafford v. Stafford, or Price v. Stafford, 54 L. J., Ch. 509; 28 Ch. D. 709; 52 L. T. 430; 33 W. R. 20.

Banking accounts were kept in the joint names of husband and wife, and investments in railway stock were made in their joint names. The wife survived her husband five days, having executed a will during coverture:—Held, that the balances of the joint accounts and the joint investments survived to the wife, but did not pass under her will. Young, In re, Trye v. Sullivan, 54 L. J., Ch. 1065; 28 Ch. D. 705; 52 L. T. 754; 33 W. R. 729.

Effect of Married Women's Property Act, 1882—Gift towards the Erection of a Church Invalid.]—Under the stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 108, which contained a power to all persons having an interest in any lands or in any goods or chattels, to give by deed enrolled, or will executed, three months before death, lands not exceeding five acres, or goods and chattels not exceeding in value 500*l.*, for or towards the erecting of any church, with a proviso that the act should not extend to any persons being within age, nor women covert without their husbands to make any such gift:—Held, that the proviso was not affected by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, which by s. 1, sub-s. 1, gave power to a married woman to dispose by will of any real or personal property as her separate property in the same manner as if she were a feme sole. Consequently a gift by a married woman, by will executed three months before death, to the vicar and churchwardens of a church of a sum of 300*l.* to be applied by them in the erection of a new church, and to be paid out of personal estate which was legally applicable for the purpose, was held to be invalid. Smith's Estate, In re, Clements v. Ward, 56 L. J., Ch. 726; 35 Ch. D. 589; 56 L. T. 850; 35 W. R. 514; 51 J. P. 692.

E. Infant.

Boy of age fourteen is competent to make will of personal estate. Holyland, Ex parte, 11 Ves. 11; 8 R. R. 67.

An infant male may make a will of his personal estate at fourteen, a female at twelve. Hyde v. Hyde, Pre. Ch. 316.

A female may make a will at twelve, a male at fifteen, if proved to be a person of discretion. Bishop v. Sharp, 2 Vern. 469.

A child entitled to an orphanage share of his father's personal estate, dying under twenty-one and unmarried, cannot devise it by his will, for by the custom it survives to the other children, but he may devise his share under the statute of distributions. Wilcocks v. Wilcocks, 2 Vern. 559.

A city orphan cannot by will before twenty-one dispose of his orphanage part, so as to prevent survivorship. Anon., Pre. Ch. 537.

Money to be laid out in land; an infant cannot dispose of it by will as money, but it will on the infant's death descend to his heir, who may take either way. Carr v. Ellison, 2 Bro. C. C. 56; Dick. 796.

F. Alien.

An alien, resident in England, purchased an equitable interest in freehold lands, and also a lease for a long term of years, and afterwards obtained letters of denization, which, in terms, conferred upon him, not only the power of acquiring lands in future, but of retaining and enjoying all lands which he had theretofore acquired:—Held, that he had power to devise the freehold and chattel interest in land which he had purchased previously to the letters of denization. Fourdrin v. Gowdey, 3 Myl. & K. 383; 3 L. J., Ch. 171.

By the stat. 7 Anne, c. 5 (A.D. 1708), it was enacted that the children of all natural-born subjects born out of the legiance of her then majesty, her heirs and successors, should be deemed, adjudged, and taken to be natural-born subjects of this kingdom to all intents, constructions, and purposes whatsoever. By the statute 13 Geo. 3, c. 21 (A.D. 1772), it was enacted that all persons born, or thereafter to be born, out of legiance to the crown of England, or of Great Britain, whose fathers were, or should be, by virtue of the statute 7 Anne, c. 5, and the explaining statute 4 Geo. 2, c. 21, entitled to all the rights and privileges of natural-born subjects, should be taken to be and were thereby declared to be natural-born subjects of the crown of Great Britain, as if born in this kingdom. A devise of real property in England was made by a testator domiciled in England, but having been born in Holland, his parents having been married there, and his mother being a Dutch subject. The testator's father was born in Holland in the year 1744, his mother being also a Dutch subject, and his father having also been born in Holland in the year 1696. The testator's paternal great-grandfather was a natural-born British subject, and the commander of a British regiment sent to serve in Holland in 1691, who had married, while on service, a Dutch wife, the testator's grandfather being the eldest son of that marriage. The testator's grandfather took service in his father's regiment, which, however, had then ceased to be in British pay, and the testator's father, in his turn, also joined it:—Held, that the statute 7 Anne, c. 5, gave the testator's grandfather the status of a natural-born British subject, and the statute 13 Geo. 3, c. 21, gave also to the testator's father the rights belonging to that status. De Geere v. Stone, 47 L. T. 434.

Held, further, that the testator himself was an alien, and that, as the statute 33 Vict. c. 14, is not retrospective, the real property of the testator belonged to the crown. Ib.

A. and B., two domiciled English subjects resident in Paris, with the intention of permanently residing there, entered into a contract of marriage, in the French form, in contemplation of a marriage "intended immediately to take place according to law," and also of a marriage in conformity with the rites of the Church of England. The English marriage was duly solemnised in the chapel of the English ambassador at Paris, but the intended French marriage never took place. The contract of marriage stipulated that the future couple should have the enjoyment in common of all property, according to the disposition of the custom of Paris, which should regulate their future community, even in the event of their residing in foreign parts, where different laws prevailed; that the portion which the wife was to bring into community should be received by the husband, and be accounted for by him to his wife; that whatever should come in future to the wife should be invested by the husband, and that the principal should belong to the wife as her own separate property (bien personnel), and that the interest alone should enter into the community. The effect of this contract by the French law, supposing it to be valid, would be to give the wife a testamentary power over her separate estate, independently of her husband. Part of the property brought by the wife into community consisted of a sum of 2,000*l.* charged upon real estates in England. Shortly after the English marriage, and before the solemnisation of the contemplated French marriage, the parties, never having cohabited together, separated entirely. The wife, in the lifetime of her husband, made her will in the English form, disposing of, among other property, the 2,000*l.*:—Held, that the marriage contract gave the wife a testamentary disposition, and that the property passed by the will. Este v. Smyth, 23 L. J., Ch. 705; 18 Jur. 300; 2 W. R. 148.

G. Soundness of Mind.

Presumption of Sanity.]—The competency of a testator is to be assumed until it is impeached by evidence, but it is not to be assumed, as a matter of law, that a will is valid as made by a competent testator unless the court or jury who has to decide upon it is convinced that he was competent. Sutton v. Sadler, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 87; 26 L. J., C. P. 284; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1150; 5 W. R. 880.

If a testamentary paper, rational on the face of it, is shewn to have been executed and attested as prescribed by law, it is presumed, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that it was made by a person of competent understanding; but if there are circumstances in evidence which counterbalance that presumption, the court will pronounce against it, unless on the whole the evidence is sufficient to establish affirmatively that the testator was of sound mind when he executed it. Symes v. Green, 1 Sw. & Tr. 401; 28 L. J., P. 83; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 742.

Knowledge and Approval of Contents of Will—Presumptions.]—Knowledge and approval of a will is necessary and must be proved; the execution of a will by a competent testator is presumptive and primâ facie proof of the fact; and if a competent testator has read the will, or heard it read, the presumption is strong and conclusive, unless there are special circumstances attending the execution, e.g. fraud which includes dereliction of duty. Whether read or not, if in any way the contents of the will have been brought to the notice of the testator, the effect is the same, and even where there has been a reading of the will, but the state of the testator was such that he could not have had an intelligent appreciation of the words, he must be taken to have known and approved of the will if the words have been bonâ fide used by a person whom he trusts to draw it up for him. Beamish v. Beamish, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 7.

Although the instructions for a will may not have originated with a testator, yet his subsequent approval of them is sufficient to render his will valid. Weakness of mind and forgetfulness are not sufficient to invalidate a will, if it is proved that the mind of testator was, when called to exertion, capable of attention and application. Tufnell v. Constable, 3 Knapp, 122.

What constitutes "Soundness of Mind."]—In contemplation of law the expression "sound mind" does not mean a "perfectly-balanced mind." The question of mental soundness is one of degree. In considering it large allowance must be made for the difference of individual character; but in every case the highest degree of mental soundness is required in order to constitute capacity to make a testamentary disposition, inasmuch as the act involves a larger and a wider survey of facts and things than is required in the other transactions of life. Boughton v. Knight, 42 L. J., P. 25; L. R. 3 P. 64; 28 L. T. 562.

A man moved by capricious, frivolous, mean, or even bad motives, may disinherit wholly or partially his children, and leave his property to strangers. He may take an unduly harsh view of the character and conduct of his children, but there is a limit beyond which it will cease to be a question of harsh, unreasonable judgment, and then the repulsion which a parent exhibits to his child must be held to proceed from some mental defect. If such repulsion, amounting to a delusion as to character, is shewn to have existed previously to the execution of his will, it will be for the party setting up that document to establish that it was inoperative when the will was made, and the jury, in determining whether or not the delusion was operative, will have regard to the contents of the will and the circumstances surrounding the execution of it. Ib.

To constitute a sound disposing mind, a testator must not only be able to understand that he is by will giving the whole of his property to one object of his regard, but he must also have capacity to comprehend the extent of the property, and the nature of the claims of others whom by his will he is excluding from participation in that property. Harwood v. Baker, 3 Moore, P. C. 282.

A sound and disposing mind means a mind of natural capacity, not unduly impaired by old age or enfeebled by illness or tainted by morbid influence. Smith v. Tebbitt, 36 L. J., P. 97; L. R. 1 P. 398; 16 L. T. 841; 16 W. R. 18.

If disease is once shewn to exist in the mind of a testator,—it matters not that the disease is discoverable only on a certain subject, or that on all other subjects the action of the mind is apparently sound and the conduct even prudent, —the testator must be pronounced incapable. Further, the same result follows whether or not the particular subjects upon which disease is manifested have any connection with the testamentary disposition before the court. Ib.

The testamentary capacity involves more than the mere fact of recognising familiar persons or objects, and means a sound disposing mind; that is to say, a power of understanding the nature of the property and the family, and the effect of the will. Sefton (Earl) v. Hopwood, 1 F. & F. 578.

A bill in equity will lie to set aside a will made under the influence of superstitious terrors. Middleton v. Sherburne, 4 Y. & C. 358.

An Englishman who had resided for many years in India, and become imbued with Eastern notions, professing himself at different times a believer in the Hindoo and Mahometan faiths, and to a great degree adopting the habits of life of the latter, by his will (which, with the exception of a small legacy, excluded his brother, his only next of kin, from any benefit), after bequeathing several legacies and specific bequests, gave the residue of his property to the Turkish ambassador, or the person for the time being representing him, to be applied for the benefit of the poor of the city of Constantinople, and for the erection of a cenotaph at Constantinople, with a light burning, and a description of the testator engraved thereon. This will, which was in conformity with his written instructions, was duly executed during the last illness of the testator. The prerogative court, by its sentence, refused probate, upon the ground of the extraordinary nature of the bequest, coupled with the wild and extravagant conduct of the testator about the time of execution, which the court considered as amounting to insanity. Such sentence reversed upon appeal, and the will established, the judicial committee being of opinion that, as the will was in conformity with the written instructions of the deceased, the true test to ascertain its validity was to look into the previous habits and opinions of the testator to account for the extravagant behaviour and language; and that though the dispositions in the will might be absurd and irrational in a native of England and a Christian according to English habits, they were accounted for in the case of the testator, who had, in early life, adopted the manners and mode of living of a Mahometan. Austen v. Graham, 8 Moore, P. C. 493.

A will executed by a husband on his deathbed in favour of his wife, to the exclusion of the other members of his family, he being of a weakened and impaired capacity at the time of the factum, from disease affecting the brain, which produced torpor, and rendered his mind incapable of exertion unless roused, pronounced against, the disposition in the will being a total departure from, and contrary to, his previous expressed intentions. Harwood v. Baker, 3 Moore, P. C. 282.

Testator Subject to Delusions.]—The mere fact that a testator is subject to insane delusions is not sufficient reason why he should be held to have lost his right to make a will, if the jury is satisfied that the delusions have not affected the general faculties of his mind and cannot have influenced him in any particular disposition of his property. Banks v. Goodfellow, 39 L. J., Q. B. 237; L. R. 5 Q. B. 549; 22 L. T. 813. Followed in Murfett v. Smith, 12 P. D. 116; 57 L. T. 498; 51 J. P. 374.

Where insanity, though confined to certain one or more delusions, has once existed, and the evidence shews the deceased to have been instructed to conceal the continued existence of such delusion or delusions, and the evidence to prove perfect recovery of capacity is at least doubtful, a will made by a person so affected, though rational and rationally instructed and executed, is not entitled to probate. Dyce Sombre v. Troup, Deane, Ecc. Rep. 22.

Where a person afflicted with habitual insanity, with intermissions, makes a will, the fact that the will is a rational one, and made in a rational manner, though not conclusive, is strong evidence of its having been made in a lucid interval. Nichols v. Binns, 1 Sw. & Tr. 239.

Where a person is labouring under an insane delusion, his sanity is to be tested by directing his attention to the subject-matter of such delusion, but where a person is afflicted with habitual insanity, unaccompanied with delusions, his sanity is to be tested by his answers to questions, his apparent recollection of past transactions, and his reasoning justly with regard to them, and with regard to the conduct of individuals. Ib.

Exposition of the doctrine of monomania and partial insanity as applied to wills. Waring v. Waring, 6 Moore, P. C. 341; 12 Jur. 947.

If the mind is unsound on one subject, provided that unsoundness is at all times existing upon that subject, it is erroneous to suppose such a mind is really sound on other subjects; it is only sound in appearance, for if the subject of the delusion be presented to it, the unsoundness would be manifested by such a person believing in the suggestions of fancy, as if they were realities; any act, therefore, done by such a person, however apparently rational that act may appear to be, is void, as it is the act of a morbid or unsound mind. Ib.

Delusion is the belief of things as realities which exist only in the imagination of the patient. The frame of mind which indicates his incapacity to struggle against such an erroneous belief constitutes an unsound frame of mind. Ib.

To constitute a lucid interval, the party must freely and voluntarily, and without any design, at the time, of pretending sanity and freedom from delusion, confess his delusion. Ib.

Where delusions are proved to have existed, both before and after the factum, the presumption is, that they existed at the time of the factum, and in such case proof of a lucid interval, at the time of the factum, is thrown upon the party propounding a will. It is immaterial that the delusions do not appear on the face of the will. Ib.

A will written in 1834 by a widow (without children, a person originally eccentric, and, in after-life, developing unsound delusions), conferring great benefit on a stranger, the will not betraying, on the face of it, marks of insanity, in the circumstances pronounced against. Ib.

A will was held to be invalid on the ground that the testator, though sane in his general conduct, laboured under an unsound delusion of mind with respect to his only child. Dew v. Clarke, 5 Russ. 163 ; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 186.

When Competency Doubtful.]—On motion, where the competency of a testator was doubtful, the court refused to make a grant, as in the case of intestacy, but made a grant with the will annexed. Hanson v. Shepherd, 17 L. T. 123 ; 16 W. R. 144.

Will of a testator subsequently found a lunatic directed to be deposited in the custody of the master. Thompson, In re, 1 Russ. & M. 355.

Question for Jury.]—At a trial, where the question was as to the testamentary capacity of a testator, it was proved that at one period of his lifetime he had been confined in a lunatic asylum, and that at the time of making his will he was subject to certain fixed delusions. These delusions, however, could not be connected with any of the dispositions in the will. The judge left it to the jury to say whether at the time of making his will the testator was capable of having such a knowledge and an appreciation of facts, and was so far master of his intentions and free from delusions, as to be able to have a will of his own in the disposition of his property and to act upon it :—Held, that there was no misdirection. Banks v. Goodfellow, 39 L. J., Q. B. 237 ; L. R. 5 Q. B. 549 ; 22 L. T. 813.

W. S. was subject to insane delusions on one particular subject. Apart from them, he appeared to be perfectly rational, managed his affairs with ordinary prudence, and exhibited in various ways considerable mental capacity. His last will was contested by his next of kin on the ground that when he executed it he was not of sound mind. The president, in directing the jury, followed the ruling in Banks v. Goodfellow, supra, in which it was laid down that the mere fact that a testator is subject to insane delusions is no sufficient reason why he should be held to have lost his right to make a will, if the jury are satisfied that the delusions have not affected the general faculties of his mind and cannot have influenced him in any particular disposition of his property. Smee v. Smee, 49 L. J., P. 8 ; 5 P. D. 84 ; 28 W. R. 703 ; 44 J. P. 220.

Proof and Establishment.]—A will cannot be admitted to probate in a contested case, unless the strength or degree of proof offered is such as to satisfy the court, without reasonable doubt, that the testator was, at the time of execution, of sound mind, memory, and understanding. Keays v. M'Donnell, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 611.

Therefore, when the evidence was inconsistent and unsatisfactory, and the balance was against his competency, the court refused to grant probate of the will. Ib.

Testamentary incapacity established by the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses merely, without any direct evidence on the part of the defendant. Ib.

A testator gave to his niece all his bond debts, and he gave C., a person in whom he reposed great confidence, besides other benefits, all the residue of his property. Four months after the date of the will the testator took from a bond debtor a conveyance of an estate to himself for life, with remainder to C. in fee, and the bond was delivered up to be cancelled. C. took a part in promoting this transaction, but no direct fraud was established against him, and it did not appear that he exercised any positive control over the testator. Two days afterwards the testator committed suicide. The evidence as to the soundness of the testator's mind was conflicting, many acts consistent with sanity having been done by him up to the time of his death ; but the court, being of opinion, upon the whole evidence, that the testator, at the time of purchasing the estate in exchange for the bond, was of unsound mind, and considering the state of his mind in connection with the confidence which he placed in C., without directing an issue, set aside the conveyance, and declared the testator's niece entitled to the benefit of the bond. Steed v. Calley, 1 Keen, 620.

Where sanity is impeached, and the evidence is conflicting, the question is not, whether the facts adduced in support of it are not in general indications of sanity; but whether they are inconsistent with, or sufficiently explanatory of, the indications of insanity produced on the other side, on which the onus lies. Ib.

Where a will and codicils were made by a person of the age of eighty-six, of feeble and impaired mind, in favour of her medical attendant, with whom she resided, and the will was prepared by her solicitor, the instruments were pronounced for, upon the balance of evidence negativing alleged fraud, although inconsistent with former testamentary dispositions ; but, on a further allegation as to facts noviter ad notitiam perventa being admitted, the second codicil was pronounced against, and the sentence below reversed as to it. Jones v. Goodrich, 5 Moore, P. C. 16.

The question being as to the sanity of a testatrix, evidence of a surviving medical attendant in a lunatic asylum in which she resided at the time of making the will was received to shew that she was sane, and that her continuance in the asylum was voluntary. Martin v. Johnston, 1 F. & F. 122.

Will of a resident in a receptacle for lunatics, established upon the then state of his mind, compared with antecedent declarations. Distinctions, if not then competent. Bootle v. Blundell, 19 Ves. 508 ; 15 R. R. 93.

—— Onus of Proof on Party propounding.]—The burden of proving capacity to make a will rests upon those who propound the will, and à fortiori when it appears that the testator was subject to delusions. Smee v. Smee, supra.

He who relies upon a will, in opposition to the title of the heir-at-law, must prove that it is the will of a person of sound mind. Such proof having been given, if incompetency of the testator to make a will is alleged, it is incumbent on the party alleging it to prove it. Sutton v. Sadler, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 87 ; 26 L. J., C. P. 284 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1150 ; 5 W. R. 880.

Where a testamentary disposition is propounded under circumstances of suspicion, as where the party propounding it was the drawer, and was benefited by it, and it was executed at a time when the testator was of doubtful capacity, without any evidence of instructions previously given, or knowledge of its contents, the party propounding it must prove the testator knew and approved the contents of the instrument. Mitchell v. Thomas, 6 Moore, P. C. 137.

A codicil, which varied the bequest contained in the will of the testator, to the benefit of the drawer, and executed at a time when the testator was supposed to be dying, in the absence of proof of the knowledge by the testator of its contents, pronounced against. Ib.

Proof of the actual reading over of the instrument to the testator before execution is not necessary. Ib.

A will and five codicils being propounded, the will and four codicils were established, but the last codicil, which was drawn up by a solicitor in his own favour, was rejected, the testator being of fluctuating capacity, and the proof that he knew the contents of the instrument being insufficient. Dufaur v. Croft, 3 Moore, P. C. 136.

Insanity having been once established, proof of recovery is upon the other party; otherwise the insanity must be established by proof applying to the particular date. White v. Wilson, 13 Ves. 88.

When a testator has been found to be of unsound mind under a commission of lunacy, which commission has not been superseded, the legal presumption is against the validity of any testamentary instrument, and the onus of proving the soundness of mind of the testator is imposed upon the party setting up the instrument. Under such circumstances it is competent to the party setting up a testamentary instrument to maintain either that the testator was always of sound mind, or that though he may have been formerly of unsound mind, he had completely recovered, or that the will was made during a lucid interval. In such a case, where unsoundness of mind has been before proved, though previous circumstances are entitled to some weight, the true inquiry is, whether the deceased testator had entirely recovered, or was of sound mind at the time of giving instructions for and the execution of the instrument in question. A will and codicil made and executed under such circumstances, when it was clearly proved that at the time of their execution the insane delusions of the testator which existed at the time the commission of lunacy was issued still continued to exist, were held by the judicial committee of the privy council, affirming the judgment of the prerogative court, to be invalid. The circumstances of the case being deemed to be such as to make it essential to the purposes of justice that the validity of the testamentary instruments should be submitted to judicial decision, the appellants (the executor and the parties interested under the will) were allowed one set of costs between them out of the estate, including the costs of the appeal. East India Co. v. Dyce Sombre, 4 W. R. 714.

—— Evidence of Acts of Competency.]—On a question as to the competency of a devisor to make a will, letters addressed to him found after his death open, with their seals broken, in a cupboard under his book-case in a private room, together with other letters indorsed by him, to some of which answers had been written by him, are not admissible, as there is nothing to shew any knowledge or act of the testator with regard to them. Wright v. Doe d. Tatham, 2 N. & P. 303; 7 A. & E. 313; 7 L. J., Ex. 340. Affirmed in Dom. Proc., 4 Bing. (N.C.) 489; 6 Scott, 58; 5 Cl. & F. 670.

But a letter addressed to the testator requesting him to communicate on a matter of business with his attorney, and found with the other letters indorsed by the attorney, who lived some miles off, is admissible, as it shews an act done upon it by the testator. Ib.

Where the parol evidence is of a very contradictory nature, it is safer to judge by collateral facts, where they are sufficiently strong, as to the competency of a party to make a will. Wright v. Tatham, 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 265.

A long and varied correspondence, carried on by and with the testator for a series of years, and the execution of various deeds by him, and of others to him, involving property to a large amount, is sufficient to shew his general competency to dispose of his property. Ib.

Lunatic — Report of Chancery Visitors — Admissibility as Evidence.]—Sect. 186 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, provides that (1) the reports of the chancery visitors shall be filed and kept secret in their office, and shall not be open to the inspection of any person save the members of the board of visitors and the judge in lunacy, and such persons as he specially appoints; (2) all reports relating to any particular patient shall be destroyed on his death, &c. On the trial of a probate action, where the testatrix had been found of unsound mind on inquisition, a visitor stated that these reports had not been destroyed: —Held, that the reports must be treated as destroyed on the death of the testatrix, and could not be produced even on subpœna. Subsequently the visitors gave evidence of the state of mind of the testatrix at the times when their reports were made. Roe v. Nix, 62 L. J., P. 36; [1893] P. 55; 1 R. 472; 68 L. T. 26.

Costs.]—The jury having found that the testatrix was of testamentary capacity when she made her will, the court pronounced for the will, and, following Davis v. Gregory (L. R. 3 P. 28), gave all parties their costs out of the estate. Ib.

—— Right of Executor to.]—Primâ facie an executor is justified in propounding his testator's will, and if the facts within his knowledge at the time he does so tend to shew eccentricity merely on the part of the testator, and he is totally ignorant at the time of the circumstances and conduct which afterwards induce a jury to find that the testator was insane at the date of the will, he will, on the principle that the testator's conduct was the cause of litigation, be entitled to receive his costs out of the estate, although the will is pronounced against. Boughton v. Knight, 42 L. J., P. 25; L. R. 3 P. 64; 28 L. T. 562.

H. Undue Influence and Fraud.

Equitable Jurisdiction.]—A will of land may be good at law as well executed, and yet ill in equity, as if obtained by fraud. Goss v. Tracy, 1 P. W. 288; 2 Vern. 699.

Legatee of a bond, which after the will and shortly previous to the suicide of the testator had been cancelled on a conveyance of the estate held as a collateral security, decreed entitled to have the bond replaced, the transaction being one of doubtful sanity and fraudulent exercise of influence. Steed v. Calley, 1 Keen, 620.

What constitutes Undue Influence.]—Undue influence may exist in the form of bad companionship and bad example, and yet not be sufficient to invalidate a will made under its operation. To be within the meaning of the rule of law, so as to produce that effect, it must be an influence exercised by coercion or by fraud. But actual violence is not necessary to constitute coercion; imaginary terrors may be sufficient for that purpose. Boyse v. Rossborough, 6 H. L. Cas. 2; 26 L. J., Ch. 256; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 373; 5 W. R. 414.

In order to set aside the will of a person of sound mind, it must be shewn that the circumstances under which it was executed are inconsistent with any hypothesis but that of undue influence, which cannot be presumed, but must be shewn to have been exercised, and exercised in relation to the will itself, and not merely to other transactions. Ib.

A pressure, of whatever character, whether it acts on the fears or on the hopes of an individual, if so exerted as to overpower the volition, without convincing the judgment, is a species of restraint under which no valid will can be made. Hall v. Hall, 37 L. J., P. 40; L. R. 1 P. 481; 18 L. T. 152; 16 W. R. 544.

Supposing a will made by a person of testamentary capacity, it is not sufficient to avoid it that it is not such a will as a sensible person would make, or that it is harsh, capricious, or unjust; nor, on the other hand, is it enough to avoid it on the ground of undue influence, that it was made under the influence of acts of attention and kindness; but the influence or importunity must be such as to deprive the testator of the free exercise of his will. Sefton (Earl) v. Hopwood, 1 F. & F. 578.

Undue influence, to defeat a will, made by a person otherwise of testamentary capacity, must not be such as arises from the influence of gratitude, affection, or esteem, but it must be the control of another will over that of the testator, whose faculties have been so impaired as to submit to that control, so that he has ceased to be a free agent, and has quite succumbed to the power of that controlling will. Lovett v. Lovett, 1 F. & F. 581.

To establish undue influence sufficient to invalidate a will, it must be shewn that the will of the testator was coerced into doing that which he did not desire to do, and the mere fact that the testator in making his will was influenced by immoral considerations does not amount to such undue influence so long as the dispositions of the will express the wishes of the testator. Wingrove v. Wingrove, 55 L. J., P. 7; 11 P. D. 81; 34 W. R. 260; 50 J. P. 56.

Exaggeration of the conduct of a party benefited by a will towards the testatrix, though it induce her to revoke the will, and the bequest made in his favour, and to execute another will to his exclusion, is not such a fraud as to destroy free agency, and render the will invalid. Neither does such conduct amount to undue influence or importunity. Browning v. Budd, 6 Moore, P. C. 430.

—— Different from that in Gifts inter vivos.]—The influence which is undue in the case of gifts inter vivos is different from that which is required to set aside a will. In the case of gifts or other transactions inter vivos, it is considered by the courts of equity that the natural influence arising out of the relation of parent and child, husband and wife, doctor and patient, attorney and client, confessor and penitent, or guardian and ward exerted by those who possess it to obtain a benefit for themselves is an undue influence. Gifts or contracts brought about by it are, therefore, set aside, unless the party benefited can shew affirmatively that the other party to the transaction was placed in such a position as would enable him to form an absolutely free and unfettered judgment. The law regarding wills is different. The natural influence which such relations as those in question involve may lawfully be exerted to obtain a will or a legacy, so long as the testator thoroughly understands what he is doing and is a free agent; and hence the rules adopted in courts of equity in relation to gifts inter vivos are not applicable to the making of wills. Parfitt v. Lawless, 41 L. J., P. 68; L. R. 2 P. 462; 27 L. T. 215; 21 W. R. 200.

May affect Part of Will only.] — Where a portion of will has been introduced through fraud or perhaps inadvertence, it may be rejected and probate granted of the remainder if the two are severable. But where the rejection of part alters the sense of the remainder, quære, whether there is a valid will within the meaning of 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9. Rhodes v. Rhodes, 51 L. J., P. C. 53; 7 App. Cas. 192; 46 L. T. 463; 30 W. R. 709. S. P. Trimlestown (Lord) v. D'Alton, Dow & Cl. 85.

Evidence—Undue Influence.]—Where there is evidence tending to shew some mental incapacity, and also evidence tending to shew some undue influence, it is easier to satisfy the court that undue influence has been exercised, inasmuch as the degree of influence required to induce a person of strong mind and in good health to do any act is much greater than that which would induce a person of feeble mental capacity and in a weak state of health. Hampson v. Guy, 64 L. T. 778—C. A.

Although a man have a mind of sufficient soundness and discretion to regulate his affairs in general, yet if such a dominion or influence be obtained over him as to prevent his exercising such discretion in the making his will, he cannot be considered as having such a disposing mind as will give effect to his will. Quære, what evidence will be sufficient to establish such a case. Mountain v. Bennet, 1 Cox, 353.

Injunction granted to restrain executor claiming under a will, and also by gift from testatrix in lifetime, from selling, upon affidavit of undue influence. Edmunds v. Bird, 1 Ves. & B. 542.

Knowledge and Approval of Contents—Presumption—Proof.]—There is no rule that if it is proved or admitted that a testator was of sound mind, memory and understanding, and that a will has been read over to him or that he has read it to himself, and that he has signed it, he must be taken to have known and approved of the contents of such will, and that such knowledge and approval must be held to extend to every part of such will. Fulton v. Andrew, 44 L. J., P. 17; L. R. 7 H. L. 448; 32 L. T. 209; 23 W. R. 566.

The presumption in favour of every part of the will arising where these circumstances exist may be removed, where the proof that the will was read to or by the testator is open to suspicion, or where there is room for a suggestion of fraud, especially in a case where the will has been prepared and propounded by strangers in blood to the testator, but who are beneficiaries under it. Ib.

The rule in Barry v. Butlin (infra), Fulton

v. Andrew (supra), and Brown v. Fisher (infra), that those who take a benefit under a will and have been instrumental in preparing or obtaining it, have the onus thrown upon them of shewing the righteousness of the transaction is not confined to the single case in which a will is prepared by or on the instructions of the person taking a benefit under it, but extends to all cases in which circumstances exist which excite the suspicion of the court. Tyrrell v. Painton, [1894] P. 151; 6 R. 540; 70 L. T. 453; 42 W. R. 343—C. A.

If it is proved or admitted that a testator is of sound mind, memory and understanding, that a will has been read over to him, or that he has read it to himself, and that he has put his signature to it, the question whether he knew and approved of the contents of such will must be answered in the affirmative, and such knowledge and approval will be held to extend to every part of the will. Atter v. Atkinson, L. R. 1 P. 665; 20 L. T. 404.

It is essential to the validity of a will that at the time of its execution the testator should know and approve of its contents. Hastilow v. Stobie, 35 L. J., P. 18; L. R. 1 P. 64; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1039; 13 L. T. 473; 14 W. R. 211.

Unless fraud can be proved in obtaining the execution of a will, the fact that such will has been read over to a capable testator on the occasion of its execution, or that its contents have been brought to his notice in any other way, will, when coupled with his execution of it, be conclusive evidence that he both knew and approved its contents. Guardhouse v. Blackburne, 35 L. J., P. 116; L. R. 1 P. 109; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 278; 14 L. T. 69; 14 W. R. 463.

A testatrix having made a will, whereby she charged certain legacies upon her real estate, and having subsequently desired to grant an additional legacy, her attorney prepared a draft codicil, which he carefully read over to her, and which she approved. He immediately afterwards made a fair copy, but inserted certain words not consistent with the instructions of the testatrix, nor contained in the draft. This copy was hastily read over to the testatrix, and executed by her:—Held, that parol evidence could not be admitted to vary the written provisions contained in a paper so executed. Ib.

A testatrix during her last illness made a will in favour of two persons who were strangers in blood. The will was in accordance with her previously-expressed intentions, but the instructions for it were given to the persons interested under it when no one else was present, and it was not read over to her, and its contents were not distinctly explained to her before or at the time of the execution. Her next of kin were denied access to her during her illness:—Held, that there was evidence that the testatrix knew and approved of the contents of the will, and it was pronounced for; but the costs of the unsuccessful opposition of the next of kin were allowed out of the estate. Goodacre v. Smith, 36 L. J., P. 43; L. R. 1 P. 359; 15 L. T. 511; 15 W. R. 561.

If a testatrix has given instructions for her will, and it is prepared in accordance with them, the will will be valid, though at the time of execution the testatrix merely recollects that she has given those instructions, but believes that the will which she is executing is in accordance with them. Parker v. Felgate, 52 L. J., P. 95; 8 P. D. 171; 32 W. R. 186; 47 J. P. 808.

—— Onus probandi.]—The burden of proving that a testator knew and approved of the contents of his will lies upon the party propounding it. Cleare v. Cleare, 38 L. J., P. 81; L. R. 1 P. 655; 20 L. T. 497; 17 W. R. 687.

A party who pleads that the deceased did not know and approve of the contents of his will may therefore, upon that question, cross-examine the witnesses produced by the plaintiff, without being liable to costs, if he has given the notice required by the rule of court. Ib.

The onus of proving an instrument as the last will of a free and competent testator lies on him who propounds it, and where the person propounding is himself a beneficiary under it and also a stranger in blood to the testator, the court should be vigilant and jealous in examining the evidence supplied in support of the instrument or will. Fulton v. Andrew, supra.

Where there are circumstances of suspicion attending the making and execution of a testamentary paper, as where the party propounding it is the person benefited, and he prepared the paper, and had it executed at a time when the testator was supposed to be dying, the court of probate requires proof to satisfy it that the testator was aware of the contents of the paper, and approved of it. And this rule has not been altered by the late Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 26, which assimilates the formalities for the execution of wills of real and personal estate. But proof of actual reading over of the paper to the testator is not necessary. Michell v. Thomas, 12 Jur. 967.

Wherever such circumstances exist, and whatever their nature may be, it is for those who propound the will to prove affirmatively that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the document; and it is only when this is done that the burden of proof is thrown on those who oppose the will. Tyrrell v. Painton, supra.

—— Will procured by Beneficiary—Not read over—Contents not known and approved.]—The court is to approach with suspicion the consideration of a will procured and propounded by a person taking a large benefit thereunder, although fraud is not pleaded by the person opposing the will; and where there was no testamentary incapacity on the part of the testator or the witnesses. Where a beneficiary, who had procured and subsequently propounded a will, failed, under those circumstances, to satisfy the court by affirmative and conclusive evidence, that the testator did in fact know and approve of the contents of the will which he had actually executed. The court, applying and acting upon the principles laid down in Fulton v. Andrew (supra), refused probate of such will, with costs. Brown v. Fisher, 63 L. T. 465.

Legacy to a Person who prepared Will and took active Part in its Execution.]—A person propounding a will prepared by himself without the assistance of any third person, and under which he takes a benefit, is bound to give clear and convincing evidence that the testator knew and approved of the clause under which he takes the benefit; and this principle applies even in the case of a near relative of the testator. In the absence of such evidence, probate of that portion of the will may be refused, and granted of the remainder. Hegarty v. King, 7 L. R., Ir. 18—C. A.

Several authorities, in which the fact of a legatee being the writer of a will and similar suspicious circumstances have been held to raise presumptions against it, reviewed and compared, and the principle of the decisions observed on. Von Stentz v. Comyn, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 622.

Circumstance that one residuary devisee was the attorney who drew the will not decisive evidence of fraud. Paine v. Hall, 18 Ves. 475.

Where an attorney, who draws the will of the testator, takes a benefit under it, the case is to be considered with peculiar jealousy, and the jury who try the validity of the will must be satisfied that the testator knew its contents; but their consideration need not to be confirmed to direct evidence, and they may find for the will upon circumstantial evidence only. Raworth v. Marriott, 1 Myl. & K. 643.

Where a legacy is given to the party employed to draw the will, it may raise a presumption more or less strong, according to circumstances, against the validity of the will; but there is no such rule as that it is necessary in every such case to prove that the will was actually read over to the testator, or prepared from instructions given by him. Barry v. Butlin, 2 Moore, P. C. 480.

A will written, or procured to be written, by the party to be benefited by it is not void, but is open to suspicion, and if not clearly shewn to be according to the intentions of deceased will be rejected. Accordingly, a will of a married woman, under a power prepared by husband's solicitor, unknown to testatrix, by which he was appointed sole executor and residuary legatee, and executed by the wife under his control, was declared void, as, according to the evidence, contrary to her previously-expressed intentions. Baker v. Batt, 2 Moore, P. C. 317.

It is the duty of any person who expects that a will is about to be made in his favour to see that the testator receives proper and independent advice, and he should take care that the testimony called in support of the will should not be that of himself alone, but that it should be independent and impartial. The mind of the testator should be left perfectly free and untrammelled. The fact that a person propounding a will under which he benefits largely is the person who alone took the instructions for it and either prepared or procured its preparation, is a circumstance of grave suspicion, and calls for special care and vigilance on the part of the court and jury in examining the evidence adduced in support of it; and unless that suspicion is removed and the court and jury are judicially satisfied that the terms of the document actually express the true wishes of the testator, the plea of undue influence is established, and the will ought to be pronounced against. The onus probandi being in every case upon the person propounding a will, he must satisfy the court and jury that the instrument he is setting up is the true last will of a free and capable testator. Parker v. Duncan, 62 L. T. 642; 54 J. P. 280.

The person propounding the alleged last will of a testatrix was the chairman of the board of guardians of the union, in whose workhouse infirmary the testatrix was an inmate at the time the alleged will was made, and in which she died. The plaintiff obtained from a solicitor a form of will, filled up in pencil; he refused to allow the solicitor to go to the deceased. Having got the form of will, the plaintiff called on a friend of his own, and with him went to the infirmary, and the testatrix put her mark to the will in their presence and that of a nurse. The learned judge directed the jury as above, and, in the result, they found the plea of undue influence established. Ib.

Confessor and Penitent.]—A Roman Catholic lady gave the bulk of her property to a Roman Catholic priest, whom she named residuary legatee and devisee. He had lived in her house, and had been her confessor for a number of years:—Held, that undue influence could not be inferred from the relation in which he stood to the testatrix—confessor and penitent—combined with the disposition of the property, and that it lay on the party who impeached the residuary clause on the ground of undue influence to establish the allegation. Parfitt v. Lawless, supra.

A Roman Catholic priest had resided with the testatrix and her husband many years as chaplain, and for a part of the time as confessor. He was a confessor at the time the will in dispute was made. There was no evidence that he had interfered in the making of such will, or that he had procured the gift of the residue to himself, or that he had brought such gift about by coercion or dominion exercised over the testatrix against her will, or by importunity not to be resisted. Moreover, it was not shewn that even in the common affairs of life, in business or in anything else, the testatrix was under the priest's control or dominion:—Held, that there was no evidence to go to a jury on an issue of undue influence. Ib.

Doctor and Patient.]—Although there is no rule of law which forbids a man to bequeath his property to his medical attendant, yet it is not a favourable circumstance for one in such a confidential position, with respect to a patient labouring under a severe disease, to take a large benefit under such patient's will, more particularly if executed in secrecy, and the whole transaction assumes the character of a clandestine proceeding. In such a case the onus will lie very heavily upon the party benefited to maintain the validity of the will. Ashwell v. Lomi, L. R. 2 P. 477.

Where a will is prepared and written by a medical man in attendance on a testatrix, at that time dangerously ill, and without professional advice, by which he is made the principal object of the testatrix's bounty, to the exclusion of her near relations, a court of justice, regarding the subsisting relation of a medical man and patient, will view his conduct with the utmost jealousy. Greville v. Tylee, 7 Moore, P. C. 320.

Duty of Solicitor in Drafting Will—Legacy to Solicitor's Wife.]—B., a solicitor, drew the will of R., his father-in law, which bequeathed a share of residue, amounting to 45,000*l.* to B.'s wife, and appointed B. sole executor. The will contained no direction that this sum should be for the separate use of B.'s wife. There was no evidence as to what had passed between B. and R. at the time of the execution of the will:—Held, that, in the absence of evidence, the court could not assume such a dereliction of duty on B.'s part in not informing R. of the effect of the will, as to make B. a trustee for his wife. Birchall, In re, Wilson v. Birchall, 44 L. T. 243; 29 W. R. 461.

Animus testandi.]—It is not sufficient to support a devise that the testatrix knew she was signing her will and disposing of her property, unless also the particular devise expresses her mind and will; but it is not sufficient evidence that it does not do so, that it is a devise to the mother of the attorney who prepared the will, and that it was made in a state of great debility on her deathbed. Haddock v. Trotman, 1 F. & F. 31.

A person sent instructions to his solicitor to prepare a codicil, by which his daughter was to be deprived of all participation in his property. The document so prepared was executed by him in the presence of two witnesses. At the trial of an issue, whether this document was a codicil to his will or not, evidence was admitted to shew, that neither at the time he sent instructions for, nor when he executed, the paper, did he intend it to operate on his death, and the jury found a verdict in accordance with that evidence:—Held, that as the facts proved plainly and conclusively established that he had no animus testandi when he signed the paper, it could not be admitted to probate. Lister v. Smith, 3 Sw. & Tr. 282; 33 L. J., P. 29; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 107; 9 L. T. 578; 12 W. R. 319.

The court will not pronounce against a properly-executed paper, testamentary on the face of it, simply because a jury has been induced to find that it was not intended to operate as testamentary. It must consider the character and nature of the evidence upon which the verdict is founded. Ib.

A testator ordered a will to be drawn up, leaving blanks for names of legatees, trustees, executors, and the amounts of an annuity and legacies. He did not sign it until shortly before his death, when he did so at the earnest desire of his friends, but expressing his doubts as to its validity in consequence of the blanks not being filled up. These were not filled up by him because he did not know the amount of his money or property, and frequently expressed an intention of having a valuation made in order to enable him to fill them up in a satisfactory manner. The court considered that the requirements of 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 26, had been complied with, and declined to hold, on a motion supported by affidavit only, that the testator had no animus testandi at the time he signed the will. Pool, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 97; L. R. 1 P. 206; 14 L. T. 859; 14 W. R. 976.

When a person claims probate of a paper signed and attested, but not on the face of it clearly testamentary, the burthen of proof is on that person to satisfy the court that it was executed animo testandi. Thorneroft v. Lashmar, 2 Sw. & Tr. 479; 31 L. J., P. 150; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 595; 6 L. T. 476; 10 W. R. 783. See also Cases post.

II. TESTAMENTARY INSTRUMENTS, WHAT ENTITLED TO PROBATE, &c.

A. General Principles.

What Testamentary—Paper duly executed as Testamentary Document.]—A person executed as a will a paper writing, which commenced: "I have given all that I have to B."; and contained provisions which were consistent with an intention that it should take effect after his death:—Held, that the instrument was testamentary. Coles, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 21; L. R. 2 P. 362; 25 L. T. 852; 20 W. R. 211.

A paper, purporting to be a last will and testament, duly executed, but containing simply an appointment of a guardian of his children by a father, and not disposing of personal property, nor appointing an executor, is not entitled to probate. Morton, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 422; 33 L. J., P. 87; 9 L. T. 809; 12 W. R. 320.

Where a testatrix duly executed a document as a codicil, but the paper, which had been drawn up by her husband with her full concurrence, was headed, "This is not meant as a legal will, but as guide":—Held, that the expression of intention appearing on the face of the document negatived the presumption that it was executed as a valid testamentary paper, and the court refused to admit it to probate. Ferguson-Davie v. Ferguson-Davie, 59 L. J., P. 70; 15 P. D. 109; 62 L. T. 703.

—— Instructions to make Will.]—The court granted probate as of the last will and testament of a deceased person of a testamentary paper, drawn up in the form of instructions for a will, which had been duly executed Fisher, In goods of, 20 L. T. 684.

A testator desired that instructions previously given by him on the same day to an attorney's clerk, should be carried out. The instructions were oral, but the clerk had at the time made short notes of them in the testator's presence:—Held, that the notes could not be included in the probate. Pascall, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 3; L. R. 1 P. 606; 19 L. T. 366.

—— Memorandum cancelling Will.]—On the death of H. his will was found cancelled, and beneath the signature there appeared this memorandum, which was duly executed: "This my last will is hereby cancelled, and as yet I have made no other." The court admitted the memorandum of proof. Hicks, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 65; L. R. 1 P. 683: 21 L. T. 300.

An instrument which disposes of no property, but simply declares an intention to revoke a previous will, is not a will or a codicil, and is therefore not entitled to probate. Fraser, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 20; L. R. 2 P. 40; 21 L. T. 680; 18 W. R. 263.

—— Letter—"Deathbed Request."]—M., on his deathbed, signed a letter to his brother, which had been written in pencil at his dictation, and his signature was attested by two witnesses. The letter contained the following clauses: "It is my deathbed request that you will consent to charge the estates with a sum, to be equally divided between our dear brothers and sisters, and that it shall be raised and paid as soon as possible after my death. I make this request knowing that it is not legal, but trusting in your affection":—Held, that the letter was testamentary and entitled to probate. Mundy, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 119; 30 L. J., P. 85; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 52; 3 L. T. 380; 9 W. R. 171.

—— "Last Will and Letter."]—A paper writing in the form of a letter, and commencing "My dear C.—This is my will and letter to you," contained the expression, "I have invested this . . . to save you the trouble and expense of taking out administration," and "I leave my plate and the family plate to Mrs. Towers." The existence of the document was never communicated to the beneficiaries:—Held, that the language and the circumstances connected with it indicated an intention that it should operate as a testamentary disposition, and that it was not a declaration of trust. Towers v. Hogan, 23 L. R., Ir. 53.

—— Promissory Notes inclosed in Letter.]—Among the papers of a testator were found two letters sealed and directed "for S. G., my late servant." S. G. had been in his service as housekeeper for some years before his death, but had left him for some time previously to that event. These letters contained promissory notes for large sums of money, and one of the letters stated that the testator "inclosed 200*l.* as a mark of respect," and the other letter stated that "the inclosed was for her long and faithful services." S. G. applied to the executors for payment of the notes, but they refused to pay:—Held, that an action was not maintainable by S. G. upon the notes, which were in effect a legacy, and an informal one in not being duly attested as required by 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9, and therefore void. Gough v. Findon or Tindon, 7 Ex. 48; 21 L. J., Ex. 58.

—— Orders on Savings Bank.]—B. having been informed that he could not recover from the illness under which he laboured, expressed a wish that his wife should be in a position to receive, at his death, certain sums of money in two savings banks, and signed, in the presence of witnesses, two orders on a savings bank to pay to his wife, at any time she might apply for the same, any money deposited. B. died on the following day. The court granted administration with the two orders, as together containing the will of B. annexed, to his widow. Marsden, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 542; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 405; 2 L. T. 87.

A deceased executed, in the presence of two witnesses, a paper to the effect: "I wish my sister to have my savings bank book for her own use." On the same day she gave her sister the book, and authorised her to draw out all the money in the bank; but, from some informality, that was not done in the deceased's lifetime:—Held, that from the terms of the paper itself, and from the declarations of the deceased at the time she executed it, the court was satisfied that the deceased intended it should operate on her death, and that it must be admitted to probate. Cock v. Cooke, 36 L. J., P. 5; L. R. 1 P. 241; 15 L. T. 296; 15 W. R. 89.

—— Instrument relating to Rent after Death of Lessor.]—An agreement for a seven years' lease, duly executed, and attested by two witnesses, contained a provision as to the application of the rent in the event of the lessor's death before the expiration of the lease, the lessee being beneficially interested in such application:—Held, that as no part of the agreement was revocable, and as it came into operation immediately upon its execution, it was not entitled to probate as a testamentary paper. Robinson, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 93; L. R. 1 P. 384; 17 L. T. 19.

—— Appointment to Situation after Death of Testator.]—W. signed, in the presence of two witnesses, a document as follows:—"To A. B.: I hereby offer you the situation of collector and overseer of my property, at a salary of 3*l.* 3*s.*; and I further wish that A. B. shall continue in the office, with the same salary, after my decease, and same allowances":—Held, not testamentary. Thorncroft v. Lashmar, 2 Sw. & Tr. 479; 31 L. J., P. 150; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 595; 6 L. T. 476; 10 W. R. 783.

—— Deed.]—An instrument may pass property from the dead to the living, and yet not be testamentary or subject to legacy duty. Brown v. Advocate-General, 1 Macq. H. L. 79.

Instrument in any form, whether a deed-poll or indenture, if the obvious purpose is not to take place till after the death of the person making it, shall operate as a will. Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. J. 228; 4 Bro. C. C. 353.

A document purporting to be a deed of gift, but duly executed as a will, and intended by the grantor to come into operation only after her death, admitted to probate as a will. Slinn, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 82; 15 P. D. 156; 63 L. T. 229; 39 W. R. 175.

A deed-poll was executed with the formalities required for the execution of wills:—Held, that it was capable of being admitted to probate. Robson, In re, Emly v. Davidson, 51 L. J., Ch. 337; 45 L. T. 418; 30 W. R. 257—C. A. See also Morgan, In goods of, post, col. 262.

The court granted probate of a will executed in the form of a deed, although the attesting witnesses had no precise recollection of the circumstances of the execution. Colyer, In goods of, 14 P. D. 48; 60 L. T. 368; 37 W. R. 272; 53 J. P. 134.

A. and his wife of the first part, and B. of the second, executed a deed by which A. granted all the real and personal estate he then possessed to B., in trust, upon the decease of A., to pay the annual income arising therefrom to A.'s wife, and on her death to divide the whole trust property amongst the children of A. in the proportions and on the conditions therein expressed. The deed also reserved a power to A., at any time during his life, by a deed, duly executed, to revoke, annul, or make void the whole or any of the trusts in and by the deed created, and to declare new and other trusts respecting the property conveyed. After-acquired property was not vested in the trustee, nor was he authorised to pay the deceased's debts. A court of competent jurisdiction in the Isle of Man, the place of domicil of the deceased, granted probate of this deed as testamentary to B., as executor according to the tenor thereof. The court followed the grant so far as to recognise the deed as testamentary, but not the appointment of B. as executor. Cosnahan, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 76; L. R. 1 P. 183; 14 L. T. 387; 14 W. R. 969.

A person being possessed of some pure personalty, but of considerable property in mortgages, executed some years before his death an indenture by which, declaring a wish to found certain charities, he covenanted to pay, or that if he did not pay during his lifetime, his executor should, within twelve months after his death, subject to his debts and legacies, pay, to certain persons therein named 60,000*l.*, to be invested in their names on the trusts thereby declared; the trusts were charitable trusts. This deed was never enrolled in chancery. On the same day he made a will, giving certain legacies, and appointing executors, most of whom were the persons named in the deed. These papers were never communicated by him to anybody. Just before his death he caused the papers to be produced from the drawers, and handed them to the persons attending his deathbed. They were tied up with a memorandum, which declared that they had been prepared in that form, under advice, to save the legacy duties, and in order that if probate duty was paid, in the first instance, it might be got back again in consequence of the covenant creating a debt to be paid out of the assets:—Held, that the indenture was a deed, and not a testamentary paper. Jeffries v. Alexander, 8 H. L. Cas. 594; 31 L. J., Ch. 9; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 221; 2 L. T. 768. And see S. C. nom. Alexander v. Brame, 7 De G. M. & G. 525; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1032; 3 W. R. 642.

A., being in India in 1840, executed the following instrument, attested by two witnesses: "Know all men, that I make B. my lawful attorney, for me, in my name, and to my use, to ask, demand, or receive the possession of, or produce of the rent of the freehold of, &c., and I do empower her (B.) to hold and retain all proceeds of the property for her own use until I may return to England and claim possession in person; or, in the event of my death, I hereby, in my name, assign and deliver to B. the sole claim to the property, to be held by her during her life, and disposed of by her as she may deem proper at the time of her death; at the same time I wish it to be understood, that I claim all right and title to the property on my arrival in Great Britain, when the term of B.'s occupancy shall be considered at an end. In witness," &c. The instrument was acted on as a power of attorney by B. Afterwards A. died in India, without returning to Great Britain, and left B. surviving:—Held, that the instrument operated, on A.'s death, as a devise to B. Doe d. Cross v. Cross, 8 Q. B. 714; 15 L. J., Q. B. 217; 10 Jur. 564.

A person, by an instrument, attested by one witness, covenanted with trustees, that his devisee or heirs, executors, or administrators, should after his death, on being satisfied that all his debts were paid, convey and assign to them all the realty and personalty to which he, or any one in trust for him, should at the time of his death be seised, possessed, or entitled for any beneficial estate or interest, or which he should then have disposed of by his will. By the same instrument the trustees declared that they would stand possessed of the property to pay debts, and convert in their discretion, and transfer the remainder to his wife if she should be living, and if not, to his next of kin:—Held, that this instrument was a valid deed, and not a will. Patch v. Shore, 2 Dr. & Sm. 589; 1 N. R. 157; 32 L. J., Ch. 185; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 63; 7 L. T. 554; 11 W. R. 142.

Testator, having bequeathed his personal estate to his wife, with a contingent disposition to any child she might be enceinte with, by an instrument executed in the East Indies, during his last illness, empowers A. and B. to invest any gold dust, &c., which he had in bottomry, &c., as they should think most advantageous, and deliver the same over to his wife, or her assigns, she running all risk:—Held, that this instrument, though it had been proved in the Ecclesiastical Court, was merely an act inter vivos, and not a revocation of the will. Pigott v. D'Anson, 1 Eden, 469.

—— Instrument made in Contemplation of Marriage.]—In 1873, a father, in contemplation of the marriage of his son, signed, and two witnesses attested, a written instrument. The contemplated marriage having been solemnised, and the father having died:—Held, that by the solemnisation of the contemplated marriage the instrument had been rendered irrevocable. Halpin, In goods of, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 567.

Held, secondly, that the words, "I give them supreme command," were words of present operation, and the postponed interest had vested immediately; and that, therefore, the instrument could not be admitted to probate as a will. Ib.

W., in anticipation of a marriage with a deceased sister's husband, executed a deed whereby she transferred funds to trustees, in trust, in case she died in the lifetime of C., her intended husband, for such persons as she should by deed or will appoint. A marriage was, in fact, solemnised with C., which was of course invalid. W. subsequently executed a will, which contained a clause, "Now I hereby ratify and confirm the settlement, and in pursuance and exercise of the power reserved to me, and of all other powers enabling me, I do direct and appoint." W. survived C., and executed no other testamentary paper:—Held, that as W. intended to give her property in a certain manner, in whatever way her authority to do so was acquired, and as she had an absolute power over it, the will was valid, although the opportunity for exercising the special power never arose. Southall v. Jones, 1 Sw. & Tr. 298; 28 L. J., P. 112; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 369; 7 W. R. 381.

A. in 1828 made his will in contemplation of his intended marriage, providing for his intended wife and for the children of such marriage, and making his intended wife executrix:—Held, that the marriage which ensued, together with the birth of a child, operated as a total revocation of the will. Cadywold, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 34; 27 L. J., P. 36; 6 W. R. 375.

Incomplete Instruments.]—If it appears upon a will of personal estate that something more is intended to be done, and the party is not arrested by sickness or death, the usual declaration at the beginning that it is testator's will is not sufficient. Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 249; 7 R. R. 167.

A holograph paper found concealed in the bedstead where the testator slept, beginning, "Head of instructions to my solicitor, J. Lee, to add to my will the following codicil," and concluding, "This is my last will and testament," and then signed, containing various legacies to a large amount to persons described by the initial letters of their names, the testator having lived four months afterwards, when he died suddenly through accident, admitted to probate, there being evidence that the testator had spoken of some testamentary paper which would be found after his death, and of his having often during the four months talked of going to Mr. Lee, his solicitor, and having made two appointments to go there (with important papers), one of which he put off, and the other was prevented by accident. Castle v. Torre, 2 Moore, P. C. 133.

An unfinished testamentary paper is of no effect as a will, the party having lived eight days afterwards. Griffin v. Griffin, 4 Ves. 197, n.

The presumption raised against the intended finality of a paper by the existence of an attestation clause without actual attestation:—Held, to be sufficiently rebutted by the evidence, particularly that of the testator having been told, with reference to the will of another person, that actual attestation was not necessary, the court observing upon the weight that was due, in such cases particularly, to the opinion of the judge below. Stewart v. Stewart, 2 Moore, P. C. 193.

Probate refused to a paper professing to dispose of a testator's real and personal property, and subjecting them both to the payment of his debts and funeral expenses, which was in the testator's handwriting, and sealed and signed by himself, but not attested, although an attestation clause was subjoined to it. The circumstance of a testator having subjected his real estate to the payment of his debts and funeral expenses, in a writing not attested, so as to pass real estate, furnishes a strong, though not a completely irresistible, presumption against his final intention that that writing should be his last will. Douglass v. Smith, 3 Knapp, 1.

—— When disposing of Realty only.]—When a will disposes of real estate only, directions in it for the payment of debts, for the sale of a portion of the estate and the payment of legacies out of the proceeds, do not give the court jurisdiction to grant probate. A probate of such a will cannot be granted to suit the convenience of the parties interested. Bootle, In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 41; L. R. 3 P. 177; 31 L. T. 273.

A will limited to the disposition of real property only is not entitled to probate, although it contains the appointment of an executor, and the real estate is given to such executor, with directions to convert the same into personal estate. Barden, In goods of, L. R. 1 P. 325.

A will disposing of realty only, but containing an appointment of an executor, is entitled to probate notwithstanding the renunciation of the executor. Jordan, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 22; L. R. 1 P. 555; 16 W. R. 407.

—— Equitable Conversion.]—Where freehold property is, by the doctrine of equitable conversion, to be considered as personalty, it is liable to probate and legacy duty, and a will disposing of it is entitled to probate. Gunn, In goods of, 53 L. J., P. 107; 9 P. D. 242; 33 W. R. 169; 49 J. P. 72.

Probate of Copy.]—The copy of a will may be admitted to probate in order to aid the completion of the title of a testator's representative in the court of chancery, but the consent of those persons, if any, who may be interested in the event of an intestacy is required before a grant of probate can be made. Entichnap, In goods of, 35 L. T. 427.

—— Of Translation Retranslated.]—A British subject resident in France made his will and died there, having appointed A. and B., who were resident in France, and C. and D., who were resident in England, his executors. The will was translated into French, and the translation was registered by A. and B. in the proper court in Paris. A duly authenticated copy of the translation was then procured, and translated into English by a notary public in London, and that translation was proved by C. and D. in the prerogative court. Bain v. Lescher, 11 Sim. 397.

Where several Testamentary Papers.]—Effect of several testamentary papers. Morrison v. Morrison, 1 Jur. 671.

If a man leave several papers behind him, executed at different times, as to personal property, they shall all be taken as one will, and so construed that all may answer the testator's intention. Stone v. Evans, 2 Atk. 87.

When the ecclesiastical court has given probates of two instruments as constituting one will or testamentary document, the whole is to be construed as one will. Semble, that a testamentary instrument which is left incomplete by reason of the testator's sudden death, or other incapacity of making a will suddenly supervening, is not void in toto, but is good as far as it goes. Armstrong v. Millar, Longf. & T. 557; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 659.

Will written in Separate Parts.]—The testatrix wrote her will on a sheet of notepaper, one part on the first page and another part on the fourth page. It was duly executed by her at the foot or end of the first page, and there attested. It was proved that both parts were read to her as her will before she signed it with her mark; that she was a woman of some education and intelligence, and signed with a mark from physical debility. The court admitted the whole document to probate. Efrench, In goods of, 23 L. R., Ir. 433.

Fraud or Inadvertence—Rejection of Part.]—Where a portion of a will has been introduced through fraud or perhaps inadvertence, it may be rejected, and probate granted of the remainder if the two are severable. But where the rejection of part alters the sense of the remainder, quære, whether there is a valid will within the meaning of 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9. Rhodes v. Rhodes, 51 L. J., P. C. 53; 7 App. Cas. 192; 46 L. T. 463; 30 W. R. 709—P. C.

Clause Inserted per incuriam.]—Where a clause is introduced in a testamentary paper per incuriam, and the deceased executes the paper, not having given any instructions for and being ignorant of the existence of such clause, it forms no part of his will, and probate will be granted of the remainder of the paper, omitting such clause. Duane, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 590; 31 L. J., P. 173; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 752; 6 L. T. 788.

Will Executed by Mistake.]—B. and C., sisters, living together, having agreed to make mutual wills, B. prepared the instruments. In both wills the bequests and objects of the sisters' testamentary bounty were the same, with this exception, that while B. gave a legacy of 19*l.* 19*s.* to a particular charity, C. gave a legacy of like amount to a different charity; and in both wills the same executors were appointed. On the death of B. it was found that each sister had by mistake executed the paper prepared for the other. The court was moved to grant probate of the instrument executed by B., but declined to treat it as her will, and rejected the application for probate. Hunt, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 43; L. R. 3 P. 250; 33 L. T. 321; 23 W. R. 553. See also Nosworthy, In goods of, infra.

After Supposed Intestacy.]—A person died, as was supposed, intestate, and letters of administration were granted to his wife. She realised as much as she could of the estate, and left the country. A will was subsequently discovered, and a citation was issued calling on her to bring in the letters of administration, which she did not obey. The court admitted the will to probate, notwithstanding that the letters had not been brought in, but directed the fact that the administration was outstanding to be recited on the probate. Ingall v. Drayton, 21 L. T. 367.

On Probate of Second Will Renounced.]—A testator left two wills, disposing of his property in different ways. The second will was executed the day before his death, when he was supposed to be of unsound mind. The universal legatee appointed by it renounced probate, but the court declined to grant probate of the first will until the next of kin, who were interested in the first will being established, had been cited. Thomas, In goods of, 31 L. T. 553.

Evidence to shew Testamentary Character.]—Evidence not admissible that devisor did not mean what he has expressed, but admissible to shew that a particular expression was not his will. Powell v. Mouchett and Lichfield v. Mouchett, 6 Madd. 216; 22 R. R. 276.

Parol evidence is admissible to shew that instrument is not the will of testator as to particular estate, but not to set up the disappointed intention of the testator. Newburgh (Earl) v. Newburgh (Countess), 5 Madd. 364; 21 R. R. 310.

A will made on the eve of a journey abroad, under some words used in the will:—Held, a contingent will and avoided by the testator's return; and collateral proofs of his afterwards taking notice of the will cannot be admitted, unless some acts were done to republish the will. Parson v. Lanoe, Ambl. 559; 1 Ves. 189; 1 Wils. 243.

Where a testatrix made her will disposing of real and personal property, and signed and sealed it, and a clause of attestation in the common form was subjoined, but to which there was no subscription of witnesses, and where the will was found at her death wrapped in an envelope, on which was written, "I signed and sealed my will to have it ready to be witnessed the first opportunity I could get proper persons":—Held, that the instrument, appearing incomplete (something more having been intended), was not a good will as to the personal property. But parol evidence admitted as to the circumstances of the papers, and as to the testatrix's intention. Walker v. Walker, 1 Mer. 503.

Where something to suggest a doubt as to whether an instrument is intended to be testamentary appears on the face of it, extrinsic evidence as to the circumstances of its execution is admissible; but the burden of proof is not thereby thrown upon the persons propounding the instrument. Whyte v. Pollock, 7 App. Cas. 400; 47 L. T. 356; 47 J. P. 340—H. L. (Sc.)

Evidence of the declarations of an alleged testator as to the contents of a will not forthcoming, made after its execution, is not admissible to prove the contents. Quick v. Quick, 3 Sw. & Tr. 442; 33 L. J., P. 146; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 682; 10 L. T. 619; 12 W. R. 1119.

But the intention of a testator, that a duly executed paper writing should operate as a will, may be proved by parol evidence. English, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 586; 34 L. J., P. 5; 11 L. T. 612; 13 W. R. 503.

D. duly executed a will, wherein he named three persons executors; he subsequently instructed his attorney to draw out a codicil to this will, for the sole purpose of altering two bequests therein contained. The attorney, in drawing the codicil, intended to conclude with a paragraph, "and in all other respects I confirm my will," but by error wrote "revoke" instead of "confirm"; and in this state the codicil was executed:—Held, that there was not sufficient ambiguity on the face of the codicil to authorise the admission of evidence as to his intention. Davy, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 262; 29 L. J., P. 161; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 252.

A person duly executed a will and five codicils. The fourth codicil revoked the three preceding codicils, and the fifth confirmed all:—Held, that there was sufficient ambiguity on the papers to allow of the introduction of parol evidence; and as that clearly shewed that in executing the fifth codicil the intention of the testator was to confirm the will and fourth codicil only, probate was granted of the will, and the fourth and fifth codicils only. Thomson, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 17; L. R. 1 P. 8; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 960; 13 L. T. 608; 14 W. R. 316.

The fifth codicil was wrongly dated. The court declined to alter the date on the face of the instrument, but directed probate to issue as having been executed on the 30th August, 1865, the correct date. Ib.

A testator having erased a clause in his will after the execution, asked a friend to make a fresh copy of it, omitting the erased clause. The copy was made, but the person who made it by mistake omitted several other clauses. The copy was duly executed, and the omissions were not discovered until after the testator's death, both wills having remained in his custody up to that time. The two wills were not inconsistent with each other, and the latter contained no express clause of revocation. Probate was granted of both documents upon parol evidence of the circumstances under which they were drawn up and executed as together containing the deceased's last will and testament. Birks v. Birks, 4 Sw. & Tr. 23; 34 L. J., P. 90; 13 L. T. 193; 13 W. R. 638.

A testatrix duly executed two inconsistent wills bearing the same date, and written on different sides of the same sheet of paper. Evidence was admitted to shew that the deceased signed one of them only as her will, and signed the other by mistake. The court granted probate of the paper signed by the testatrix, with the intention that it should operate as her will, and not of the other paper. Nosworthy, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 44; 34 L. J., P. 145; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 570.

—— Onus of Proof.]—The mere fact of proving a testamentary instrument to be a holograph does not shift the onus of proving the handwriting of the testator from the party propounding the instrument. Anderson v. Anderson, 6 W. R. 526—H. L.

The genuineness and authenticity of a document tendered for confirmation as the last will of a deceased person lies on the party who propounds it. As it purports to deprive the next of kin of a right which would otherwise belong to them, the tenderer or propounder of the document must shew, not only that it is genuine and authentic, but that it constitutes the last will of a free and capable testator. Anderson v. Gill, 3 Macq. H L. 180.

To shift the onus probandi, and cast it on those who dispute the genuineness and authenticity of the document, it is not enough simply to shew that it is a holograph instrument, meaning thereby an instrument all in one hand. It must be proved that the document is holograph of the deceased. Ib.

B. FOREIGN AND COLONIAL.

Generally.]—As personal property, wherever situate, follows the person, the court will grant probate of a document, though it purports to deal only with property out of its jurisdiction. Winter, In goods of, 30 L. J., P. 56.

But when it appears, on the papers before the court, that the only property of which a person died possessed is not in this country, the court will decline to grant administration of the goods of the deceased. Fittock, In goods of, 32 L. J., P. 157 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 311.

A will disposing only of property in a foreign country is not entitled to probate in this country. Coode, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 129 ; L. R. 1 P. 449 ; 16 L. T. 746.

Will executed in Foreign Form by Foreigner domiciled in England.]—Lord Kingsdown's Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 114) applies only to the wills of British subjects. Therefore the court refused to admit to probate the will of a foreigner domiciled in England at the time it was made, such will having been executed according to the law of Baden—which was the testator's domicil of origin—but not with the forms required by the laws of this country. Keller, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 39 ; 65 L. T. 763.

Two Wills—English and Foreign—Independent Disposition—Different Executors—Probate granted to English Will only.]—The testator executed two wills—one according to the English form, appointing executors, and disposing solely of his property in this country, the other according to the Swiss form, by which no executors were appointed, which purported to be entirely independent of the English will, and which affected only property in Switzerland and Italy:—Held, on an affidavit being filed, that if the English executors intermeddled with the Swiss estate they would come into conflict with the Swiss court, which by the law of the country had the administration of the estate, and, on a copy of the Swiss will being filed, that probate might be granted of the English will alone. De la Rue, In goods of, 15 P. D. 185 ; 63 L. T. 253 ; 39 W. R. 64.

Executed Abroad—According to what Law.]—A will executed in a foreign country by a foreign subject in accordance with the requirements of English law is not entitled to probate in this country. Von Buseck, In goods of, 51 L. J., P. 9 ; 6 P. D. 211 ; 30 W. R. 140 ; 46 J. P. 104.

Before 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, a will must be executed according to the law of the country where the testator was domiciled at the time of his death. Whicker v. Hume, 7 H. L. Cas. 124 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 396 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 933 ; 6 W. R. 813.

The grant of probate not appealed against, conclusively established that it was so executed. Ib.

When an executor is cited by next of kin to prove a will, and has appeared, he cannot try the question of the domicil of the testator before propounding the will. Hawarden v. Dunlop, 2 Sw. & Tr. 150 ; 4 L. T. 339.

Where a declaration propounding a will depends on due execution according to the law of a testator's domicil, it must contain a distinct averment that it was duly executed according to the law of the domicil. An averment that the will was admitted to probate by a competent court of the domicil is insufficient. Isherwood v. Cheetham, 2 Sw. & Tr. 607 ; 31 L. J., P. 99 ; 7 L. T. 250.

A will made by an alien, who was domiciled abroad at the time of making her will and of her death, and executed according to the forms required by English law, but not in manner required by the law of the country of her domicil, is not entitled to probate, though her domicil of origin was English. Bloxam v. Favre, 53 L. J., P. 26 ; 9 P. D. 130 ; 50 L. T. 766 ; 32 W. R. 673 —C. A. Affirming 47 J. P. 377.

Form of Grant of Foreign Will.]—R., domiciled in Mexico, made a will according to the law of Mexico. The proper court there decreed probate of a Spanish translation and not of the original:—Held, that the grant in this country must be made upon the production of an English translation of the Spanish copy, and not of the certified copy of the original. Rule, In goods of, 47 L. J., P. 32 ; 4 P. D. 76 ; 39 L. T. 123 ; 26 W. R. 357.

P., domiciled in Brazil, made a will according to the law of that country. The will was written in Portuguese, and probate granted of such will as written in that language. The court refused to grant probate of an English translation of the will made in Brazil, and certified in that country by the British consul. The only document on which it can act is the document which was before the foreign court, and which must be re-translated after it has been brought into the registry here. Rule, In goods of (supra), distinguished. Petty, In goods of, 41 L. T. 529.

Foreign Will — Original not produced—Notarial Copy admitted to Proof.]—The testator left the following testamentary papers : (1) Will, dated the 3rd June, 1875, relating to property in Argentina, and made in the form there prevailing ; (2) A settlement of testamentary disposition, bearing date the 28th June, 1875, and comprising property in Scotland ; (3) Will dated the 30th March, 1882, with two codicils dated respectively the 16th April, 1884, and the 7th July, 1888, relating to property in England. The testator left an only child B. whom he appointed sole executor of the Argentine and Scotch documents ; but H. and F. were, together with the said B., appointed executors of the English documents. The Argentine will was executed in the way usual in that country, i.e. before a notary public. The original was not forthcoming, but an authenticated copy was produced, and probate was sought of the said copy, together with the other testamentary papers. The court accordingly made a general grant to his son B. of all the documents, and a grant to his co-executors limited to the three English documents. Bridges, In goods of, 65 L. T. 764.

The will of a British subject domiciled abroad at the time of his death had been proved in the French courts and deposited with a notary, who by the law of France was forbidden to allow it to be removed from his custody :—Held, that probate might be granted of a copy of the original will properly proved limited to such time as might elapse before the original itself should be brought in. Lemmé, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 123 ; [1892] P. 89 ; 66 L. T. 592.

British Subject—Domiciled Abroad.]—A testator, by birth a British subject, but domiciled in Spain at his death, executed a will in England, and subsequently several codicils valid by the law of Spain. Lastly he executed a paper in England which confirmed the English will in whatever it did not clash or interfere with the contents of the codicil, which was to be considered as his last and deliberate will:—Held, that the Spanish codicils were not revoked by the last-mentioned paper, but as forming part of the will which did not clash with such paper, were confirmed by it. De la Saussaye, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 47; L. R. 3 P. 42; 28 L. T. 368; 21 W. R. 549.

An Englishwoman was married to a Frenchman, and resided with him in France until his death. Some time after that event she gave up her house in that country, and proceeded to a seaport, where she embarked, with her children and effects, on board an English steamboat, with an intention of permanently residing in England. Before the vessel left the harbour she was seized with illness, and was carried on shore, and died there:—Held, that her domicil was French, and that a will made in the English form could not be admitted to probate. Raffenel, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 49; 32 L. J., P. 203; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 386; 8 L. T. 211; 11 W. R. 549.

A. throughout his life. and at his death, was domiciled in Portugal, where he died a bachelor, leaving a natural son, B. B. instituted a suit of filiation and inheritance in the court of first instance at Faro, and obtained a decree, by which he was declared entitled to the movable and immovable property of A. This decree was ultimately confirmed by the supreme court at Lisbon:—Held, that as A. was domiciled in Portugal, the succession to his personal estate, whether he died testate or intestate, must be determined by the law of that country; and that as the proper courts in Portugal had already decided to whom the inheritance belonged, the probate court was bound by that decision. Doglioni v. Crispin, 35 L. J., P. 129; L. R. 1 H. L. 301; 15 L. T. 44. Affirming 11 W. R. 850.

British Subject married to Naturalised Frenchman—Will recognised as valid by French Law—Conflict of Laws.]—By s. 10, sub-s. 1, of the Naturalisation Act, 1870, the domicil of a married woman follows that of her husband, but by French law naturalisation is purely personal. Where a testatrix, a British subject married to a naturalised Frenchman, made a will, according to the requirements of English law, the court granted probate of the document, being satisfied that the testatrix by French law was a British subject, and that the French courts would give effect to the will so far as it dealt with property in France. Brown-Séquard, In goods of, 6 R. 565; 70 L. T. 811.

—— Wills separately disposing of English and Colonial Property.]—A testator died leaving two wills—one limited to property in England, the other to property in Tasmania, and he appointed different executors in each. The court granted probate of both papers as together constituting his will, to the executors named in the English will. Harris, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 48; L. R. 2 P. 83; 22 L. T. 630; 18 W. R. 901.

Three duly-executed testamentary papers bore the same date, two of which purported to dispose of the residue. It was proved that the first was intended to apply only to property in Canada, and that the two last were intended to apply only to property in England. The three papers were admitted to probate as together containing the testator's last will and testament. Nickalls, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 40; 34 L. J., P. 103; 13 W. R. 1047.

Where a testator left two wills, one disposing of his property in Australia and the other of his property in England, on the same trusts, the court directed an affidavit of the contents of the Australian will to be attached to the probate. Cole, In goods of, 20 L. T. 894.

Where a testator at the time of his decease was possessed of property both in England and South Africa, and had executed two wills, by one of which he purported to dispose of his English property only, and by the other of that which he possessed in South Africa only, and the two wills were specifically stated to be independent of each other, so that neither will should have any effect on any property disposed of by the other, and different executors were appointed for each will, the court granted probate of the English will only, and further held that it was unnecessary that the South African will should be brought into the registry, but ordered an affidavit to be filed, exhibiting a copy of such will, and that a statement should be inserted in the probate to the effect that such affidavit had been filed. Astor, In goods of (1 P. D. 150), followed. Calloway, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 73; 15 P. D. 147; 63 L. T. 227; 38 W. R. 528.

Naturalized.]—An Italian by birth obtained in 1852 letters of naturalisation as a British subject, and in 1871 he executed in England his will according to the laws prescribed by the English law. The letters of naturalisation excepted from the privileges conferred on the testator "any rights and capacities of a natural-born subject out of and beyond the dominions of the British crown and the limits thereof"; and he died. in 1876, domiciled in Italy:—Held, that the will was entitled to probate under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114, s. 2. Gally, In goods of, 45 L. J., P. 107; 1 P. D. 438; 24 W. R. 1018.

A will made according to the forms of English law by an alien who, though her domicil of origin was English, was domiciled abroad at the time of making her will and of her death, is not entitled to probate in this country. In determining what is the valid will of an alien, the general principles of law prior to the passing of the Naturalisation Act, 1870, are still applicable. Bloxam v. Favre, 52 L. J., P. 42; 8 P. D. 101; 31 W. R. 610; 47 J. P. 377.

—— Dying Abroad.]—A Frenchman by birth but naturalised in England, executed at Paris a will and codicil in the English form relating to his property in England only, and a holograph will, signed and dated, disposing of his property in France, but referring directly to the English will. He died at Paris:—Held, that if it could be shewn that the will and codicil in the English form were made in a form permitted by the law of France in the case of British subjects resident in France, they could be admitted to probate under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114, s. 1, as valid according to the law of the place where made. Lacroix, In goods of, 46 L. J., P. 40; 2 P. D. 94.

When a British subject dies abroad, after the passing of this act, leaving a will executed in England, in accordance with the law of England, upon motion for probate it is not necessary to consider whether he had or had not acquired a foreign domicil. Rippon, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 177 ; 32 L. J., P. 141 ; 9 L. T. 117.

A testator made a will in India, and added a codicil at Florence. They were not witnessed, and were invalid both by the law of England and Italy. He wrote on the back of the will, at Genoa, a second codicil, which was also not witnessed, but which was well executed, though not valid, according to the law of Italy :—Held, that in determining the question whether a paper is valid as a testamentary instrument under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114, s. 1, the court can have regard to the law of one country only at a time. It therefore declined to regard so much of the Italian law as held the second codicil well executed, and then, recurring to the English law, to apply the principle of confirmation, and refused probate of all three papers. Pechell v. Hilderley, 38 L. J., P. 66 ; L. R. 1 P. 673 ; 20 L. T. 1014 ; 17 W. R. 865.

A., a British-born subject, left England many years before death, resided in Paris for the last fifteen years of her life, and died there ; assumed for many years an Italian name, and described herself and was described in legal documents as widow of an Italian. There was no evidence of the fact of marriage ; and the statements made by the deceased in respect to the marriage were contradictory. She had real property in India, the bulk of her personalty in England, and made her will in the English form, disposing of her property, with the exception of four small legacies, amongst English persons :—Held, that by the law of nations the deceased was domiciled in France, but that, as she had not been naturalized, nor obtained an authorised domicil in and as required by the law of France, she might by the French law make a will in the English form, and that such will was entitled to probate in this country. Bremer v. Freeman, 1 Deane, Ecc. Rep. 192.

A testator made a will in England, appointing A. and B. his executors. He afterwards made a codicil in India, in which he desired that his affairs might not be placed in the hands of the administrator-general, but might be managed entirely by C. and D., whom he appointed his executors in that country :—Held, that C. and D. were not entitled to probate in England. Wallich, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 423 ; 33 L. J., P. 87 ; 9 L. T. 809.

An application for probate of a testamentary instrument executed by a person when domiciled abroad should be supported by evidence that, according to the law of the domicil, such instrument is a good will. Stoddart, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 356 ; 31 L. J., P. 195.

A holograph will, confirmed by the tribunals of France, in which country a testatrix was legally domiciled, will be admitted to probate, but the directions of such tribunals will be acted upon only so far as they are in accordance with, or not contrary to, the practice of the court. D'Orleans (Duchesse), In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 253 ; 28 L. J., P. 129 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 104 ; 7 W. R. 269.

A. died beyond the sea, and made a nuncupative will. B. took administration here, and brought his bill for a discovery of the supposed intestate's personal estate. The defendant pleaded the will, and that he was executor, and that A. left no assets but what were beyond seas. Plea allowed. Jauncy v. Sealey, 1 Vern. 397.

Scotch Will.]—If a will has been formally recognised and acted upon by the court of competent jurisdiction in the country of the testator's domicil at the time of his death, and remains unquestioned in that country, the court of probate will not allow the validity of such will to be litigated here. Miller v. James, 42 L. J., P. 21 ; L. R. 3 P. 4 ; 27 L. T. 862 ; 21 W. R. 272.

A testator executed a trust disposition and settlement, valid according to the law of Scotland, and applicable to the whole heritable and movable estate which should belong to him at time of his death. He subsequently executed a will, by which he disposed of all his real and personal estate, whether in Scotland or in England. By the law of Scotland, the English will was ineffectual as a conveyance of the Scotch heritage, and did not revoke the previous settlement, and the two documents together formed the complete testamentary disposition of the testator. His domicil was English, but he had a freehold estate in Scotland. The court granted probate of the will and trust disposition as together containing the will of the deceased. Donaldson, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 19 ; L. R. 3 P. 45 ; 28 L. T. 477 ; 21 W. R. 549.

A domiciled Scotchman made a will, and afterwards married in Scotland. He subsequently left Scotland, and died domiciled in England :—Held, that, under Lord Kingsdown's Act, the will was not revoked by his change of domicil, and was entitled to probate. Reid, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 43 ; L. R. 1 P. 74 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 300 ; 13 L. T. 680 ; 14 W. R. 316.

B. and C., domiciled Scotch people, in contemplation of their marriage entered into a contract, or a settlement, in 1823, under which they had certain powers of appointment. On the fly-sheet of the settlement appeared what described itself as a codicil of September, 1832, signed by B. and C., and attested by two witnesses. Below this, of the date of 1st January, 1857, was a holograph of Alexander Stoddart, and signed by him, which purported to be testamentary. In 1855, the deceased acquired an English domicil, which he retained till death. The court refused to grant letters of administration with the settlement, and two writings annexed, as together containing the last will and codicil thereto of the deceased. Stoddart, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 356 ; 31 L. J., P. 195.

In the repositories of the deceased, who left no other testamentary instrument, was found a holograph writing, signed and dated and complete in its testamentary provisions ; but headed "Notes of intended settlement by" the deceased. The proof allowed threw no light on the intentions of the deceased :—Held, affirming the decision of the court below, that the document was the last will and settlement of the deceased. Whyte v. Pollock, 7 App. Cas. 400 ; 47 L. T. 356 ; 47 J. P. 340—H. L. (Sc.)

Per Lord Watson : A mere ambiguity occurring in the descriptive title written by the testator cannot qualify the terms or destroy the validity of the document which it professes to describe, when the legal character and effect of the document taken by itself are not doubtful. Such an ambiguity will justify inquiry ; but should the parties lead no proof, or should the proof adduced by them be inconclusive, the document must receive effect according to its tenor and substance. Ib.

—— Invalid according to English Law—Leaseholds in England.]—An Englishman resident in Scotland bequeathed his whole means and estate to a trustee to pay certain pecuniary legacies and all the rest of his means and estate to be divided equally among certain of his godchildren. The execution of the will was valid according to the law of Scotland, but invalid according to English law. The testator possessed leasehold property in England:—Held, that the English leaseholds passed under the will by virtue of the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114, s. 2. Watson, In re, Carlton v. Carlton, 35 W. R. 711.

Dutch Mutual Wills.]—By the Roman-Dutch law, the mutual will of a husband and wife, notwithstanding its forms, is to be read as the separate will of each. Denyssen v. Mostert, 8 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 502; 41 L. J., P. C. 41; L. R. 4 P. C. 236; 20 W. R. 1017.

The dispositions of each spouse are to be treated as applicable to his or her half of the joint property. Ib.

Each is at liberty to revoke his or her part of the will during the co-testator's lifetime, with or without communication with the co-testator, and after the co-testator's death; but when a spouse who dies first has bequeathed any benefit in favour of the survivor, and has afterwards limited the disposal of the property in general after the death of such survivor, then such survivor, if he or she accepts such benefits, may not afterwards dispose of his or her share in any manner at variance with the will of the deceased spouse. Ib.

Executor's Affirmation not Oath.]—A., a native of and domiciled in Germany, made and duly executed his last will and testament, with ten codicils thereto, according to German law, and thereof appointed B., his nephew, executor. The will was proved in the court of Gera, in Germany. It was requisite that probate of it should also be obtained in this court, and the necessary papers for the purpose, with due instructions, were forwarded to B., the executor, in Germany. The papers were returned by B., accompanied by an affirmation which was made by him before the British vice-consul at Breslau, but it contained no statement that he had a conscientious objection to the taking of an oath, so as to bring him within the exemption created by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 20. The court held that the affirmation was defective, and refused to receive the papers. Henry LXIX. of Reuss-Kostritz, In goods of, 49 L. J., P. 67; 41 L. T. 803; 28 W. R. 398.

Affidavit, &c., of Execution.]—A will made in Queensland, and attested by witnesses resident there, was proved and lodged in the Supreme Court of New South Wales at Sydney. The executor having applied for probate in Ireland, upon the evidence of one of the attesting witnesses of its due execution (to whom a copy only of the will had been exhibited), and upon an affidavit of a solicitor and officer of the court at Sydney that they had inspected the will there, and had set out a true copy of it in the affidavit, and proving the handwriting of the signatures of the testator and attesting witnesses, there being no suspicious circumstances attached to the will:—Held, that probate should be granted, it being assumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that Queensland was outside the jurisdiction of the courts of New South Wales. Wilson v. Collum, 9 L. R., Ir. 150—C. A.

C. By Married Woman.

Testamentary Capacity.]—See ante, col. 217.

Generally.]—The 24th and 27th sections of the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26) apply to the wills of married women in the same manner as those of other persons. Noble v. Phelps or Willock, 40 L. J., P. 60; L. R. 2 P. 276; 25 L. T. 65; 19 W. R. 1115.

Power in feme covert to dispose by writing purporting to be a will does not give it authority of one in ecclesiastical court, and husband must be examined to his consent before it can be proved. Henley v. Philips, 2 Atk. 48.

Probate of the will of a married woman, which is now necessary, though formerly otherwise, limited to her power by the assent of her husband, with respect to any beneficial interest; not to her right as executrix of another person, to make an executor, and continue the representation. Stevens v. Bagwell, 15 Ves. 139.

General or Limited Grant.]—The limitation inserted before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, in the probate of the will of a married woman, ought no longer to be required, and the court will henceforth make a general grant. Price, In goods of, 56 L. J., P. 72; 12 P. D. 137; 57 L. T. 497; 35 W. R. 596; 51 J. P. 615.

The court refused to limit a grant of probate of a married woman's will, even where such will was made, and the person who made it had died before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and when the will and codicils were executed by virtue of a power of appointment. Homfray, In goods of, 57 L. T. 498, n.; 51 J. P. 615.

Since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, probate of the will of a married woman appointing executors, though the will is made in exercise of a power, and contains no disposition of property to which she was entitled outside the power, will be granted in the general form, and not, as heretofore, in a limited form. Ievers, In Goods of, 13 L. R., Ir. 1.

Granting Probate without prejudicing Questions as to Property.]—A woman, when under coverture, executed a will in which, having disposed of property to which she was entitled for her separate use, she bequeathed the residue of the real and personal estate which she should possess or have power to dispose of at the time of her death to her niece. She survived her husband, who left to her considerable personal property, but she did not re-execute her will:—Held, that although the court may be of opinion that the language of the will of a woman made during coverture, taking it to speak and take effect at the time of her death, is sufficiently large to include the whole property, it will not grant a general probate, but limit it in such a way as to leave the whole question as to the property affected by such will open to a court of equity, without concluding or prejudicing the rights of any party. Ib.

By a marriage settlement, power was reserved to the wife to appoint all her settled property either by deed, revocable or irrevocable, or by will. She executed a will giving a life interest in all the property to her husband; but she afterwards executed a deed irrevocably appointing all the property to her husband, subject to her own life interest. The court granted probate of the will, leaving the effect of the deed to be determined by the court of construction. Parkinson v. Townsend, 44 L. J., P. 32; 33 L. T. 232; 23 W. R. 636. See next Case.

—— Of what Property consists.]—When the will of a married woman is tendered for probate on the ground that she had separate property, and the probate is contested, if the court is satisfied that there is separate property, it has power to grant probate of all such property as the testatrix had power to dispose of without deciding what that property is. But it is generally the duty of the court, so far as the evidence and pleadings enable it to do so, to decide judicially of what such property consists. Tharp, In goods of, Tharp v. McDonald, 3 P. D. 76; 38 L. T. 867; 27 W. R. 770—C. A.

Disposing of Realty only—Appointment of Executors.]—A married woman had a power of appointment over certain real estate under a deed which provided that, in default of her making any appointment under such power, the estate should be vested in her for her sole and separate use; she made a will whereby she disposed of the whole of such real estate and also appointed executors, but the will did not purport to dispose of any personal estate, and after her death her husband obtained a grant of administration to her personal estate, on the ground that she had died intestate as to personalty:—Held, that the testatrix must be regarded as disposing by will of real estate of which she was seised, and that as her will appointed executors, it was entitled to probate; but having regard to the fact that a grant of administration to her personal estate was already in existence, the will could neither be admitted to probate nor a grant of administration with the will annexed made in favour of one of the devisees, until the existing grant was revoked. Hornbuckle, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 78; 15 P. D. 149; 63 L. T. 464; 39 W. R. 80.

In the case of a married woman executing a will under a power, the appointment of executors is not sufficient to entitle the instrument to probate, if it disposes only of real estate. Tomlinson, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 74; 6 P. D. 209; 46 L. T. 484; 30 W. R. 61; 46 J. P. 73.

The will of a married woman dealing only with realty, but appointing executors, is entitled to probate, where a portion of the estate consists of personalty vested in her by virtue of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. Cubbon, or Cubban, In Goods of, 55 L. J., P. 77; 11 P. D. 169; 57 L. T. 87; 35 W. R. 200; 50 J. P. 744.

Arrears of Rent—Personalty.]—A married woman having a power of appointment over real property executed the power in favour of herself. She afterwards made her will, by which she directed (amongst other things) that a portion of the property should be sold to pay legacies, and to erect a memorial window. She also appointed an executor. There were arrears of rent due at the time of her death and subsequently:—Held, that as she possessed the property as separate estate, and had appointed an executor and directed him to pay the legacies, &c., and as the arrears of rent were part of her personal estate, the will was entitled to probate. Brownrigg v. Pike, 51 L. J., P. 29; 7 P. D. 61; 46 L. T. 821; 30 W. R. 567; 46 J. P. 360.

Under Power of Appointment.]—By a marriage settlement, property was vested in trustees, as to a portion for A., if she survived her then intended husband; and in case she died in his lifetime, for such person or persons, and for such intents and purposes as she, notwithstanding her coverture, should by will appoint. In the lifetime of her husband, and in express exercise of the power given to her, as of every other power enabling her in that behalf, she duly executed a will. She survived her husband, and died without republishing it:—Held, that the court could not, on motion, make a general grant of probate of such a will. Wollaston, In goods of, 32 L. J., P. 171; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 727; 12 W. R. 18.

A married woman who clearly had power under a settlement to dispose of some part of her property, executed a will purporting to dispose of the whole of it. The court, without deciding whether or not it was a valid disposition of the whole of the property, made a grant of probate, limited to such property as she had power to dispose of. De Pradel, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 2; 1 L. R., P. 454; 17 L. T. 220.

A feme covert, having made her will under a power during coverture, survived her husband, and subsequently died a widow without having republished it:—The court granted a general administration, with the will annexed, to her executor, on the consent of all the next of kin except one, who was resident in New Zealand, but required the administrator to give justifying security. Thorild, In goods of, 16 L. T. 853.

A. died, leaving a will, whereby he appointed his wife sole executrix and universal legatee. She proved his will, and afterwards married B., and during her coverture made a will in execution of a power vested in her, and appointed B. sole executor. Upon her death, B. took limited probate of her will, and also administration of the rest of her effects:—Held, that B., as representing the whole of his wife's personal estate, was entitled to administration of the unadministered effects of A. Martin, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 1; 32 L. J., P. 5; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1134; 7 L. T. 756; 11 W. R. 191.

Where a married woman in execution of a power devises real estate only, and names executors "of this my will," she, if she survives her husband, without altering, revoking, or republishing such will, is intestate as regards any property not specifically mentioned therein, and such executors taking nothing jure representationis. Parkin, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 465; 29 L. J., P. 47; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1366.

—— When Right to Appoint Doubtful.]—When the court is satisfied that a bonâ fide question as to the existence of a power enabling a married woman to make a will is intended to or may be raised, it will grant a limited probate of such will, in order to enable the question as to the existence of the power to be determined by the court of chancery. Paglar v. Tongue, L. R. 1 P. 158.

—— Subsequent Will not reciting Power.]—A married woman executed a will in pursuance of a power therein recited, leaving all the property comprised in the power to her son. By a later will containing no recital of a power and no words of a revocation, she left all her property to her son. She was possessed of property other than that appointed by the first will, on which the second will could operate. Both the wills were included in the probate, as together containing her last will. Fenwick, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 54; L. R. 1 P. 319; 16 L. T. 124.

—— Subsequent Will as to Property not included in Power.]—A married woman, by virtue of powers given to her, which were particularly set out, executed a will in which she appointed three persons executors. She afterwards, by a second testamentary paper, disposed of other property which had been left to her for her separate use. In this she nominated one of the above persons sole executor. Probate was granted of both papers, as together containing her will, to the three executors named in the paper of earlier date. Morgan, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 64; L. R. 1 P. 323; 16 L. T. 181.

Under Protection Orders.]—A wife, having been deserted by her husband, obtained a protection order by reason of his desertion. On her death, in the life of her husband, intestate, the court decreed letters of administration, limited to such personal property as she had acquired or become possessed of since the desertion, without specifying of what that property consisted, to be granted to one of her next of kin. Worman, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 513; 29 L. J., P. 164; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 687.

A married woman obtained a protection order for her property on the 12th of April, 1861; she made a will on the 19th, and died on the 24th. The order was not entered with the registrar of the county court till the 24th, being more than ten days after it was obtained:—Held, that the requirements of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 21, as to the entry of the order with the registrar was directory and not imperative, and, on affidavits from the executors that they were ignorant of the husband's place of abode, probate was granted, limited to the property acquired since the date of desertion. Faraday, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 369; 31 L. J., P. 7; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 252.

In order to obtain administration of the effects of a married woman who died intestate, after obtaining a protection order from the court of divorce, it is not necessary that the husband should be cited. Brighton, In goods of, 34 L. J., P. 55.

A woman was deserted by her husband in 1843. She subsequently acquired property by her own industry. In 1851 she made a will, disposing of her property, but did not obtain a protection order until 1858. The order, however, stated that it was "to protect all earnings and property acquired since 22nd of July, 1843, the commencement of the desertion":—Held, that the will was entitled to probate. Elliott, In goods of, 40 L. J., P. 76; 2 L. R., P. 247; 25 L. T. 203; 19 W. R. 1072.

Wife of Convict.]—A wife of a convicted felon is a feme sole as to her testamentary capacity, and a will made by her whilst her husband is undergoing his sentence is entitled to probate. Coward, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 46; 34 L. J., P. 120; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 569; 13 L. T. 210.

Assent of Husband—Power to revoke.]—A married woman made a will with the assent of her husband, and after her death he assented to the will:—Held, that he could not afterwards revoke his assent, and that the will was entitled to probate. The form of the judgment and probate determined. Chappell v. Charlton, 56 L. J., P. 73: 57 L. T. 496; 51 J. P. 215.

Where Will cannot be found.]—When a wife has executed a will during coverture with the consent of her husband, and the will is not forthcoming at her death, and no copy can be found, the court will make a grant of probate of the draft of the will limited until the original will, or an authentic copy of the will, is brought into the registry, and limited also to all such personal estate and effects as she had power and a right to dispose of, and has in and by the draft appointed and disposed of. Trippleton, In goods of, 35 L. T. 909.

Deed of non-Community of Property—Colonial Law.]—A married woman and her husband had their domicil at the Cape of Good Hope, and, in accordance with the laws of that colony, previously to their marriage, they executed a deed of non-community of property, and such deed was duly registered. The court granted administration to the brother and next of kin of the wife, to the exclusion and without the citation of the husband. Probart, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 71; 16 L. T. 298; 15 W. R. 798.

D. By Deaf and Dumb Persons.

Where a testator, who was deaf and dumb, made his will by communicating his testamentary instructions to an acquaintance by signs and motions, who prepared a will in conformity with such instructions, which was afterwards duly executed by the testator, the court required an affidavit from the drawer of the will, stating the nature of the signs and motions by which the instructions were communicated to him, and ultimately refused to grant probate on motion. Owston, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 461; 31 L. J., P. 177; 6 L. T. 368; 10 W. R. 410.

And where probate was sought of the will of a testator who was deaf, dumb and illiterate, the court required evidence on affidavit of the signs by which the testator had signified that he understood and approved of the provisions of the will, before making the grant. Geale, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 430; 33 L. J., P. 125; 12 W. R. 1027.

E. By Persons Dying Abroad.

(See ante, col. 252.)

F. By Soldiers and Sailors.

Soldiers.]—Probate of a will made by a soldier in actual service, signed but not attested, will not be granted unless the signature is proved to be in his handwriting by the affidavits of two disinterested persons. Neville, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 218; 28 L. J., P. 52.

It is not sufficient that the affidavits state that the whole paper-writing is in the handwriting of the deceased, but they should in terms state that the signature is in his handwriting. Ib.

The form for an affidavit of handwriting given in the rules should be strictly followed. Ib.

The rule of court, which directs that the registrars are not to allow probate of the will, or administration with the will annexed, of any obviously illiterate person to issue, unless they have previously satisfied themselves that the will was read over to the deceased before the execution, or that the deceased had at such time knowledge of its contents, applies to a will made by a soldier in actual military service and executed by mark. Hackett, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 220 ; 28 L. J., P. 42.

Sailors.]—A general grant of administration of the effects of a seaman in the navy, who died a bachelor, bastard and intestate, having wages or prize-money due to him, will not be granted to the solicitor of the treasury for the use of the crown, unless the provisions of the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 20, s. 56, have been complied with, those provisions, although they do not in any terms affect the crown, being binding on the court. Beran, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 25 ; L. R. 1 P. 1 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 982 ; 13 L. T. 608 ; 14 W. R. 147.

Surgeon in Navy—Letter written before sailing.]—A staff-surgeon in the navy wrote a letter, some sentences of which were testamentary, on board H.M.S. "Serpent" at Devonport. The ship was lost at sea a few days after :—Held, that the letter was entitled to probate as the will of a "seaman being at sea." Rae, In goods of, 27 L. R., Ir. 116.

Advertisements.]—The court refused to dispense with the usual advertisement in newspapers before presuming the death of a sailor who had been last heard of in 1859, as then about to sail from New Zealand to China in a barque now believed to have been lost. Atkinson, In goods of, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 219. See also Cases ante, col. 216.

G. Felo de se.

A party, after having executed her will, committed suicide by taking poison, and a coroner's jury returned a verdict of felo de se :—Held, that the will was entitled to probate. Bailey, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 156 ; 31 L. J., P. 178 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 712 ; 4 L. T. 477.

H. Where there are Several Instruments.

1. Probate Granted to more than one Will.

No Executors appointed in later one.]—A testator left two testamentary papers, in the earlier of which was an appointment of executors. In the later one he disposed of his whole property in a manner at variance with the dispositions made in the earlier paper, but no executors were appointed, nor was the previous appointment revoked. The court included both papers in the probate. Lewis, In goods of, 25 L. T. 510 ; 19 W. R. 1038.

A person left two testamentary papers, and the bequests of the second were inconsistent with those of the first. The second paper, however, did not appoint any executors, and did not revoke the appointment contained in the first. The court granted probate of both papers as together constituting his will. Griffith, In goods of, L. R. 2 P. 457 ; 26 L. T. 780 ; 20 W. R. 495.

A testator, by a will fully disposing of his property, bequeathed various legacies, appointed executors, and named a residuary legatee ; and afterwards made another will, beginning "This is my last will," repeating some of the legacies in the same words, altering others, and making additional ones, but naming no executor or residuary legatee :—Held, that the two documents were to be taken together as his last will and testament. Leslie v. Leslie, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 332.

Identity of Testamentary Papers.]—A testatrix left a will revoking previous wills, and in which, after reciting that by two deeds of certain dates made in exercise of a power under her marriage settlement she had settled certain properties in a certain way, she confirmed the deeds. No such deeds existed, but two testamentary papers similar in dates and substance were found. The court held, that the proof of identity was sufficient, and incorporated the two papers in the probate. Hastings, In goods of, 26 L. T. 715 ; 20 W. R. 616.

In Form of Deeds.]—A person executed on the same day three indentures, described as deeds of gift, by which he assigned to trustees all his property for the benefit of his three children :—Held, that, as it appeared from the contents of such documents that they were to take effect only on the death of the deceased, they ought to be admitted to probate as together containing the will of the deceased. Morgan, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 98 ; L. R. 1 P. 214 ; 14 L. T. 894 : 14 W. R. 1022. S. P., Robson, In re, Emly v. Davidson, ante, col. 242.

Under Power of Appointment.]—G., a widow, by a will dated 25th February, 1862, bequeathed certain specified property, over which she had a power of appointment under her marriage settlement, between her four sons, R., L., W. and G., and made R. sole executor. By another testamentary paper, dated 28th October, 1862, she left all the property of which she might die possessed between her three sons, L., W. and G., and appointed W. sole executor :—Held, that both papers ought to be included in the probate. Graham, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 69 ; 32 L. J., P. 113 ; 8 L. T. 610 ; 11 W. R. 638.

A married woman having a power to appoint by will under her marriage settlement, executed on the same day two instruments, the first purporting to be a deed of gift to her sister of all her property ; the second, after reciting the contents of the first, expressing a wish that her sister should pay certain bequests out of the property. These two papers were handed by the deceased after their execution, inclosed in an envelope, to the sister, in whose custody they remained till her death. It was shewn that the deceased had afterwards spoken of the papers as constituting her will, and that the property referred to in them had remained under her control up to her death :—Held, that the papers were testamentary, and entitled to be proved. Webb, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 482 ; 33 L. J., P. 182 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 709 ; 11 L. T. 277.

Two Documents separately Executed].—A writing, comprising two parts, on different pages, separately signed and attested, but executed on the same day and occasion, the first part appointing executors, and commencing, "I further will," and disposing of further property, admitted to probate as one entire will. Bonner, In goods of, 21 L. R., Ir. 339.

When First revoked by Second Will.]—A testatrix made a will on the 9th February, 1884, which she declared to be her last will, revoking all previous wills, and appointing a residuary legatee and an executor. On 19th February, 1884, she made another will, which commenced, "I declare this to be my last will," and bequeathing part of her property in legacies, and appointing another executor:—Held, that the latter will did not revoke the former, and both were admitted to probate. O'Connor, In goods of, 13 L. R., Ir. 406.

A married woman, in exercise of a power to appoint real estate (subject to a trust for sale, but not sold), by will, made in 1870, appointed a life interest therein to her husband, and after his death as she should further appoint. By a subsequent will, made in 1880, also purporting to be made in exercise of the same power, she appointed three rent-charges — one to her husband, and the others to two of her children; and, subject to such rent-charges, she appointed the lands to her sons and daughters successively in tail with an ultimate remainder to her sisters (who were not objects of the power) in fee, thus purporting to deal with the entire estate; and she appointed her husband residuary legatee and devisee:—Held, that the first will was revoked by the second, and that the latter will should alone be admitted to probate. Macfarlane, In goods of, 13 L. R., Ir. 264.

No Revocation Clause in later Will.]— A mother executed a will, in which, after disposing in legacies of a small part of her property, she left the rest to her daughter absolutely, and she appointed her executrix. She subsequently executed another instrument, which purported to be her last will and testament, but had no revocatory clause. By this she gave the whole of her property to her daughter for life, and made her whole and sole executrix. On the death of the daughter she gave legacies to a larger amount than in the first will, but did not dispose of the residue:—Held, that the two instruments ought to be admitted to probate as together containing the will of the deceased. Petchell, In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 22; L. R. 3 P. 153; 30 L. T. 74; 22 W. R. 353.

Administration with Will annexed as to one revoked—Granted as to both.]—A married lady, the absolute owner of property and the donee of a power to appoint a trust fund to the children of her marriage, appointed the fund, by a will of the 11th of January, 1864, in favour of five of the children, among them R. H. B., and made her husband residuary legatee and executor. On the 24th of December, 1873, she made another will, disposing of her own property, not referring to her power, and appointing R. H. B. residuary legatee. She died in 1879, and administration with the will annexed was granted to R. H. B. by a district registry without referring to the will of 1864; the husband died in 1880 without having proved the will of 1864, but having appointed R. H. B. executor, who obtained probate. The court on the application of R. H. B. revoked the administration with the will of 1863, and granted him administration with both wills annexed. Bland, In goods of, 9 L. R., Ir. 53.

Letter revoking prior Will, but not disposing of Residue.]—The instructions for a will were reduced to writing, and the testator duly executed the paper pending the preparation of the more formal instrument. In this paper the residue was disposed of. On the following day the testator executed a second and more formal will. It did not dispose of the general residue, and it expressly revoked all former wills. In both papers the same executors were appointed. All parties consenting, and the papers not being entirely inconsistent with one another, the court granted probate of both documents as together constituting the will of the deceased. Robinson v. Clarke, 47 L. J., P. 17; 2 P. D. 269; 39 L. T. 43.

Similar except as to Dates.]—A testator executed two testamentary papers of different dates, but otherwise exactly similar. Each purported to dispose of all his property, and contained charitable bequests affecting land. The testator lived for more than three months after the execution of the first paper, but died within three months of the execution of the second:—Held, that the papers together constituted one will, and should be admitted to probate. O'Leary v. Douglass, 1 L. R., Ir. 45.

Several Papers consistent with each other.]—When several testamentary papers are found after a death, each consistent in all important respects with the others, the whole will be taken to form one will, and will be admitted to probate as such, even where one or more may be irregular in form and imperfect in attestation. Rotton, In goods of, 35 L. T. 518.

Second giving additional Legacies.]—A testatrix duly executed a holograph will. Four years afterwards she signed her name to a paper directing certain additional legacies to be given. This paper was annexed to the original will by a pin, and her signature was attested by two witnesses, who placed their own signatures on the back of the will:—Held, that the second document was duly executed and attested, and probate was granted of the will as altered. Braddock, In goods of, 45 L. J., P. 96; 1 P. D. 433; 24 W. R. 1017.

One English and One Colonial.] — Where a testator left two wills, one disposing of his property in Australia, and the other of his property in England, on the same trusts, the court held that it was unnecessary to incorporate the Australian will with the English will, but directed an affidavit of its contents to be attached to the probate. Cole, In goods of, 20 L. T. 758.

A testator died leaving two wills, one limited to property in England, the other to property in Tasmania, and he appointed different executors in each. The court granted probate of both papers to the executors named in the English will. Harris, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 48; L. R. 2 P. 83; 22 L. T. 630; 18 W. R. 901.

Three duly executed wills bore the same date, two of which purported to dispose of the residue. It was proved that the first was intended to apply only to property in Canada, and that the two last were intended to apply only to property in England. The three papers were admitted to probate. Nickalls, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 40; 34 L. J., P. 103; 13 W. R. 1047.

English and Foreign Wills—Incorporation—Grant.]—A testatrix made two wills, one in 1888 relating to and disposing of her property in England only, the other in 1889 relating to and disposing of her property in Italy only, but it contained a clause confirming the English will.

The executors of the two wills were different :—Held, on an application by the executors of the English will for grant of probate, that the Italian will must be included in the grant. Lockhart, In goods of, 1 R. 481 ; 69 L. T. 21 ; 57 J. P. 313.

If a testator leaves two independent wills, one disposing of his property in this country, and the other of his property abroad, the former alone should be admitted to probate by the English court. If, however, the two wills are not independent, the will which is last may incorporate the earlier will, and both ought to be admitted to probate in England, as they virtually become one. The question in each case for the court to decide will be whether or not the testator intended the two documents (or, where there are codicils, the two sets of documents) to be kept entirely apart. Howden (Lord), In goods of (post, col. 287), followed. Murray, In goods of, 65 L. J., P. 49 ; [1896] P. 65 ; 44 W. R. 414.

Estate in England and Belgium—Two Wills—One in Belgian, other in English Form.]—A testator, having an English domicil of origin died in Belgium possessed of property in England and in Belgium. He left two wills, one in the English form disposing of his property in this country, the other in the Belgian form disposing of his estate situate in Belgium. The court, on the renunciation of the Belgian executor and on an affidavit that according to the law of Belgium the Belgian will only applied to the property in that country, granted probate of both wills, as together constituting the last will of the deceased, to the English executor. Bolton, In goods of, 57 L. J., P. 12 ; 12 P. D. 202 ; 36 W. R. 287.

British Subject domiciled in Belgium—Will made abroad according to Foreign Law—Deed-poll.]—The deceased, being at the time unmarried, a British subject, and domiciled in England, executed in 1847 a declaration of trust of certain property, whereby it was to be held in trust as the deceased should by deed appoint, and, subject thereto, and after her decease, for such persons as she should by will appoint. In 1849 she married a Belgian subject domiciled in that country. Before her marriage she settled the property comprised in the deed of 1847, if she should die in the lifetime of her husband, upon such trusts as she should by revocable deed or will appoint. In 1865 she obtained a divorce from her husband in Belgium, but continued to retain a Belgian domicil until October, 1887. In 1880 she executed a will in the English form, appointing executors, and purporting to dispose of all her property, including that over which she had a power of appointment. In 1884 she executed another will in Belgium, according to Belgian but not according to English law, appointing executors, and purporting to dispose of all her property, but without specially mentioning that over which she had power of appointment. In June, 1887, she executed a revocable deed-poll, sufficiently executed as a will according to the provisions of the Wills Act, whereby she appointed the settled property upon certain trusts "on and after her death." In October of the same year she abandoned her Belgian and reverted to her English domicil, and in 1889 she executed another revocable deed-poll slightly varying that of 1887, such deed being duly executed as a will, and its provisions not being intended to take effect until after her death :—Held, that the will of 1884 and the deed-poll of 1887 and 1889 together constituted the last will of the deceased. Milnes v. Foden, 59 L. J., P. 62 ; 15 P. D. 105 ; 62 L. T. 498.

2. Probate Granted to one only.

Different Residuary Legatees—No Revocation Clause.]—A party duly executed two testamentary instruments, of different dates, appointing the same persons executors, but nominating different residuary legatees. The later instrument, though it did not in terms revoke the former, was alone admitted to probate, as his last will. Pepper v. Pepper, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 85.

—— Words "Last Will."]—The words "last will," contained in a testamentary instrument, are not, of themselves, sufficient to constitute it the last will of the testator. Ib.

When Second does not refer to First.]—A testator, having executed a will, completely disposing of his own property, and also of other property over which he had a disposing power, subsequently, and after some changes had taken place in the investment of the property, and having the former will before him, executed a later will complete in form, having no word of a codicillary character, and no reference to the former—by which he fully disposed of his own property, but not of that over which he had the power, although on comparing the two together it was plain that he intended to dispose of both ; the effect of admitting the former will to probate would be the retention, contrary to the intention of the testator, of a certain appointment :—Held, that the latter will alone should be admitted to probate. Shiel v. O'Brien, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 64.

Inconsistency.]—A testator made his will, appointing no executor, and without any clause of revocation. He afterwards made a second will exactly in the same terms as the first will, except that he gave by it a small additional legacy. The second will could not be found, but it was last traced to the testator's possession, and parol evidence was given of its contents :—Held, that the second will, although it did not contain a clause of revocation, revoked the first. McAra v. McCay, 23 L. R., Ir. 138.

A second testamentary document did not in terms revoke a prior will, but nevertheless dealt with the entire property of the testator. Parol evidence was offered to prove that the second document was intended by the testator as a codicil, but rejected on the ground that there was no such ambiguity in the second document as would render necessary an explanation by parol evidence :—Held, that the second document, being unambiguous and dealing with the entire property of the testator, must be admitted to probate as the true will. Palmer, In goods of, 58 L. J., P. 44.

Different Persons named as Executors.]—See Bridges, In goods of, ante, col. 250.

Where Second could not be found.]—A testator made a will in 1831. A few years before his death in 1863, he produced to two acquaintances a paper dated 4th June, 1847, which he alleged to be his will, and got one of them to make a copy of it. This paper was in substance the same as the will of 1831. It had his name and the names of two attesting witnesses at the bottom of it, but neither of the persons to whom it was shewn could speak to any of the signatures. The copy which he signed in their presence was forthcoming, but the original document could not be found. The court held that there was no evidence of its existence as a will, and granted probate of the will of 1831. Gray, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 42 ; 22 L. T. 489 ; 18 W. R. 900.

C. made a will on the 30th April, 1857, in which he devised to H. a freehold house for life, and the residue of his real and personal estate to C., making H. and C. executors. In September, 1857, he made a codicil "to my last will of 30th April, 1857," by which he left H. 200*l.* in addition to the devise in the will, and left other specific money legacies. On 13th February, 1858, he made another codicil referring to his will of 1857, and bequeathed a leasehold house and the furniture therein to H., and otherwise confirmed his will. On 3rd June, 1858, he made a will identical with that of 1857, except the substitution of F. for C. ; at the same time he re-executed the codicil of September, 1857, which then purported to be a codicil "to my last will, dated 3rd June, 1858." On C.'s death in March, 1862, the will of April, 1857, and the two codicils, were found in an envelope sealed and indorsed by C., "Sealed 13 June, 1860—P. F. M'C." The will of 1858 was not forthcoming, though it had been in the testator's possession. There was evidence tending to shew that before the beginning of 1860 the deceased intended to exclude F. and reinstate C., and that he had destroyed the will of 1858. In June, 1860, the deceased wrote a letter to H., confirming what he had already done by will for her, which letter was signed by him and attested. The court granted probate of the last will of C., as contained in the letter and the papers found in the sealed envelope. M'Cabe, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 474 ; 31 L. J., P. 190 ; 6 L. T. 474 ; 10 W. R. 848.

A testator made a will in 1864, appointing his wife sole executrix, and duly executed another document in 1877. There was no evidence of the contents of the second document except that after its execution the testator said, "I have made a will altering my affairs, and I have taken care of Ellen, and there will be something for Roby," and except a memorandum at the foot of the will as follows : "This will is now useless, a new will having been made in October, 1877, upon my wife telling me she was sorry she had ever seen me," &c. :—Held, that in the absence of proof of an alteration as to the executrix or of a revocatory clause of disposition wholly inconsistent with the first will, that will was not revoked, and was therefore entitled to probate. Quære, whether the memorandum was admissible in evidence to shew an intention to revoke the first will. Hellier v. Hellier, 53 L. J., P. 105 ; 9 P. D. 237 ; 33 W. R. 324 ; 49 J. P. 8.

The testatrix made a will in 1886, leaving all her property to her two sisters. Upon the death of one of the latter, the testatrix executed another will, leaving all her property to her surviving sister, and appointed her sole executrix. The second will did not, in terms, revoke the first. Both wills were taken charge of by the testatrix, but after her death only the earlier will was found. The effect of both wills would be the same in the circumstances which had happened. The court refused probate of the contents of the second will, and admitted the earlier will to proof. Radcliffe, In goods of, 65 L. T. 165.

Codicil the only executed Paper forthcoming.]—At the death of a testatrix the sole testamentary papers forthcoming were a duly executed codicil and two drafts of wills, as to the execution or revocation of which there was no evidence :—Held, that though the codicil by its language was dependent on the will to which it belonged, and could not be construed without it, it ought to be admitted to probate, not having been revoked in any of the methods prescribed by the Wills Act. Black v. Jobling (L. R. 1 P. 685) followed. Gardiner v. Courthope, 56 L. J., P. 55 ; 12 P. D. 14 ; 57 L. T. 280 : 35 W. R. 352 ; 50 J. P. 791.

One only executed—Probate of the executed Document, with Directions to administer the Estate in conformity with the Trusts of the unexecuted Document.]—A testatrix left two testamentary documents, of which only one was duly executed. The first or unexecuted document made various specific bequests, and appointed an executor. The second, which was duly executed, bequeathed all the property of the testatrix to her nephew, "for the purposes I require him to do absolutely" :—Held, that the two documents could not be admitted to probate as together constituting the will of the deceased, but that probate might be granted of the second or executed document, with directions to the executor to administer the estate in conformity with the trusts of the first document. Marchant, In goods of, 62 L. J., P. 114 ; [1893] P. 254.

Internal Evidence as to which last executed.]—Two letters, lettered A. and D., of even date, similar in substance, but differing in language (will D. being on the face of it an amended copy of will A.). In the absence of extraneous evidence to determine which was last executed, the court acted on the internal evidence afforded by the wills themselves, and granted probate of will D. alone. Stephens, In goods of, 22 L. T. 727 ; 18 W. R. 528.

No Evidence as to Execution—Earlier Will admitted to Probate—Refusal to pronounce against later Will.]—A will of 1881 was propounded by the plaintiffs as executors. The defendants pleaded that it was revoked by a will of 1884, which, in its turn, they alleged to have been revoked by tearing, and said that the deceased died intestate ; and they counter-claimed for a decree against both wills. The plaintiffs, in reply, denied the revocation, and joined issue upon the other parts of the defence and counter-claim. No evidence was offered to shew that the later will had ever been executed. The court pronounced for the will of 1881, but declined to pronounce against the will of 1884. Grubb v. Grubb, 62 L. T. 644 ; 54 J. P. 663.

Words of Reference — Incorporation.]—A testatrix, by a will executed in 1873, bequeathed the residue of a fund over which, under the will of her brother, she had a power of appointment to her two daughters, Mrs. B. and Mrs. P., with remainder to their respective husbands and children. She had also previously by deed appointed the residue of another fund between them, and Mrs. P.'s share so appointed was settled on her on her marriage. Mrs. B. predeceased her mother, and by a codicil executed in 1877 the testatrix revoked the bequest to her and her family; but she made no alteration in the bequest to Mrs. P. In 1881, testatrix made another will, which revoked all former wills, and appointed C. O., the defendant in the suit, her residuary legatee. This will contained the following recital: "Whereas I have also settled one undivided moiety of the residue of the said third part of 100,000*l.*, to which I am entitled under the will of my said brother, in favour of my said daughter, E. J. P." :—Held, that this recital did not refer to the will of 1873 so as to raise the question whether it incorporated it by reference; and, further, that there was no such ambiguity as to make declarations by the testatrix of her intention admissible in evidence. Paton v. Ormerod, 61 L. J., P. 120; [1892] P. 247; 66 L. T. 381.

English Will—Will dealing solely with Land Abroad—Incorporation of Documents.]—A testator domiciled in England executed five documents—a will and two codicils, disposing of all his property, real and personal, in England and his personal property in Russia; a will dealing exclusively with his real and immovable property in Russia, which he devised simply to two persons; and a deed of covenant by which these two persons covenanted to sell the Russian property and hand over the proceeds to the executors and trustees of the English will, to be held by them on the trusts of that will. This deed was excuted before the second codicil, in which it was recited, and in which also was a recital of the testator's intention to execute the Russian will:—Held, on motion, that the deed of covenant and the Russian will ought not to be included in the English probate. Tamplin, In goods of, 63 L. J., P. 75; [1894] P. 39; 6 R. 533; 42 W. R. 287.

English and Foreign Wills—Probate of English Will only.]—A testator made a will in England, which disposed only of English property. Subsequently he made abroad another will, which disposed of property abroad and cancelled all previous dispositions. The court, with the consent of all the parties interested, ordered probate of the English will only, and allowed the foreign will to be delivered out of the registry for probate abroad. Smart, In goods of, 53 L. J., P. 57; 9 P. D. 64; 32 W. R. 724; 48 J. P. 456.

—— Canadian.]—Where a testator had duly executed two wills, by one of which he purported to dispose of his Canadian property only, and by the other to dispose of his English property only, and appointed different executors for each will, the court granted probate of the English will only, without requiring the executor to bring in the Canadian will, on an affidavit being filed in the registry exhibiting a copy of it, and a statement being made in the probate that this had been done; and it was further ordered that a preliminary affidavit be filed shewing that all the movables mentioned in the Canadian will were in Canada, and all the movables mentioned in the English will in England at the time of the testator's death. Calloway, In goods of (15 P. D. 147), followed. Seaman, In goods of, 60 L. J., P. 96; [1891] P. 253; 64 L. T. 805.

—— Scotch.]—A testator died possessed of property both in Scotland and England, having duly executed certain testamentary papers (having the effect of a will and codicils by Scotch law), whereby he disposed of his Scotch property only, and an English will and codicil whereby he disposed of his English property only. The Scotch testamentary papers contained a direction that all just and lawful debts and expenses should be paid out of the Scotch property. There was no reference to the payment of debts in either the English will or codicil. The court, being satisfied that none of the creditors would be prejudiced, granted probate of the English will alone, without requiring the Scotch testamentary documents to be incorporated, but ordered a note to be made on the probate that an exemplification of such Scotch testamentary papers had been filed. Astor, In goods of (1 P. D. 150), distinguished but followed. Fraser, In goods of, 60 L. J., P. 93; [1891] P. 285; 64 L. T. 808.

Foreign Will—English Testamentary Appointment—No Mention of Testamentary Appointment in Foreign Probate—Limited Grant.]—A testator in 1880 made a testamentary appointment in England of certain funds, and in 1888 executed a will in New Zealand, wherein he recited the said testamentary appointment and disposed of all the rest and residue of his estate. The executors obtained probate of the will of 1888 in New Zealand, and an exemplification of such probate was sent to England by the New Zealand court, but all mention of the testamentary appointment of 1881 was omitted from such exemplification. Under these circumstances the court refused an application for a grant of administration to the appointee, with the testamentary appointment annexed, limited to the funds comprised in such appointment, and ordered the exemplification of the will to be handed out of the registry to the attorney of the executors, in order that they might apply to the New Zealand court to revoke the existing probate and include the testamentary appointment in a fresh probate. Crawford, In goods of, 60 L. J., P. 16; 15 P. D. 212; 63 L. T. 232; 54 J. P. 504.

The probate of a will should contain the whole, and not a part only, of the testamentary papers of the deceased. Ib.

3. Codicils and Wills.

Principles.]—A will and codicil are to be taken together as one act. Reeves v. Newenham, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 43.

A codicil is, in its nature, a part of the will; an extension of the intention of the testator. St. Albans (Duke) v. Beauclerk, 2 Atk. 639.

Codicil considered as part of the will, and intent drawn from the whole. Hill v. Chapman, 1 Ves. J. 407; 2 Bro. C. C. 612.

The prerogative courts having admitted testamentary papers to probate as a will and codicil, is conclusive evidence upon their being distinct instruments. Russell v. Dickson, 1 Con. & L. 284; 2 Dr. & War. 133; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 339.

There being several codicils to a will, some of which were bare repetitions of others, the court declared them to be only substitutions. Campbell v. Radnor (Earl), 1 Bro. C. C. 271.

As a general rule, the probate should contain the whole, and not a part only, of the testamentary papers of the deceased. Accordingly where a testatrix had executed (1) a will disposing of her property in Ireland and elsewhere, except in America, and appointing executors of the will, and (2) a codicil of even date, disposing of her American property, and appointing a different person executor in relation thereto, and (3) a codicil substituting a new executor of the will in place of one of those formerly appointed, the court granted probate to the executors named in the will and second codicil of all three documents without reserving power to the executor appointed by the first codicil. Power, In goods of, 25 L. R., Ir. 509.

Reference to prior Will by Mistake.]—A. executed a will on February 13th, 1864, and another on June 24th, 1865, revoking all former wills. He afterwards executed a codicil which purported to be a codicil to his will dated February 13th, 1864, and after devising some property, confirmed his will. The solicitor who prepared the codicil had inserted the date of the first will, under the supposition that it was the last will. There was nothing in the codicil which shewed an intention to revive the first will:—Held, that the second will and codicil were entitled to probate. Anderson, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 55; 22 L. T. 308

A testator executed a will in 1877, in which he directed the residue of his real and personal property to be sold and divided between his six children, to each of whom he had made certain devises and bequests. In 1878, he executed another will, in which he directed all his property, real and personal, to be realised and divided among his six children, directing further that certain arrears of accrued rent should be deducted from the shares of two of them. In the year 1880, his solicitor prepared a codicil by his direction, which should, if rightly drawn as applying to the latter will, have deprived those two of his children of all participation in this property. The solicitor, by an error, drew the codicil as applicable to the will of 1877, making in it no mention of the will of 1878:—Held, that to render the testamentary papers intelligible, they must all be included in the probate. Stedham, In goods of, or Dyke, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 75; 6 P. D. 205; 45 L. T. 192; 29 W. R. 743; 45 J. P. 784; 46 J. P. 40.

Unattested Codicil—Subsequent Codicil not referring to prior Codicil.]—A testator drew a will in his own handwriting. He signed it and then added something to it, in which he referred to what was written above as his "last will." He subscribed the addition by again writing his name. He then summoned two witnesses into the room, who saw the paper there, signed with the two signatures. The testator acknowledged his signature in their presence. According to the evidence, in doing so, he pointed to the upper signature and directed the witnesses to sign their names in the space opposite the first signature. The testator subsequently executed a codicil (duly attested) in these terms: "By this codicil to my last will I leave and bequeath to . . . the sum of 7*l.* sterling":—Held, that the first and third parts of the document (excluding the second) constituted the last will of the testator. Woodroofe v. Creed, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 508.

Mistake—Inconsistent Attestation Clause.]—In an attestation clause of a third codicil, it was stated by mistake that the first codicil was cancelled:—Held, that an attestation clause forms no part of a codicil, and that therefore the first codicil must be admitted to probate. Atkinson, In goods of, 52 L. J., P. 80; 8 P. D. 165; 31 W. R. 660; 47 J. P. 440.

Codicil not revoking last Will as intended.]—A testatrix being desirous to revive a will and codicil which had been revoked by a will of later date, sent them to her solicitor, in order that he might prepare a new will for that purpose. To save time he directed his clerk simply to re-copy them, which the clerk did, including the reference by date of the codicil to the first will. In this state the will and codicil were executed on the same day:—Held, that as there was no distinct intention expressed in the codicil to revoke the last will, the probate should be granted of it, together with the codicil. Ince, In goods of, 46 L. J., P. 30; 2 P. D. 111; 36 L. T. 519; 25 W. R. 396.

Mistake in Date of Will.]—A testatrix left a will, dated 3rd June, 1868, and three codicils. The second codicil referred to a will dated April, 1870. No such will could be found, and the only evidence of its existence was an entry in the bill book of her solicitor. The court held that there had been a mistake in the date, and granted probate of the codicil, as being a codicil to the will of 1868. Dent, In goods of, 31 L. T. 552; 23 W. R 417.

Misrecital in Codicil—Inconsistent Dispositions—Effect given to Later Disposition.]—The mere misrecital of a will by a codicil is inoperative, and will not modify the dispositions of the will; but an erroneous recital of a will, coupled with or followed by a clear indication of the testator's intention to make some modified or different disposition, inconsistent with the dispositions of the will, is operative to modify or alter the earlier gifts. Margitson, In re, Haggard v. Haggard, 48 L. T. 172; 31 W. R. 257—C. A.

A testator by his will gave to his daughter (in events which happened) an estate tail in his real property, and an absolute estate in his personal property. By a codicil, after reciting that his daughter would take an estate for life in his property, with remainder to her issue, he directed that the life estate should be for her separate use, that she should have a power of appointing a life estate to any husband who should survive her, and that if she should have more than one son, and her eldest son should inherit property from other sources of a certain value, then her second son should succeed to the property given by the will, with certain gifts over:—Held, that the estates given by the will were modified by the codicil, and that the daughter was entitled to a life estate only in the real and personal property of the testator, with remainder by implication to her eldest son absolutely, subject to the appointment by her of a life estate in favour of a husband, and to a shifting use in favour of a second son. Ib.

Three Codicils on Three Separate Papers—One only signed.]—A testatrix wrote three separate lists of legacies on three separate sheets of paper, the first of which was headed "Codicil to the will of S. P.," and signed all three sheets in the presence of the witnesses, but they attested her signature to the first sheet only. There being nothing in the contents of the three papers to connect them with each other, and the first which was attested being complete in itself, the court refused to grant probate to the two which were unattested. Pearse, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 117; L. R. 1 P. 382; 16 L. T. 853.

Misdescription of Codicil.]—A testator died leaving a will revoking all former wills. He subsequently executed a codicil, which by mistake he described as a codicil to a previous will:—The court admitted the codicil to probate. Law, In goods of, 21 L. T. 399.

Codicil revoking other Codicils.]—At the foot of a deed to which a woman was a party, but which disposed of no property after her death, the following document, duly executed as a will, was written:—"I do add unto my will this codicil, hereby revoking any other codicil or codicils heretofore made by me. I constitute and appoint my son A. G." (a trustee under the deed) "my sole and only trustee and administrator under my will." When she executed this document, she said, pointing to the deed, "This is my will":—Held, first, that the deed, as it was not of a testamentary nature, was not entitled to probate. Hubbard, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 27; L. R. 1 P. 53.

Held, secondly, that as there was no will A. G. was not executor. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that as the codicil, though it disposed of no property, revoked other codicils, administration with it annexed should be granted to the next of kin. Ib.

D. executed a will containing certain bequests, and subsequently a codicil purporting to be a codicil to that will, the provisions of which were in no way dependent upon those of the will, and in all other respects he confirmed the will. Afterwards, being offended at persons benefited by the will, he cancelled it animo revocandi. The court refused to grant administration with the codicil annexed upon motion whereby the parties interested in case of intestacy had not been cited. Dutton, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 66; 32 L. J., P. 137; 8 L. T. 609; 11 W. R. 1063.

Identification of Codicil.]—A testator duly executed a will and five codicils. The first executed codicil, dated the 25th of March, 1848, commenced: "This the second codicil to the will of A."; and ended, "In all other respects I confirm my said will, save only so far as the same is unrevoked by my first codicil thereto, and I do hereby confirm the said codicil." It did not appear that the testator had executed any codicil to his will prior to this one, described as the second codicil to his will; but his solicitor, after the date of the will, and before the date of this codicil, forwarded to him for his perusal, a draft codicil, which, when he prepared this codicil, he erroneously concluded had been executed, and therefore described it as a second codicil. The draft codicil was, after the testator's death, found tied up in a parcel containing the will and five executed codicils:—Held, that the draft codicil was not sufficiently identified as the paper intended to be referred to by the deceased in his first-executed codicil, and could not be admitted to probate. Allnutt, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 167; 33 L. J., P. 86; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 581.

Revocation of Will—Revokes Codicil.]—T. M. B. having executed a codicil at the foot of his will, cut off his signature to the will. Upon proof that he thereby intended to revoke the codicil the court held that the codicil was also revoked. Bleckley, In goods of, 52 L. J., P. 102; 8 P. D. 169; 31 W. R. 171; 47 J. P. 663.

—— By Codicil.]—K., by his will dated in 1862, after reciting that he had two children, namely, his son F. and his daughter M., and that under a codicil of his father he had power by deed or will to appoint to his children, in such proportions as he might think fit, the principal share wherein he took a life interest in the residuary estate of his father, in exercise of such power directed and appointed that such share should, from and after his decease, go and belong absolutely to his daughter M., but in case she should die in his lifetime, then to his son F. The testator's daughter was married to B. By a settlement dated in 1866, and made upon her marriage, it was declared that K., in consideration of the marriage, appointed his daughter to receive the property over which he had a power of appointment, only reserving to himself the faculty of disposing in favour of his wife of the reversion of 10,000 francs during her life. K., by a codicil to his will dated in 1871, and made in France, where he was then residing, stated as follows: "When I married my daughter . . . I expressed the desire of leaving to my wife . . . a small revenue at my death . . . but not having it in my power to do so, my daughter and her husband . . . proposed to me as follows: that if I would consent to leave to them the whole of the sum of my share of the residue of my father's estate . . . which I have power to dispose of in favour of my children, that they would take the engagement at my death to have placed in my said wife's name, for her life, the sum of 10,000 francs . . . and at my wife's death the said sum to return to my said daughter . . . In the case that my said daughter and . . . her husband should respect my memory and their signature, then it is my will and desire that my daughter and her husband should and may have the whole of the sum of my aforesaid share." This codicil was written and signed by the testator, but was unattested. It was, however, admitted to probate under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114:—Held, that the appointment under the settlement and codicil were invalid, as being respectively frauds upon the power; that neither the settlement nor the codicil operated so as to revoke the will of 1862; but that the bargain which had been made had, in equity, the effect of preventing the appointee from taking under the appointment in the will, and consequently the fund must go as in default of appointment. Kirwan's Trusts, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 952; 49 L. T. 292.

Codicil—Appointment of additional Executor.]—A testator appointed his wife, his brother and two sisters executors by his will, and his wife and a fresh executor joint executors by a codicil. All executors, with the exception of the wife and one sister of the testator, renounced. The wife took out probate and died while the estate was being administered. Upon an application alternatively to grant probate to the sister who had not renounced, or to allow the joint executor appointed by the codicil to retract his renunciation and prove:—Held, that the appointment of executors by the codicil did not revoke that of those under the will, and that the executrix appointed by the will who had not renounced was entitled now to prove, but the executor who had been appointed by the codicil and had renounced could not be allowed to withdraw the renunciation and prove. Elmsley, In goods of, 48 L. T. 125.

Codicil to lost or revoked Will.]—When a will and a codicil have been in existence, and the will could not be found, the court will not grant probate of the codicil unless it is satisfied that the testator intended it to operate separately from the will. Greig, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 113; L. R. 1 P. 72; 13 L. T. 681; 14 W. R. 349.

Will and Codicil improperly attested.]—A signed her will below the signatures of the attesting witnesses, but before they signed. She afterwards executed a codicil, but signed it after the witnesses who attested it, though on the same occasion. The will was held entitled to probate, but the codicil was not. Hoskins, In goods of, 32 L. J., P. 158.

Probate of Will without Codicils — Until Question as to Codicils decided.] — Where a testator left a will and two codicils and the executors sought to propound the will with one codicil in order to raise the question as to whether or not both codicils should be admitted to probate, on a motion for the appointment of an administrator pendente lite, the court admitted the will to probate in common form and allowed the question as to the codicils to be tried subsequently. Wainewright v. Wainewright, 6 R. 562; 71 L. T. 265.

Probate of Will and Part of Codicils.]—A testator left a will and six codicils. The will and first two codicils were in the possession of the executor in England. The other codicils were in India, and probate of them had been granted by the court at Calcutta, but no exemplification or authentic copies of them had been sent to this country. It being for the benefit of the estate that the executor in England should be at once qualified to act, the court decreed to him probate of the will and two codicils in his possession, reserving power to him to prove the other codicils when they reached England, and he filing and undertaking to do so. Robarts, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 63; L. R. 3 P. 110; 28 L. T. 913; 21 W. R. 824.

Codicil confirming Will.]—When a testator by a codicil confirms his will, the will, together with all previous codicils, is taken to be confirmed. Green v. Tribe, 47 L. J., Ch. 783; 9 Ch. D. 231; 38 L. T. 914; 27 W. R. 39.

Where a prior codicil has a proper force of its own, the mere fact that a testator in a subsequent codicil describes the will by reference to its original date is not sufficient to exclude the inference that the will referred to is the will as modified by the prior codicil. Ib.

A will or a codicil, containing a devise of real estates, but not duly witnessed, was held good if confirmed by a subsequent codicil, having the proper attestation, though the latter document was in no way annexed to the will or prior codicil, and though the attesting witnesses to the latter codicil did not see the former one or the will. Utterton v. Robins, 1 A. & E. 423.

Before 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, a codicil was duly executed and attested, and expressly referred to in an unexecuted will on the same paper:—Held, that such execution gave effect to the will, and that it thereby became a good will of lands. Doe d. Williams v. Evans, 1 C. & M. 12; 3 Tyrw. 56; 2 L. J., Ex. 39.

The rule, that a codicil confirming a will makes the will for many purposes to have the date of the codicil, is subject to the limitation that the intention of the testator be not defeated thereby. Doe d. Biddulph v. Hole, 15 Q. B. 848; 20 L. J., Q. B. 57; 15 Jur. 13.

Though a codicil for certain purposes confirms a will, and brings it down to the date of the codicil, it does not necessarily make the will operate as if it had been originally made at the date of the codicil. Hopwood v. Hopwood, 7 H. L. Cas. 728; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 897.

Implied Revocation of Will.]—The fact that a will is found with a codicil in an envelope, indorsed as containing the codicil only, will not raise any presumption that the will was not meant to take effect. Bellamy, In goods of, 14 W. R. 501.

Implied Revocation of Intermediate Codicil.]—A testator by will gave legacies to three of his daughters, and devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate upon trusts for his wife and children. By a first codicil in 1878 he revoked one of the legacies in his will and increased another, concluding: "In all other respects I confirm my said will." By a second codicil, after reciting that he was desirous of altering the residuary devise contained in his will, he made a specific devise, and in all other respects confirmed his will. He afterwards made a third codicil, by which, after referring to his will by date and reciting a promise to that effect, he directed his trustees to grant an underlease of a house to his daughter-in-law, and gave his wife a pecuniary legacy in addition to the benefit she derived under his said will, and concluded: "In all other respects I confirm my said will except as altered by a certain codicil made thereto in 1878, whereby I revoked a legacy to my daughter Mary":—Held, that the words of confirmation in the first and third codicils were to be read as meaning that the testator did not intend to alter his general testamentary dispositions further than in the specific way mentioned in those codicils; and that the devise in the second codicil being clear, no intention to revoke it had been shewn with sufficient clearness to enable the court to reject that devise. Follett v. Pettman, 52 L. J., Ch. 521; 23 Ch. D. 337; 48 L. T. 865; 31 W. R. 779.

Evidence—That two Codicils are one.]—At the death of a testator two copies of his will were produced, one of which had been retained by himself, the other deposited with his bankers; each with a codicil containing the same gift in the same words, but of different dates, and attested by different witnesses. Probate having been granted of the duplicate will and of the two codicils:—Held, that evidence by one of the attesting witnesses to one of the codicils was admissible for the purpose of shewing, from the circumstances attending the execution, that the two codicils were not two but one instrument, and accordingly, that the legatee therein named was entitled to one legacy only. Hubbard v. Alexander, 45 L. J., Ch. 740; 3 Ch. D. 738; 35 L. T. 52; 24 W. R. 1058.

—— Two Codicils—Identical Gifts—Inference—Intention to revoke First Codicil.]—In determining what documents constitute the will of a testator, the court will ascertain from the documents themselves, and if necessary, by external evidence, what was the intention of the testator. Where a testator made a will and two codicils, and the second codicil contained several gifts which were merely repetitions as to amount of gifts in the first codicil, and only one gift of an increased amount, the court held that the intention of the testator was to revoke the first codicil and substitute for it the second, and granted probate of the will and second codicil. Chichester v. Quatrefagas, 64 L. J., P. 79; [1895] P. 186; 11 R. 605; 72 L. T. 475; 43 W. R. 667.

—— Parol.]—A person duly executed a paper which commenced, "I hereby make a free gift to," &c. The court admitted parol evidence to explain his intention, and being satisfied therefrom that he intended the operation of such paper to be dependent on his death, granted probate of it as a codicil to his will. Robertson v. Smith, 39 L. J., P. 41; L. R. 2 P. 43; 22 L. T. 417.

T. executed a will and three codicils. He subsequently executed a fourth codicil, in which he directly and absolutely revoked the three previous codicils. He afterwards executed a fifth codicil, in which he confirmed his will and four codicils:—Held, that there was sufficient ambiguity on the papers to allow of the introduction of parol evidence; that that clearly shewed that the error had been made by the copying clerk, and that consequently probate would be granted of the will, and of the fourth and fifth codicils only. Thomson, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 17; L. R. 1 P. 8; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 960; 13 L. T. 608; 14 W. R. 316.

I. Incorporation of Unattested and Detached Papers.

Principle of Admission.]—An unattested paper, which would have been incorporated in an attested will or codicil, executed according to the statute of frauds, is now in the same manner incorporated, if the will or codicil is executed according to the requirements of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9. Allen v. Maddock, 11 Moore, P. C. 427; 6 W. R. 825.

Where there is a reference, in a duly-executed testamentary instrument, to another testamentary instrument imperfectly executed, but by such terms as to make it capable of identification, it is necessarily a subject for the admission of parol evidence, and such parol evidence is not excluded by 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26. Ib.

If the parol evidence satisfactorily proves that in the existing circumstances, there is no doubt as to the instrument referred to, it is no answer that by possibility circumstances might have existed in which the instrument could not have been identified. Ib.

A married woman, having power under a settlement to make a will, in 1851 made a testamentary instrument in her own handwriting, which she intended to operate as a will, but which was not attested according to the requirements of 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9. In 1856 she duly executed a codicil, which was headed, "This is a codicil to my last will and testament." This codicil contained no reference to the testamentary paper of 1851, which was not produced at the time the codicil was executed, but was found at her death in a trunk in her room in her residence, enclosed in a sealed envelope, on which was indorsed, "Mrs. Anne Foote's will." The codicil was found in a drawer in her bedroom. No other will or testamentary paper was found:—Held, first, that as there was a distinct reference in the codicil to a last will and testament, and as no other will had been found, the testamentary paper of 1851 was, by parol evidence, sufficiently identified as the last will referred to by the codicil of 1856. Ib.

Held, secondly, that, though informally executed, the testamentary paper of 1851 was incorporated with and made valid by the duly-executed codicil of 1856, and probate was granted of both papers as together containing the last will and codicil of the testatrix. Ib.

The court will not extend the principle of incorporation of law as laid down in the above case. Greves, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 250; 28 L. J., P. 18; 7 W. R. 86.

To incorporate a document in the probate of a will, three things are necessary—(1) that the will should refer to the document as then in existence; (2) proof that the document propounded was in fact written before the will was made; and (3) proof of the identity of such document with that referred to in the will. A testator bequeathed all property he died possessed of to his executors, to be disposed of in charity in such manner as "I may direct them; and in case I may not leave directions or instructions, then they may dispose of it in such manner as they may think fit." The testator signed a paper, bearing the same date as the will, and in his own handwriting, containing directions for the management of his property for charitable purposes, and headed "Directions to the executors of my last will, executed the 13th February, 1879, how they are to manage my affairs":—Held, that the will did not sufficiently describe the paper of directions as then existing, and that parol evidence was not admissible to identify it as the document referred to in the will. The court, therefore, refused to incorporate the directions with the probate. Kehoe, In goods of, 13 L. R., Ir. 13.

Where will recites and refers to a voluntary deed, which is not found at the testator's death, but is by verdict of jury declared to have existed at the time of such death, this reference and recital in the will shall establish the deed, and it shall be considered as incorporated with, and constituting part of, the will. Healey v. Copley, 7 Bro. P. C. 496.

Unattested paper clearly referred to in a devise of real estate considered part of the will if made previously: not if subsequent. Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & B. 445.

Legacies by an unattested paper included under a charge of legacies on a real estate by a will duly attested; but the produce of the sale of a real estate cannot be directly disposed of by an unattested paper. Id. 446.

Where a testator refers expressly to a paper already written, and describes it sufficiently, it is as if incorporated in the will. Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. J. 228; 4 Bro. C. C. 353.

Duty of the Court of Construction in regard to.]—It is the duty of the court of construction to decide whether a document merely omitted from probate is incorporated, or not, and, if incorporated, it is of equal efficacy with the rest of the will both as to real and personal estate. Watson v. Arundell, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 53.

Document must be referred to in Will.]—L. signed her name to a testamentary paper, but not in the presence of two witnesses, nor did she acknowledge her signature in their presence. She afterward duly executed another paper, in which she nominated A. executor, and empowered him to draw her money and employ it for her after her decease in all things necessary. The first paper was lying before her at the time she executed the latter, and she placed both of them in one envelope, and delivered it to A., in whose possession it remained until the death of the deceased :—Held, that the first paper was not so referred to in the latter ; that it could be incorporated with it, or admitted to probate. Luke, In goods of, 34 L. J., P. 105 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 397.

A person executed a will on the first side of a sheet of paper ; on the back of the will was a codicil, to which the signatures of the deceased and two witnesses were attached, but which had not been executed in accordance with the requirements of the statute. Below this codicil, and partly on the third side of the sheet of paper, was another codicil, duly executed. In this last document there was no other reference to the first codicil than that a specific legacy given in such first codicil was revoked, the legatee's name being misstated :—Held, that as there was a reference, although in erroneous terms, to the contents of the first codicil in the one duly executed, and they were on the same paper, the court would grant probate of both as incorporated. Widdrington, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 66 ; 14 L. T. 369 ; 14 W. R. 774.

A father gave his residuary estate upon trust for his two sons and four daughters equally, and declared that all such sums of money as he had then already advanced, or should thereafter advance, to or for the benefit of either of his children, as should appear in any account in his handwriting kept by him for that purpose, or as should be shewn in any other manner, should be considered and taken in full for or, as the case might be, in part of his or her share of and in the trust estate. Subsequently to the date of his will the testator advanced to one of his sons 1,575*l.*, and to the other 1,560*l.* He afterwards wrote letters to each of them stating that it was his intention to make a present to them of sums of 640*l.* and 650*l.*, part of the 1,575*l.* and 1,560*l.* respectively, and requiring them to send him promissory notes for the balance :—Held, that these letters were not admissible in evidence to vary the operation of the proviso contained in the will, and that the sums of 640*l.* and 650*l.* must be brought into account by the sons. Smith v. Conder, 47 L. J., Ch. 878 ; 9 Ch. D. 170 ; 27 W. R. 149.

A will commenced as follows : "I give, devise and bequeath to my trustees and executors hereinafter named, all my property . . . on trust." The will was signed and duly attested. Below the signature and attestation clause were these words : "I find, on reading the above, previous to the execution thereof, that I omitted to name my trustees and executors. I hereby appoint my son and my friend L. my executors and trustees." It was proved that these words were written by the testator prior to the execution of the will :—Held, that the added words could not be included in probate of the will. White, In goods of, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 269.

—— So that it can be Identified.]—In order that an unattested paper may be adopted as part of a duly-attested will, it must be referred to by the will in such a manner as shall, with the assistance of parol evidence when necessary and properly admissible, leave no doubt of its identity. Dickinson v. Stidolph, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 341.

In order that an unexecuted paper writing may be incorporated, it must be so described in the will as to leave no doubt in the mind of the court that it is the paper writing referred to. Brewis, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 473 ; 33 L. J., P. 124 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 593.

A testatrix wrote a letter, addressed to her nephew, in which she gave directions as to her funeral, and as to the distribution of her property. She signed it, but not in the presence of witnesses, and inclosed it in a sealed envelope. On a subsequent occasion, by the advice of A., the following words were written on the outside of the envelope, signed by the deceased, and duly attested : "I confirm the contents written in the inclosed document, in the presence of" :—Held, that the words of this confirmation were sufficiently clear to allow evidence to be admitted to identify the document referred to, and that the evidence so admitted was sufficient for its purpose. Almosnino, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 508 ; 29 L. J., P. 46 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 302 ; 2 L. T. 19.

A testator left a will revoking all former wills, by which he directed certain articles to be distributed by the executors according to written instructions affixed to his will. No such instructions were found affixed to the will, but a paper was found duly executed, which had been referred to in a former will, and which contained instructions to his executor. The court refused to incorporate it with the existing will, on the ground that it did not correspond to the description therein, and also refused to admit it to probate independently, as it had been revoked by the last will. Gill, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 5 ; L. R. 2 P. 6 ; 21 L. T. 399.

But where a duly-executed paper refers to a written document then existing in such terms as to enable the court to identify the latter document, probate will be granted of both documents, as containing the will of the testator. Norris, In goods of, 14 W. R. 348.

When a will refers to a paper, such paper cannot be incorporated with the will, unless it is clearly identified with the description of it given in the will, and is shewn to have been in existence at the time the will was executed. Both these matters must be established, and though there may be no doubt about the former, unless the latter also is proved, there can be no incorporation of the paper with the will. Singleton v. Tomlinson, 3 App. Cas. 404 ; 38 L. T. 653 ; 26 W. R. 722—H. L. (Ir.)

Legacies out of real estate given by unattested paper cannot stand unless that paper is clearly referred to by will duly executed so as to be incorporated with it ; the circumstance of its being inclosed in same cover with will not sufficient. Smart v. Prujean, 6 Ves. 560 ; 5 R. R. 395.

Parol evidence is not admissible for the purpose of incorporating in a duly-executed testamentary paper, papers not duly executed, unless the duly-executed paper refers to some written document as then in existence, and describes it in such a manner as to enable the court to ascertain its identity. Watkins, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 14; L. R. 1 P. 19; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 12; 13 L. T. 445.

—— What is Sufficient Identification.]—A testamentary instrument was written on the first three pages of a sheet of paper. The portion on the first page only was duly executed, and the only reference it contained to any other paper was the following clause:—"I bequeath the following sums to my sons and daughters hereunder named, and I declare the under-mentioned sons and daughters to be my executors." No names were mentioned in the first page, but on the second and third pages there were unexecuted bequests, and the names of sons and daughters:—Held, that there was not a sufficient reference in the duly-executed portion of the paper to render parol evidence admissible for the purpose of incorporating in it the portion not executed. Ib.

S. duly executed a will and two codicils. The will contained the following clause: "I direct my executors to distribute" . . . all pictures, books, and other "articles according to any list or lists signed by me." A paper was found, without any date, but which was executed before the second codicil, headed "list referred to in my will and codicils." By this paper a picture was given to a nephew; wearing apparel, one year's wages, and mourning to a servant, and directions to the executors as to the inscriptions on the tombstone. The second codicil commenced: "This is a codicil to the last will and testament, with other codicils annexed, of me. . . . I hereby confirm my said last will, with all the codicils thereto duly signed by me":—Held, that the unattested paper was sufficiently identified and referred to in the will, and, having been signed before the execution of the codicil, was entitled to be admitted to probate as a portion of the will confirmed by the codicil. Stewart, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 192; 32 L. J., P. 94; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 417; 11 W. R. 540.

A testatrix left a will by which a portion of her property was to be disposed of according to instructions contained in "any document or documents accompanying this my will." Three letters were found along with the will, one dated anterior to the will, another bearing date before the will, but evidently altered after, and the third written after the execution of the will:—Held, that none of the documents were sufficiently identified as being in existence when the will was executed, and probate refused of all three. Yockey, In goods of, 29 L. T. 699.

Testator, by his will made in 1823, directed his executors to pay any legacies he might afterwards give by any testamentary writing witnessed or not, and, after making various codicils, he in 1838 made a codicil which was signed but not attested, and, by a further codicil in 1839, duly signed and attested, he declared that he thereby "ratified and confirmed his said will and codicils":—Held, that such general reference was not sufficient to identify and so incorporate the codicil of 1838 in that of 1839, and probate of such codicil refused. Croker v. Hertford (Marquis), 4 Moore, P. C. 339.

A testatrix duly executed her will in 1875, and (inter alia) bequeathed to trustees named in the will all her watches, jewellery, and other personal effects, "upon trust to deliver the same, as soon as conveniently may be after my decease, to such my children and issue as I shall, by any memorandum in writing, purporting to dispose thereof, and signed by me, direct." She subsequently drew up a memorandum, putting the name of the beneficiary against each article, but she did not sign the document. About two months later she made a codicil, by which she confirmed her will, except in so far as it was altered by this codicil. Upon the executors applying for probate of all three documents, the registrars refused to admit the memorandum, and, upon appeal to the court:—Held, that they were right, and that the memorandum, by reason of its never having been signed, was not incorporated in the will, either by the terms of that document or by the subsequent execution of the codicil. MacGregor, In goods of, 60 L. T. 840; 53 J. P. 231.

Where a testator made seven holograph documents, the last only being duly attested, and it referred to six documents signed by him "in the joint presence of the attesting witnesses, who thereupon signed their names in his and each other's presence," the court being satisfied that the witnesses had never seen the six documents sought to be incorporated, held that they were not incorporated so as to exclude the possibility of mistake, that they were not clearly identified with the description of them given in the attested document, and were not proved to have been in existence at the date of the attested document, and as the attested document was inoperative, refused probate of all the testamentary papers. Garnett, In goods of, 63 L. J., P. 82; [1894] P. 90; 6 R. 579; 70 L. T. 37.

Appointment of guardians by an unattested will made good by a codicil with three witnesses on the same paper, referring to the will as annexed, making some alterations as to legacies, and confirming it in all other respects, as in the case of a devise of land. De Bathe v. Fingal (Lord), 16 Ves. 167.

—— Onus of Proof.]—The onus of establishing existence and identification lies on the person who seeks to make the paper admissible for such a purpose. Singleton v. Tomlinson, supra.

Necessity of Existence of Papers referred to.]—A. inclosed and sealed up in an envelope two sheets of paper, on which she had in writing expressed her wishes as to the disposal of moneys belonging to her, and of her jewellery and other personal effects. These papers were not duly executed. On the inner side of the envelope she wrote as follows:—"It is my wish for my husband to administer the moneys; and for the smaller bequests B. will attend to them." This memorandum was signed by A., in the presence of two witnesses. The only surviving witness deposed that after the execution two similar sheets of paper to those found therein were placed and sealed up in the envelope by A., but that she could not further identify them. The envelope had been opened after the execution:—Held, that as the words in the memorandum did not refer to any paper as existing, or if so not in such terms as to enable the court to identify it; and as the evidence did not shew that the papers found in the envelope were the same as those placed there after the execution by A., the papers so found inclosed were not entitled to probate, and that without them the memorandum was not testamentary. Van Straubenzee v. Monck, 3 Sw. & Tr. 6; 32 L. J., P. 21; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1159; 7 L. T. 723; 11 W. R. 109.

When a will referred to a paper, as not then existing, the court refused to incorporate the paper with the will, although the paper and the will were written on the same day. Sims, In goods of, 17 L. T. 619; 16 W. R. 407.

When a will, if read as speaking at the date of the execution of the codicil, contains language which would operate as an incorporation of a document to which it refers, such document, although not in existence until after the execution of the will, is entitled to probate by force of the codicil. But where the reference in the will was to a future document, and the language of the codicil, in which the language was repeated, was ambiguous, and might be read as pointing either to an existing or future document, the court refused to incorporate unexecured papers written by the testatrix between the date of the will and codicil. Reid, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 1; 19 L. T. 265.

Where a will did not refer to a paper as existing at the date of the will the court refused to admit the same to probate, and held that the codicils could not have the effect of incorporating the paper with the documents of which probate was granted. Reid, In goods of, supra, followed. Durham v. Northen, [1895] P. 66; 6 R. 582; 69 L. T. 691.

A testatrix left the residue of her property to trustees, save and except such articles of furniture in her house at the time of her death "as may be ticketed or may be described in a paper in my own handwriting, to shew my intention regarding the same." The testatrix, at the time she instructed her attorney to draw a will, produced to him two lists, which she informed him were the papers she intended to refer to, but they were not at the time the will was executed shewn to the witnesses:—Held, that as the will did not describe the papers as being then in existence, the court could not receive parol evidence of the fact, and could not allow them to be incorporated in the probate. Sunderland, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 82; L. R. 1 P. 198; 14 L. T. 741; 14 W. R. 971.

A testator gave a policy of assurance to two trustees, "to hold the same upon uses appointed by letter, signed by them and myself." No such letter existed at the date of the will, but the testator had previously asked the trustees, who had consented to accept the bequest for the benefit of persons and objects then named by the testator. Long after the date of his will the testator wrote a letter, addressed to his executors, stating that he had, by his will, left the policy to the two trustees, to be delivered up to them for the purposes they had agreed to carry out. At the same time the testator signed an unattested memorandum, declaring the trusts on which the trustees were to hold the policy given to them by his will. The trustees retained the letter and the memorandum until after the testator's death. Upon a claim, by one of the persons beneficially interested under the memorandum, against the executors and the trustees:—Held, that the testator could not prospectively create for himself a power to dispose of property by an instrument not duly executed as a will, and that the trustees held the proceeds of the policy in trust for the residuary legatees under the testator's will. Johnson v. Ball, 5 De G. & Sm. 85; 21 L. J., Ch. 210; 16 Jur. 538.

Devise and bequest of all the testator's real and personal estate in Grenada to pay all such annuities, legacies, or bequests as he should give or bequeath, to be paid out of, or charged upon his real or personal estate in Grenada by his will or any codicil, whether witnessed or not. A charge by an unattested codicil is void, this being not a charge by the will of legacies, but a reservation by a will executed according to the statute of frauds of a power to charge by an unattested paper. As to the objection that the real estate was not charged as a subsidiary fund to the general personal estate, quære. Rose v. Cunningham, 12 Ves. 29.

Reference in Will—To Lists or Schedules.]—A testatrix having directed her executors in her will to distribute certain articles according to any list or lists signed by her, and having prior to the execution of a second codicil, signed a list to which no reference was made in the second codicil, the court allowed the list to be included in the probate. Stewart, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 211.

A testator empowered his executors to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses out of the proceeds of his property, and after reciting that he was possessed of landed and chattel property, "as stated in the annexed schedule," directed his executors to sell his property. The will was written by the testator himself on three sides of a sheet of paper and duly executed; the schedule was on the fourth side, also written and signed by him, and dated the same day as the will, but unattested; it was omitted from the probate, and there was no extrinsic evidence that it was already written when the will was executed:—Held, that the identity and previous existence of the schedule were sufficiently established by its position and its being referred to in the will as "annexed," and that it was therefore incorporated. Watson v. Arundell, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 53.

G., in 1866, executed a will, and a few days afterwards a paper, which he called directions to his executors, to form a part of his will. In 1868 he executed a fresh will, revoking all former wills and codicils. In this last will he expressed a wish that the goods and chattels in and about the rooms he should occupy at the time of his death should be disposed of according to the written directions left by him, and affixed to his will. No paper was found affixed to his will, but the codicil above mentioned, which in many respects answered to the written directions described in the will, was found in his private room:—Held, that it could not be included in the probate. Gill, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 5; L. R. 2 P. 6; 21 L. T. 399.

A testator by his will dated the 22nd day of November, 1872, declared for the information of his trustees that the amount or values expressed in his ledger and entered on the twenty-first page and signed by him and dated the 8th of November, 1872, were, and were the only, advancements either by way of gift or loan made by him to any of his children before the 8th of November, 1872. The twenty-first page of the ledger was not admitted to probate. The sums entered therein were not in all instances the true amounts actually received by the children:—

Held, that the will must be read as if the entries in the ledger were incorporated into it, and that the entries were conclusive for the purposes of the will. Quihampton v. Going, 24 W. R. 917.

A will began, "I direct my executors to pay the expenses of my funeral, and all my lawful debts, out of the proceeds of my property." It went on thus:—"Whereas I am possessed of landed and chattel property, as stated in the annexed schedule; I direct my executors to sell my landed property, namely" (and then four separate pieces of landed property were named), "for its full value." Several legacies were then given, and then a fifth landed property was specially devised to W., a person fully described, with an ultimate remainder to T., and then came the gift of other legacies, and finally the will declared, "I constitute the said T," describing him, "my residuary legatee." The will was written on three sides of a sheet of paper, the signature and attestation were at the bottom of the third side, the schedule was on the fourth side; it was in the handwriting of the testator, was signed by him and bore the same date as the will. It described the four portions of landed estate, and as to the fifth landed estate said, it "is not included in the above schedule, being willed by me to W.; my executors have no control over it." The witnesses who attested the will had not seen the schedule when they made their attestation:—Held, that as the schedule was not proved to have been written at the time of the execution of the will, it could not be incorporated with the will nor referred to for the purpose of assisting in its construction. Singleton v. Tomlinson, 3 App. Cas. 404; 38 L. T. 653; 26 W. R. 722—H. L. (Ir.)

A lady, by her will, gave to A. all such articles of silver plate and plated articles "as are contained in the inventory signed by me and deposited herewith." A list of such articles, professedly the one referred to in the will, signed by the deceased at the foot of each page and at the end, but having on it a date on the last page later than the date of the will, was deposited with the will by her at her bankers'. In conversation with one of the witnesses, before the execution, she referred to this list, but it was not shewn to the witnesses at the time of the execution of the will. She subsequently executed a codicil, which described itself as a codicil to the will of such a date, but did not confirm it in direct terms:—Held, that the will might be read as if it had been executed at the time of the execution of the codicil; and as the court was satisfied from the language of the will so read that the list referred to was then in existence, and from the other evidence that it had been before that date signed by her and deposited with her will, it might be taken to be incorporated therewith, and be admitted to probate. Truro (Lady), In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 89; L. R. 1 P. 201; 14 L. T. 893; 14 W. R. 976.

W. bequeathed all her jewels, furniture, &c., to such of her children in such portions as she should by any list signed by herself direct. She subsequently duly executed a codicil in the following words: "I declare that this writing shall be a codicil to my will." When she executed the codicil there was a list annexed to it in her own writing, but unsigned by her, and expressed to be made for the purpose of carrying out the intentions expressed in her will, disposing of different articles of jewellery, furniture, &c., amongst her children. The court granted probate of the will and codicil, but without the list annexed to the codicil. Warner, In goods of, 10 W. R. 566.

A testator, after executing his will, delivered to his brother a list of small sums of money which he wished to be paid to different persons after his death. Subsequently he wrote him a letter which was duly executed, in which he referred to the list thus: "In the legacies I gave to you":—Held, that the list was sufficiently identified, and that it should be included in the probate. Daniell, In goods of, 52 L. J., P. 23; 8 P. D. 14; 48 L. T. 124; 31 W. R. 248; 46 J. P. 808.

Direction in a will, that "all and every such sums of money which I have already advanced or may hereafter advance to any children, as will appear in a statement in my handwriting," should be brought into hotchpot:—Held, that a subsequent unattested statement in testator's handwriting was admissible in evidence of advances, the court construing "which" as meaning "as," and the clause, "as will appear," &c., as mere words of reference, forming no part of the identification of the subject. Whateley v. Spooner, 3 K. & J. 542.

But such unattested document cannot be looked upon as proving that an advance was made which was not actually made, nor conversely; and a direction therein that shares so advanced, and which had become depreciated in value, should be estimated at their selling price at the time when the estate should be divided is inadmissible. Ib.

A testator left all books contained in a certain library catalogue to Selwyn College, Cambridge. The registry required that this catalogue should be treated as as an incorporated document and brought into the registry for probate. The catalogue was very cumbrous, and the expenses of making a copy and engrossing and registering the same would have amounted to about 200*l.*:—The court, with the consent of all persons interested, ordered that the college should hold the catalogue on behalf of the registry, a note being made on the probate to this effect, and the college undertaking to allow anyone to inspect it who was legally entitled to do so. Balme, In goods of, 66 L. J., P. 161; [1897] P. 261; 77 L. T. 219.

—— To Codicil.] — Testatrix gives, by her will, legacies to all her nephews and nieces, except those thereinafter named; she desires her executors to look upon all memorandums, &c., in her own hand as parts of a codicil to her will, and bequeaths by will her residue to the children of her sisters, E., J., &c. By a codicil she gives legacies to some other nephews and nieces:—Held, that the children of E., J., &c., the residuary legatees under the will, were excluded from the legacies; but that the legatees under the codicil were not, and were entitled to both. Fuller v. Hooper, 2 Ves. 242.

"Testament" includes a will, codicils, &c. "Instrument" signifies the will alone. Ib.

—— To Memorandum.]—M. duly executed a will, in which she directed her trinkets to be divided "as I shall direct in a small memorandum." She afterwards wrote a list of trinkets, which she headed, "Memorandum of trinkets referred to in my will." Subsequently she duly executed a codicil, which did not confirm the will, nor did it refer to the memorandum :—Held, that the memorandum could not be included in the probate. Mathias, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 100 ; 32 L. J., P. 115 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 630 ; 8 L. T. 471 ; 11 W. R. 808.

A testatrix bequeathed personalty to certain legatees, "in the confidence that they will distribute it as I may by memorandum or deed, or otherwise, direct." She afterwards executed a codicil, revoking some legacies, but confirming her will in all other respects. After her death, the will and codicil, and several unattested memoranda in her handwriting, containing directions for the distribution of the personalty, bearing dates later than the will, and earlier than the codicil, were found tied up together :—Held, that the memoranda could not be admitted to probate, Lancaster, In goods of, 29 L. J., P. 155.

—— To French Will.]—A testator executed a will in France in 1858, and added a codicil thereto in 1865, and a second codicil in 1872. In 1860 he executed a second will, which he deposited with his bankers in England, and in it appointed executors, and confirmed and renewed in all its parts the will of 1858. The French will (1858) disposed only of his property in France, the English will (1860) disposed only of his property in England, and both contained statements to the effect that they were independent of each other :—Held, that the French papers were incorporated by reference with the English will, and that all should be included in the probate. Howden (Lord), In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 26 ; 30 L. T. 768 ; 22 W. R. 711.

—— To Annulled Will.]—A will made in November, 1861, contained a clause, "I make no specific bequest to my brother's children, &c. Upon this subject I refer my wife to my annulled will, dated the 11th of February, 1851." The annulled will contained no bequest to those children ; in it the testator stated that in the present aspect of affairs there was every prospect that they would be left well provided for, but, that if any reverse should overtake them, he trusted and felt sure that his wife would share her all with them. Upon motion for probate of the will of November, 1861 :—Held, that the annulled will did not raise any implied trust in favour of the children, and that therefore it need not be embodied in the probate. Ouchterlony, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 175 ; 32 L. J., P. 140 ; 9 L. T. 117.

—— To Copy of Will.]—M. made his will in India and deposited it with a bank at Calcutta. While temporarily resident in Scotland he executed a codicil, in which he referred in distinct terms to a copy of the will. This copy he produced to the witnesses at the time he executed the codicil, and he deposited both papers in the hands of his executor :—Held, that the copy was incorporated by the codicil, and probate of the copy will and codicil granted, without the production of the original will. Mercer, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 43 ; L. R. 2 P. 91 ; 23 L. T. 195 ; 18 W. R. 1040.

—— To Settlement.]—L. bequeathed certain leaseholds to trustees upon the same trusts as declared in a certain indenture of settlement. With a slight exception, the whole of these leaseholds were included in the settlement, which was of great length. The court granted probate without requiring the settlement to be embodied in it, upon an affidavit being filed describing and giving the date of the settlement. Lansdowne (Marquis), In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 194 ; 32 L. J., P. 121 ; 9 L. T. 22 ; 11 W. R. 749.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to trustees, upon the same trusts as those contained in a deed of settlement made between third persons, and in which the testator had no interest. The court, upon an affidavit that the persons in whose possession the deed was refused to produce it, decreed probate without requiring a copy of the deed to be inserted therein. Sibthorp, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 73 ; L. R. 1 P. 106 ; 13 L. T. 803 ; 14 W. R. 543.

D. devised his real and leasehold estates in accordance with the provisions of a deed of settlement made by his son on his marriage, so far as they related to a particular property. He left no leaseholds, and the trustees of the son's marriage settlement declined to allow it to be taken into the registry :—Held, that the court would not compel the trustees to bring in the deed of settlement, and that probate might issue without any portion of the deed of settlement being included in it, the party applying being willing to take it in that form. Dundas, In goods of, 32 L. J., P. 165 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 360 ; 12 W. R. 18.

A testatrix bequeathed all her estate on the same trusts as those contained in her marriage settlement. The court dispensed with the necessity of incorporating the whole of the settlement in the probate, and required only such extracts as would explain the nature of the bequests. Garbett, In goods of, 21 L. T. 366.

A domiciled American subject made a will in the United States, by which he directed his property in this country to be paid over, after the discharge of specified legacies, to his executors in America, and to be by them distributed according to the provisions of a trust deed also executed in the United States. The deed did not affect the devolution of property in this country, and the court therefore allowed probate to go without incorporating it, an affidavit being filed in the registry identifying it by date and the names of the trustees. Peabody, In goods of, 21 L. T. 730.

A husband left a will containing the following clause : "I confirm the provision made for my wife by her marriage settlements, and of the settlement made on the marriage of my son." The court allowed probate of the will to go, without requiring the settlements to be incorporated, but directed a copy of the settlements to be deposited in the registry. Leigh, In goods of, 28 L. T. 914.

Reference in Codicil—to prior Codicil.]—A testator made his will, duly attested, so as to pass freehold estate, dated in 1828. In May, 1831, he made a codicil, which was attested by two witnesses only, declaring it to be a codicil to his will, and directing that it should be annexed thereto. This codicil varied the disposition of parts of his real estate. In September, 1831, he made a second codicil, duly attested, so as to pass freehold estate, which he declared to be a second codicil to his will, and directed the same to be annexed thereto and taken as part thereof. The second codicil concluded by confirming his will :—Held, that the second codicil gave the same effect to the first codicil as if it had been duly attested by three witnesses. Aaron v. Aaron, 3 De G. & Sm. 475 ; 14 Jur. 125.

—— To Letter.]—A testatrix, the day before undergoing an operation which ended fatally, wrote two letters ; the first, which was addressed to a personal friend, gave directions as to certain articles of plate to which the testatrix had affixed the names of various donees, and the second to her executor. In this letter, which was duly attested as a codicil, she mentioned having written the first letter :—Held, that the second letter, which constituted a valid codicil, incorporated the first letter and that the first letter incorporated the papers therein referred to. Symes v. Appelbe, 57 L. T. 599 ; 51 J. P. 632.

Paper annexed to Will.]—Two papers, A. and B., wafered together and sealed up in an envelope, indorsed, "The will of James Wood, 2nd and 3rd December, 1834," were propounded as a will. Paper A., which was headed, "Instructions for the will of me, James Wood," and was dated the 2nd December, and signed by the testator but not attested, purported to appoint four gentlemen by name executors, whom he desired to take possession of his personal estate, subject to the payment of his debts and to such legacies as he should thereafter direct, and the paper went on to declare that he would dispose of his real estates by writing indorsed thereon. Paper B., dated 3rd December, signed by the deceased and attested by the three witnesses, began, "I, James Wood, do declare this to be my will for disposing my estate as directed by my instruction," and gave all his real and personal estates "which he might not dispose of," and, subject to his debts and to any legacies or bequests which he might thereafter make, to "his executors," not naming or describing them. Both papers were in the handwriting of one of the executors, the attorney of the deceased, and it appeared in evidence that they had been annexed together, sealed up in an envelope, indorsed, and deposited in testator's bureau, by such attorney during the last illness of the testator, and without his directions or knowledge :—Held, that the two papers constituted a valid will. Hitchings v. Wood, 2 Moore, P. C. 355.

Paper referring to Will.]—If testator, by paper subsequent to will, says he has bequeathed that which he has not bequeathed, that paper may be proved as testamentary, and property will pass. Druce v. Denison, 6 Ves. 397.

—— To Codicil.]—A paper being propounded which was alleged to be a holograph of and signed by the deceased, and to have been sent to one of the legatees named in it in an anonymous note by the threepenny post, leaving legacies amounting to 210,000*l*., and referring to a legacy in another codicil not forthcoming (there being traces in the evidence of other testamentary papers which were not forthcoming), partially torn and partially burnt, as was alleged to have been done to this and other testamentary papers since the death of the testator, or in his lifetime without his knowledge, the evidence as to the handwriting being contradictory, though the affirmative greatly preponderated, and the disposition being probable, the court held the paper to be a valid codicil. Hitchings v. Wood, supra. See also Ridout v. Bouchier, 2 Moore, P. C. 428, n.

Presumption that Papers fastened together at Execution.]—A will had been engrossed by a law stationer on fifteen brief sheets of paper, consecutively numbered. On the sixteenth sheet the testator had written a codicil, and on the eighteenth and last a schedule of property referred to in the will. On his death, it was found that the original fourth sheet had been removed and placed loose in his desk, and that the original seventeenth sheet had been used by him in substitution of the fourth. The several sheets were tied together with tape :—Held, that the legal presumption that papers bound together and constituting the will, as found at his death, were so bound together at the time of execution and attestation was not rebutted by the circumstances of the case. Rees v. Rees, L. R. 3 P. 84 ; 29 L. T. 375.

Incorporation—Of invalid Will by Codicil.]—S. M. H., while a married woman, made a will which was invalid. Afterwards, when a widow, she executed a document beginning with the words "This is a codicil to the last will and testament of me." The codicil was written on the same paper as the will, and immediately after it, and it was proved that she had made no other will :—Held, that the will was incorporated in the codicil. Probate granted of both documents. Heathcote, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 42 ; 6 P. D. 30 ; 44 L. T. 280 ; 29 W. R. 356 ; 45 J. P. 361.

—— By Enumeration of Codicils.] — Semble, a document containing the words "This is a third codicil to my will" is not incorporated in a codicil of subsequent date by the words "This is a fourth codicil to my will." Stockil v. Punshon, 50 L. J., P. 14 ; 6 P. D. 9 ; 44 L. T. 280 ; 29 W. R. 214 ; 45 J. P. 159. Explained in Heathcote, In goods of, supra.

When Unincorporated.]—A. executed his will in February, and a codicil on the same paper in December ; below the signature to the will, and before the commencement of the codicil, appeared a memorandum which, from the evidence of the solicitor who prepared the will, had been written on the paper before the execution of the will :—Held, that the memorandum, being no part of the will as originally executed, was not entitled to probate by reason of the duly-executed codicil of a subsequent date, such codicil referring merely to the will. Willmott, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 36 ; 6 W. R. 409.

D. made a testamentary disposition on a first page of a sheet of note paper, which was signed by himself and attested by one witness only. He shortly afterwards duly executed a testamentary disposition (but which contained no reference to the former disposition) on the third side of the same sheet. At the time of the execution he did not mention to the attesting witnesses the writing on the first page, and one of them believed that he asked them to attest his will :—Held, that the disposition on the first page was not incorporated in the document executed on the third page, and was therefore inoperative ; that, as the disposition on the third page related exclusively to real property, it was not entitled to probate. Drummond, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 8 ; 2 L. T. 391 ; 8 W. R. 476.

A testatrix made a testamentary disposition on the first three pages of a sheet of letter paper, which was signed by herself, but unattested.

She some time afterwards duly executed a testamentary disposition (but which contained no reference to the former disposition) on the fourth page of the same sheet. At the time of the execution the testatrix told the witnesses that it was her will; but the paper was so folded that they could not see the writing above her signature, and they did not know that there was any writing on the other pages :—Held, that the disposition on the first three pages of the sheet was not incorporated in the document executed on the fourth page, and was therefore inoperative. Tovey, In goods of, 47 L. J., P. 63 ; 39 L. T. 235 ; 27 W. R. 140.

Where Probate allowed without Incorporation.]—An American, by a will and codicils, disposed of his property generally, and by a second will, in which he named separate executors, of moneys he had invested in the British funds. He expressed a distinct wish that the British will should take effect as a separate testamentary disposition of property independently of and disconnected from his general will :—Held, that it was unnecessary to incorporate the American will, which was very bulky, in the English probate, but that an authenticated copy of the American will and codicils should be filed in the registry, and a note be added to the English probate to the effect that such copy had been so filed. Astor, In goods of, 45 L. J., P. 78 ; 1 P. D. 150 ; 34 L. T. 856 ; 24 W. R. 539.

—— Deeds of Settlement.]—See supra, col. 287.

K. Conditional and Contingent.

Conditional Will—What is.]—The deceased, an officer in the army, whilst on active service during the Maori war in 1864, wrote a letter to his sister, of which the material portion was in the following words : "This is the most important part of my letter. If we remain here, . . . the chances are in favour of more of us being killed, and as I may not have another opportunity of saying what I wish to be done with any little money I may possess in case of an accident, I wish to make everything I possess over to you." (Here followed a description of the testator's property.) "Keep this until I ask you for it." The testator lived till July 10, 1896, without ever having asked his sister for the letter or having in any way revoked the testamentary disposition contained therein :—Held, that the terms of the letter did not limit its operation to the period of the Maori war or the period of the testator's active service ; that the document was not conditional on his death at any particular time ; and that as it was a good military will under s. 11 of the Wills Act, it must be admitted to probate. Spratt, In goods of, 66 L. J., P. 25 ; [1897] P. 28 ; 75 L. T. 518 ; 45 W. R. 159.

The testator, a Scotchman by birth, resident principally in India, made a will whereby he gave his wife the income of the residue of his estate for life, provided she remained a widow. In the event of her marrying a second time he divided the residue into three parts, one of which he gave to his wife for life with power to bequeath the same by will, and the other two to certain specified legatees. He omitted, however, to provide for the disposition of his estate after his wife's death in case she remained a widow. In 1892, twelve years after the date of the original will, being about to sail with his wife from Calcutta to England, he wrote a letter to his brother, the executor of his will, which letter was shown to be a valid testamentary document according to the law of Scotland. This letter contained the following passage : "If anything happens to us on the way, my will has been accidentally packed away in a tin box to which I cannot now get access, as I forget which box it has been put into. However, if we both come to grief, I appoint you my executor ; if I only, then in conjunction with Nan. If Nan survives me the revenue of my estate goes to her for life ; on her death, 10,000*l.* to be paid in equal proportions to George, Sam, and Lizzie, or, in the event of their death, then to their children. The residue I leave to you" :—Held, that there was no period defined in which alone the will was to be operative, and that there was nothing in the disposition of the property which pointed to a limitation of the effect of the will, but rather the direct opposite ; and that therefore the will was not conditional, and must be admitted to probate. Halford v. Halford, 66 L. J., P. 29 ; [1897] P. 36 ; 75 L. T. 520.

Sailor.]—A master mariner, whilst on a voyage, wrote with his own hand a will which commenced, "This is the last will and testament of me, that in case anything should happen to me during the remainder of the voyage from hence to Sicily and back to London, then I give and bequeath," &c. :—Held, that the dispositions of the will were dependent on the event referred to at the beginning of it, and that it had therefore only a contingent operation. Robinson, In goods of, 40 L. J., P. 16 ; L. R. 2 P. 171 ; 23 L. T. 397 ; 19 W. R. 135.

A mariner's will, commencing "Instructions to be followed if I die at sea or abroad," is conditional. Lindsay v. Lindsay, 42 L. J., P. 32 ; L. R. 2 P. 459 ; 27 L. T. 322.

A master mariner being about to sail from Liverpool to Wales, made a will, which contained the following clause : "Should anything happen to me on my passage to Wales, or during my stay there, I leave all my goods." &c. He returned from that voyage, but evidence was offered of adherence to and recognition of the will subsequently :—Held, that the will was conditional, and that no evidence was admissible to show that he intended that it should be operative after the time limited in the condition had expired. Roberts v. Roberts, 2 Sw. & Tr. 337 ; 31 L. J., P. 46 ; 8 Jur. (N.S) 220 ; 5 L. T. 689.

On Going a Journey.]—When a will is expressed to take effect during absence on a particular voyage, and the writer returns to England, the court cannot admit evidence to show the writer's intention of adhering to that will during a subsequent absence. Winn, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 147 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 764 ; 4 L. T. 655 ; 9 W. R. 852.

W. executed a paper in which he stated that he was on the eve of embarking for foreign parts, and thereby, in case of his decease during his absence being fully ascertained and proved, he made certain bequests. He returned from that voyage the following year, and subsequently again left England, and was supposed to have died in Australia :—Held, that the paper was conditional, to operate only if he died on his then intended voyage; and that, as he returned from it, the will had no further effect. Ib.

Where a person wrote with his own hand a will in which he stated he did so "being about to proceed on a long voyage, and not knowing what will happen to me"; and he made a tour, and returned home, and subsequently duly executed this paper in the presence of two witnesses:—Held, entitled to probate. Hobson, In goods of, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1208.

"In Case of my Death on the Way."]—A testator being about to travel, made his will, which contained the following words: "On leaving this station for T. and M., in case of my death on the way, know all men this is a memorandum of my last will and testament":—Held, that the will was not contingent upon his death before arriving at T. or M.; and therefore it was admitted to probate. Mayd, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 7; 6 P. D. 17; 29 W. R. 214; 45 J. P. 8.

A person executed his will in England. He then went to India, and while there executed a second will, which contained this clause: "I write this as my last will and testament in case of a sudden or accidental death befalling me in India." He died in England:—Held, that the will was contingent on his dying in India, and that, as the event had not occurred, the instrument was inoperative. Newton, In goods of, or Jobson v. Ross, 42 L. J., P. 58; 28 L. T. 677; 21 W. R. 648.

A party executed a paper in which he made use of the following language: "Being obliged to leave England to join my regiment in China, I leave this paper containing my wishes. Should anything unfortunately happen to me whilst abroad, I wish everything that I may be in possession of at that time, or anything appertaining to me hereafter, to be divided," &c. The deceased returned to England from China:—Held, that the dispositions of the will were dependent upon his death in China, and therefore that the will itself was conditional. Porter, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 12; L. R. 2 P. 22; 21 L. T. 680; 18 W. R. 231.

After the death of a testator a will was found amongst his papers which had been executed two years previously, commencing, "In case of any fatal accident happening to me, being about to travel by railway, I hereby leave all my property," &c.:—Held, that the will was not contingent upon his death by accident during the journey he was about to take. Dobson, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 54; L. R. 1 P. 88; 13 L. T. 758; 14 W. R. 408.

A person wrote and signed a will on the 14th of August, 1858, beginning, "In the prospect of a long journey, should God not permit me to return to my home, I make this my last will." He afterwards went on a journey, and returned on the 25th of September, 1858. In February, 1859, he acknowledged his signature to the will in the presence of two witnesses, who duly subscribed the same:—Held, that the will was entitled to probate, as it was executed after the completion of the journey contemplated. Cawthron, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 417; 33 L. J., P. 23; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 51; 12 W. R. 443.

A testator made his will as follows:—"As I am about to leave home for Bangor, should any accident, &c., take me out of this world, I will to E. M'D., of, &c., 200*l.* and also furniture to the amount of 50*l.* at her selection," for her sole and separate use. "The remainder of all I am possessed of, or may be entitled to possess, I leave to my daughter, S. C., for her sole and separate use, &c.; and should, in God's inscrutable providence, anything take her and her son away from this world before I again make my will—S. C. and her son—I will everything I may be possessed of to E. M'D., of, &c., for her sole and separate use," &c. The testator went to Bangor the same day, and returned home in a week, without meeting with any accident, and did not again leave Ireland, or make any other will, until his death—more than six years afterwards:—Held, that the will was not conditional or contingent on any accident to him during his projected journey to Bangor. Principles of construction in determining whether a will is conditional or absolute. Stuart, In goods of, 21 L. R., Ir. 105.

On Death from particular Illness.]—A will in these words: "I, W. M., being physically weak in health, have obtained permission to cease from all duty for a few days, and I wish during such time to be removed from the brig Apellina, to the floating hospital ship Berwick Walls, in order to recruit my health; and in the event of my death occurring during such time, I do hereby will and bequeath," &c., is not contingent on the event of the testator's death in consequence of the illness from which he was suffering when the will was made. Martin, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 116; L. R. 1 P. 380; 17 L. T. 32.

On Death from particular Climate.]—The words "I request that in the event of my death while serving in this horrid climate, or any accident happening to me," do not make a testamentary paper conditional in the event of death while in that climate. Thorne, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 36; 34 L. J., P. 131; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 569; 12 L. T. 639.

"On my Son Dying under Twenty-one," &c.]—A general probate decreed of a will intended "to take effect only in the event of my son, Charles, dying under twenty-one and my daughter dying under that age unmarried." Cooper, In goods of, 1 Deane Ecc. Rep. 9; 4 W. R. 182.

"Until I recover," &c.]—A will, executed in 1851, contained a clause in the following terms: "I leave to P. and D. the house and lands of L., until I am able to live there and enjoy it myself." At the date of the will the testator was absent from L., and was suffering from a dangerous illness; he, however, survived a considerable time, and on several occasions afterwards resided at L., and many years after the execution of the will executed codicils which referred to and republished it. In an ejectment by parties entitled to the residuary real estate against P. and D., to recover the lands of L., parol evidence was offered by the defendants, and admitted, showing that the testator entertained peculiar religious opinions, and believed that he would revisit the earth after his death for a period which he described as the millennium, and that he had frequently stated that he would reside at L. during that period:—Held, independently of the parol evidence as to the religious opinions of the testator, first, that the above clause in the will was to be construed as a devise, operating as a testamentary disposition, to take effect upon his death, and not as a gift inter vivos of the lands, or the profits thereof, until the testator, on recovering from his then illness, should be able in his lifetime to enjoy them. Bunbury v. Doran, Ir. R. 8 C. L. 516 Affirmed, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 284—Ex. Ch.

—— When contingent Clauses rejected.]—Held. secondly, that the words "until I am able to live there and enjoy it myself" should be rejected as a limitation until an impossible event, and that the estate in the lands given to P. and D. passed to them unqualified by these words. Ib.

Husband and Wife.]—A husband made a will by which he left all his property to his wife, and made her sole executrix. He subsequently, with his wife, executed a joint will, which was expressed to take effect in case they should be called out of the world at one and the same time and by one and the same accident. By this will they revoked all former wills. The husband died in the lifetime of his wife:—Held, that the joint will was dependent upon a contingency which did not happen, and was, therefore, inoperative even to revoke a previous will. Hugo, In goods of, 46 L. J., P. 21; 2 P. D. 73; 36 L. T. 518; 25 W. R. 396.

A wife made a will in exercise of a power, but appointed no executor. The will was dependent on events which never happened, and the legatees named in it died in her lifetime. The will being clearly inoperative, the court refused to admit it to probate. Graham, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 46; L. R. 2 P. 385; 26 L. T. 529; 20 W. R. 614.

A. disposed of his personal and certain of his real property, and appointed executors. He subsequently executed another testamentary paper, in which was the clause, "If my wife survives me, in two years after my wife's death my second cousin, B., and next of kin, to take possession of all my real and personal property, and to pay all my just debts according to my will. . . . I give B. this written document, as I am afraid my executors will not put my will into court." The executors died in the lifetime of A.:—Held, that as the paper was testamentary and duly executed, although not to operate until some time after the death of the testator, it was entitled to probate, and that B. was executor according to the tenor thereof, but that he must take probate of the will as well as of that paper. Newns, In goods of, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 688.

A testator wrote a codicil with his own hand, which concluded as follows: "I give my wife the option of adding this codicil to my will or not, as she may think proper or necessary":—Held, that the validity of this paper was conditional on the assent of the wife, and that as she elected not to avail herself of its provisions, it ought not to be included in the probate. Smith, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 85; L. R. 1 P. 717; 21 L. T. 340; 17 W. R. 1110.

A codicil, expressed to be in event of testator's death before he joins his wife, was executed after their separation in West Indies, upon an intended voyage to England. The voyage being prevented by accident, he joined her, and they lived together there and in England, having returned together; and the testator having afterwards gone to Corsica, and thence to Lisbon, died there. The codicil held to be contingent, and did not take effect under circumstances. Probate is not conclusive, not being refused except in plain case. Sinclair v. Hone, 6 Ves. 607.

L. Joint and Mutual Wills.

Upon Death of both.]—Probate granted of a joint will of two persons, as a distinct will, upon the death of both. Stracy, In goods of, Deane Ecc. Rep. 6; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1177; 4 W. R. 164.

A. and B., partners in a farming business, and joint tenants in certain freeholds, executed a will containing various devises and bequests, to take effect after the decease of both of them. On the death of A., B. surviving, application for probate, as of the will of A., was made by the executor therein named:—Held, that probate could not be granted of such an instrument till after the death of both parties. Raine, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 144; 6 W. R. 816.

Two sisters executed a joint will, in which they stated their desire, that as they were living mutually together upon the joint savings of each other, at the death of either, the survivor should have all that remained; and further, on the death of the survivor, that any residue should be divided amongst certain persons. The surviving sister did not prove this document, but on her death, administration, with this paper annexed as the will of the survivor, was granted to one of the parties entitled in distribution to her property. Lovegrove, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 453; 31 L. J., P. 87; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 442; 6 L. T. 131.

Contingent.]—Husband and wife executed a joint will, which was expressed to take effect in case they should be called out of the world at one and the same time, and by one and the same accident. The husband died in the lifetime of the wife:—Held, that the joint will was dependent upon a contingency which did not happen, and was therefore inoperative. Hugo, In goods of, 46 L. J., P. 21; 2 P. D. 73; 36 L. T. 518; 25 W. R. 396.

Only appointing Executors.]—The principle that a will appointing executors, and not disposing of any personal estate, is entitled to probate, will be applied to the case of a joint will on the death of one of the co-testators. Miskelly, In goods of, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 62; 18 W. R. 215.

Probate of Part only.]—A husband and wife wrote out and signed a document as their will, leaving all their property to each other, and further, making provisions as to what was to be done with the property in the event of the survivor dying without altering those provisions. The wife died first. Upon the application of the husband, the court granted probate to him of so much only of the document as became operative through the death of the wife. Piazzi-Smyth, In goods of, 67 L. J., P. 4; [1898] P. 7; 77 L. T. 375.

M. In Execution of a Power of Appointment.

Generally.]—Before the passing of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, though the ecclesiastical court could grant probate of the will or testamentary appointment of a married woman, yet if parties who claimed under such will were about to institute a suit in equity to enforce their right to a part of the fund bequeathed by it, a court of common law would not interfere by prohibition, to restrain the ecclesiastical court from granting probate of such will or testamentary document, limited only to so much of the sum bequeathed as was sought to be recovered; it appearing that, according to the practice of the court of chancery, such limited administration was necessary for the purpose of instituting the suit. Tucker v. Southcote, 12 L. J., C. P. 21. S. C., nom. Tucker v. Inman, 5 Scott (N.R.) 843; 4 Man. & G. 1049; Car. & M. 82.

7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 10, applies as well to powers of appointment created after the act as to those previously created, and therefore a power created after the act, to appoint by will attested by three witnesses, is well executed by a will attested by two witnesses, in conformity with s. 9. Hubbard v. Lees, 4 H. & C. 418; 35 L. J., Ex. 169; L. R. 1 Ex. 255; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 435; 14 L. T. 367; 14 W. R. 694.

A power of appointment which is not in terms a power to appoint by will is not well executed by a will executed in the manner required by the Wills Act, unless the formalities required by the power are also observed. Taylor v. Meads, 34 L. J., Ch. 203; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 166; 11 L. T. 6; 13 W. R. 394.

The circumstances that a will is made in execution of a power does not exempt it from the general rule that probate cannot be granted of an instrument, unless it is duly executed as a will in conformity with the law of domicil of the testator. Crookenden v. Fuller, 1 Sw. & Tr. 441; 29 L. J., P. 1; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1222; 1 L. T. 70; 8 W. R. 49.

In the absence of a contrary intention apparent on the face of a will, a general residuary bequest operates as an exercise of a general power of appointment, of which the testator is the donee, although the residuary legatees are the persons who would be entitled, in default of appointment, under the instrument creating the power. Att.-Gen. v. Brackenbury, 1 H. & C. 782; 32 L. J. Ex. 108; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 257; 8 L. T. 22; 11 W. R. 380.

If in such case the testator has in the first instance charged his residuary estate with the payment of debts and legacies, it is not competent for the residuary legatees to disclaim the fund under the appointment, and elect to take under the gift to them in the original instrument. Ib.

Where a testamentary paper is alleged to have been made in execution of a power, and proof of a power enabling the deceased to dispose of property by will is given, the court is bound to decree probate, and has no authority to inquire whether the will is in the form required by law for the due execution of a power, or whether it has been executed with the formalities required by the power. It is for a court of construction to decide whether the will is operative. De Chatelain v. Pontigny, 1 Sw. & Tr. 411; 29 L. J., P. 147; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 579; 7 W. R. 497.

A will of a person who dies domiciled abroad disposing of personal estate in this country, if made in pursuance of a power of appointment, and executed in compliance with the requisites of the power, is entitled to probate, though not executed according to the testamentary law of the domicil of the testator. Alexander, In goods of, 29 L. J., P. 93; 6 Jur (N.S.) 345; 2 L. T. 56; 8 W. R. 451.

Exercise of Power—Will revoked by subsequent Marriage.]—The will of M., by which he exercised a power of appointment and also disposed of his own personal estate, having been, as to his own estate, revoked by his subsequent marriage, the court granted letters of administration of his effects, save as to such of them as he was entitled to appoint by will. Mason, In goods of, 30 L. J., P. 168. See also cases, ante, col. 256 et seq.

Married Women — Revocation.]—A widow, under the powers given to her by her marriage settlement, executed a will in favour of B., without having executed any fresh settlement of the property included in her first marriage settlement:—Held, that she had a right to revoke the will so made by any of the methods prescribed by the Wills Act. Hawkesley v. Barrow, 35 L. J., P. 67; L. R. 1 P. 147; 14 L. T. 672; 14 W. R. 822.

A married woman exercised two powers of appointment in separate wills executed at different times. The later will contained a clause revoking all former wills. Evidence being adduced that she did not thereby intend to revoke the appointment in the first will, the court granted probate of both wills. Meredith, In goods of, 29 L. J., P. 155.

A married woman made a will in 1848, in execution of a power of appointment, and in 1857 made another in execution of another power of appointment. The later will contained a general revocatory clause, but it did not refer to the will of 1848, or to the power in execution of which it was made; or to the property thereby appointed:—Held, that the will of 1848 was not revoked. Joys, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 214; 30 L. J., P. 169. See also cases, post, col. 375.

—— Scotch Domicil—Will made in English form, but not valid by Scots Law.]—A married woman domiciled in Scotland, made a will under a power in the English form, but not valid by the law of Scotland:—Held, that it was entitled to probate. Hallyburton, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 122; L. R. 1 P. 90; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 416; 14 L. T. 136.

—— Foreign Domicil—Will in Engish form, but not valid by Foreign Law.]—Where a will is executed under a power, and the instrument creating the power directs it to be executed by will in a particular form, such will may be good for the purposes of the appointment, if executed according to the law of this country, though not according to the law of the domicil of the testator. Huber, In the goods of, 65 L. J., P. 119; [1896] P. 209; 75 L. T. 453.

Nuncupative Will.]—One seised in fee of land limits a term to trustees for one hundred years, upon such trust as he, by deed or will, should appoint, and for want of such appointment, to attend the inheritance, and afterwards, by a nuncupative will, gives all to J. S., and, being a bastard, dies without issue. This will not pass the trust of the term. Thruxton v. Att.-Gen. 1 Vern. 340.

N. ALTERATIONS, ADDITIONS AND OMISSIONS.

General Rules as to.]—The court will rectify an expression, or even supply proper words, in a will, in order to effectuate a testator's intention. White v. Barber, 5 Burr. 2703.

The rule of construction of a devise is to give effect, if possible, to every word used by the testator; and particular words used by him are not to be rejected, unless the retaining of them would induce a construction totally irreconcilable with the rest of the instrument. Doe d. Littlewood v. Green, 2 Jur. 859.

If a will contains passages cancelled by the testator, they cannot be called in aid to explain the remaining parts of the will, but it must be read as if the cancelled passages were a blank. Doe d. Spencer v. Pedley, 2 Gale, 106.

It is a common rule of construction, that if the words of a gift are of themselves plain, distinct and capable of having a legal effect, effect must be given to them, notwithstanding any improbability which may arise from looking at the other parts of the will. On the other hand, if the words are ambiguous in expression or effect, they are not to be rejected for uncertainty, but you must collect, if you can, from the other parts of the will, an indication of what the testator meant by those words which by themselves appear to be ambiguous. Wilson v. Eden, 11 Beav. 289.

Where the words of a will are capable of a construction which will give effect to every word, it is not within the competency of the court to alter their collocation. S. C., 12 Beav. 454.

Words may be supplied in a will to render a sentence complete and intelligible, in aid of the apparent intent to be collected from the whole context. Doe d. Leach v. Micklem, 6 East, 486: 2 Smith, 499. And see Right d. Day v. Day, 16 East, 67; 14 R. R. 294.

Case in which the house of lords held that certain documents, though in several places erased and obliterated, were nevertheless not only probative and testamentary, but contained a good and an effectual expression of an intention to establish in Dundee an hospital to accommodate one hundred boys. Dundee Magistrates v. Morris, 3 Macq. H. L. 134.

Made before Execution of Codicil.]—Interlineations and alterations in a will admitted to probate where it was proved that they had been inserted before the date of the execution of a codicil to the will. Tyler v. Merchant Taylors' Co., 60 L. J., P. 86; 15 P. D. 216; 63 L. T. 779.

A testator, after the execution of his will, made various alterations and interlineations, some of which were attested and some unattested. Among the latter was an interlineation giving a legacy of "1,000*l.* to each of my executors." In the body of the will he gave a legacy of 10,000*l.* to one of his executors. In a codicil the testator recited that he had given a legacy of 11,000*l.* to this particular person:—Held, that this reference showed that the interlineation had been made prior to the execution of the codicil, and that it was therefore incorporated by it. Heath, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 131; [1892] P. 253; 67 L. T. 356.

Presumption is that they were made after Execution.]—Obliterations, interlineations, or other alterations in a will, after execution, are void, if not affirmed in the margin or otherwise by the signature of the testator and the attestation of witnesses. Greville v. Tylee, 7 Moore, P. C. 320.

The mere circumstance of the amount, or the name of a legatee, being inserted in different ink, and in a different handwriting, does not alone constitute an obliteration, interlineation, or other alteration, within the meaning of the statute, nor does any presumption arise against a will being duly executed as it appears. The case is different where there is an erasure apparent on the face of the will, and that erasure has been superinduced by other writing. Under such circumstances, the onus probandi lies upon the party who alleges such alteration to have been done prior to execution, to prove by extrinsic evidence that the words were inserted before execution, and that they had the sanction of the testator. Ib.

As a deed cannot be altered after execution without fraud or wrong, the presumption, if an alteration appears, is that it was made before execution. But this presumption does not apply in the case of a will which may be altered by the testator without fraud or wrong. Doe d. Tatum v. Catomore, 16 Q. B. 745; 20 L. J., Q. B. 364.

Alterations on the face of a will are presumed to be made after the will is made, until evidence to the contrary is adduced. Doe d. Shalleross v. Palmer, 16 Q. B. 747; 20 L. J., Q. B. 367; 15 Jur. 836.

A will contained alterations and erasures affecting the amount and objects of the testator's bounty, the existence of which, at the time of the execution, the attesting witnesses could not depose to:—Held, there being an absence of all direct evidence as to the alterations and erasures, that the presumption of law was, that such alterations and erasures were made after the execution of the will, and probate of the will was granted in its original form. Cooper v. Bockett, 4 Moore, P. C. 419; 10 Jur. 931.

Unattested alterations in the handwriting of the testator in a will made before 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 20, came into operation, will in the absence of any evidence as to their date, be presumed to have been made before the act came into operation. Streaker, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 192; 28 L. J., P. 50.

—— How rebutted.]—The presumption of law, that the interlineations in a will were made after execution prevails only in the absence of evidence to the contrary, and very slight affirmative evidence is sufficient to rebut the presumption. Duffy, In goods of, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 506.

Alterations in substantialibus, in an instrument written manu alienâ, are presumed to have been made after its execution, but not so in holograph writings. The rules which have been laid down as to erasures, &c., in the former do not generally apply to the latter. Distinction between interlineation and obliteration: the former must be intentional, the latter may not. Semble, in holographs, erased words may be regarded to discover the meaning of words not erased. When the subject of a bequest is an indefinite quantity of money, or anything else, the gift is void. But where a bequest was for the establishment of an hospital (school) for one hundred boys:—Held, that it was the gift of such a sum as would reasonably be sufficient to erect a suitable building, to maintain and educate one hundred boys, and to pay officers, &c. Semble, there is no material (if any) difference between the law of England and Scotland in regard to charities except as to mortmain; the statute 9 Geo. 2, c. 37, not applying to Scotland. Ewan (Provost of Dundee) v. Morris, 6 W. R. 556.

—— Presumption as to Date of, in Will made before Wills Acts.]—A testator, by his will dated in 1834, devised and bequeathed real, copyhold and personal estate upon certain trusts. Certain of the words in the declaration of trust were interlineated. Probate was granted of the will by the consistory court of C. A question being raised, whether, with regard to the real estate, the interlineation was made before or after the execution of the will, it was held, having regard to the granting of the probate by the consistory court, that it was made before the execution of the will. Cruttenden, In re, Davey v. Lansdell, 45 L. T. 465; 30 W. R. 57.

Alterations and Additions — Evidence that they were made before Execution.]—Although, when alterations are apparent on the face of a will, it cannot be presumed that they were made before execution, and they cannot be admitted to probate without some affirmative evidence that they were in fact so made, yet a court or jury trying this question of fact is not confined to any particular species of evidence, but may act upon any evidence which, having regard to all the circumstances, reasonably leads the judgment to the conclusion that the alterations were made before execution. Moore v. Moore, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 166.

A lawyer's holograph will settled property on his younger grandson Stephen for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, then to his elder grandson Richard, remainder, &c. The word "Richard" was interlined and "Stephen" struck out in the first, and vice versâ in the second case. These alterations were in the handwriting of, and initialled by, the testator, who had previously expressed his intention of settling the property on his grandsons in priority of birth, who also knew their names, and there was no reason why the younger should be preferred. There having been a subsequent opportunity for correcting the mistake before execution, and the appearance of the wills and alterations raising the presumption, confirmed by the opinion of two experts, of contemporaneous writing, probate was decreed with such alterations. Ib.

A will contained several unattested interlineations, most of them of single words, each of which was required to complete the sentence to which it belonged. They were apparently written with the same ink and at the same time as the rest of the will, but at the time of execution the body of the will was covered up by the testatrix, so that the witnesses could not see whether the interlineations were there or not. The court held that it was not bound to presume that these interlineations were made after execution, and included them in the probate. Cadge, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 15; L. R. 1 P. 543; 17 L. T. 484; 16 W. R. 406.

Some trifling alterations and interlineations appeared on the face of a holograph will, and there was no evidence whether they were written before or after the execution, except the affidavit of an expert, that in his opinion they were written at the same time as the rest of the will. On that evidence the court admitted them to probate. Hindmarch, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 24; L. R. 1 P. 307; 15 L. T. 391.

—— Declaration in Attestation Clause.]—Where the attestation clause in a codicil contains a declaration that some alterations have been made in the codicil before execution, the court may infer from this circumstance, and from the appearance of the codicil itself, that all the alterations were made before execution. Doherty v. Dwyer, infra.

—— Absence of Proof.]—In the absence of any proof that alterations in a will were made before its execution, beyond the fact that they bear an earlier date than the will in the handwriting of the testator, such alterations will not be recognised by the court, or appear in the probate. Adamson, In goods of, L. R. 3 P. 253.

—— Next of Kin and Heir-at-Law concurring.]—A testator wrote out his will in 1885 and signed and dated it, but did not have it attested. He subsequently destroyed all but the last sheet, and wrote out two fresh sheets, which he attached to the said last sheet. He then, in 1888, inked over his signature in the presence of two attesting witnesses, who duly signed their names at the foot of the attestation clause. The testator died in 1889, and after his death the will was found with the name of the residuary legatee altered, and with several other alterations, all being in the testator's own handwriting. There was no evidence as to when these were made. The next of kin and heir-at-law concurred in the application of the sole executor for probate. The court admitted the will to proof. Maule v. Maule, 62 L. T. 702.

—— Where Deliberative.]—A testator executed a will and codicil. At some time after the execution of the will, but before that of the codicil, he, with a pencil, struck through several paragraphs of his will, and made his initials on the margin; he also placed a query opposite other paragraphs. The codicil confirmed, in so far as it did not alter, the will:—Held, that the alterations so made were only deliberative, and not final, and not included in the confirmation of the codicil, and, therefore, to be omitted from the probate. Hall, In goods of, 40 L. J., P. 37; L. R. 2 P. 256; 25 L. T. 384; 19 W. R. 897.

—— Words in Pencil.]—A lady executed a printed form of a will. The blanks were filled up by her in her own handwriting, partly with ink and partly with a pencil. Some portion of the writing in ink extended over that in pencil, and some words of the latter had been rubbed out and obliterated. The words in ink were sensible as read with the printed part of the will. The attesting witnesses did not see the writing when they attested the will:—Held, that the words in pencil were deliberative only, and probate was granted without them. Adams, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 31; L. R. 2 P. 367; 26 L. T. 526; 20 W. R. 400.

—— Partly in Ink and partly in Pencil.]—A person executed a draft will in April, 1847. In May, 1847, he executed an engrossed will. In September, 1854, he executed a codicil purporting to be a codicil to his last will, of April, 1847. It was supposed that he really intended it to be a codicil to the will of May, 1847. The draft will contained interlineations in the testator's handwriting in ink and pencil, and cancellations. Both wills were in the handwriting of the same person, who deposed that he copied the engrossed from the draft will. The engrossed will agreed with the draft will as altered in ink, but not as altered in pencil:—Probate decreed of the draft will of April, 1847, including the alterations in ink, but not those in pencil, in so far as they agreed with the will of May, 1847, together with the codicil of 1854. Wyatt, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 494; 31 L. J., P. 197; 6 L. T. 694; 10 W. R. 783.

When a will seemed to have been first written in pencil and afterwards traced with ink, but not completely, words in some cases being written in ink above, and apparently in substitution for, the pencil writing, and in other parts the pencil writing standing alone, the court declined to include the pencil writing in the grant. Bellamy, In goods of, 14 W. R. 501.

—— Attestation of.]—The clause appointing executors was written partly on the second and partly on the third side of a will. Subsequently the testator altered the clause, but his signature and those of the attesting witnesses appeared opposite only to the alterations, which were made on the second side. The court granted probate of all the alterations. Wilkinson, In goods of, 6 P. D. 100; 29 W. R. 896; 45 J. P. 716.

In granting probate of a will an alteration will not be admitted to probate, either in the ordinary way or in fac-simile, unless attested in the manner required by the Wills Act, and the court will decline to entertain any argument drawn from the intention of the testator as revealed by the context. Gaussen, In goods of, 17 L. T. 354; 16 W. R. 212.

—— Unattested presumed to be made before Wills Act.]—Unattested alterations appearing in a will executed prior to the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26) coming into operation, will, in the absence of any evidence as to their date, be presumed to have been made before the act came into operation, and are therefore entitled to probate. Streaker, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 192; 28 L. J., P. 50.

—— In Lithographed Form — Evidence of Intention.]—A testator made his will on a lithographed form, which he adapted to his purposes by filling up the blank spaces therein and by making certain obliterations and interlineations which appeared in the body of the will. The surviving attesting witness could give no information as to whether or not the obliterations and interlineations were on the will when he attested it; but it appeared that the testator had made certain declarations as to his intentions before the date of the execution of the will, and that to give effect to those intentions it was necessary that the alterations in question should be so made in it. In these circumstances the court came to the conclusion that the alterations were made before the execution of the instrument and decreed probate of it in its altered form. Dench v. Dench, 46 L. J., P. 13; 2 P. D. 60; 25 W. R. 414.

Unfinished Bequest indorsed on Back.]—A testator wrote his will on the first side of a half-sheet of paper. There was an unfinished bequest in the body of the will, and this he completed on the back of the page, marking by an asterisk the place where the indorsement was to be read into the will. The attesting witnesses did not see the indorsement, which was written before the execution of the will:—The court held that the indorsement formed part of the will, and ordered it to be included in the probate. Burt, In goods of, 40 L. J., P. 26; L. R. 2 P. 214; 24 L. T. 142; 19 W. R. 511.

In Will of Soldier presumed to be made whilst on Service.]—Where a will in the testator's handwriting contains material alterations, about the making of which no information can be obtained, and such will was signed by the testator whilst, as a soldier, he was employed in actual military service, the alterations will be presumed to have been made during the continuance of such military service, and will be included in the probate. Tweedale, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 35; L. R. 3 P. 204; 31 L. T. 799.

Obliterations.]—The testator duly executed his will in 1875, giving an annuity to his widow, charged upon certain property over which he had a power of appointment; and, subject thereto, to his daughters. This will remained in the custody of his solicitors, and, down to the time of his death, the testator frequently expressed his regret that he was not in a position to benefit his widow more largely. In 1888 he executed a second document in form of a will, which he enclosed in a sealed envelope with instructions that it was to be opened at the same time as his will. By it he left to a Mrs. B. certain house property which he had purchased out of his savings. No executors were therein appointed, and the printed revocation clause was struck through with a pencil:—Held, that both documents were entitled to probate, and that the second of them should not include the revocatory words. Tonge, In goods of, 66 L. T. 60.

A testator in the beginning of his will disposed of certain leasehold houses in trust for the benefit of his children. The words of the description of one of such houses were struck through by a pen, and the testator's signature, but not those of the witnesses, was placed near such alteration. At the end of the will a clause was interlined, by which he bequeathed the same house to his trustees for the sole benefit of his wife. Under the signatures of the testator and the witnesses at the termination of the will a memorandum was added to the effect that the above words were struck out for the benefit of his wife. This memorandum was signed by the testator and attested by the witnesses:—Held, that the memorandum referred to both alterations, the obliteration and interlineation, and that the will so altered should be admitted to probate. Treeby, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 44; L. R. 3 P. 242.

Erasure and Substitution of Words.]—In the absence of any evidence that words written over erasures in a will were added before the execution of a codicil to the will, probate must be granted with blanks wherever erasures occur, if the words erased cannot be ascertained. Doherty v. Dwyer, 25 L. R. Ir. 297.

A testatrix after the execution of her will erased certain parts, substituting in their places other words. Probate was granted of the will with these parts erased in blank, the original words not being discernible on the face of the paper, and there being no evidence to show what they were. James, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 238.

A testatrix duly executed a holograph will, which after her decease was found with the word "one" written in the place of another word. There was no evidence to show when the alteration was made. The original word was quite illegible:—Held, that it was the duty of the court to decide what the obliterated word was, if, from the evidence, it was able to do so with "reasonable certainty," and in that event to admit the will to probate with the word so decided upon in place of the word substituted for it by the testatrix. Jeffery v. Cancer Hospital, 57 L. T. 600; 51 J. P. 503.

A will contained no nomination of executors in the body of it, but at the bottom, below the attestation clause, were the words, "executors, A. and B." There was an asterisk before these words and an asterisk before the word "executor" wherever it occurred in the will. It was proved that these words were written before the execution of the will. After the execution, the testator directed the name of B., who was an attesting witness as well as executor, to be erased, and the name of C. to be written over the erasure. The will was not re-executed after these alterations had been made:—Held, that the nomination of executors might be included in the probate, but that the name of B. must be restored both as executor and attesting witness. Greenwood, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 56; [1892] P. 7; 66 L. T. 61.

Name of Witness Erased and Rewritten.]—Where the name of one of the attesting witnesses to a will was written on an erasure, but it appeared that the will had been duly executed and attested, and that subsequently the attesting witness's name had been erased by the testator, and had at his request been rewritten by the attesting witness, the court granted probate to the widow on affidavit that she and two infant children were the only persons entitled in distribution, and that notice had been given to the children. Coleman, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 314; 30 L. J., P. 170; 5 L. T. 119.

Interlineation—Definition of.]—The definition of the word "interlineation" in the Wills Act is not to be confined to something written between the lines. Something put into one of the lines, but written on the line, is equally an "interlineation" within the meaning of the act. Bagshawe v. Canning, 52 J. P. 583.

What will be considered to be an Interlineation.]—W. made a will which was written on the first and third pages of several sheets of notepaper. At the bottom of one of these pages were the words and mark, "I leave the whole of my property to the following religious societies, viz. ×, to be divided in equal shares among them." On the top of the opposite page was a similar mark to that following the "viz.," and the names of four religious societies. There being no evidence that the names of the societies were written before the execution of the will, the court, considering them to be interlineations, excluded them from probate. White, In goods of, 30 L. J., P. 55; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 808.

A. produced to B. a sheet of paper, having on the first side a formal heading and ending of a codicil, and asked B. to write a codicil for her. B. not having finished the dispositive part when he reached the formal ending, turned over the page and continued the sentence and other dispositive clauses on the second side. The signatures of A. and of the attesting witnesses following the formal ending were on the first page. On motion for probate, counsel suggesting that the writing on the second side might be considered as an interlineation, the court refused to decide such a question on motion, but left the parties to propound the paper, if they thought fit. Peach, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 138; 6 W. R. 865.

Interlineation in Holograph Will not Attested.]—A testator left a holograph will. One clause was unintelligible, but an unattested interlineation in his handwriting made the clause intelligible when taken with it, and also in accordance with declarations proved to have been made by him before the execution of the will. Evidence was also given tending to prove that the will had been kept in a fastened-up envelope from five days after its date in 1867 to a couple of hours before his death in 1874; and an expert gave his opinion that the interlineation was written at the same time and with the same pen and ink as the will. The court granted probate of the will with the interlineation. King, In goods of, 23 W. R. 552.

Substitution of Unattested Sheets after Execution.]—A testator after duly executing his will, which was in five sheets, each of which was signed by himself and initialled by the attesting witnesses, took out three sheets and substituted three new ones, which he signed, but which were not attested. He did not alter the date of will, nor did he re-sign it, nor was it reattested:—Held, that the will was not entitled to probate. Treloar v. Lean, 58 L. J., P. 39; 14 P. D. 49; 60 L. T. 512; 37 W. R. 560.

Interlineation after Execution Initialled by Witnesses and Approved of by Testatrix, though not Executed.]—Testatrix duly executed her will in the presence of two witnesses, who subscribed and attested it. Immediately after its execution an omission was discovered in the will, and this omission was supplied by an interlineation. Testatrix approved of the will as altered, acknowledging it as her "last word and testament," and the witnesses then, in her presence, placed their initials in the margin opposite the interlineation:—Held, that there had been no re-execution of the will, and that consequently the interlineation should be omitted from the probate. Shearn, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 15; 43 L. T. 736; 29 W. R. 445; 45 J. P. 308.

Testator and Witnesses tracing former Signatures with Dry Pen.]—A testator having made some alterations in a duly-executed will, he and the attesting witnesses traced their former signatures with a dry pen, and the attesting witnesses placed their initials in the margin opposite each of the alterations. The court refused to regard the initials in the margin as evidence that the alterations had been duly executed and attested, and declined to grant probate of the will with alterations. Cunningham, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 194; 29 L. J., P. 71. See also Maddock, In goods of, post, col. 354.

Pasting over—Effect on Legacy.]—When a testator has pasted over a whole legacy a piece of paper on which at some time, about which the witnesses can give no information, he has written a new bequest, the court will not order the upper paper to be removed, and will direct the probate to issue in blank as to that legacy; but if the testator has covered over the amount of a legacy only, leaving the legatee's name untouched, the court will consider it a case which comes under the principle of a dependent relative revocation, and will endeavour to discover the amount of the legacy originally bequeathed by removing the upper paper. Horsford, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 9; L. R. 3 P. 211; 31 L. T. 553; 23 W. R. 211.

"Apparent Alteration."]—A testator pasted strips of paper over certain passages in his will. In 1874 probate of the will was granted with these passages in blank, on the assumption that they could not be ascertained by inspection. In 1893 it was found that these passages were legible. The court being satisfied by expert evidence that these passages could be read without resort to artificial means, held that these passages were "apparent" within s. 21 of the Wills Act, and must, therefore, be admitted to probate. Finch v. Combe, 63 L. J., P. 113; [1894] P. 191; 6 R. 545; 70 L. T. 695.

Writing on Back—Paper pasted over—Removal in Registry.]—The court ordered the removal in the registry of a blank piece of paper found pasted over writing by the testatrix on the back of a testamentary document. Gilbert, In goods of, 62 L. J., P. 111; [1893] P. 183; 1 R. 478; 68 L. T. 461.

"Or" and "and."]—Under a devise to A. for life, remainder to B. and her heirs, but if B. died before A., or if she died without heirs of her body, then to C. and his heirs:—Held, that the devise over to C. after B. could only take effect if B. died before A. and without issue, for that, unless "or" were read as "and," the devisee over would take if B. died before A., although B. left issue, which would clearly be against the apparent intent of the devisor, which was to prefer the issue of B. to C. Denn d. Wilkins v. Kemeys, 9 East, 366; 9 R. R. 581.

A. being seised of lands holden upon leases for lives, devised to B., his brother, all his real and freehold estates, subject to an annuity to his mother for her life, "but in case B. should die before he attained the age of twenty-one, or without issue living at his death," to his mother for ever. A. died; B. attained the age of twenty-one, and then died without issue:—Held, that the word "or," in the devise over, must be construed as "and"; and that the mother took nothing upon the death of B. Fairfield d. Hawkesworth v. Morgan, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 38; 9 R. R. 609. And see Right d. Day v. Day, 16 East, 67; 14 R. R. 294.

Under a devise to A. (a natural son), then under age, and the heirs of his body, and if he died before twenty-one, and without issue, then over to other relations, and ultimately to the testator's own right heirs:—Held, that, A. having attained twenty-one, the limitations over did not take effect, as, by the natural sense of the word "and," they were made to depend on the happening of both events (i.e. the son's dying before twenty-one and without issue), and this construction was not varied by a codicil made after the son attained twenty-one, by which the testator confirmed every part of the will so far as his affairs were consistent. Doe d. Usher v. Jessep, 12 East, 288; 11 R. R. 380.

"And" is construed "or" where one member of the compound sentence is included in the other, and would be superfluous unless disjoined. This construction is generally made in favour of vesting, not to defeat a previously-vested gift. Day v. Day, Kay, 703; 18 Jur. 1013; 2 W. R. 700.

A testator, after certain legacies, devised as follows: "In case my daughter should have no lawful issue, after her death I will that my property that shall be remaining to return to my relations, viz., to my nephew J. 100*l.*; likewise I leave, in case my daughter has no issue, to my nephew S. and my niece A. 80*l.* each; the remainder of my personalty I leave to my daughter's disposal, if she lives to maturity. As to my real estate, if my daughter dies before she arrives at lawful age, or have no lawful issue, then I leave my real and all my other property to my brothers, equal between them; but in case my daughter shall have lawful issue, then I leave the whole of my property, real and personal, to her and her heirs":—Held, that the word "or" should be read "and," and that the daughter, on attaining twenty-one, took an estate in fee-simple. Johnson v. Simcox, 7 H. & N. 344; 31 L. J., Ex. 38; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 284; 4 L. T. 836; 9 W. R. 895—Ex. Ch.

Omitting and inserting Words by Court—General Powers.]—A testator gave oral instructions for a will to his attorney, who made a memorandum of them in his presence. The residuary clause was as follows: "And the residue equally amongst all the sons, including the eldest son for the time being on attaining twenty-one." From the memorandum a draft will was drawn, which disposed of the residue in the following terms: "The trustees to stand possessed of all the residue and remainder of my real estate in trust to divide the same," &c. The draft will was left with the testator, and on his suggestion certain alterations were made in it, but not in reference to the words of the residuary clause above given. The will with such words was executed by the testator:—Held, that however clearly an error can be established in a will, unless words have been inserted by fraud or by mistake without the knowledge of the testator, the court of probate cannot correct it either by the omission of words or by the insertion of other words. Harter v. Harter, 42 L. J., P. 1; L. R. 3 P. 11; 27 L. T. 858; 21 W. R. 341.

The will of the testator contained a bequest in favour of "Florence Lilian Savory and Thomas Savory, the two children of my nephew J. F. Savory"; another bequest to "my nephew Allen Edward Savory" for his life, and thereafter in trust for "his two children, Gordon Savory and Ronald Savory, in equal shares"; and a further bequest to "Florence Savory, the wife of Allen Edward Savory, during her life," and, subject thereto, "in trust for her two children, Gordon Savory and Ronald Savory, in equal shares." These were, in fact, the names of the children of J. D. Savory, while the children of Allen Edward and Florence Savory were named Florence Lilian and Thomas. Upon motion to omit from the probate the christian names so transposed in the will:—Held, that this could not be done, as it was not shown that the testator did not mean those names to be inserted in the will, though he might not have meant so to benefit the persons to whom those names actually belonged. Durlacher, In goods of, 75 L. T. 664.

—— Striking out when Inserted by Mistake.]—A mother by her will left a portion of her furniture and household effects to her daughter, and disposed of the residue of her property, appointing trustees and executors. Subsequently she was advised that the bequest to her daughter should be secured to her separate use, and she gave directions that a testamentary paper should be prepared to that effect. The paper thus prepared purported to be her last will and testament, and, in addition to a clause to the effect above mentioned, contained one revocatory of all former wills. This paper was executed by her, but was not read over to or by her, and she was not aware that it contained such words of revocation:—Held, that as the words of revocation had been introduced per incuriam and without instructions, and their presence there was unknown to her when she executed the will, they ought to be omitted from the probate. Oswald, In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 24; L. R. 3 P. 162; 30 L. T. 344.

Where a testatrix left a will dated June 3, 1868, and three codicils dated respectively January 30, 1870, April 30, 1870, and December 9, 1870, and the codicil of April 30, 1870, referred to "the last will of me which bears date the 26th day of April, 1870," the court, having come to the conclusion that there never was any will of April 26, 1870, and that there had been a mere mistake in the date, granted probate of the will and three codicils. Dent, In goods of, 31 L. T. 552; 23 W. R. 417.

A testatrix of testamentary capacity duly executed as her will, without, however, its having been read over by or to her, a paper writing, the contents of which she knew and approved of, except only that there had been introduced into it, without instructions from her, clauses of appointment of executors and of revocation of former wills:—Held, that those clauses ought to be omitted from the copy of will to be annexed to the letters of administration. Wray, In goods of, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 266.

A testator, in the instructions for his will, directed that all his B. shares should be given to his nephews, but the word "forty" was inserted several times in the will before the word "shares," and the will was executed with that word repeated several times before the word "shares." The jury found that the word "forty" was introduced by mistake, that the clauses including the word were never read over to the testator, and that he only approved of the will upon the supposition that all his B. shares were given to his nephews, and thereupon the court ordered the word "forty," wherever it occurred in the will, to be struck out. Morrell v. Morrell, 51 L. J., P. 49; 7 P. D. 68; 46 L. T. 485; 30 W. R. 491; 46 J. P. 328.

—— Omitting Defamatory Matter.]—The court will not exercise its power of omitting from the probate offensive or libellous passages in a will, except in cases of a very special and definite character. It therefore refused to omit from the probate a paragraph in a will which, though offensive, was not calculated to injure. Honeywood, In goods of, 40 L. J., P. 35; L. R. 2 P. 251; 25 L. T. 164; 19 W. R. 760.

—— Inserting Words.]—A will, after a legacy to B., contained a gift of other legacies to S., with directions to the latter concerning the testatrix's funeral, and concluded with the words, "I appoint him, my brother B., executor of this my last will":—Held, that the word "with" should be understood as interposed between the words "him" and "my," and that as well S. as B. was entitled to probate. Boardman v. Stanley, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 590.

When a testator in his will used the words "I herewith empower and authorise my executors," and in the last clause of the will used the words "I herewith appoint and empower James Claney and Pat O'Connor," and when there was no other appointment of executors, the court supplied the words "my executors," omitted in the last clause, and gave liberty to James Claney and Pat O'Connor to apply for probate in common form as executors. Morony, In goods of, L. R. 1 Ir. 483.

—— Inserting Trust Omitted.]—Codicil reciting a specific and limited purpose revokes the whole devise, declaring the trusts again, with the proposed alteration, and confirms the will in every particular not thereby altered or revoked. The omission of one trust, though probably against the intention, cannot be supplied. Holder v. Howell, 8 Ves. 97.

Mistake in Copying—Altering Will to correspond with Draft.]—A testator in the draft of his will, which was duly executed and read over to him before execution, bequeathed a legacy to the Bristol Royal Infirmary. In the will, which was not read over to him, the bequest by a mistake in the engrossment was to the British Royal Infirmary. The court, subject to an affidavit that there was no such institution as the British Royal Infirmary, granted probate of the will, with the word "Bristol" substituted for "British." Bushell, In goods of, 57 L. J., P. 16; 13 P. D. 7; 58 L. T. 58; 36 W. R. 528; 51 J. P. 806.

The draft of a will for which the testator had given instructions was read over and explained to him by his solicitor. By the testator's request the word "including" was altered to "excluding" in a clause relating to the name and arms of the testator, and it was believed, at that time, that the alteration so made in the draft was correctly copied in the engrossment of the will. The latter was duly executed by the testator under that belief. Although he subsequently executed two codicils, he never again saw the will, which remained in the custody of the solicitor. It was found, after the testator's death, that the word had been altered in the engrossment in a different part of the will, through a clerical error. Upon motion by the executors to substitute the word "excluding" for "including" where altered by the said clerical error, and also to make the alteration from "including" to "excluding" where the same had been made in the draft will:—Held, that the clerical error should be rectified, but that the court could not take upon itself the other alteration in the will. Huddlestan, In goods of, 63 L. T. 255.

Codicils written by Inadvertence upon a former and Revoked Will.]—The testator executed a will in 1883. His wife died in August, 1884, and in November, 1884, he executed a fresh will. In October, 1890, the testator handed to his solicitor a document which the solicitor understood to be the last will, and the testator requested that a codicil should be prepared. This was accordingly done and appended to the document in question and duly executed. In 1895 a second codicil was duly executed on the same document. After the testator's death it was discovered that the codicils had been appended to and made to refer to the document which was, in fact, the revoked will of 1883. The court, upon motion, allowed the words of misdescription in the codicils to be omitted from the probate, and, with such omissions, granted probate of the two codicils, and of the will of 1884, as together constituting the true testamentary intentions and dispositions of the deceased. Snowden, In goods of, 75 L. T. 279.

Words after Signature—Omission from Probate.]—A will was written principally on the first page of a printed form; the last sentence was continued and finished on the second page; the attestation clause and signatures of the testator and witnesses were at the foot of the first page. The court granted probate of the will as contained in the first page, omitting the words on the second page. Anstee, In goods of, 63 L. J., P. 61; [1893] P. 283; 1 R. 487; 42 W. R. 16.

A testatrix filled in the first page of a lithographed form of will and signed it at the foot in the presence of two witnesses. In it she made various bequests to "my sisters and friends." On the second and third pages she wrote the names of the "sisters and friends," with their addresses and particulars of the bequests:—Held, that the first page only could be admitted to probate. Royle v. Harris, 64 L. J., P. 65; [1895] P. 163; 11 R. 601; 72 L. T. 474; 43 W. R. 352.

6. When Lost, Mislaid, or Destroyed.

When Lost.]—A person duly executed a paper commencing, "This is a codicil to any will and testament of me, A. B." No will could be found, nor could evidence of any will having ever been executed be obtained:—Held, that such paper must be admitted to probate. Coulthard, In goods of, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 184.

A party duly executed a will, and subsequently a paper, which purported to be a codicil to his last will and testament. This codicil referred to a bequest not contained in the will, but in a deed of gift executed after the will and before the codicil. On his death the will was not forthcoming:—Held, that as the codicil was not revoked by any of the modes indicated by 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 20, it remained in full force and effect, and was entitled to be admitted to proof. Black v. Jobling, 38 L. J., P. 74; L. R. 1 P. 685; 21 L. T. 298; 17 W. R. 1108.

A. left a will dated and executed in 1854, and a codicil executed in 1856, which contained the following words: "I wish to add this codicil to the will I made in 1848." A draft will had in 1848 been prepared for his perusal, but there was no evidence that he had ever executed a will in that year:—Held, that the reference in the codicil to a will made in 1848 was a mere misdescription, and that the will executed in 1854 and the codicil must be admitted to probate. Houblon, In goods of, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 549.

A. executed a testamentary paper, called a codicil or an appendix to her last will, in the possession of the executor B., of London, of which will a copy was kept at Jerusalem. B. never had any will of A. in his possession, but such a will had been executed in his office, was in the possession of the executor C., of London, and a copy of it was found amongst the papers of the deceased at Jerusalem on her death:—Held, that these two papers were entitled to probate. Cooper, In goods of, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 394.

Advertisement.]—Before applying for probate of a lost will, an advertisement should be published offering a reward for production of the will. Callaghan, In goods of, L. R. 13 Ir. 245.

Proving Contents.]—The contents of a lost will, like those of any other lost instrument, may be proved by secondary evidence. Sugden v. St. Leonards (Lord), infra.

The court received parol evidence of the contents of a lost will, and admitted it to probate, upon being satisfied by the evidence, which the court deemed clear, cogent, certain, and fairly free from suspicion, as to the factum of the alleged will; that its contents were substantially such as were alleged; and that the heir-at-law had, after the death of the testator, got possession of the will, and suppressed or destroyed it. Mahood v. Mahood, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 359.

Where probate has been asked of the substance of a lost will, as contained in the parol evidence of witnesses, the court has never acted but on the fullest and most stringent proof. Wharram v. Wharram, 3 Sw. & Tr. 301; 33 L. J., P. 75; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 499; 10 L. T. 163; 12 W. R. 889.

When a person who has himself destroyed a testamentary paper after the death of a testator asks for probate of the substance as contained in a copy or otherwise, the court will expect the fullest and most satisfactory proof of all the facts necessary to be established. Moore v. Whitehouse, 3 Sw. & Tr. 567; 34 L. J., P. 31; 11 L. T. 458.

A. made his will in 1855. In May, 1857, when the Indian Mutiny broke out, he escaped from Delhi, leaving his will, among other property, behind him. He died at Kussowlee in June, 1857. On the affidavit of one of the attesting witnesses as to the due execution, and of the same witness and of his widow as to the contents, probate was granted to the widow as sole executrix. Gardner, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 109; 27 L. J., P. 55.

When a will has been lost, and evidence of its contents is supplied by the production of a draft, and of the parol testimony of persons who had read the will, the parol evidence must be placed side by side with the draft, and out of them the court will extract the contents of the will to be proved. Burls v. Burls, 36 L. J., P. 125; L. R. 1 P. 472; 16 L. T. 677; 15 W. R. 1090.

It is not necessary for the parties seeking probate, having proved the factum of the original instrument, and given sufficient secondary evidence of its contents, to show how the original instrument was in fact destroyed or lost. Patten v. Poulton, 1 Sw. & Tr. 55; 27 L. J., P. 41; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 341; 6 W. R. 458.

Where a copy of a will, the original not being forthcoming, is found in the possession or amongst the papers of the legal adviser of one of the executors, it is evidence of the contents of such will, and may be admitted as such. Sly v. Sly, infra.

A will was brought to the house by an executrix, in whose custody it had been, on the morning of the funeral. It was suddenly missed, and there was reason to suspect that it had been abstracted and destroyed by the only party who was interested in an intestacy, and who was cited, but did not appear. The court, under these circumstances, did not require the will to be propounded in solemn form of law, but granted, on motion, probate of the substance as proved by parol evidence. Colman, In goods of, 13 L. T. 682; 14 W. R. 291.

Declarations, written or oral, made by a testator, both before and after the execution of his will, are, in the event of its loss, admissible as secondary evidence of its contents. Sugden v. St. Leonards (Lord), infra.

The contents of a lost will may be proved by the evidence of a single witness, though interested, whose veracity and competency are unimpeached. Ib.

A declaration made by a testator after the execution of his will may be admitted as secondary evidence of the contents of part of the will, where that part of the will has been lost. Ball, In goods of, 25 L. R., Ir. 556.

A will was originally written by the testator on three sheets of paper, each of which was signed at the top by himself and the witnesses who duly attested the will. After the testator's death his will was found in an envelope, indorsed with the words—"The last will and testament of G. B."; the second and third sheets were found in their original condition, but the first sheet contained a statement that the original was torn and soiled, and that the testator had written out the sheet so found as a copy. The statement, as well as the rest of the sheet, was in the testator's handwriting. The original sheet was not found:—Held, that the declaration so made by the testator might be received as evidence of the contents of the missing sheet, and that the copy of the first sheet and the two subsequent original sheets should be admitted to probate. Ib.

In a suit to obtain probate of the contents of a lost will and codicils, it was proved that the alleged testator had given envelopes containing papers to T., stating that these documents were his will. After his death T. gave them to his widow, and she, previous to her death, declared them to be her husband's will. Evidence was given by two solicitors who had seen and perused the documents constituting the alleged will and codicils that they purported to be duly executed. There was no direct evidence of the factum of the will and codicils, nor was there any copy forthcoming:—Held, that the court would, under the circumstances, presume due execution, and being satisfied that there was clear and certain evidence as to the substance and effect of the lost will and codicils, would grant probate. Post-testamentary declarations of a testator that certain documents were his will admitted as secondary evidence of the fact that the papers purported to be his will signed by him. Flood v. Russell, L. R. 29 Ir. 91.

Contents not completely Proved.]—The plaintiff asked that probate might be pronounced for a non-existent document as the last will of her father, who died in 1877. At his funeral his wife produced a written paper in the form of a will, stating that it was the will of her deceased husband. By it she took a life interest in her husband's property, which at her death was to be divided among the children of the marriage. The document was subscribed with three names, one of which purported to be that of the deceased, written in his own handwriting. The two other names were signatures of the attesting witnesses. The widow continued to occupy the freehold house and land where the deceased had lived (and which was the only property left by him) until her own death, which occurred in July, 1885. She never took any steps to prove what she had alleged to be the will of her late husband, and at her death the paper produced at the funeral was not forthcoming. The plaintiff propounded that document, and pleaded that, although it had disappeared, the court ought to grant probate of it. No attempt had been made to show that the paper bore any date whatever, or that it contained an attestation clause to the names of the two witnesses. The court below pronounced for the paper, the contents of which had been proved in the course of the trial:—Held, on appeal, that the decision was justifiable, having regard to the circumstances. Harris v. Knight, 15 P. D. 170; 62 L. T. 507—C. A.

Probate of Part.]—When the contents of a lost will are not completely proved probate will be granted to the extent to which they are proved. Sugden v. St. Leonards (Lord), 45 L. J., P. 49; 1 P. D. 154; 34 L. T. 372; 24 W. R. 60—C. A.

The absence of evidence as to some of the contents of a lost will will not prevent the court from granting probate, if it is satisfied that the instrument propounded contains the substantial parts of the lost will. Ib.

A testator duly executed a holograph will and eight codicils, and deposited them in a box, the key of which he always kept in his own possession. He frequently expressed adherence to the will down to within a few days of his death. On his death the codicils were found in the box, but the will was missing, and could nowhere be found. Thereupon the testator's unmarried daughter C., who had lived with him all her life, and had frequently read the will, in the preparation of which she had assisted him, wrote out from memory the alleged contents of the will, which included a bequest to her of 6,000*l.*, and of one-third of the residuary personal estate (equivalent to 10,000*l.*). Some corroboration of C.'s account of the contents of the will was found in the codicils and in certain quasi-testamentary papers of the testator. But her testimony as to the residuary bequest was not at all corroborated. C. admitted that the contents of the will as written out by her were not complete, there being some small legacies and certain ulterior limitations of real estate which she could not remember. C.'s veracity was not questioned by the persons who opposed the granting of probate:—Held, that her statement of the contents of the will was substantially correct, and that probate should be granted accordingly. Ib.

If a lost will is propounded for probate upon parol evidence alone, with evidence of a residuary bequest, but no sufficient evidence as to the rest of the will:—Quære, whether probate ought to be granted of the residuary bequest alone, unless the court is satisfied that it has before it substantially the testamentary intentions of the testator. Quære, also, whether post-testamentary declarations of the testator as to the contents are admissible in evidence. Sugden

v. St. Leonards (Lord), supra, commented on. Woodward v. Goulstone, 56 L. J., P. 1; 11 App. Cas. 469; 55 L. T. 790; 35 W. R. 337; 51 J. P. 307—H. L. (E.)

No Evidence that Will related to Personalty.]—A will was registered but was never proved, and was said to have been lost on the day it was registered. The memorial of registration and affidavits filed contained no evidence that it dealt with personal estate. The next of kin applied for administration with copy of the will annexed as contained in the memorial of registration:—Held, that the deceased must be presumed to have died intestate as to his personalty and that the next of kin were only entitled to administration as upon an intestacy. Attlay, In goods of, 67 L. T. 502.

Proving Loss.]—When circumstances indicate no peculiarly likely place of deposit, searching in the drawers and boxes of a deceased person for a will, and finding none, is sufficient primâ facie evidence that there is no will. Reg. v. Johnson, Dear. & B. 340; 27 L. J., M. C. 52; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 55; 6 W. R. 64; 7 Cox, C. C. 379.

Declarations of a deceased person, who has been in possession of property, claiming a limited interest therein under a particular will, are admissible to prove the fact that such will had a legal existence, and also that certain persons were named executors therein. Sly v. Sly, 46 L. J., P. 63; 2 P. D. 91; 25 W. R. 463.

The court refused to grant probate of a lost codicil, of the execution of which no proof was forthcoming. Wilson, In goods of, 26 L. T. 405.

In propounding a copy of a lost codicil, it was proved by A. and B. that such a paper had existed, and by C. and D., the attesting witnesses, that they had signed some paper for the deceased, but were unable to say whether it was testamentary or not. The court held that in the absence of proof identifying the paper known to A. and B. with that signed by C. and D., there was not sufficient proof of the factum and execution of the codicil, and refused probate. Crickett v. Field, 23 L. T. 630; 19 W. R. 232.

When the execution of a will, its contents, and the fact of its existence unrevoked at the time of the death of the testator, have to be proved by parol evidence only, that evidence must be stringent and conclusive. Silver v. Silver, 27 L. T. 766.

When a will was not forthcoming at the time of the testator's death, and was not found in the repositories of a deceased attesting witness in whose custody it was stated to have been last seen, and where the account given by the witnesses as to its existence at that time was confused and conflicting, the court refused probate of the contents propounded seven years after the testator's death. Ib.

Evidence of Improper Execution.]—Where a testamentary paper is not in existence, and all the persons present at an intended execution of it agree that it was not duly executed, the court cannot on a mere suspicion to the contrary decree probate of it. Eckersley v. Platt, 36 L. J., P. 7; L. R. 1 P. 281; 15 L. T. 327; 15 W. R. 232.

Copies.]—An officer in her majesty's service executed a will and codicil, previously to leaving England with his regiment. The original will and codicil were deposited with his solicitor in England, but he took with him copies of these documents, which were found at his death enclosed in a sealed envelope in his desk. He never returned to England. The original will and codicil could not be found amongst the papers of the solicitor, who had died in the lifetime of the deceased, but there was evidence from which to infer that they had not returned into the possession of the deceased, or been destroyed at his request. Probate was therefore granted of the copies, limited until such time as the originals were produced. Peckell, In goods of, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 406.

When a will executed before the Wills Act was lost, and there was no surviving witness of its execution, the court admitted as proof an entry from the ledger of the solicitor who made the will, and granted probate of a copy. Thomas, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 32; 25 L. T. 509; 20 W. R. 149.

A., being resident in India, sent in 1850 to England, in a letter to his solicitor, a copy of a will which he stated he had made there. In February, 1857, he transmitted in the same way copy of a codicil, stated by him to have been made at Delhi. A. lost his life in May, 1857, in the mutiny at Delhi, and the will and codicil were not forthcoming. On motion for probate of the will and codicil, as contained in the copies sent to England:—Held, there being no proof of the execution of the original will and codicil, except the statement of the deceased himself, made after their execution, the copies were not entitled to probate. Ripley, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 68; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 342; 6 W. R. 460.

A will was destroyed by a testator on the supposition that he had substituted another for it, but which was not duly executed. Probate of a copy of the first will was granted. Scott v. Scott, 1 Sw. & Tr. 258; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 288.

Draft Will—Original not forthcoming—Consent of all Parties.]—The testator duly executed a will and codicil, the former of which was last seen about a year before his death, when it was handed to the testator, at his own request Only the codicil could be found after his death. The widow had been separated from the testator, her husband, for over twelve years. His relations with his children never altered after the date of the will. All parties interested consented to probate of the draft of the missing will:—Held, that, as all parties consented, a liberal view might be adopted; that the presumption of law might be taken to be sufficiently rebutted; and that probate of the draft will might go to the executor therein named. Berry, In goods of, 65 L. T. 763.

Will not forthcoming—Probate of Codicil.]—Testator executed a codicil which was described as "a codicil to my will executed some years ago." After his death no trace of the will could be found:—Held, that probate of the codicil might be granted. Clements, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 130; [1892] P. 254; 67 L. T. 356.

—— Will Executed by Married Woman.]—When a wife has executed a will during coverture with the consent of her husband, and the will is not forthcoming at her death, and no copy can be found, the court will make a grant of probate of the draft of the will, limited until the original will, or an authentic copy of the will, is brought into the registry, and limited also to all such personal estate and effects as she had power and a right to dispose of, and has in and by the draft appointed and disposed of. Thrippleton, In goods of, 35 L. T. 909.

—— Revocation of Will under Mistake.]—Where a testator by misinformation as to the effect of a subsequent deed, settling his property in his lifetime, had been induced to revoke his will by cancellation, the court refused to grant probate of a copy on motion, but compelled the parties to propound it in solemn form. James, In goods of, 19 L. T. 610.

Limited Administration Granted.] — A will duly executed was on the death of the testator in the custody of the sole executor and universal legatee named in it. It was never proved, there not being at that time any property which could pass under it, and was subsequently lost or mislaid. No draft or copy of it was forthcoming. The court granted administration of the effects of the deceased, limited until the will or an authentic copy of it should be brought into the registry. Johnson, In goods of, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 184.

Destroyed—Presumption if last seen in Testator's Possession.]—The rule of the law is, that if a will is traced to the possession of the deceased, and last seen there, and is not forthcoming on his death, it is presumed to have been destroyed by himself, and that presumption must prevail, unless there is sufficient evidence to repel it, and to raise a higher degree of probability to the contrary. The onus of proof in such cases lies upon the party propounding the will. Welsh v. Phillips, 1 Moore, P. C. 299.

A testator executed his will at his solicitor's office, and took it away with him. It was never seen afterwards, and could not be found after his death in his repositories. He had made declarations inconsistent with his testamentary dispositions shortly before his death, but the court held, that he being the last custodian of the will, and it not being forthcoming, the presumption of revocation arose and was not rebutted. Homerton v. Hewett, 25 L. T. 854.

When a will traced to the possession of the testator cannot be found after his death, and there is no evidence what has become of it, the presumption arises that the will has been destroyed by the testator for the purpose of revoking it, but this presumption may be rebutted by parol evidence. Sugden v. St. Leonards (Lord), 45 L. J., P. 49; 1 P. D. 154; 34 L. T. 372; 24 W. R. 860—C. A. See also Moore v. Whitehouse, ante, col. 312.

See also cases post, col. 366, et seq.

—— Partly.] — A disappointed legatee got possession of the will after it had been read over to her, and tore it in pieces. One of the pieces was missing, and was supposed to have been carried away by her. The court allowed the contents of the missing part to be proved by affidavit, and granted probate of the pieces thus supplemented. Clift, In goods of, 29 L. T. 249.

Destruction Intentional—Animus revocandi.]—A testatrix destroyed a will without stating at the time her intention in doing so. Subsequently on the same day she said that she destroyed the will with the intention that a former will should take effect. The court on motion refused to grant probate of a draft of the destroyed will. Weston, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 53; L. R. 1 P. 633; 20 L. T. 330.

A testatrix, being under an erroneous impression that a codicil had not been duly executed; directed it to be torn up and sent to her solicitor to be re-copied, but died before she could re-execute it:—Held, that in the circumstances, probate of the codicil might be allowed. Thornton, In goods of, 58 L. J., P. 82; 14 P. D. 82; 61 L. T. 200; 37 W. R. 624; 53 J. P. 407.

Testator Mutilating and afterwards Repairing Will.]—Where a testator cut a piece out of his will, which had been duly executed, containing the word "witnesses," and the names of the attesting witnesses, giving his reason at the time for having so cut the same, that he had some idea of altering it, and having a new will made; and subsequently, on the same day, refastened the piece he had so cut out, saying, "that his will would do for the present, and that if he wanted another will he could do it afterwards;" and died without making another will:—The court, with the consent of the parties interested in case of an intestacy, granted probate of the will to the executors named therein. Eeles, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 600; 32 L. J., P. 4; 7 L. T. 338; 11 W. R. 31.

Mutilation by Testator when of Unsound Mind—Grant to Executrix—Security.]—Where a testator left as his executrix and executors and only next-of-kin a widow and two sons, both of whom were abroad, and had when suffering from softening of the brain mutilated his will, the court granted probate to the widow, the consent of the eldest son having been obtained, and ordered her to give security to the extent of the interest which the younger son would have in the estate in case of an intestacy. Hine, In goods of, 63 L. J., P. 45; [1893] P. 282; 6 R. 573; 69 L. T. 458.

Reference in Codicil to Revoked Will—Mistake.]—In February, 1856, W. duly executed a will, which had been prepared for her by a solicitor. In November, 1858, she executed a copy of this will (a few legacies having been omitted), made by herself. In 1861, a codicil, which purported to be a codicil to her last will and testament, bearing date February, 1856, and which was prepared by the same solicitor, was also executed by her. On her death the will of November, 1858, and the codicil of 1861, were found together, the will of February, 1856, in another part of the house, with the signature of the deceased partly torn off. The court, acting on the evidence of the solicitor, concluded that the reference in the codicil to the will of February, 1856, was an error, and decreed probate of the will of November, 1858, and of the codicil. Whatman, In goods of, 34 L. J., P. 17; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1242.

Practice on—Probate on Motion.]—As a general rule the court requires a draft or copy of a lost or destroyed will to be propounded before admitting it to probate; but where satisfactory evidence is given of the contents of a lost or destroyed will, of its due execution, of its existence at the time of the testator's death, and of its subsequent loss or destruction, the persons interested under it, and the persons in whose custody it was not being in any way to blame for such loss or destruction, the court will, with the consent of the only person interested in the event of intestacy, grant probate of a draft or copy on motion ; but it will not on motion grant probate of the contents of a lost or destroyed will without either the consent of or notice to the next of kin. Callan, In goods of, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 484.

A will was lost while in the custody of a solicitor, who had received it for the purpose of obtaining probate, and no copy or draft was known to be in existence. The solicitor who prepared it and one of the attesting witnesses made affidavits that it was entirely in favour of the widow, and made no provision for the infant child of the testator. The court refused to grant probate on motion, but ordered the widow to propound it. Brining, In goods of, 22 L. T. 630.

Where it was satisfactorily shown that the destruction of a duly-executed will was not attributable to neglect or default on the part of those whose duty it was to take charge of it, the court allowed probate of the draft on motion. Barber, In goods of. 36 L. J., P. 19; L. R. 1 P. 267; 15 L. T. 192; 15 W. R. 231.

The court will not admit the draft of a will which has been inadvertently destroyed, to probate on motion. Body, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 9; 34 L. J., P. 55.

The court is always reluctant to grant probate of a document not before it, and it will not, as a rule, grant probate of such document on motion. Kelly, In goods of, 13 L. T. 303.

It is the invariable practice of the court not to allow the contents of a lost will to be proved on motion, except with the consent of all persons interested in an intestacy. Pearson, In goods of, 66 L. J., P. 8; [1896] P. 289; 45 W. R. 143.

—— Party Destroying Condemned in Costs.]—The court granted probate of the draft of a lost will, being satisfied that it was in existence at the time of the death of the testatrix, and that it had been either suppressed or destroyed by the next of kin, who opposed the application for probate: and condemned the next of kin in costs. Podmore v. Whatton, 3 Sw. & Tr. 449; 33 L. J., P. 143; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 756; 10 L. T. 754; 13 W. R. 106.

III. DONATIO MORTIS CAUSÂ.

General Principles.]—The nature of a donatio mortis causâ: in what it differs from the will. The evidence to prove it must be very strong. Jones v. Selby, Pre. Ch. 300.

Donatio mortis causâ is where a man lies in extremity, or being surprised with sickness, and not having an opportunity of making his will, lest he should die before he could make it, gives with his own hands his goods to his friends about him ; this, if he dies, shall operate as a legacy ; but if he survives, the property reverts to him. Hedges v. Hedges, Pre. Ch. 269; Gilb. 12; 2 Vern. 615.

Evidence of donatio mortis causâ. Ashton v. Dawson, 2 Coll. C. C. 363, n.

What things are necessary to make a gift donatio mortis causâ. Parthrick v. Freind, 2 Coll. C. C. 362, n.

A gift by a husband to his wife, either as a donatio mortis causâ, or as a donatio inter vivos, to her separate use, must be established by evidence beyond suspicion. A claim of that nature negatived. A defendant by her answer having claimed a gift from her husband as an absolute donatio inter vivos to her separate use, whether evidence can be received to establish it as a donatio mortis causâ. Quære, Walter v. Hodge, 2 Swanst. 92; 1 Wils. 445. S. P., Grant v. Grant. 34 L. J., Ch. 641; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 787; 13 L. T. 721; 13 W. R. 1057.

The plaintiff being possessed of shares in a public company, when in a state of extreme sickness transferred the shares into the name of the defendant. The plaintiff having recovered from his sickness, but having subsequently become lunatic, a bill was filed in his name by his committee to have the defendant declared a trustee of the shares :—Held, that as the plaintiff had survived the sickness during which the transfer was made, the gift could not operate as a donatio mortis causâ; and, it appearing that the gift had been received by the defendant upon the distinct understanding that it was to be absolute only in the event of the death of the plaintiff :— Held, that the defendant must be considered as a trustee of the shares for the plaintiff. Staniland v. Willott, 3 Mac. & G. 664.

Under the Wills Act.]—Donationes mortis causâ are not abolished by 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 56, Wills Act. Moore v. Darton, 4 De G. & Sm. 517; 20 L. J., Ch. 626.

Nature of Gift.]—The deceased must at the time of the supposed gift part with all dominion over it. Hawkins v. Blewitt, 2 Esp. 663; 5 R. R. 761.

—— Incomplete Gift.]—The principle according to which equity will not render its assistance in perfecting an incomplete voluntary gift has no application to a donatio mortis causâ, and an instrument that does not pass by delivery may be the subject of a donatio mortis causâ, and the executors of the donor will be considered as trustees for the donee for the purpose of giving effect to the gift. Dillon, In re, Duffin v. Duffin, 59 L. J., Ch. 420; 44 Ch. D. 76; 62 L. T. 614; 38 W. R. 369—C. A.

—— Delivery of Possession.]—To constitute a good donatio mortis causâ there must be an absolute and unconditional delivery of possession to the donee, or to a third person in trust for him, which possession must continue uninterruptedly to the time of the donor's death. Bunn v. Markham, 2 Marshall, 532; 7 Taunt. 224; Holt, 352; 17 R. R. 497.

A dying person told her servant to take the keys of her dressing-case, and to deliver her watch and trinkets which it contained to the plaintiff. The servant took the keys and kept them in her possession until after the death of her mistress :—Held, not a good donatio mortis causâ. Powell v. Hellicar, 26 Beav. 261; 28 L. J., Ch. 355; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 232; 7 W. R. 171.

A verbal gift of a chattel, without actual delivery, does not pass the property to the donee. Irons v. Smallpiece, 2 B. & Ald. 551; 21 R. R. 395.

G. T. in his last illness showed a deposit note to his daughter the plaintiff, and told her in effect that it was to belong to her in the event of his death. The plaintiff took the note, and by her father's directions placed it for safe custody in a cash-box which was kept in her father's bedroom, but of which she had the key, and to which she had resort for household purposes :—Held, that this was a good donatio mortis causâ. Taylor, In re, Taylor v. Taylor, 56 L. J., Ch. 597.

In the case of a donatio mortis causâ, an actual delivery is indispensable to vest the property, if the subject-matter is capable of delivery. If it be not so, there must be a delivery of what is equivalent to it at law. In the case of stock, &c., delivery of the receipts, &c., not sufficient to constitute such a gift, though strong evidence of the intent. Ward v. Turner, 2 Ves. 431.

In every donatio mortis causâ, delivery must be made by the party in his last sickness, and it may be to a wife, being in nature of a legacy, but need not be proved with the will. Miller v. Miller, 3 P. Wms. 357.

Where a disposition of money is attempted to be supported as a donatio mortis causâ, a mere general statement of the fact of a gift having been made is not sufficient, but the particulars of the case must be fully stated, and it is essential to the validity of a donatio mortis causâ, that the money or thing given should be actually handed over at the time. Thompson v. Heffernan, 4 Dr. & War. 285.

A person having a considerable amount of bank-notes concealed in her stays, being on her deathbed, took the stays and said to G., her cousin, who was standing by her bedside, that she was longing to give her these, at the same time holding the stays in her hands. G. took them up and put them at the foot of the bed; but on deceased saying, "Don't leave them, keep them, take them, keep them, and take care of them," G. asked for a key of a box in the room belonging to the deceased, which the deceased handed to her; thereupon G. locked them up in a box. Immediately after deceased's death, G. ripped up the stays, took out the bank-notes, and replaced the stays in the box. She took away a watch and several trinkets belonging to the deceased from the deceased's house, of which she gave no immediate account, nor did she mention the amount she had found in the stays :—Held, that having regard to the looseness of the alleged expressions used by the deceased when she handed the stays to G., of which the evidence itself was unsatisfactory, coupled with the conduct of G. in taking other property of the deceased, the circumstances could not be considered to be such a delivery as constituted a donatio mortis causâ. Cosnahan v. Grice, infra.

Property not transferred by words of gift without an act; therefore donatio mortis causâ cannot be by mere parol. Doubtful whether it may be by deed or writing. Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. 120.

Deed poll not delivered, but operating at the death of grantor, and a bond given in favour of a natural daughter; she was put to her election. Johnson v. Smith, 1 Ves. 314.

Parol declaration of trust of money handed over to a third party, on trust, by a person in extremis, supported, but held invalid as to stock, for which a power of attorney had been given by the settlor, but which had not been acted on at her death. Peckham v. Taylor, 31 Beav. 250.

A testator, shortly before his death, said to the person who had for several years acted as his land agent, that he would make him a present of 300*l.*; and having been suddenly taken ill, he desired the agent to retain that sum out of a larger balance then in his hands. No third person was present at this declaration, and on the day after the testator died. The agent was also a solicitor, and acted as such, together with his partner, for the testator; and there was a suit pending against the latter in the exchequer at the time of his death. After the testator's death in 1831, the agent acted as the solicitor of the executors, and made out for them an account of the testator's assets, in which the 300*l.* was treated as a gift by the testator in his lifetime to the agent, and the inventory returned by the executors contained a similar account of that sum. In 1832 the agent furnished an account to the executors, stating all the circumstances under which he claimed credit for the 300*l.*, and taking credit for it against the balance in his hands, and stating that he retained the residue of the balance to meet the costs due to him and his partner, the amount of which he was then unable to ascertain. That account was retained by the executors without objection. In 1839 they filed a bill against the agent for an account of the sum due by him to the testator's estate :—Held, that the agent was not entitled to retain the 300*l.* at the death of the testator, and that the executors had not, by acquiescence, precluded themselves from disputing his right to it. Walsh v. Studdart, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 161; 2 Con. & L. 423; 4 Dr. & War. 159.

Delivery antecedent to Gift.] — Although delivery is essential to a valid donatio mortis causâ, it may be antecedent to the gift. Cain v. Moon, 35 L. J., Q. B. 587; [1896] 2 Q. B. 283; 74 L. T. 728.

Revocation.]—The gift will be revoked if the donor reserved possession. Bunn v. Markham, 2 Marshall, 532; 7 Taunt. 224; Holt, 352; 17 R. R. 497.

But the gift cannot be revoked by the will of the donor. Jones v. Selby, Pre. Cha. 304.

Quære, whether a donatio mortis causâ is avoided by the fact that a will or codicil is subsequently made; whether a remainder may be limited in a donatio mortis causâ; whether, the donatio mortis causâ being of a mortgage debt, a gift of the same sum with the same remainder over in a subsequent codicil is to be considered a satisfaction. Hambrooke v. Simmons, 4 Russ. 25.

May be coupled with a Trust.] — A donatio mortis causâ may be coupled with a trust or a condition, but the expression of the trust or of the condition must form part of the donation, either by being contemporaneous with it, or so coupled with it by contemporaneous words of reference, as in effect to be incorporated with it. Dunne v. Boyd, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 609.

The gift may be good although coupled with a trust that the donee shall provide the funeral of the donor. Hills v. Hills, 8 M. & W. 401; 5 Jur. 1185; 10 L. J., Ex. 440.

Where a party near to her end, and on whose pillow a pocket with some money in it was lying, said, "I wish A. to bury me comfortably, and have all I have"; subsequently to which she changed the money into another pocket, and in the course of the day paid a portion of it away, and then made a declaration to the same effect as before :—Held, that it was properly left to the jury to say : first, was this meant by the deceased as a donatio inter vivos of the money and pocket ; and, secondly, if not, whether it was a donatio mortis causâ of those two things, or intended as a nuncupative will of her property generally. Ib.

Must be made in Contemplation of Death.]—A donatio mortis causâ must be made in contemplation of speedy death, and to take effect only in case of death. Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. 111.

Issue directed to try whether there was donatio mortis causâ, as it did not appear to have been in the last illness. Blount v. Burrow, 1 Ves. J. 546 ; 4 Bro. C. C. 71.

To constitute a donatio mortis causâ, the evidence must be clear that the donor gave it in contemplation of death. Cosnahan v. Grice, 15 Moore, P. C. 215 ; 7 L. T. 83.

—— Suicide of Donor—Public Policy.]—The owner of a deposit receipt gave the document to her sister under circumstances such that the jury found that it was so given in contemplation of death which was to be effected by suicide, and that the gift was to take effect only in the event of the donor's death :—Held, that the gift did not constitute a valid donatio mortis causâ. Quære, Can there be a valid donatio mortis causâ when the donor at the time of the donation is in good bodily health ? Agnew v. Belfast Banking Co., [1896] 2 Ir. R. 204—C. A.

Evidence of—Onus probandi.]—The burden of proof is necessarily on the donee, as, in the first place, so many opportunities, and such strong temptations present themselves to unscrupulous persons to pretend deathbed donations, that there is always danger of having an entirely fabricated case set up ; and secondly, without any imputation of fraudulent contrivance, it is so easy to mistake the meaning of a person languishing in mortal illness, and by a slight change of words, to convert the expressions of intended benefit into an actual gift of property ; and no case of this description ought to prevail, unless it is supported by evidence of the clearest and most unequivocal character. Cosnahan v. Grice, supra.

—— Uncorroborated Evidence of Donee.]—A gift by a dying man of a banker's deposit receipt under such circumstances as to constitute it a good donatio mortis causâ will be upheld, even though the only evidence in support of the claim be that of the donee, if the court considers the evidence trustworthy. Farman, In re, Farman v. Smith, 57 L. J., Ch. 637 ; 58 L. T. 12.

A donatio mortis causâ may be established by the evidence of the donee alone. M'Gonnell v. Murray, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 460.

When Presumed.]—Where the circumstances are such as to indicate an intention to make a testamentary gift, and the intention fails for want of proper attestation, a donatio mortis causâ will not be presumed. Patterson, In re, 4 De G. J. & S. 422 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 596 ; 10 L. T. 801 ; 12 W. R. 941.

What amounts to—Stock Certificates.]—A husband, two years before his death, gave to his wife a railway debenture subsequently converted into railway stock, which remained in his name, and on which the dividends were received by him but paid to his wife. He gave the certificates to his wife, and they remained in her possession until he required them in order to replace a lost dividend warrant. While on his deathbed he handed the certificates to his wife, saying, "These are yours," and also gave her a deposit-note :—Held, that the gift of the stock failed as incomplete, and could not be supported as a declaration of trust, the intention to make an immediate gift being inconsistent with a declaration of trust. Moore v. Moore, 43 L. J., Ch. 617 ; L. R. 18 Eq. 474 ; 30 L. T. 752 ; 22 W. R. 729.

On the 20th July, 1840, M., then in extremis, executed an ordinary bank power of attorney, and delivered it to her sister E., whereby the latter was empowered to transfer into her own name government stock standing in M.'s name. M. died on the 21st of July, 1840, and on the 23rd the transfer was made under the power :—Held (the evidence shewing a clear intention on the part of M. to give the legal and beneficial interest in the stock to her sister), that the gift was valid and effectual in favour of E., as against the other next of kin of the donor. Kiddill v. Farnell, 26 L. J., Ch. 818 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 786 ; 5 W. R. 324, 793.

A. in extremis gave all his shares in a particular bank to his son, on condition of his paying a debt which the testator owed upon the shares to the bank, and wrote a letter to the manager of the bank, directing that the shares should be transferred into the name of the son. The certificates of some of the shares were delivered to the manager as a preliminary to the preparation of the necessary deed of transfer. Before the deed was prepared, the testator died :—Held, that the transaction was incomplete, and that the shares formed part of the general estate. Lambert v. Overton, 11 L. T. 503 ; 13 W. R. 227.

—— Bank-notes.]—A deposit of bank-notes with the executors for the depositor's sister and her children is a gift of the money among them. Powel v. Cleaver, 2 Bro. C. C. 500.

One having by his will, given his wife 600*l.* in money on his deathbed, ordered his servant to deliver to his wife, then present, two bank-notes, payable to bearer, amounting to 600*l.*, saying he had not done enough for his wife : this gift is additional, and shall not be construed a payment of the former legacies in the testator's lifetime. Miller v. Miller, 3 P. Wms. 356.

—— Bonds.]—Upon the death of a testator ten Austrian bonds were found, amongst other securities, in a box at his house, with the following indorsement : "The first five numbers of these Austrian bonds belong to and are H. D.'s property," signed by the testator. H. D. was his housekeeper, and the key of the box was given into her custody :—Held, that as there had been no actual transfer or delivery of the bonds to H. D., they still remained part of the testator's assets. Trimmer v. Danby, 25 L. J., Ch. 424 ; 4 W. R. 399.

A bond, though only a chose in action, is a good subject for a donatio mortis causâ because the beneficial property or interest, which is the debt at law, still remains in the donor, notwithstanding his transfer of it. Snelgrove v. Bailey, 3 Atk. 214 ; Ridgw. t. Hardw. 202.

Gift of bond, by delivering it, and saying, "There, take that, and keep it," in last sickness, and donor dying two days afterwards, held to be donatio mortis causâ, and donee at liberty to sue in executor's name on it; he indemnifying. Gardner v. Parker, 3 Madd. 184.

There cannot be a gift of bond or chose in action by way of donatio mortis causâ, neither can anything operate as such without having been delivered in the testator's lifetime by him or his order. Miller v. Miller, 3 P. Wms. 358.

The obligee of a bond, five days before her death, assigned a memorandum, not under seal, which was indorsed upon the bond, and which purported to be an assignment of the bond, without consideration, to her niece, to whom the bond was at the same time delivered:—Held, that the transaction could not be considered as a donatio mortis causâ, as there was no evidence to shew at what time, or under what circumstances, the bond first came into the niece's possession, and as the assignment was immediate and unconditional; and that, as the gift was incomplete, and was without consideration, the court could not give effect to it. Edwards v. Jones, 1 Myl. & Cr. 226; 5 L. J., Ch. 194.

—— Railway Stock.]—Held, also, that railway stock cannot be the subject of donatio mortis causâ. Moore v. Moore, supra.

—— Deposit Note.]—A deposit receipt in the ordinary form used by banks may be the subject of a donatio mortis causâ; and this is so, although the receipt is expressed to be not transferable. Cassidy v. Belfast Banking Co., 22 L. R., Ir. 68.

A woman claimed railway certificates and a deposit note, either as having been given to her by her husband in his lifetime, or on the ground that he had constituted himself a trustee of them for her, or as a donatio mortis causâ:—Held, that she was entitled to the deposit note as a donatio mortis causâ. Moore v. Moore, supra.

—— Deposit Note with printed Cheque Form on Back.]—A dying man, in expectation of death, stated his wish to give his wife 500*l.* out of a sum of 2,700*l.* on deposit at a bank, which was evidenced by a deposit note in his possession for 2,700*l.* on the back of which was a printed cheque form which had attached to it a notice of withdrawal. He filled up the cheque and notice of withdrawal for 500*l.* and sent the document to the bank, but died within two days of that date. The practice of the bank was to require notice to be given seven days before withdrawal:—Held, that the 500*l.* did not pass by a donatio mortis causâ, as the cheque for that amount was not payable till after the testator's death. Mead, In re, Austin v. Mead, 50 L. J., Ch. 30; 15 Ch. D. 651; 43 L. T. 117; 28 W. R. 891.

A banker's deposit note is a good subject of donatio mortis causâ; nor is it the less so because it purports to be "not transferable," or because the depositor for the purpose of withdrawing the money is required by the bank to sign a cheque indorsed upon the note. The death of the donor before presentation of the cheque by the donee does not defeat the donatio mortis causâ. Whether a cheque on a donor's own account can be a subject of donatio mortis causâ, quære. Mead, In re, Austin v. Mead, supra, distinguished. Dillon, In re, Duffin v. Duffin, supra, col. 320.

—— Unindorsed Deposit Receipt.]—A deposit receipt unindorsed is a good subject-matter of a donatio mortis causâ. Porter v. Walsh, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 148—C. A.

—— Evidence of Gift.]—Assuming that a bank deposit receipt, whether indorsed or not, may, by manual delivery, be the subject of a donatio mortis causâ, the evidence of the gift must be clear and unequivocal. Dunne v. Boyd, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 609.

On the day before his death R. stated to B.'s wife how, in the event of his death, he wished his property to be disposed of, and, on the following morning, having dictated and signed an order on the Provincial Bank to pay to B. the amount of some bank deposit receipts, attempted to indorse them, but, after indorsing the first, was unable to proceed, and very shortly afterwards died without giving any further expression of his intention:—Held, not to be a valid donatio mortis causâ to B., either absolutely or as a trustee. Ib.

—— Delivery of Savings Bank Book.]—The delivery of the book of a depositor in a savings bank is not sufficient to constitute a donation of the money deposited. M'Gonnell v. Murray, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 460.

—— Of Mortgage Deeds.]—Whether a mortgage can pass by parol gift. Whether such a gift, in this case, is to be considered as donatio mortis causâ or donatio inter vivos. Hassell v. Tynte, Ambl. 318.

Delivery of a mortgage security:—Held, to be a good donatio mortis causâ, and the heir or executor bound to give effect to it. Duffield v. Hicks, 1 Dow. (N.S.) 1; 1 Bligh (N.S.) 497; 30 R. R. 69. Overruling Duffield v. Elwes, 1 Sim. & S. 239; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 213. See 24 R. R. 173.

Mere delivery up of deeds does not cancel mortgage debt; but when accompanied with the mortgage bond on purpose to release debt in case donor should die of the present illness is, it seems, a good donatio mortis causâ. Hurst v. Beach, 5 Madd. 351.

Gift of money due on mortgage and bond by testator some time before his death to a daughter, not sustainable by fact of merely changing the securities from one drawer of a bureau to another, proved by his widow, who sought to discharge herself by payments as executrix under the will. Bryson v. Brownrigg, 9 Ves. 1.

W., whilst suffering under an illness, from which he never recovered, and being a mortgagee of his son, gave his son the mortgage deed, saying, "Take this, but do not wrong your children, and do not mortgage your property," the father not being aware that the son had already mortgaged the estate:—Held, that this was a good donatio mortis causâ to the son alone. Merideth v. Watson, 17 Jur. 1063.

—— Of Key of Box.]—The court will not enforce an incomplete voluntary assignment, evidenced by delivery of a box (retaining the key), such box containing what purported to be a written memorandum of gift of real estates and chattels, the memorandum not being under seal. Warriner v. Rogers, 42 L. J., Ch. 581; L. R. 16 Eq. 340; 28 L. T. 863; 21 W. R. 766.

A person, having some Dutch bonds and the title deeds of certain estates, which he keeps in a box, delivers the key of the box to J., in whose house he lives and with whom he is on terms of intimacy, and tells a third person that the contents of the box belong to J. He, however, keeps possession of the box, directing J. to open it for him from time to time as occasion requires. He also receives the dividends due on the bonds. A few weeks before his death, being in his eightieth year and infirm in health, he directs his nurse to deliver the box to J., which she accordingly does, and J. keeps the box till his death. Upon the box being subsequently opened, the envelope in which the bonds are contained, is found to be addressed in the handwriting of the deceased to the wife and sisters of J., with a direction that it is to be delivered "unopened," and attached to the envelope is a letter addressed by the deceased to the same person, stating the shares in which each is to have the benefit of the bonds, stating also, by way of postscript to J., that the writer takes this course solely to evade the legacy duty, and that he recommends perfect silence on the subject. The transaction amounts neither to a gift inter vivos, nor to a donatio mortis causâ in favour of the wife and sisters of J. Farquharson v. Cave, 2 Coll. C. C. 356 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 137 ; 10 Jur. 63.

—— Bills of Exchange.]—The same man under the same circumstances gave two bills of exchange drawn by himself to his own order, but unindorsed, to a friend, and requested him to present them and give the money to his wife ; the friend undertook to do so, and gave the bills of exchange to the wife, by whom they were not presented until after the testator's death :—Held, that the bills of exchange passed by a donatio mortis causâ. M'Gonnell v. Murray, supra.

A gift of bills of exchange, payable to the donor or order, by way of donatio mortis causâ, was supported. Rankin v. Weguelin, 27 Beav. 309 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 323, n.

—— Promissory Note.]—So a promissory note, payable to order, may be the subject of a donatio mortis causâ, and will pass thereby, though unindorsed. Veal v. Veal, 27 Beav. 303 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 321 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 527 ; 2 L. T. 228 ; 8 W. R. 2.

C., in 1858, bought in the incumbered estates court an estate for 3,025*l*., and had it conveyed absolutely to his daughter, H. C. She owned 1,525*l*. of the purchase-money ; C. contributed 1,500*l*. At the time of the purchase C. used some expressions as to his intention to give this sum to his daughter, but he soon after took from her a promissory note, payable seven days after date, in respect of the interest on which accounts were regularly stated and settled between the father and daughter during his life. In December, 1873, C. signed an indorsement on the note as follows :—"I direct that this promissory note be delivered up to be cancelled after my death, to the intent that my daughter H. C. shall be exonerated from payment of same. Dated 10th December, 1873.—P. C." This was attested by only one witness. There was reliable evidence that at various times, particularly when ill, the father told his daughter to take possession of the note when he was dying. He had the conveyance and the note tied together and placed in his deed-box, and he had a label on them, "These belong to H. C." C., having recovered from former illnesses, died after a few days' illness in 1876. In his last illness he said nothing as to the note. About an hour before his death, when he was insensible, the daughter got his keys and opened the deed-box, and found the conveyance and the note, as above described, and on reading the indorsement she replaced them in the box :—Held, that there was no gift of the note inter vivos, nor donatio of it mortis causâ, nor any valid testamentary disposition of it in the daughter's favour, and that it still remained part of C.'s assets. Cross v. Cross, 1 L. R. Ir. 389.

Some months before his death a testator gave to S., his nephew, who was residing with him, certain promissory notes, of which he was the holder and payee, with the words, "I give you these notes," adding, soon after, that S. should have them at his death, but that he wished to be master of them as long as he lived. On the same day each note was indorsed with these words, "I bequeath, pay the within contents to S. or his order at my death," and this indorsement was signed by the testator, and attested by a single witness :—Held, that this was intended only as a testamentary disposition, which failed through informality, and that the notes were part of the testator's estate. Patterson, In re, supra.

The indorsement and delivery of a promissory note to be effectual must be such as will enable the indorsee himself to indorse and negotiate it. Ib.

A gift of bills of exchange, payable to the donor or order by way of a donatio mortis causâ, was supported. Rankin v. Weguelin, 27 Beav. 309 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 323, n.

One, by will, disposes of his personal estate, and afterwards, by parol, gives 100*l*. bill to one to deliver over to his nephew, if the testator should die of that sickness, and gift decreed good. Drury v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 404.

And see Mead, In re, Austin v. Mead, supra.

—— Cheque.]—A., four days before his death, gave to his wife a cheque for 1,000*l*., which she immediately afterwards, by his direction, exchanged for one of B.'s cheques for the same amount, which was post-dated, and therefore void. The testator's cheque having been paid to B. about two hours before the testator's death, B. shortly after that event gave to the widow of the testator a cheque for 1,000*l*., in exchange for that which he had previously given to her, and this second cheque was shortly afterwards paid to the widow :—Held, in effect, a good donatio mortis causâ from the testator to his wife. Bouts v. Ellis, 4 De G. M. & G. 249 ; 17 Jur. 585 ; 1 W. R. 400.

An uncle upon his deathbed delivered to his nephew a cheque for 4,000*l*., and with it his banker's pass-book. The cheque was not presented until after the donor's death :—Held, that the intended gift failed. Beak v. Beak, Beak, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 470 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 489 ; 26 L. T. 281.

A husband being resident at St. Remo, in Italy, in his last illness drew his cheques on his London bankers, payable to order, and gave them to his wife, who indorsed them to her bank at St. Remo, and paid them into their bank. The cheques were not presented for payment in London till after his death :—Held, that the cheques were good donationes mortis causâ, and that the widow was entitled to the proceeds out of the testator's estate. Rolls v. Pearce, 46 L. J., Ch. 791 ; 5 Ch. D. 730 ; 36 L. T. 438 ; 25 W. R. 899.

A delivery of a cheque on the donor's banker, in his last illness, payable "to —— or bearer," and signed by the donor, is an adequate gift of the amount, if the donee receives the money from the banker in the donor's lifetime, or before the banker has notice of the donor's death; or if the donee negotiates the cheque for a valuable consideration, or in payment of a debt; but such cheque will not operate as an appointment of so much, if the donee retains it in his possession till after the donor's death. Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. 111; 2 R. R. 175.

A lady, during the night in which she died, signed and handed to a trustee of a charity, established by herself, a cheque for 600*l.* for the use of the charity. The lady died before the morning, so that the cheque could not possibly be cashed before her death:—Held, that there was no donatio mortis causâ, and that the 600*l.* belonged not to the charity but to the residuary personal estate of the deceased. Hewitt v. Kaye, 37 L. J., Ch. 633; L. R. 6 Eq. 198; 16 W. R. 835.

A., being in a declining state of health, delivered to B. a locked cash-box, and told her to go at his death for the key; and that the box contained money for herself, and entirely at her disposal after he was gone, but that he should want it every three months while he lived. The box was twice delivered to A. by his desire, and he delivered it again to B., and it was in her possession at his death. The box was broken open by B. after A.'s death, and contained a cheque for 500*l.*, drawn by C. in favour of A., and inclosed in a cover indorsed with B.'s name; and the key (which A.'s son refused to deliver to B.) had a piece of bone attached to it, with B.'s name written on it:—Held, that this was no donatio mortis causâ. Reddel v. Dobree, infra.

A man in his last illness, a few days before his death, made a codicil to his will, giving certain benefits to his son-in-law, A., and appointed B. his executor. On the same day the testator drew a cheque on a plain sheet of paper for 900*l.*, payable to B., to whom he owed 200*l.*, and wrote on the same sheet, A. 200*l.*, B. 200*l.*, executorship fund 500*l.* The cheque was presented, and paid before the testator's death:—Held, that this was not a donatio mortis causâ, but a complete trust of 200*l.* in A.'s favour, and that it was not necessary that he should have any notice of it previously to the testator's death. Tate v. Leithead, 1 Kay, 658; 23 L. J., Ch. 736; 2 W. R. 630.

A cheque payable to the donor or order, and, without having been indorsed by him, given by the donor during his last illness to his son, stands on the same footing as a promissory note or bill of exchange payable to the donor or order, and will pass to the son by way of donatio mortis causâ. Veal v. Veal (supra) followed. Clement v. Cheesman, 54 L. J., Ch. 158; 27 Ch. D. 631; 33 W. R. 40.

—— Policy of Insurance.]—A policy of life insurance may be the subject of a donatio mortis causâ. Witt v. Amiss, 1 B. & S. 109; 30 L. J., Q. B. 318; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 499; 4 L. T. 283; 9 W. R. 691. S. C., from Amiss v. Witt, 33 Beav. 619.

Insurance Money.]—A., having made his will in 1880, by which he gave the income of his property to his wife B., fell ill in 1887, and being in anticipation of death, signed the following document: "1887, March 1.—I give all my insurance money that is coming to me to my wife B. for her own use, as well as 200*l.* in the bank. This is my wish.—A., witness, C." This document was, at A.'s request, placed with his will, and remained there till his death in April, 1887. Evidence having been admitted as to the circumstances attending the execution of the document:—Held, that effect could not be given to the document as a donatio mortis causâ. Hughes, In re, 59 L. T. 586; 36 W. R. 821—C. A.

Debt.]—Donatio mortis causâ may be of a debt, but not in satisfaction of another debt. Clavering v. York, 2 Coll. C. C. 363, n.

A. lent B. 500*l.* in October, 1843, on which occasion B. wrote and signed the following document: "Received of A. 500*l.* to bear interest at 4*l.* per cent.," and gave it to A. In June, 1845, A., being dangerously ill, gave the document to her servant, with an expression to the effect that she wished the debt to be cancelled. Ten days after this delivery A. died:—Held, that this was a donatio mortis causâ in favour of B. Moore v. Darton, 4 De G. & Sm. 517; 20 L. J., Ch. 626.

A. lent B. 100*l.* in October, 1843, on which occasion B. wrote and signed the following document: "Received of A., for the use of C., 100*l.*, to be paid to her at A.'s death, but the interest, at 4*l.* per cent., to be paid to A." Underneath was written, "I approve the above," which was signed by A. This document was given to A. The money was not paid to A. in her lifetime. In June, 1845, A. died:—Held, that B. was a trustee for C. of 100*l.* at the death of A. Ib.

Chattels.] — Husband, on his death-bed, delivers to his wife a purse of 100 guineas, and bids her apply it to her own use. This is donatio mortis causâ, and a good legacy to the wife, and shall not go to the executors or administrators of the husband, if there is sufficient to pay debts. So, likewise, if the husband being ill (ut supra) draws a bill on his goldsmith to pay his wife 100*l.* for mourning, this is a good appointment; more doubtful if the money on the bill were received in the husband's lifetime. Lawson v. Lawson, 1 P. Wms. 441.

Bill by the administrator of the deceased for an account of personal estate given as a donatio mortis causâ to a negro, who had been brought to England as a slave, dismissed with costs. Shanley v. Harvey, 2 Eden, 126.

Testator makes a will, and encloses in it 100*l.* for the executor, in whose hands he places the will. He subsequently makes a fresh will, but keeps the former, and directs it to the first executor, saying it contained something for him:—Held, a good donatio mortis causâ. Hill v. Chapman, 2 Bro. C. C. 612.

Where A., the donor, delivered a cash-box, desiring B., the donee, to go after his death to his son, who had the key, stating that it contained money, to be entirely at B.'s disposal, but that he should want it every three months as long as he lived, and it was twice delivered back, but was in B.'s possession at the time of the death, the key being ticketed in the name of B., in the son's possession:—Held, not a sufficient donatio mortis causâ, nor such a trust for B. as the court would execute. Reddel v. Dobree, 10 Sim. 244; 3 Jur. 722.

M., in her last illness, requested of her husband, that her wearing apparel, watch, rings, &c., in her possession, and used by her, might be given to her daughter, and put into a friend's hands for her daughter's use, which the husband promised, and after his wife's death gave the said things to his daughter, made an inventory, and locked them in a strong chest, gave the key to his wife's friend, and sent the things therein to her for his daughter's use :—Held, that although the husband afterwards took some of the things into his possession again, that is not sufficient to invalidate the gift, which was perfect by the former act. Lucas v. Lucas, 1 Atk. 270.

Law in Scotland.]—In the law of Scotland, general words of disposition in a mortis causâ deed are, in the absence of any proof of a contrary intention (and the law of Scotland allows such contrary intention to be proved by evidence of a kind which in England would not be admissible for that purpose), sufficient to pass heritable property vested at the date of the deed in the disponer with a special destination to heirs substitute. A. was fee simple proprietor of the estates of Kintarbert and Crossaig in Scotland. He died leaving a disposition and settlement, without prohibitory clauses, disponing these lands to B. and his heirs male, whom failing, to C. and his heirs male, whom failing, to certain cousins in succession, and their respective heirs male. B., who owned other estates, took possession, and died leaving a mortis causâ deed, giving, in language entirely general, all his heritable and movable property to C. and his heirs, whom failing, to his sister, D. C. entered into possession of all B.'s estates, and soon afterwards died intestate and without issue. The sister, D., then, as heiress of provision under B.'s general mortis causâ deed, claimed the estate of Kintarbert and Crossaig as well as the other lands of B. E. disputed D.'s right, claiming these estates as heir of provision under A.'s settlement; contending that the general term of B.'s deed could not be held to include Kintarbert and Crossaig, lands already settled upon a destination of heirs; nor was this B.'s intention :—Held, affirming the decision of the court below, that D. was entitled, because B. was absolute fiar, being the heir in possession under a settlement or entail without fetters, and therefore a general disposition by him passed these lands as part of the universitas of his estate, there being nothing in the mere nature of such a special destination, as here, to prevent it; and no proof of any contrary intention to limit the operation of such general words. Campbell v. Campbell, 5 App. Cas. 787—H. L. (Sc.)

—— In Isle of Man.]—In the Isle of Man the ecclesiastical court has jurisdiction to try the validity of an alleged donatio mortis causâ. Cosnahan v. Grice, supra.

Pleading.]—A statement of claim alleged that an intestate "two days before his death, made a good and valid donatio mortis causâ to the plaintiff, of the whole of his moneys standing on deposit to his account at the Ellesmere Savings Bank," but did not state any facts amounting to a donatio mortis causâ. Demurrer allowed, on the ground that the facts alleged in the statement of claim did not shew a valid donatio mortis causâ. Townsend v. Parton, Parton, In re, 45 L. T. 755; 30 W. R. 287.

IV. EXECUTION.

A. Signature of Testator.

1. Under the Statute of Frauds.

What is a Good Signing—Acknowledgment of Signature.]—Admission of signature by testator to will in presence of the witnesses good as to land. Grayson v. Wilkinson, Dick. 158; 2 Ves. 454.

Admission of sealing and delivery not sufficient evidence thereof. Ib.

Not necessary, under the Statute of Frauds, that a testator should sign in the presence of the witnesses; his acknowledgment of his handwriting is sufficient, although done to the several witnesses at different times. Ib.

Acknowledgment by devisor of his handwriting to one of the witnesses who did not see him execute, good. Addy v. Grix, 8 Ves. 505.

"I, A. B., do make this my will," equivalent to signature, and, if acknowledged before three witnesses, a good execution within the Statute of Frauds. Morison v. Turnour, 18 Ves. 183.

In proving execution of devise, actual signature by devisor in presence of three witnesses is not required, if he declares it to be his will before those who did not see him sign, and separate attestations sufficient. Westbeech v. Kennedy, 1 V. & B. 362.

Where the testator owns his hand before the witnesses who subscribe the will in the testator's presence, the will is good, though all the witnesses did not see the testator sign the will. Stonehouse v. Evelyn, 3 P. Wms. 254.

Will subscribed by three witnesses, before whom testator declared it to be his will, but did not sign it; such declaration is equivalent to signing before them, and such will is good within the 5th section of the Statute of Frauds, and is also a good will of revocation within the 6th. Ellis v. Smith, 1 Ves. 11.

Witness may attest separately; in that case, if testator acknowledged before each, or signs before one, and acknowledges before the rest, it is good; but otherwise if he signs it before each only, because three different executions, and no one good within the statute. Ib., 16.

The construction of the execution of a will is the same in equity as at law. Ib.

A will of land written by the testator, and published in the presence of three several witnesses, at three several times, and attested by all at the said respective times in the presence of the testator, sufficient within the Statute of Frauds; but whether the man's owning the writing to be his in the presence of the witnesses be sufficient, quære. Cook v. Parsons, Pre. Ch. 184; 2 Vern. 429.

J. O., on the 13th June, 1825, made a will devising his real estate to E. O., and on the 25th November following executed another will, disposing of his personal estate merely, but containing a clause revoking all former wills, and attested by three witnesses in the following manner—namely, the testator told two of the witnesses that the document was his will, pointed out his name, and acknowledged the signature to be his, whereupon they subscribed and attested the will. Whilst the second witness was in the act of signing, the third witness accidentally came into the room, and was asked by the testator to become a witness, although he (the testator) said it was unnecessary. The testator then gave the witness to understand that it was his will, but did not point out his name, or acknowledge it to be his signature, to this witness, who might, however, have seen the name J. O. whilst in the act of signing the document :—Held, that the second will was duly executed as a devising will under the Statute of Frauds :—Held, also, that although conversant about personal property merely, it was a good will of revocation of the freehold. Jones v. Ogle, Sau. & Sc. 1.

Semble, that, even as a "writing of revocation." it was well executed under the statute, the acknowledgment of the testator being equivalent to the signing in the presence of the witnesses. Ib.

Publication requires no formal words. Maberley v. Sisson, 1 Jur. 558.

—— Declaration in Attestation.]—A declaration by the testator, in attestation of part of his will, that lands should go to a certain person, not a sufficient devise of them under the Statute of Frauds, not being signed by the testator or by any person by his direction. Blennerhassett v. Day, 2 Ball & B. 104.

—— Mark.]—A will was sufficiently signed, within the Statute of Frauds, s. 5, by the devisor putting his mark instead of signing his name to it, although he was an educated person and able to write well. Taylor or Baker v. Dening, 3 N. & P. 228 ; 8 A. & E. 94 ; 1 W. W. & H. 148 ; 7 L. J., Q. B. 137 ; 2 Jur. 775.

A testator, unable from illness to sign his will, had his hand guided in making his mark :—Held, a sufficient signature within the Statute of Frauds. Wilson v. Beddard, 12 Sim. 28.

—— Sealing.]—Sealing a will was not a sufficient signing of it within the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 5, regarding the execution of wills. Smith v. Evans, 1 Wils. 313.

Execution of a devise under the Statute of Frauds, requiring signature by the devisor in the presence of three witnesses, and their attestation of his act by their subscription. Wright v. Wakeford, 17 Ves. 459.

Sealing not necessary to the execution of a devise under the Statute of Frauds, nor sufficient without signing. Ib.

In December A. made his will ; and in January following, designing to make an alteration, he ordered a devise to be interlined. The will was read in this state to the testator, who approved it, and put his seal on the wax in the presence of the same three witnesses who attested his will at first, but he did not subscribe his name de novo :—Held, a good signing, for the testator's subscribing is only with a view that the witnesses may know the will again. Townsend v. Pearce, 8 Vin. Abr. 142, pl. 3.

Testatrix executed her will in the presence of two witnesses ; she afterwards said, in the presence of a third, "This is my will," but did not put her seal, nor say her name was of her handwriting. Lord Hardwicke inclined this will was void, because not exactly conformable to the statute 29 Car. 2. Gryle v. Gryle, 2 Atk. 177.

Sealing her will without signing in the presence of a third witness would have been sufficient to make it a good will. Ib.

A will, written on nine sheets, was sealed by the testator, who signed the draft of a new will, and then tore off eight of the seals from the first will ; yet the first will was held a good will to pass the real estate, the statute not requiring all the sheets to be sealed ; and the second good to pass the personal estate as a casus omissus out of the statute. Hyde v. Hyde, 3 Ch. Rep. 155.

Will not duly Executed—Effect.]—Will not duly executed according to statute has no operation even to raise an election against person taking personal estate. Ilchester (Earl), Ex parte, 7 Ves. 372 ; 6 R. R. 138.

—— Void as Appointment.]—A. devises freehold lands for a charity, but the will was not executed in the presence of three witnesses ; adjudged, the will being void as a will, it could not operate as an appointment within the statute of 43 Eliz. Att.-Gen. v. Barnes, 2 Vern. 597 ; Pre. Ch. 270 ; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 5.

But such a will may operate as an appointment as to copyhold lands, where there is a surrender to the use of the will, they passing by the surrender and not by the will. Ib.

A. devises by will to which there are no witnesses, and afterwards makes a codicil, executed in the presence of three witnesses ; the will is void as to the land, and the codicil will not support it. Ib.

—— No Revocation of Will of Realty.]—Will sufficient to pass personal estate will not revoke a prior will of real estate made according to Statute of Frauds. Limbery or Lunbery v. Mason, 2 Comyn. 451.

Unexecuted Memorandum indorsed on Will.]—A. gives an annuity of 20*l.* to his daughter, and the heirs of her body, quarterly, without any abatement. B., the surviving executor of A., gives to the daughter of A. and her daughter an annuity of 20*l.* by his will, to be paid quarterly, without any abatement, out of his freehold houses in Holborn, and if they die without issue, then to return to the plaintiff, his heir, and by an indorsement upon the will in pencil, not executed according to the Statute of Frauds, he says, "I hope this 20*l.* will not be taken for another 20*l.* annuity her father left her and her daughter." This indorsement held invalid, because nothing can enlarge or diminish what affects real estate, unless it be executed according to the Statute of Frauds. Heather v. Rider, 1 Atk. 425.

What Property within the Statute—Produce of Real Estate Converted.]—Direction by will to sell real estates, and after the sale to pay certain legacies :—Held, upon the will, not a conversion out and out, and the surplus produce does not pass by an unattested codicil. Sheddon v. Goodrich, 8 Ves. 481.

Produce of real estates converted by will :—Held, to pass only where the will attested by three witnesses to the will. Ib.

Conversion directed by will of real estate into personal, not to all intents, but for the purpose only of answering legacies and annuities, subject to that as to the real estate, a resulting trust for the heir, which cannot be affected by an unattested codicil bequeathing a lapsed share of the residue. Hooper v. Goodwin, 18 Ves. 156.

Devise of real estates to be sold, and the produce applied in the same manner as the residue of the personal estate. Codicil not executed so as to pass real estates, revoking the bequest of the residue, does not affect the will as to the real. Gallini v. Noble, 2 Mer. 691.

Testator, resident in Jamaica, and seised of plantations and slaves in the island, by his will, dated June, 1834, after giving certain bequests, proceeded as follows: "Also, I give, devise and bequeath, share and share alike, unto R. and her children, all my right, title and claim to compensation such as may be awarded to me, as my portion of the compensation fund, for the emancipation of such slaves as may belong to me, and be living on the 1st August, 1834." This will was not attested so as to pass real estate, but was properly executed to pass personalty. By the law of Jamaica, slaves could only be directly devised as real estate. The Act for the Abolition of Slavery (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73, passed on the 28th August, 1833) provided that, on the 1st August, 1834, slavery should cease in the British dominions, and gave to the owners of the slaves a right to their services as apprentices, and to compensation for the loss of their services as slaves. The testator died before this period of manumission arrived. The court in Jamaica decreed that the compensation money partook of the nature of real estate, to the same extent as the slaves, and did not pass under the will. Upon appeal:—Held, reversing such decree, that (treating the slaves as real estate) the legislature became purchasers under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73, from the date of the act, giving a limited interest in the slaves for a term of years to the vendor, and that the money to be received under the compulsory sale of the slaves was converted into personal estate, and passed to H. and her children as specific legatees under the will. Richards v. Jamaica (Att.-Gen.), 6 Moore, P. C. 381; 13 Jur. 197.

—— Shares in Waterworks.]—The shares in the Chelsea Waterworks Company are personal property, and will therefore pass by a will not executed according to the provisions of the Statute of Frauds. Bligh v. Brent, 2 Y. & C. 268.

2. Under the Wills Act.

Signature by Agent.]—If the signature of a testator, who is too ill to write himself, is signed in his presence and that of the attesting witnesses by a third party, such signature must, nevertheless, be accompanied by some act or word on the part of the testator to shew that it was made at his request. Marshall, In goods of, 13 L. T. 643.

A testator at the time of the execution of his will was in such a weak state as to be unable to affix his signature, and it was signed for him by the person who drew it. The court, on affidavits that the testator had frequently afterwards confirmed the will, and that the next of kin did not object, granted probate of the will. Elcock, In goods of, 20 L. T. 757.

—— Presumption of due Execution.]—The cases which have been decided in reference to the presumption of due execution of wills apply as well where the alleged testator's signature has been affixed by his direction as where he has himself actually written his name. Clery v. Barry, 21 L. R., Ir. 152—C. A.

—— With Initials.]—A testator, in the presence of two subscribing witnesses, affixed a seal stamped with his initials to his will, which was entirely written by himself, placed his finger on the seal, and said, "This is my hand and seal":—Held, that the will was sufficiently signed by him. Emerson, In goods of, 9 L. R., Ir. 443.

—— By Mark.]—A will, purporting to be that of "S. Clarke," and delivered by her as such for safe custody to one of her executors shortly before her death, was executed by mark, against which appeared the name of "S. Barrell." The former was her maiden name, and the latter the name of the husband whom she had married:—Held, that there being no doubt as to the identity of the testatrix, her execution by mark was not vitiated by another person having written the wrong name against it. Clarke, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 22; 27 L. J., P. 18; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 24; 6 W. R. 307.

A. put his mark to a testamentary paper, in which he was throughout described as B. The court, being satisfied, on affidavit, that A. duly executed the paper by mark animo testandi, granted probate thereof as his will. Dowce, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 593; 31 L. J., P. 172; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 723; 6 L. T. 789.

A testator signed his will by putting his mark to it, and no evidence was given that it had been read over to him before its execution. An objection taken to the admissibility of the will on that ground, was unsustainable. Clarke v. Clarke, Ir. R. 2 C. L. 395.

A plaintiff propounded as a will a paper purporting to have been executed by a marks-woman, in the presence of two attesting witnesses, who also attached their marks thereto. The whole body of the will, and the names of the supposed testatrix and the witnesses, were in the handwriting of the plaintiff, who under it took almost the entire property. This paper, although in the custody of the plaintiff, was not offered for probate until many years after the death of the testatrix. Evidence was given of the execution of this paper by some person in the presence of two witnesses, but, except by the testimony of the plaintiff, such person was not identified as the deceased. The court refused to grant probate of the paper. Edmonds v. Lewer, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 911.

Where a testator from illness was unable to write, and his signature was made by having his hand guided:—Held, a sufficient signature to satisfy the statute. Wilson v. Beddard, 12 Sim. 28; 10 L. J., Ch. 305; 5 Jur. 624.

—— By means of a Stamp.]—B., by the direction, and in the presence, of A., who wished to execute a testamentary paper, affixed and impressed at the foot of such paper the signature of A., by means of a stamp or an engraving, which A., being paralysed, had had made for his ordinary use. A. afterwards acknowledged the signature and the codicil, and asked the witnesses to attest:—Held, that the affixing a stamp was equivalent to making a mark, at the direction of the testator, and that the making a mark was a signature. Jenkyns v. Gaisford, 3 Sw. & Tr. 93; 32 L. J., P. 122; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 630; 8 L. T. 517; 11 W. R. 854. But the court declined on motion to grant probate of the document so executed. S. C., 32 L. J., P. 71; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 311; 11 W. R. 501.

Position of Signature.]—The words, "signed at the foot or end thereof," in the 9th section of the Statute of Wills, 1 Vict. c. 26, are to be construed strictly. Smee v. Bryer, 6 Moore, P. C. 404; 13 Jur. 289.

Where a holograph will, written on a sheet of foolscap paper, the depositive part of which ended on the third side, leaving, at the foot or end of the third side, a space sufficient to have received the signature of the deceased, and also that of the two attesting witnesses, if not accompanied by a formal attestation clause, was signed, with an attestation clause, in the middle of the fourth side, no part of the will being immediately above it:—Held, not to have been signed "at the foot or end," according to the requisites of the statute, and the will declared invalid. Ib.

A will filled the first and third pages of a sheet of foolscap paper, leaving no room at the bottom of the third page for the signature of the testator and of the attesting witnesses, which were written crossways on the second page:—Held, that the will was duly executed. Coombs, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 25; L. R. 1 P. 302; 15 L. T. 363.

A testator's signature was written partly across the last line but one of the will, and entirely above the last line with the exception of one letter which touched the last line:—Held, that the will was signed at the foot or end thereof. Woodley, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 429; 33 L. J., P. 154.

A testator wrote a will on three sides of a sheet of note paper, the attesting clause and names of the attesting witnesses were at the bottom of the second side, a dispositive clause was written on the third side, and all the letters of the testator's signature, excepting the two last, which extended over to the third side, were on the second side:—Held, to be a good execution. Powell, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 34; 34 L. J., P. 107; 13 L. T. 195; 13 W. R. 696, 999.

A will ending in the middle of a third page of a sheet of foolscap paper, the lower half of the page being left blank, and the attestation clause and the signatures being written on the top of the fourth page, is duly executed. Hunt v. Hunt, 35 L. J., P. 135; L. R. 1 P. 209; 14 L. T. 859.

When the dispositive part of a codicil, written on a half sheet of note paper, occupied nearly the whole paper, and the names of the attesting witnesses were subscribed at the bottom of the page, and the signature of the testator was written down the lower part of the edge of the paper, the court held it to be a valid execution. Jones, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 1; 34 L. J., P. 41; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 118; 13 L. T. 210; 13 W. R. 414.

A will filled two pages of a sheet of note paper, leaving no room on the second page for the signatures of the testator and the attesting witnesses, which were written along the sides of the will upon the third page:—Held, to be a due execution. Wright, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 35; 34 L. J., P. 104; 13 L. T. 195.

A will was prepared and executed; the contents of the will filled the first page of a double sheet of foolscap, and the signature and attestation clause were in the middle of the fourth page:—Held, that the will was duly executed. Fuller, In goods of, 62 L. J., P. 40; [1892] P. 377; 1 R. 453; 67 L. T. 501; 56 J. P. 713.

Where a will terminated with a testimonium clause, about two inches from the foot of the second page of a sheet of paper, leaving ample room for the signatures both of the testator and the witnesses, all of whom, however, signed their names opposite to an attestation clause at the top of the third page, upon which no part of the will was written:—Held, that the will was properly signed within the meaning of the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 26. Derinzy v. Turner, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 341.

W. wrote his will on a sheet of foolscap paper. The writing covered three-fourths of the first side (the other fourth part at the bottom being blank) and the upper half of the second side. The lower half of this side was also blank. On the third side, at one-fourth the length of such side from the top, an attestation clause was written on lines not extending quite across the side; and opposite the second line of the attestation clause was his signature. The signatures of the witnesses written at the end of the attestation clause were in a line below the last words of the will when the sheet was opened:—Held, that the will was duly executed, the signature being opposite to the end of the will. Williams, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 2; L. R. 1 P. 5; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 982; 13 L. T. 304; 14 W. R. 111.

A will and the attestation clause to it, which was in the usual form, were written by the testatrix herself. The only signature of the deceased attached to the will was squeezed into what had been a blank space in the attestation clause. The witnesses were asked by the deceased to sign her will, but she wrote nothing in their presence, nor did they or either of them notice her signature. The court being satisfied from the circumstances of the case, that she had signed her name before the witnesses subscribed, decreed probate of the will. Huckvale, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 84; L. R. 1 P. 375; 16 L. T. 434; 16 W. R. 64.

A will was written on the upper part of one side of a piece of paper with a considerable blank beneath it, and on the back of the paper was written the attestation clause and signatures of the testator and witnesses. Upon proof that the will was written before execution:—Held, that it was duly executed. Archer, In goods of, 40 L. J., P. 80; L. R. 2 P. 252; 25 L. T. 274; 19 W. R. 785.

The dispositive part of a will was written on and occupied the entirety of the first page of a sheet of note paper; the signatures of the testatrix and the attesting witnesses were written upon and occupied the entirety of the fourth page, and the second and third pages were blank:—Held, that it was duly executed. Rice, In goods of, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 176.

The name of a testator was at the foot of a will, but below the names of the attesting witnesses. Both witnesses were dead, and there was no evidence of the order in which they and the testator signed the will, but a due execution was to be inferred from the attestation clause. The court decreed probate of the will. Puddephatt, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 84; L. R. 2 P. 97.

A testatrix having obtained a form of will, lithographed on the first side of a sheet of foolscap paper, wrote her will on the second and third sides, terminating near the bottom of the third side; the fourth side was blank. The form was not filled up except as to the appointment of executors. She signed her name, in the presence of witnesses, at the foot of the lithographed form:—Held, that as regards the position of the signature, the execution was valid as within the provisions of 15 Vict. c. 24. Wotton, In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 14; L. R. 3 P. 159; 30 L. T. 75; 22 W. R. 352.

A will was written on the first and third sides of a sheet of foolscap, and the attestation was on the second page. The court, being satisfied from the evidence that the signature was intended to be placed at the foot or end, under 15 Vict. c. 24, granted probate. Stoakes, In goods of, 31 L. T. 552; 23 W. R. 62.

A will covered four pages of a sheet of foolscap paper, and was continued on a fifth page, being the first of a second sheet. At the bottom of the fifth page was a formal attestation clause, with the signatures of the witnesses, and the signature of the testator appeared at the top of the sixth or following page, preceded by these words: "To which will and testament I hereunto annex my seal and signature":—Held, a valid execution within 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24. Horsford, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 9; L. R. 3 P. 211; 31 L. T. 553; 23 W. R. 211.

A testator wrote a codicil to his will upon a sheet of foolscap paper, covering the first page and half the second. The signatures of the testator and attesting witnesses were on a separate paper, which was attached to the codicil by a string. The court being satisfied that the papers were so attached when the testator acknowledged his signature to the witnesses, and they attested it:—Held, that the instrument was duly executed. Ib.

A will was written on a lithographed form. The testator wrote his name in the blank space left in the attestation clause, but did not sign it in the ordinary place, which was filled by the signatures of the attesting witnesses. The latter did not remember any of the circumstances of the execution:—Held, that the will was duly executed and attested. Harris, In goods of, 23 W. R. 734.

A will contained as an attestation clause the words: "Signed in the presence of us." Then followed the signatures of the attesting witnesses, and beneath their signatures that of the testator. The witnesses deposed that all three were present when they signed the instrument, but they could not say in what order they signed. The court held that the circumstances warranted it in coming to the conclusion that the will had been duly executed, and decreed probate of it. Jones, In goods of, 46 L. J., P. 80; 25 W. R. 215.

There being no room for the signature of the testator or witnesses at the foot of the single page on which a will was written, the testator signed by writing his name transversely along the left-hand margin, near the top, and running downwards as far as the commencement of the second line of the will. The names of the attesting witnesses were written above the will and opposite to portion of the testator's signature:—Held, to be good execution. Collins, In goods of, 3 L. R., Ir. 241.

Where, from the obvious sequence and sense of the context, it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the signature of the deceased really follows the dispositive part of a testamentary instrument, though it may occupy a place in the paper literally above the dispositive parts or part thereof, such testamentary instrument will be entitled to probate. Kimpton, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 427; 33 L. J., P. 153; 10 L. T. 137.

—— In Attestation Clause only.]—A person with his own hand wrote out a will, which concluded with an attestation clause, "Signed, published and declared by the said A. B., the testator, as and for his last will and testament," &c. At the time of execution he declared the paper to be his will in the presence of two witnesses, and asked them to witness it, which they did, but he did not himself sign it in their presence, nor was there any direct evidence that the witnesses saw the signature. The only signature was in the attestation clause:—Held, that under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24, the execution was valid. Pearn, In goods of, 45 L. J., P. 31; 1 P. D. 70; 33 L. T. 705; 24 W. R. 143.

A testimonium clause was as follows: "In witness whereof, I, Martin Hall Mann, have hereunto set my hand." The whole of this was in the handwriting of the testator, and his name written as he usually signed it, but the will was not otherwise signed by him:—Held, that the will was duly executed, the signature being placed "among the words of the testimonium clause," within the meaning of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24, s. 1. Mann, In goods of, 28 L. J., P. 19.

A. wrote out his own will, concluding with an attestation clause, in which his name appeared. He afterwards called in two witnesses, told them the paper was his will, read the latter portion of it to them, including the attestation clause, and requested that they would sign their names, which they did. His name was not written at the foot or end otherwise than in the attestation clause:—Held, the execution was valid. Walker, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 354; 31 L. J., P. 62; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 314; 5 L. T. 766.

A. made his will on a printed form. After he had written his name in the attestation clause, he asked the witnesses to subscribe and attest the will, which they did in his presence. He then wrote his name underneath their signatures, and remarked that they were witnesses to his will. The court being satisfied that he intended by signing his name in the attestation clause to execute the will, ordered probate to issue without his signature written under the names of the witnesses. Cusmore, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 54; L. R. 1 P. 653; 20 L. T. 497; 17 W. R. 627.

—— On Paper Detached from Will.]—Where the signatures of a testator and of the attesting witnesses were made, not on the paper on which the will was written, but on a piece of paper which had been attached to the paper on which the will was written:—Held, to be a good execution. Cook v. Lambert, 3 Sw. & Tr. 46; 32 L. J., P. 93; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 258; 9 L. T. 211; 11 W. R. 401. See also cases, post, cols. 354, 355.

Codicil executed on Margin of Will.]—A testator duly executed a will prepared by a solicitor which was written on the first side of a sheet of foolscap paper. Desiring shortly before his death to make an alteration in the disposition of his property, he called in the assistance of a neighbour, who wrote out a codicil on the third sheet of the foolscap, beginning, "The following alterations having been first made," and ending with an attestation clause in due form. The mark of the testator, however, and the signatures of the attesting witnesses, were written opposite the body of the will on the margin of the first page, the person who prepared the codicil being under the impression that as it was an alteration in the will it ought to be attested on the margin:—Held, that the codicil was not duly executed, and probate refused. Hughes, In goods of, 56 L. J., P. 71; 12 P. D. 107; 57 L. T. 495; 35 W. R. 568.

Writing below Signature.]—A testator, after signing his name to his will in the presence of two witnesses, added a clause to it, the writing being squeezed into the space above and beside the signature. Immediately afterwards the witnesses signed their names:—Held, that he did not sign or acknowledge his signature to the will as containing such clause, and that probate should issue without it. Arthur, In goods of, L. R. 2 P. 273; 25 L. T. 274; 19 W. R. 1016.

In a testamentary paper executed by the deceased, the last sentence commenced immediately above his signature, and was continued in three short lines to the left of it, the two last lines being somewhat below the signature. This sentence was written before the deceased signed her name:—Held, that the execution was valid, and that the last sentence would be included in the probate. Ainsworth, In goods of, L. R. 2 P. 151; 23 L. T. 324.

A farmer wrote his will on a sheet of paper. The attestation clause was on the third page. At the foot of the page there were the words "Turn over," and on the fourth page there was a clause bearing date the day on which the will was executed and with the signature of the testator. The will was signed by the testator and subscribed by the witnesses on the third page, but before its execution the witness saw some writing on the fourth page. The will gave legacies and annuities of considerable amount, but the debts of the testator exhausted the personalty, and the only allusion to his real estate was contained in the writing on the fourth page:—Held, that the signature to the will which the witnesses attested was the signature on the third page, and therefore that the writing on the fourth page could not be included in the probate. Dearle, In goods of, 47 L. J., P. 45; 39 L. T. 93.

S. signed his name on five sheets of a testamentary paper which consisted of six sheets, the names of the attesting witnesses appeared on each of the five sheets; on the sixth appeared a testimonium and attestation clause, and the names of the witnesses, but not the signature of the deceased. The writing at the end of the fifth sheet broke off in the middle of a sentence, which was continued on the sixth sheet. The court refused to grant probate of the five sheets, as containing his last will and testament. Sweetland v. Sweetland, 4 Sw. & Tr. 6; 34 L. J., P. 42; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 182; 11 L. T. 749; 13 W. R. 504.

Testatrix left a will, which extended over to the third page of a sheet of foolscap. The signatures of herself and attesting witnesses were at the bottom of the first page, but she also placed her name at the end of the second page in their presence and before execution. The court granted probate of the first two pages. Wray, In goods of, 31 W. R. 476; 47 J. P. 279.

A testator two days before his death, being paralysed on one side and partly speechless, intimated to the two medical men in attendance on him his desire to make a will. They interpreted his wishes by signs and wrote them down on a card. He executed the document by making his mark, which however appeared in the middle of the writing, and they then put their initials as witnesses at the back:—Held, that the card constituted a valid testamentary paper duly witnessed, expressing the intentions of the deceased; but that it was not signed at the "foot or end" within the meaning of the statute, and was therefore not duly executed and not entitled to probate. Margary v. Robinson, 56 L. J., P. 42; 12 P. D. 8; 57 L. T. 281; 35 W. R. 350; 51 J. P. 407.

Acknowledgment of Signature—What Sufficient.]—Where a person has signed his name in the presence of witnesses at the end of several clauses of a dispositive character, apparently written at different times, the presumption is that he intended to give effect to the whole of what was written at the time he so made his signature. Cattrall, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 419; 33 L. J., P. 106; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 136.

A woman signed her will in the presence of one witness. On the entry of the second witness a person present directed him to sign his name under the testatrix's signature. He did so, and the second witness also subscribed the will. She was in the room, but said no word during the proceeding. The will was lying on the table open, and headed in large characters with the words, "This is the last will and testament of," &c. It also had a full and formal attestation clause:—Held, that she acknowledged her signature in the presence of two witnesses. Inglesant v. Inglesant, 43 L. J., P. 43; L. R. 3 P. 172; 30 L. T. 909; 22 W. R. 741.

A. requested B. to prepare a will for him, by which B. was appointed sole executor, and when prepared it was signed by A. in the presence of B. and two other persons. B. then sent for C. and D., and in A.'s hearing requested them to attest A.'s signature, which they did, and A. thanked them for their trouble:—Held, following Inglesant v. Inglesant (supra), that the signature had been duly acknowledged, and probate granted. Bishop, In goods of, 30 W. R. 567; 46 J. P. 392.

A testatrix produced a paper to A. and B., and saying, "This is my will," asked them to witness it. The will covered three pages of a sheet of paper. Her signature was at the foot of the third page. The witnesses subscribed their names on the fourth page, but did not see her signature or any part of the writing on the paper. The court, being satisfied that the signature of the testatrix was on the will at the time she produced it to the witnesses:—Held, that there had been a sufficient acknowledgment, and that the will was duly executed. Janaway, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 6; 31 L. T. 800; 23 W. R. 385.

An intending testator's name was, by his direction, and in his presence, subscribed for him to a paper writing purporting to be his will, and two other persons, who were present when his name was so subscribed, but not when the direction was given, acted as attesting witnesses, and then the intending testator made a mark immediately over his name so subscribed for him:—Held, that there being no evidence that the subscribed name had been acknowledged as his signature by the intending testator in the presence of the attesting witnesses, and his mark having been made by him after the attestation of the witnesses, the execution was invalid. Moore, In goods of, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 609.

A signature made by some person, but not in the presence (though by the direction) of a testator, is not such signature as can be acknowledged by the testator under the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 9. Kevil, In goods of, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 244.

An intending testator "held a pen in his hand and put it to his name" (not written in his presence), "or placed on a mark" made on a will prepared for him by a solicitor; but no proof could be given whether any ink was in the pen or any visible trace made when he so held the pen :—Held, though the will was properly attested, that the court could not presume a due execution. Ib.

The attesting witnesses to a will, which purported to be executed by mark, were asked in the testator's presence to sign the will. A mark was on the will when they signed, but there was no evidence that it was made by the testator, or that he knew the contents of the will, nor did he refer to it. The court pronounced against the will on the ground that the evidence failed to shew an acknowledgment of the testator's signature or that he knew and approved of its contents. Morritt v. Douglass or Douglas, 42 L. J., P. 10 ; L. R. 3 P. 1 ; 27 L. T. 591 ; 21 W. R. 162.

The mere circumstance of the deceased having called in two witnesses "to sign a paper for him" (which they did in his presence), but without any explanation of the nature of the instrument being made to them, or the witnesses being able to see if any signature or writing was upon it when they attested it :—Held, by the judicial committee of the privy council, affirming the judgment of the prerogative court, not to amount to an acknowledgment of the signature by the deceased so as to satisfy the provisions of 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9, and probate refused to such paper. Ilott v. Genge, 4 Moore, P. C. 265.

A testatrix exhibited a codicil to her last will, which was entirely in her own handwriting, to one of the attesting witnesses, telling her she had something which required two witnesses. Subsequently, the second attesting witness having come into the room, was asked, either by the testatrix or by the other attesting witness in her presence, to sign it, and they both signed, but the testatrix did not tell them that it was a testamentary paper, nor did they know what sort of paper it was that they had attested. They did not recollect seeing the testatrix sign, but one of them was clear that her signature was there at the time they signed :—Held, that this was a sufficient acknowledgment by the testatrix of her signature, and that the codicil was entitled to probate. Daintree v. Fasulo, 57 L. J., P. 76 ; 13 P. D. 102 ; 58 L. T. 661—C. A. Affirming 52 J. P. 87.

—— Blindness of Testator.]—A testator who is so blind that he can do little more than distinguish night from day is capable of acknowledging his signature to his will. King v. Berry, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 309.

Presumption of due Execution—Evidence.]—If a will appears upon the face of it to have been properly executed, according to the requirements of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, the presumption of law is that the testator duly acknowledged it. Lloyd v. Roberts, 12 Moore, P. C. 158.

The grant of probate to a will, which was entirely in the handwriting of the testator, an attorney, without break or crowding, with an attestation clause in its proper place, and attested by two witnesses, was opposed by the wife and daughter of the testator (they having been entirely excluded from any benefit under it), on the ground that it was written after the witnesses attested the will. One of the attesting witnesses was dead ; the other deposed that when he signed the will, with the exception of the testator's signature, and the signature of the other attesting witness, the paper was blank :—Held, from the appearance of the will, as well as the circumstance that the testator was a professional man, well acquainted with the necessity of a proper execution, and the presumption of law, that the will was written when attested, and had been duly acknowledged in the witnesses' presence, notwithstanding the testimony of the surviving attesting witness, who, in the opinion of the judicial committee, must have been mistaken or his memory failed him. Ib.

The legal presumption is in favour of a will with a perfect attestation clause, and to rebut it the court requires the strongest evidence. Therefore, where a solicitor drew his will himself with a perfect attestation clause, which appeared attested by two witnesses of humble rank, and on the will being propounded, after the lapse of seven years and a half from its date, one of the attesting witnesses swore, but not very positively, that the testator signed his name to the will before the witnesses, while the other witness swore that at the time he signed the will the testator's name was not signed to it, the court, not relying on the memory of the latter, acted on the presumption in favour of the due execution of the will and declared it well proved. O'Meagher v. O'Meagher, 11 L. R., Ir. 117.

When a testamentary paper is not in evidence, and all the persons present at an intended execution of it agree that it was not duly executed, the court cannot, on a mere suspicion to the contrary, decree probate of it. Eckersley v. Platt, 36 L. J., P. 7 ; L. R. 1 P. 281 ; 15 L. T. 327 ; 15 W. R. 232.

In a suit concerning the validity of a will the surrounding circumstances and the appearance of the document were in favour of its having been duly attested. The adverse evidence, viz. that of the two witnesses, who denied having attested in the presence of the testator, appeared to be of a doubtful character. The court acted on the presumption omnia rite esse acta, and pronounced for the will. Bailey v. Frowan, 19 W. R. 511.

If an attestation clause of a will more than thirty years old recites a compliance with the requisite ceremonies in respect of all the witnesses, it is enough, in order to make out a primâ facie case, to prove the death of all, and the handwriting of one of them ; because it will be presumed that everything that he thus declared by his attestation to have been done was rightly done. Andrew v. Motley, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 526 ; 32 L. J., C. P. 128.

Two persons' names appeared as attesting witnesses to a will, and the attorney who drew the will, and who was present during its execution, swore that these persons had duly signed the will as attesting witnesses, and other persons who knew their handwriting swore that the writing was theirs, but they themselves, though admitting a striking resemblance between the signatures to the will and other signatures of theirs produced, denied having signed the will, and swore that the signatures to it were forgeries. The court, being satisfied that the signatures were genuine notwithstanding the denial of the witnesses, admitted the will to probate. Myers v. Gibson, 14 W. R. 901.

Two attesting witnesses contradicted one another on the point that the deceased signed his name in their joint presence. The will concluded, "In witness whereof I place my signature in the presence of two witnesses" :—Held, that it was entitled to probate. Creyreen v. Willoughby, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 590.

When there is no formal attestation clause to a testamentary paper, and no affirmative evidence that at the time of execution the testator's name was on the paper, the mere production of it to witnesses with a request that they will sign it as a paper, is not in itself sufficient to justify the court in drawing the inference that it was already signed by the testator. Fischer v. Popham, 44 L. J., P. 47 ; L. R. 3 P. C. 246 ; 33 L. T. 231 ; 23 W. R. 683.

A testatrix in 1869 executed a will, and in 1871 executed a codicil appointing two fresh executors, but in other respects confirming the will. She afterwards wrote at the foot of the will "I declare this will to be null and void.—E. H., 28th of May, 1873." Underneath this were the words "Turn over," and on a blank page she made fresh testamentary dispositions, followed by her signature and the date, underneath which were the words "Witness my hand," and the signatures of two witnesses, but with no formal attestation clause. At the foot of the codicil of 1871 she wrote "Null and void, E. H." The signatures both to the will and to the codicil had lines drawn across them, but were still perfectly legible. The witnesses to the writing of 1873 swore that the testatrix asked them to sign their names, but did not sign her own in their presence, and that she did not say what the paper was. One witness did not remember whether her signature was already there. The other witness thought that it was, but that some of the other words had been added afterwards : —The court held that the later codicil was not proved to have been duly acknowledged, and granted probate of the will and first codicil. Ib.

On the death of the deceased a testamentary paper was found in his handwriting and with his signature at the foot or end. It had also an attestation clause and the names of two witnesses thereto. At the time of execution the deceased did not refer to the paper as a will, nor was there any evidence that the deceased's signature was on the paper at the time. The court refused, on motion, to grant probate of such paper as a codicil to the will of the deceased. Swinford, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 38 ; L. R. 1 P. 630 ; 20 L. T. 87 ; 17 W. R. 536.

When one of the attesting witnesses to a will was dead, and it appeared that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to discover the other, and the only parties interested in the estate consented, the court granted probate of the will, though in the attestation clause it did not appear under what circumstances the attestation had been made. Nicks, In goods of, 34 L. J., P. 30.

A will, in the handwriting of the deceased, and having a full attestation clause, will be admitted to probate, although the attesting witnesses may not recollect whether it was signed or the signature acknowledged in their presence. Holgate, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 261 ; 29 L. J., P. 161 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 251.

When a will appears to be duly executed, and there is a complete attestation clause, the presumption omnia rite esse acta applies, and is not rebutted by the defective memory of the attesting witness. Where the attestation clause is incomplete, the presumption also applies, but with less force. Vinnicombe v. Butler, 3 Sw. & Tr. 580 ; 34 L. J., P. 18 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1109 ; 13 W. R. 392.

If the attestation clause is informal, and the attesting witnesses identify their signatures and that of the testator, but have no recollection of the circumstances under which the will was executed, the presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is, that the will was duly executed. Rees, In goods of, 34 L. J., P. 56.

—— Signature seen by attesting Witnesses.] —When the attesting witnesses to a will duly executed on the face of it did not recollect having seen the testator's signature to the will when they subscribed their names as witnesses, the court held that it was at liberty to judge from the circumstances of the case, whether it was probable that the testator's name was on the will or not at the time of the attestation, and being of opinion that it was, pronounced for the will. Gwillim v. Gwillim, 3 Sw. & Tr. 200 ; 29 L. J., P. 31.

To constitute a sufficient acknowledgment, within s. 9 of the Wills Act, the witnesses must at the time of the acknowledgment see, or have the opportunity of seeing, the signature of the testator, and if such be not the case it is immaterial whether the signature be, in fact, there at the time of attestation, or whether the testator say that the paper to be attested is his will, or that his signature is inside the paper. Hudson v. Parker (1 Robert. 14) followed. Gwillim v. Gwillim (supra) and Becket v. Howe (infra) disapproved. Gunstan, In goods of, Blake v. Blake, 51 L. J., P. 36 ; 51 L. J., Ch. 377 ; 7 P. D. 102 ; 46 L. T. 641 ; 30 W. R. 505 —C. A.

A person asked two witnesses to put their mark to a paper, but did not tell them that it was his will, or make any statement in regard to it. Being illiterate, the witnesses could not say whether his signature was on the paper at the time, and there was no evidence on the point :— Held, an insufficient execution of the will. Pearson v. Pearson, 40 L. J., P. 53 ; L. R. 2 P. 451 ; 24 L. T. 917 ; 19 W. R. 1014.

The cases on execution by acknowledgment of a testator's signature reviewed. Ib.

When the signature of a testator is apparent on the will when it is presented to the witnesses for attestation, it is sufficient that it might be seen by them, whether they actually observed it or not. Kelly v. Keatinge, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 174.

The attesting witnesses were not present when the testator put his mark to his will ; but the testator, being asked in their presence, "Do you acknowledge this to be your last will and testament?" answered, "I do" :—Held, a sufficient acknowledgment of his signature Ib.

The mere circumstance of a testator having called in two witnesses "to sign a paper for him" (which they did in his presence), but without any explanation of the nature of the instrument being made to them, or the witnesses being able to see if any signature or writing was upon it when they attested it :—Held, not to amount to an acknowledgment of the signature of the testator, so as to satisfy the provisions of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9. Holt v. Genge, 4 Moore, P. C. 265.

A codicil was signed by a deceased, who was ill in bed in one room, and attested by two witnesses in an opposite room, but who did not see her make or acknowledge her signature, or have any conversation with her respecting it. The deceased, the doors of both the rooms being open, might, by raising herself in bed, have seen the witnesses sign ; but there was no evidence that she did do so :—Held, to be a bad execution, on the grounds that she did not make or acknowledge her signature in the presence of the witnesses, and that they did not attest in her presence. Killick, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 578; 34 L. J., P. 2; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1083.

A testator requested one person to attend to his will and another to witness a paper. They both attended at the time and place appointed, when the testator produced a paper so folded that no writing on it was visible, and informed them that in consequence of his wife's death it was necessary to make a change in his affairs, and he asked them to sign their names to it, which they did. The testator did not sign in their presence, nor did they see his signature. The paper had an attestation clause upon it in his handwriting, but not quite in the ordinary form:—Held, that there had been a sufficient acknowledgment of the signature. Beckett v. Howe, 39 L. J., P. 1; L. R. 2 P. 1; 21 L. T. 400; 18 W. R. 75.

A. and B. subscribed a paper in the presence of and at the request of the testatrix, who had previously in their presence written something on it, but what, they did not know. She did not explain to them the nature of the paper; nor when they signed it did they see her signature, all the writing on the paper being concealed by a sheet of blotting-paper:—Held, a valid execution. Smith v. Smith, 35 L. J., P. 65; L. R. 1 P. 143; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 674; 14 L. T. 417; 14 W. R. 648.

Attestation—Sufficiency of.]—Where a witness in fact attested a testator's signature, but the form of attestation described him as only attesting the signatures of two other witnesses (the attestation of one of whom was irregular), probate of the will was granted. Mason v. Bishop, 1 Cab. & E. 21.

A. having made his will in 1880, by which he gave the income of his property to his wife B., fell ill in 1887, and, being in anticipation of death, signed the following document:—"1887, March 1.—I give all my insurance money that is coming to me to my wife B. for her own use, as well as 200*l.* in the bank. This is my wish.—A., witness, C." This document was, at A.'s request, placed with his will, and remained there till his death in April, 1887. Evidence having been admitted as to the circumstances attending the execution of the document:—Held, that it was intended as a testamentary instrument, and, not having been properly attested according to the Wills Act, could not take effect as a will. Hughes, In re, 59 L. T. 586; 36 W. R. 821.—C. A.

The Wills Act, which permits acknowledgment of his signature by a testator, allows no such latitude in the case of an attesting witness. Where the testator acknowledged his signature to his will in the presence of two attesting witnesses, and one of the latter, who had previously signed the will in the testator's presence, after seeing him sign before the arrival of the second witness, traced over his signature with a dry pen, and the second witness then attested the will, all three being present at the time:—Held, that the will was not duly executed. Horne v. Featherstone, 73 L. T. 32.

Number of Witnesses.]—Will of lands made before the Statute of Frauds had but two witnesses, and the testator died after statute, yet the will being made before, held good. Serjeant v. Puntis, Pre. Ch. 77.

A., possessed of a term of five hundred years in B. acre, afterwards purchases the fee-simple in C.'s name, and devises B. acre to J. in fee; but the will is not attested by three witnesses: the term shall not pass, because attendant on and part of the inheritance. Whitechurch v. Whitechurch, 2 P. Wms. 236; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 168; 1 Stra. 619; 9 Mod. 124.

Devise of all lands and tenements in or near F., by a will attested by two witnesses only, where the testator had freehold, will not pass leasehold; contra, if he had only had leasehold. Chapman v. Hart, 1 Ves. 271.

Where real estate is charged with legacies generally, by will, duly attested, legacies may be revoked or charged by an unattested instrument. Buckeridge v. Ingram, 2 Ves. 665.

A trust is limited to A., his heirs and assigns, or to such as he or they may appoint; A. devises these lands by a will attested but by two witnesses; the will void, and shall not operate as an appointment. Wagstaff v. Wagstaff, 2 P. Wms. 258.

A rent is a tenement; and, therefore, cannot pass by will without three witnesses, if out of freehold: the word "tenement" being in the Statute of Frauds. Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. 231; 4 Bro. C. C. 353.

Produce of real estates converted by will:—Held, to pass only where the will is attested by three witnesses to the will. Sheddon v. Goodrich, 8 Ves. 481.

Presence of Testator and Witnesses.]—The factum of a will held under the circumstances of the case to be sufficiently proved, though one of the subscribing witnesses deposed that he did not see all that the testator wrote, only the large initial of his christian name; and the other witness stated that she did not see what he wrote, but that he acknowledged the paper to be his will in their joint presence. Cooper v. Bockett, 4 Moore, P. C. 419; 10 Jur. 931.

The signature or acknowledgment of a testator must be made in the presence of two witnesses, present at the time, and they must, after he has so signed or so acknowledged, subscribe the will in his presence. Hindmarsh v. Charlton, 8 H. L. Cas. 160; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 611; 4 L. T. 125; 9 W. R. 521.

A will signed by the attesting witnesses in the same room where the testatrix lay in bed with the curtains closed, and her back to the attesting witnesses, who deposed to her utter inability to have turned herself so as to have drawn aside the curtains:—Held, not to have been signed by the witnesses in the presence of the testatrix. Tribe v. Tribe, 1 Rob. Ecc. Rep. 775.

A testatrix went to her attorney's office to execute her will; being an invalid, she executed it in her carriage, the witnesses attending her. After having seen the execution they returned to the office to subscribe it, and the carriage was put back to the window of the office, through which she might have seen what passed:—Held, that the will was well executed. Casson v. Dade, 1 Bro. C. C. 99; Dick. 586.

A witness, proving a will of land, swears that he subscribed it in the same room, and at the testator's request:—Held, good, though not said "in the testator's presence." Longford v. Eyre. 1 P. Wms. 740.

A witness, to prove a will of land, ought to prove that the will was executed in his presence, and also in the presence of the two other witnesses, and that they subscribed in the presence of the testator. Ib.

Implication is, that witnesses to a will saw the testator execute, if so situated that they might have seen him; not where they were in an adjoining room, and could not. Morrison v. Arnold, 19 Ves. 671.

J. O., on the 13th June, 1825, made a will devising his real estate to E. O., and on the 25th November following executed another will, disposing of his personal estate merely, but containing a clause revoking all former wills, and attested by three witnesses in the following manner, viz. the testator told two of the witnesses that the document was his will, pointed out his name, and acknowledged the signature to be his, whereupon they subscribed and attested the will. Whilst the second witness was in the act of signing, the third witness accidentally came into the room, and was asked by the testator to become a witness, although he (the testator) said it was unnecessary. The testator then gave the witness to understand that it was his will, but did not point out his name, or acknowledge it to be his signature, to this witness, who might, however, have seen the name J. O. whilst in the act of signing the document:—Held, dissentiente Smith, B., that although conversant about personal property merely, it was a good will of revocation of the freehold. Jones v. Ogle, Sau. & Sc. 1.

Where the second witness was not present when the testator executed, and the first witness subscribed, although the testator and the former witness both acknowledged to the latter their subscriptions:—Held, an insufficient compliance with the Indian Will Act, which is in effect the same as the 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9. Casement v. Fulton, 5 Moore, P. C. 130.

—— Attestation while Testator is insensible.]—If a testator is in a state of insensibility when his will is attested, the will is not duly executed although he is corporeally present. Right d. Cater v. Price, 1 Dougl. 241.

—— Testator unable to see Witnesses sign.]—Where the witnesses subscribed their names at a window, in a passage where they could only see a part of the bed on which the testator lay, and he could not, as he lay there, see them attest the will:—Held, not to be duly executed. Clerk v. Ward, 4 Bro. P. C. 71.

A testatrix signed a document in the presence of two witnesses, who twenty minutes afterwards subscribed the document in an adjoining room. The door was open, but the testatrix was not aware that they were signing:—Held, that the document was not duly executed. Jenner v. Finch, 49 L. J., P. 25; 5 P. D. 106; 42 L. T. 327; 28 W. R. 520.

A person executed his will by signing it in the presence of two witnesses, one of whom at once subscribed it in the same room. The deceased then noticing that the other witness was excited and nervous, suggested that the will should be taken into an adjoining room, which was done, and it was there signed by the second witness. There was evidence that the doors of the two rooms were open at the time, and that the deceased while in bed might have seen that part of the table in the adjoining room on which the will was lying when the witness signed her name:—Held, that the execution was valid. Trimmell, In goods of, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 248.

Where the attesting witnesses retired from the room where the testator had signed, and subscribed their names in an adjoining room, and the jury found that, from one part of the testator's room, a person, by inclining himself forwards with his head out at the door, might have seen the witnesses, but that the testator was not in such a situation in the room that he might, by so inclining, have seen them:—Held, that the will was not duly attested. Doe d. Wright v. Manifold, 1 M. & S. 294.

—— Testator Blind.]—It is not necessary to the validity of the execution of a will of lands by a blind man, that it should be read over to him in the presence of the attesting witnesses. Longchamp d. Goodfellow v. Fish, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 415; 9 R. R. 670.

A testator who is so blind that he can do little more than distinguish night from day is capable of acknowledging his signature to his will. Mullen, In goods of, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 309.

Position of Signature.]—A testator wrote his will on two sheets of brief paper. He affixed his name to both sheets, but the attesting witnesses only signed the first sheet. The court ordered the will to be propounded. Morris, In goods of, 28 L. T. 745.

A will was written on a printed form by a testator's directions, and was contained partly on a first page and partly on a second. The attestation was at the bottom of the first page, and there was no attestation on the second page. The court excluded the second page from probate. Birt, In goods of (L. R. 2 P. 214), distinguished. Mulen, In goods of, 54 L. J., P. 91; 33 W. R. 825; 50 J. P. 262.

A party executed his will in the presence of two witnesses, who signed their names in his presence, one opposite the word "executors," the other opposite the word "witness." There was no attestation clause to the will. The deceased intended one of the witnesses to be his executor, and asked him to sign his name in that character. The court held, that such person did not sign the will exclusively as executor; but that he also intended by his signature to affirm that the deceased executed the will in his presence, and that consequently the execution was valid. Griffiths v. Griffiths, 41 L. J., P. 14; L. R. 2 P. 300; 25 L. T. 574; 20 W. R. 192.

A testator signed his name at the end of his will, on the tenth sheet, and placed his initials on the first nine sheets. Two out of three witnesses signed their names on the first nine sheets, but not on the tenth:—Held, that the operative signature of the testator was not duly attested, and the execution was incomplete. Phipps v. Hale, L. R. 3 P. 166; 22 W. R. 742.

In 1832, B. wrote a will, of which the last sentence concluded with his name. After his death, in 1859, the will was produced, with the words, "Witness, C. D., witness, E. F., April 11, 1838," written below the signature. On proof of the deaths of C. D. and E. F., and of their handwriting, the court admitted the will to probate as of the date of April 11, 1838. Trott v. Skidmore, 2 Sw. & Tr. 12; 29 L. J., P. 156; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 760; 2 L. T. 519; 8 W. R. 590.

A will was written on a lithographed form, and extended over the first and second sides of a sheet of foolscap paper. The form contained attestation clauses at the foot of the first and second sides of the paper. The testatrix made a mark in the blank spaces left for the purpose in both such clauses. Two witnesses signed their names at the bottom of the first side only and before the testatrix made her mark in the attestation clause of the second side:—Held, that the only mark which could give validity to the will was on the second side, and that was not attested by the witnesses. Dilkes, In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 38; L. R. 3 P. 164; 30 L. T. 305; 22 W. R. 456.

A testator wrote a codicil to his will upon a sheet of foolscap paper, covering the first page and half the second. The signatures of the testator and attesting witnesses were on a separate paper, which was attached to the codicil by a string. The court being satisfied that the papers were so attached when the testator acknowledged his signature to the witnesses, and they attested it:—Held, that the instrument was duly executed. Horsford, in goods of, 44 L. J., P. 9; L. R. 3 P. 211; 31 L. T. 553; 23 W. R. 211.

A will was written on a lithographed form. The testator wrote his name in the blank space left in the attestation clause, but did not sign it in the ordinary place, which was filled by the signatures of the attesting witnesses. The latter did not remember any of the circumstances of the execution:—Held, that the will was duly executed and attested. Harris, In goods of, 23 W. R. 734.

Signatures of Attesting Witnesses in Margin only.]—Where the signatures of the attesting witnesses to a will appeared in the margin of the will opposite certain alterations and interlineations only, the court, being satisfied that the witnesses at the time they so wrote their names in the margin intended to attest the testator's signature, and the execution of the will being regular in all other respects, granted probate of the will. Roberts v. Phillips, per Lord Campbell, C.J. (4 El. & Bl. 450), followed. Streatley, In goods of, 60 L. J., P. 56; [1891] P. 172; 39 W. R. 432.

Two Papers.]—A will was written twice on different pieces of paper. The two documents were differently worded but were to the same effect. By mistake one of them was signed by the testator and the other by the two attesting witnesses:—Held, that the will was not duly attested. Hatton, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 78; 6 P. D. 204; 30 W. R. 62; 46 J. P. 40.

Alterations.]—The clause appointing executors was written partly on the second and partly on the third side of a will. Subsequently the testator altered the clause, but his signature and those of the attesting witnesses appeared opposite only to the alterations which were made on the second side. The court granted probate of all the alterations. Wilkinson, In goods of, 6 P. D. 100; 29 W. R. 896; 45 J. P. 716.

Unattested alterations appearing in a will executed prior to the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26) coming into operation, will, in the absence of any evidence as to their date, be presumed to have been made before the act came into operation, and are therefore entitled to probate. Streaker, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 192; 28 L. J., P. 50.

In what Name Witness may Sign.]—An attesting witness must himself subscribe the will. It is not essential that a witness should sign his own name, provided it is clear that his subscription is intended as an act of attestation. Duggins, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 24; 22 L. T. 182.

The name of A., an attesting witness to a will, was at his request subscribed by B., who was himself present at the execution:—Held, that as A. had not subscribed, and B.'s subscription was not intended as an act of attestation, the will was not duly executed. Ib.

One of the attesting witnesses, by the desire of the testator, subscribed her husband's name instead of her own to the attestation clause. The will appeared on the face of it to be duly executed:—Held, that as the attesting witness did not intend the subscription to the will to represent her own signature, the attestation was invalid, and the will could not be admitted to probate. Pryor v. Pryor, 29 L. J., P. 114.

S. having signed his will in the presence of a servant, the latter subscribed "Servant to Mr. Sperling," without any name. A solicitor, the other attesting witness, had directed him to sign as servant to Mr. Sperling:—Held, a sufficient attestation and subscription. Sperling, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 272; 33 L. J., P. 25; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1205; 9 L. T. 348; 12 W. R. 354.

A will was signed by the deceased in the presence of two persons, one of whom subscribed it with his own name and the other with the name of her husband:—Held, that the will was not properly attested. Leveringtun, In goods of, 55 L. J., P. 62; 11 P. D. 80.

Form of Subscription.]—No particular form of subscription is required by 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9. A mark will do, though the witness may be able to write; but whatever form the subscription may assume, it must be made animo testandi. Enyon, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 52; L. R. 3 P. 92; 29 L. T. 45; 21 W. R. 856.

A person executed his will in the presence of two witnesses, one of whom also made a mark in attestation of his signature. The second witness then wrote the names of the testator and the witness opposite their respective marks and also the word "witness," but he did not subscribe his own name:—Held, that he did not by any word he wrote attest the signature of the testator, and that the execution was invalid. Ib.

The initials of attesting witnesses are a sufficient subscription; they are not required to sign their names. Christian, In re, 2 Rob. Ecc. Rep. 110.

Under 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 5, the making of a mark by an attesting witness is a sufficient subscription. Doe d. Davis v. Davis, 9 Q. B. 648; 16 L. J., Q. B. 97; 11 Jur. 182.

A will subscribed by two attesting witnesses, capable of writing, with marks, is sufficiently subscribed by them. Amiss, In re, 2 Rob. Rep. 116.

The subscription of an attesting witness to a will need not be placed at the foot of it; nor is any attesting clause necessary under 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 5. Roberts v. Phillips, 4 El. & Bl. 450; 24 L. J., Q. B. 171; 3 C. L. R. 513; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 444.

To make a valid subscription and attestation to a will there must be either the name of the witness, or some mark intended to represent it. A correction of an error in a previous writing of his name, or his acknowledgment of it, or the adding of a date to it, will not be sufficient for that purpose. Hindmarsh v. Charlton, 8 H. L. Cas. 160; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 611; 4 L. T. 125; 9 W. R. 521.

A testator produced his will to A., and signed it in his presence. A., whose name consisted of four words, the first of which began with "F.," then, in the testator's presence, signed his own name, but by accident left his first initial letter uncrossed, so that it stood as if it was "T." He afterwards advised the testator that there ought to be two witnesses to the will, and in the afternoon of the same day, B. being present, the testator produced his will, and showed and acknowledged his signature in the presence of both A. and B. B. then wrote his name, and at his desire A. added the date, and then observed and corrected the first initial of his own name by crossing the T. and so making it F.:— Held, that the will was not duly attested. Ib.

Attestation by Marksman.]—Attestation of a devise by a mark good within the statute of frauds. Harrison v. Harrison, 8 Ves. 185.

Hand of Witness guided by another Person.]—The attesting witnesses, not being able to write, held the top of the pen while the writer of the will subscribed their names:—Held, that, as the witnesses took some share in the act of writing, the court could not determine on the more or less, and that the attestation and subscription were good. Lewis v. Lewis, 2 Sw. & Tr. 153; 4 L. T. 583. S. C. nom. Lewis, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 153; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 688.

When the hand of one subscribing witness was guided by that of the other:—Held, a valid attestation. Frith, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 8; 27 L. J., P. 6; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 288; 6 W. R. 262.

An attesting witness, who was unable to read or write, signed his name at the foot of the attestation, his hand being guided by another person in making the signature:—Held, a sufficient subscription. Harrison v. Elvin, 3 Q. B. 117; 6 Jur. 849.

An attesting witness to a will being unable to write, instead of attesting by mark, procured another person to write her name, she holding the pen "while" her name was being written:—Held, a good attestation. Bell v. Hughes, 5 L. R., Ir. 407.

Intention of Witness—Tracing over Signature with Dry Pen.]—A testatrix executed her will in the presence of two witnesses, one of whom signed his name thereto; but the other, after writing his christian name, was unable, through feebleness, to complete his signature. Subsequently a third person was introduced, and the testatrix made her mark in the presence of such person and the witness who had signed his name. The latter traced his signature over with a dry pen, and the former signed his name:—Held, that the execution was invalid in the latter case by reason that the witnesses did not both attest and subscribe the signature of the testator; and in the former by reason that one witness had no intention, by writing his christian name only, to subscribe the will. Maddock, In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 29; L. R. 3 P. & M. 169; 30 L. T. 696; 22 W. R. 741. See also Cunningham, In goods of, ante, col. 306, and Horne v. Featherstone, supra.

Witnesses not Subscribing their Names in each other's Presence.]—It is not necessary that the attesting witnesses to a will or codicil should subscribe their names to the instrument in the presence of each other. Sullivan v. Sullivan, 3 L. R., Ir. 299.

Witnesses' Signatures at Different Times.]—The testator signed his will in the presence of his first witness, who attested it, and subsequently on the same day, in the presence of the second witness, the testator and first witness acknowledged their signatures when the second witness attested the will:—Held, that this was not a compliance with s. 9 of the Wills Act, and the will was not duly executed. Moore v. King (3 Curt. Ecc. 243) and Hindmarsh v. Charlton (supra) followed. Wyatt v. Berry, 62 L. J., P. 28; [1893] P. 5; 1 R. 462; 68 L. T. 416.

In the face of distinct and positive evidence to the contrary, the court cannot say that a will was duly executed because it appears to be so. The court can only pronounce for a will in such cases where there is any doubt about the recollection of the attesting witnesses. Ib.

Identification of Document.]—A codicil was duly executed by a testator and attested by two crosses—thus ×× —without the names of the marksmen being written; but one of the witnesses was only temporarily incapable of writing, and was now able to identify the document:—Held, that, the document being so identified by this witness, probate of it should be granted. Garner, In goods of, 1 L. R., Ir. 307. See also cases ante, cols. 280–1.

Subsequent Attested Codicil not referring to Previous Unattested Codicil.]—A testator made a will on 3rd January, 1878. On 20th December, 1879, he made a codicil which was attested by one witness only. On 1st March, 1880, he made a second codicil, described in the attestation clause as a codicil to his will, and which codicil was attested by two witnesses, but did not refer in any way to the first codicil. All three writings were on the same piece of paper:—Held, that the second codicil did not set up the first. Spotten, In goods of, 5 L. R., Ir. 403.

Of Interlineations by Initials.]—The initials of a testatrix and the attesting witnesses in the margin of the will opposite interlineations are sufficient to render the interlineations valid. Blewitt, In goods of, 49 L. J., P. 31; 5 P. D. 116; 42 L. T. 329; 28 W. R. 520; 44 J. P. 768.

On Separate Pieces of Paper attached by Paste or Wafers.]—A will was written on one side of a sheet of parchment. At the bottom, immediately at the foot or end of the will, a piece of paper bearing an impressed stamp was pasted before the execution, upon which the names of the testator and of the attesting witnesses were afterwards written :—Held, that the will was duly executed. Gausden, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 362 ; 31 L. J., P. 53 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 180 ; 5 L. T. 767.

A will was written on one side of a half-sheet of paper, and concluded with the words, "In witness whereto I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 9th day of July, in the year as above written." A small space at the bottom of the page was left blank, and then followed a separate piece of paper attached by wafers to the half-sheet on which the will was written. The testator's signature, the attestation clause, and the signatures of the attesting witnesses were alone written on this separate paper :—Held, that the court could not grant probate of such a document. Lambert, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 118 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 158 ; 7 L. T. 219.

Where the signatures of a testator and of the attesting witnesses were made, not on the paper on which the will was written, but on a piece of paper which had been attached to the paper on which the will was written :—Held, to be a good execution. Cook v. Lambert, 3 Sw. & Tr. 46 ; 32 L. J., P. 93 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 258 ; 8 L. T. 211 ; 11 W. R. 401.

A. wrote a codicil on the upper part of the first side of a half-sheet of foolscap paper doubled, and below he added the words, "For my signature and witnesses, see next side." On the fourth side, and on a line with these words, when the paper was opened, were the signatures of A. and of the attesting witnesses. The second, third, and (with the exception of the signatures) the fourth sides were blank. When the witnesses attested the signature of A., they saw no writing on the paper :—Held. that, notwithstanding the provisions of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24, s. 1, the codicil was not duly executed. Hammond, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 90 ; 32 L. J., P. 200 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 581 ; 8 L. T. 516 ; 11 W. R. 639.

A. wrote her will on a sheet of letter paper, and concluded at the extreme end of the fourth side, leaving no space for her signature. The attestation clause and the signatures of A. and of the witnesses were written on a separate half-sheet of paper. This half-sheet was attached by three wafers to the bottom of the second side or page of the will. One of the attesting witnesses had died, and the other could give no account of the state of the papers at the time A. signed her name. No one else was present at that time :—Held, that on motion the court could not grant probate of this paper. West, In goods of, 32 L. J., P. 182 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1158 ; 12 W. R. 89.

By Party Interested.]—A child of a residuary legatee is no witness to prove a will relating to the personal estate by the civil law, by which law only such will is determinable. Thwaites v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 10.

The statute of the 25 Geo. 2, s. 6, does not extend to wills of personal estate only, and a legacy to a person who is an attesting witness to such a will is not void. Emanuel v. Constable, 3 Russ. 436 ; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 191.

Legacy to a subscribing witness to a will, though of personal property only, void under the statute 25 Geo. 2, c. 6, extending to all wills and codicils. Lees v. Summersgill, 17 Ves. 508.

A beneficiary under a will attested the will as a third witness, and deposed that he did so at the testator's especial request as a token of approval :—Held, that the attestation invalidated the bequest. Cozens v. Crout, 42 L. J., Ch. 840 ; 21 W. R. 781.

At the foot of a will signed by the testator and attested by two witnesses, there appeared subscribed beneath the signature of the testator the signature of D., who was the principal legatee and sole executrix. The court being satisfied by evidence that her signature had not been added with any intention of attesting the execution, ordered her signature to be excluded from the probate. Murphy, In goods of, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 300.

A will was executed in 1844 and had the name of the testator, his seal, the word "witness," and the names of two persons : J. T. G. and J. S. H. These names were the last marks on a third side of the sheet of paper on which the will was written. On the top of the fourth side were the words, "This last will and testament was signed in our presence, and in the presence of each other, by him. J. T. G., J. S. H., G. B." This last name was that of a person named as a legatee in the will :—Held, that this was not such an attestation of the will as to deprive G. B. of her right to the legacy. Randfield v. Randfield, 8 H. L. Cas. 226 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 177. Reversing 11 W. R. 847 ; 2 N. R. 309.

And the representatives of a legatee who had attested the cancellation of a will, and died before the period of distribution, will be excluded from participation under the will. Gaskin v. Rogers, L. R. 2 Eq. 284 ; 14 W. R. 707.

Where a will has been executed in the presence of two witnesses, and, in addition to their signatures, the signature of a third person, who is also residuary legatee, appears at the foot of the will, the court will receive evidence to explain why such signature was written, and if satisfied that it was not written with the intention to attest the signature of the deceased, it will order it to be omitted in the probate. Sharman, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 47 ; L. R. 1 P. 661 ; 20 L. T. 683 ; 17 W. R. 687.

By a will made since 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, lands and houses, after the deaths of the testator's niece S. A. and her husband J. A. (to whom life interests had been given), were directed "to be equally divided among the children" of S. A. and J. A. The will purported to be attested by three witnesses, two of whom were Thomas and Sarah, children of S. A. and J. A. :—Held, that the devise to the children, although it was a devise to them as tenants in common, was a devise to a class, so that the whole was to be taken by those who, after the testator's death, came within the limits of such class, and were capable of taking, and, therefore, the shares of Sarah and Thomas, who, as attesting witnesses, were themselves incapable of taking, went to the other members of the class, and not to the heir-at-law of the testator. Fell v. Biddulph, 44 L. J., C. P. 402; L. R. 10 C. P. 701; 32 L. T. 864; 23 W. R. 913.

Where there is a joint tenancy under a will, and one of the joint tenants witnesses the will, the others take the whole. S. C. nom. Young v. Davies, 32 L. J., Ch. 372; 1 N. R. 419; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 399; 8 L. T. 80; 11 W. R. 452; 2 Dr. & Sm. 167.

B. made her will in the presence of C. and D., who subscribed to the same; subsequently E., an executor and legatee, at the request of the testatrix, signed his name, to signify, as suggested, his acceptance of the executorship. The court rejected a motion praying to omit E.'s name in the probate. Forest, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 334; 31 L. J., P. 200; 5 L. T. 689. S. P., Hickman, In goods of, 16 L. T. 435.

—— Power to Solicitor Trustee to make Professional Charges.]—A., being entitled to a life interest in a fund over which she had a testamentary power of appointment, borrowed, in 1871, from B. 350*l.* on the security of a covenant that 1,250*l.* should be paid one month after her death. She died in 1884, having by her will appointed executors, and directed payment of her debts, and also that C., one of her executors (a solicitor), should be entitled to charge and receive payment for all professional business to be done by him under the will. C. was one of the attesting witnesses. In an administration action by B. on behalf of himself and all other creditors, the estate being insolvent: —Held, that C., as an attesting witness, was prohibited by the Wills Act, s. 15, from receiving that which was not a debt of which payment could be enforced at law, but a beneficial gift, which could only be claimed by virtue of the direction in the will; and (semble) that even if he had not attested the will, the direction authorising him to charge for his professional services operated by way of bounty only, and, the estate being insolvent, could not take effect as against the creditors. Barber, In re, Burgess v. Vinnicome, 55 L. J., Ch. 373; 31 Ch. D. 665; 54 L. T. 375; 34 W. R. 395.

A testatrix appointed B. and P. (a solicitor) executors and trustees of her will, and declared that any trustee of her will who should be a solicitor should be entitled to charge for all business done in relation to the estate as if he had been a solicitor employed by the trustees. P. was one of the attesting witnesses:—Held, that P. was not entitled to any profit costs for business done by him in relation to the estate, for that the right to make professional charges could only be claimed under the will, and was a beneficial interest under it, from claiming which he, being an attesting witness, was precluded by the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 15. Barber, In re (31 Ch. D. 665), approved. Pooley, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 1; 40 Ch. D. 1; 60 L. T. 73; 37 W. R. 17—C. A.

—— Husband or Wife of Witness.]—A wife was an attesting witness to a testamentary instrument by which a legacy was given to a church, "to be disposed of as her husband wished":—Held, that this gift was good, and did not fall within 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 15. Cresswell v. Cresswell, 37 L. J., Ch. 521; L. R. 6 Eq. 69; 18 L. T. 392; 16 W. R. 699.

Where a will was attested by two marksmen, and signed also by two other persons as witnesses: —Held, that the signatures of the two latter must be regarded as affixed likewise in attestation of the will, and not as merely verifying the attestation of the marksmen, and that the legacy to the wife of one of them failed. Wigan v. Rowland, 11 Hare, 157; 1 Eq. R. 213; 17 Jur. 910; 1 W. R. 383.

A mother by her will gave a bequest to her son. One of the two witnesses attesting the execution of the will was the wife of the son. By a subsequent codicil attested by two independent witnesses she confirmed her will:—Held, that the execution of this codicil was equivalent to a re-execution of the will; and since the codicil was attested by independent witnesses, the bequest to the son was valid. Anderson v. Anderson, 41 L. J., Ch. 247; L. R. 13 Eq. 381; 20 W. R. 313.

Where a widow, who took a life interest under her husband's will, had at his request signed her name under the names of the two attesting witnesses, but not with any intention of herself attesting the will, the court, on being satisfied that such of the children as were minors had been served with a notice of the motion through guardians duly nominated for the purpose, ordered her name to be omitted from the probate of the will. Smith, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 5; 15 P. D. 2; 62 L. T. 183; 38 W. R. 384; 54 J. P. 199.

—— Marriage of Devisee after Attestation to Attesting Witness.]—Under the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 15, the marriage, after attestation of a will, of a devisee to the attesting witness, does not affect the validity of the devise. Thorpe v. Bestwick, 50 L. J., Q. B. 320; 6 Q. B. D. 311; 44 L. T. 180; 29 W. R. 631; 45 J. P. 440.

—— Attestation of Codicil by Witness who takes Interest under the Will.]—A bequest of a legacy is not void because the legatee attests a codicil which gives him nothing, nor does a residuary legatee of a share of a residue lose his title by attesting a codicil, which, by revoking legacies, indirectly benefits him by increasing the residue. Gurney v. Gurney, 3 Drew. 208; 3 Eq. R. 569; 24 L. J., Ch. 656; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 298; 3 W. R. 353.

Bequest by will, dated in 1849, of an annuity to A. Codicil revoking other legacies, and confirming the will, was signed by A. as an attesting witness:—Held, that the annuity given to him by the will was not thereby made void. Tempest v. Tempest, 2 Kay & J. 635.

A testator by his will gave bequests to his employés; one of the employés had attested the will and also two codicils that confirmed the will; another employé had attested the codicils, but not the will:—Held, that the former employé could not take the gift, but that the latter was not incapacitated from taking under the will. Marcus, In re, Marcus v. Marcus, 57 L. T. 399.

A devisee does not lose benefits given him by a will in consequence of his being an attesting witness to a codicil ratifying and confirming the will. Denne v. Wood, 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 57.

A witness to a codicil being interested under the parol trust created by the will for objects specified in the will and codicils:—Held, that his interest under the codicil failed. Fleetwood, In re, Sidgreaves v. Brewer, 49 L. J., Ch. 514; 15 Ch. D. 594; 29 W. R. 45.

Acceleration of Interests.]—A testator devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to his wife for life, and after her death to be equally divided between such of his children as should be living at her death; and in case of any of the above-mentioned children dying before his wife leaving children, such children were to take their parent's share; and in the event of any of his daughters being married at his wife's decease, it was his will that such proportion as they might be entitled to should be left to them and their children exclusively and should in no way be controlled by their husbands. At the death of the testator's widow one of his daughters was living who had several children. Her husband was an attesting witness to the will, and consequently the gift to her was void under s. 15 of the Wills Act:—Held, that the daughter's children were not to be disappointed by her disability, but took an immediate interest in her share as tenants in common. Clark, In re, Clark v. Randall, 55 L. J., Ch. 89; 31 Ch. D. 72; 53 L. T. 591; 34 W. R. 70.

Gift by will of real and personal estate upon trust to convert and pay the income of the proceeds to A. for life, and after A.'s death to pay the capital and income thereof unto the child or children of A. in equal shares, with gifts over in case A. should die without leaving issue living at his death. The will had been attested by A.'s wife, so that the gift of a life interest to him was void under s. 15 of the Wills Act. There were no children of A.'s marriage. The personal estate was exhausted, and the trust funds represented real estate only:—Held, that until A. had a child the gifts upon the determination of A.'s life estate could not be accelerated, and that during the life of A. and so long as he had no children the income of the trust funds was undisposed of, and belonged to the heir-at-law, and could not be accumulated for the benefit of the persons contingently entitled in remainder. Jull v. Jacobs (3 Ch. D. 703) distinguished. Hodgson v. Earl of Beetive (1 H. & M. 376) and Dumble, In re (23 Ch. D. 360), explained. Townsend, In re, Townsend v. Townsend, 56 L. J., Ch. 227; 34 Ch. D. 357; 55 L. T. 674; 35 W. R. 153.

Attestation by Executor.]—Will held well attested, though one of subscribing witnesses was executor in trust under will. Phipps v. Pilcher, 1 Madd. 144.

Evidence of Attesting Witnesses.]—A. wrote out a draft will, which on his death was found completed, with the names of two attesting witnesses. On inquiry no such persons could be traced, and the writing of the names was sworn to be that of A. himself. The court granted administration of the goods of A., as having died intestate, without the parties interested under the draft will having been first cited to propound it. Lee, In goods of, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 790.

In ejectment by the heir-at-law against the devisee to prove the execution of the will, it is not necessary to call the subscribing witnesses. Doe d. Stutsbury v. Smith, 1 Esp. 391.

A testamentary paper, in the handwriting of a party, concluded as follows: "In witness of this I have set my hand this 14th day of January, 1858. Signed by the testatrix A., her last will in our presence." There was no other signature of the deceased at the end of the writing. The surviving attesting witness could give no distinct account of the state of the paper at the time of, or the circumstances attending, the execution, and there was no direct evidence on the former point. It was admitted to probate. Torre, In goods of, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 494.

—— Attesting Witnesses unable to recollect the Execution.]—A testator left a codicil entirely in his own handwriting, written on the third side of the sheet of foolscap the first side of which contained his will. There was an attestation clause in proper form, and the testator had signed his name at the foot of the codicil, but there being no more space on the sheet, the names of the attesting witnesses appeared at the bottom of the second page, opposite the attestation clause. The attesting witnesses acknowledged their signatures, but had no recollection of having signed the paper, nor of ever having seen it before:—Held, that the codicil was duly executed. Woodhouse v. Balfour, 13 P. D. 2; 57 L. J., P. 22; 58 L. T. 59; 36 W. R. 368; 52 J. P. 7.

—— No Attestation Clause—Witnesses Dead—Difficulty in Proving Handwriting—Secondary Evidence.]—The testator executed a holograph will in 1874, and died in 1886. There was no attestation clause to the will, and one of the witnesses predeceased the testator; the other died in 1887. The signature of one attesting witness appeared above that of the testator himself. The handwriting of the testator and of one witness to the will was proved by oral evidence and by comparison of samples of handwriting; but the only sample of writing of the other witness, apart from his signature on the will, was a signature in the register of his own marriage in the year 1822. Evidence was given to show that every possible effort had been made to prove the handwriting of this witness, and evidence was also given to show that the person who purported to have signed the will as a witness was the same who was married in 1822, and who purported to have signed the marriage register in that year. Evidence was also given to show that the two witnesses and the testator had lived together in the same institution at the date of the will, and that the testator had stated that the document in question was his will, and that the two persons whose names appeared upon it had witnessed it:—Held, that the will was entitled to probate, as there was sufficient to support the presumption of law Omnia rite esse acta, and the position of the signatures was covered by Lord St. Leonards' Act. Byles v. Coe, 74 L. T. 222.

—— Evidence of both Attesting Witnesses—Omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta.]—In a suit for revocation of probate on the ground of undue execution, both the attesting witnesses swore that the will was not signed by them in the testator's presence, but their evidence did not coincide upon other matters:—Held, that the presumption of law, Omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta, must prevail. The testator died in 1885, leaving a will appointing three of his sons (the plaintiff and defendants) executors. The will was drawn, from an earlier duly executed will, by a retired doctor, who had made wills for other poor persons in the locality, there being no solicitor within twelve or fourteen miles, and it was admittedly signed by the testator, with his mark, in the presence of the doctor, who had prepared it, the two attesting witnesses, and a nurse. Of these four persons, the attesting witnesses alone survived. The plaintiff, soon after the funeral, expressed dissatisfaction with the will, and wrote several letters charging his mother and brothers with fraud and undue influence, and stating that the estate would be wasted in law, if the defendants insisted on upholding the will, probate of which was, however, granted in common form in 1886. Although the plaintiff took legal advice at that time, no active steps were taken to set aside the will until 1893. The evidence of the two attesting witnesses was in disagreement on many points, but upon the main point in contest they both agreed, namely, that they put their signatures to the will in another room to that in which the testator was, and out of sight of the testator. Their signatures and the mark of the testator appeared on the face of the will, and the attestation clause, which was on the back of the document, was admittedly written in another room and after the mark and signature had been affixed to the document. One of the attesting witnesses, a doctor, had made affidavits in 1886 in which he stated that the will was duly executed. The court refused to allow the evidence of the two attesting witnesses to rebut the presumption of law, and gave judgment for the defendants in favour of the will. Dayman v. Dayman, 71 L. T. 699.

—— Both Witnesses Illiterate and Predeceasing Testator.]—A holograph will, signed at foot by the testator, and containing an attestation clause, appeared attested by two marksmen, their names, as subscribed to the will, the attestation clause, and the words "mark—his," which appeared written above and below crosses opposite each of their names, were in the handwriting of the testator. At the date of the instrument, two persons of the names so subscribed as those of the attesting witnesses were in his employment; they were both illiterate, and both predeceased him. The document was found shortly after the testator's death in his house preserved amongst others of his papers. It purported to give all his property to his widow. He stated to her the night before his death that he had left her all he had—that everything was hers. It did not appear that any fourth person was present at the execution of the will, and no direct evidence of its due execution was given:—Held, that there were reasonable grounds for presuming that the will had been duly executed and attested pursuant to the provisions of the Wills Act, and sufficient to enable the court to pronounce in favour of its validity. Clarke v. Clarke, 5 L. R., Ir. 47—C. A.

—— Rebutting Presumption by Parol Evidence.]—Where a will appeared on the face of it to have been duly executed as prescribed by the Wills Act, and the attestation clause was in full accordance with ss. 9 and 10 of the statute, the court, nevertheless, gave effect to the parol evidence of the attesting witnesses, varying the terms of the attestation clause they had subscribed to:—Held, that the presumption of law, Omnia præsumuntur rite et solenniter esse acta, was rebutted by their evidence, and that the will had not been duly executed, and that it could not be admitted to probate. Glover v. Smith, 57 L. T. 60; 50 J. P. 456.

In 1878 the testator, who was a good man of business, but not a lawyer, wrote a holograph codicil upon the same paper as the will which he had made in 1868, and wrote at the end of it an attestation clause adapting that at the end of the will to the case of a codicil. He called the nurse into the schoolroom, and asked her and the nursery governess to "sign this paper." There was evidence that he took his own pen into the room. Both witnesses signed. At the trial, which took place between four and five years afterwards, the codicil was produced bearing the testator's signature, and both the attesting witnesses were examined. The governess deposed that she had designedly abstained from looking at any of the writing on the paper, and the nurse, it appeared, had been very nervous. Neither of them could say anything as to what writing was on the paper, nor as to whether the testator's signature was there when they signed, and both said that they did not see him sign. The president pronounced for the validity of the codicil:—Held, by Earl Selborne, L.C., that the reasonable conclusion was that the codicil was signed by the testator in the presence of the witnesses. Wright v. Sanderson, Sanderson, In re, 53 L. J., P. 49; 9 P. D. 149; 50 L. T. 769; 32 W. R. 560; 48 J. P. 180—C. A.

Held, by Cotton, L.J., that on the evidence he should have come to the contrary conclusion, but that the finding of the president, who had seen and heard the witnesses, ought not to be reversed. Ib.

Held, by Fry, L.J., that as the codicil ex facie appeared to be properly executed, and the presumption Omnia rite esse acta was strengthened by the conduct of the testator, which showed an anxious and intelligent desire to do everything regularly, that presumption was not rebutted by the evidence of the witnesses, who appeared to have been nervous and confused on the occasion of the attestation, and whose recollection of what took place was evidently imperfect. Ib. And see infra, col. 364.

—— To show what included in Will at Time of Execution.]—Oral and written declarations of a testator, whether made before or after the date of execution of a will, are admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing what were the constituent parts of the will at the time of execution. M. R. made and duly executed her last will on the 1st of August, 1872. On her death, in 1879, the will was found in an envelope in her writing-desk. It was contained in two sheets of notepaper stitched together bookwise. The will was all in the handwriting of the testatrix (with the exception of the attestation clause, which was filled in by one of the attesting witnesses), and, commencing with the first page of the outer sheet, it ran: "I appoint my nephews, R. J. G. and R. G. L., to be my joint executors to carry my will into effect. I appoint my nephew, R. J. G., to be my executor and sole residuary legatee.—M. R. And placed with my will the 1st day of August, 1872." The following page was a blank, and the will was continued on the inner sheet, which was paged 1, 2, 3, 4: "The last will and testament of me," &c., and concluded with the attestation clause on the fourth page. The next, the third page of the outer sheet, was a blank, and the last contained the indorsement, "The will of M. R., August 1, 1872." The attesting witnesses were unable to say what were the contents of the will, or whether it was contained in one or two sheets of paper:—Held, that declarations of intention by the testatrix before the execution of the will, and declarations by her subsequent to the execution, showing the belief that she had effected her intention, were admissible in evidence with the view of showing what were the constituent parts of the will at the time of its execution. Gould v. Lakes, 49 L. J., P. 59; 6 P. D. 1; 43 L. T. 382; 29 W. R. 155; 44 J. P. 698.

Compelling Attendance of Attesting Witness.]—An attesting witness had refused to make any affidavit as to the execution of a will. On application under the Probate Act of 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 79), s. 29, on behalf of the widow, who was desirous of obtaining administration with the will annexed, it was ordered that she be at liberty to issue a subpœna ad testificandum against the attesting witness requiring him to attend before the court to be examined vivâ voce touching his knowledge of the will, and his having attested the same. Dorgan, In goods of, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 326.

When a will was without an attestation clause, and the attesting witnesses refused to make any affidavit as to the execution, the court issued a subpœna under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 24, to compel their attendance before the court to be examined. Hamer, In goods of, 25 L. T. 951; 20 W. R. 303.

—— Of Next of Kin—Examination as to Family.]—The executor named in the will having determined to propound it, cited certain persons who were the next of kin to see proceedings. They appeared, and there being reason to believe that there were other next of kin, the court made an order upon them under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 24, to attend before the registrar to be examined as to the state of the family. Shepheard v. Beetham, 41 L. J., P. 44; L. R. 2 P. 384.

Examination of Witnesses.]—When an order is made on a person having knowledge of testamentary papers to attend to be examined respecting them, the examination must be in open court, or upon interrogatories. Laws, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 41; L. R. 2 P. 458; 26 L. T. 530; 20 W. R. 572.

On the trial of an issue as to three codicils, set up by and in favour of the claimant, in whose handwriting it was suggested they were, there being also an interlineation in the will in his favour, also suggested to be in his handwriting, the attesting witnesses to the first codicil denying their attestations, were allowed to be examined adversely; but evidence, by comparison of the claimant's handwriting and otherwise, was received with a view to show the probability of forgery of the attestations and of the codicils; and the jury was directed that they might find the forgery upon the circumstantial evidence alone, even against positive testimony of the attesting witnesses; that the onus was upon the party who set up alterations and codicils against an admitted will to satisfy the jury as to their genuineness; and that if the evidence left the jury in doubt on that question, they should find for the party who claimed under the will. Cresswell v. Jackson, 4 F. & F. 1.

—— By Commission.]—A will purported to have been executed in the presence of two attesting witnesses. One was abroad, and the other in England. The executors who propounded the will applied for a commission for the examination de bene esse of the second attesting witness, who was resident in London. The affidavit alleged no physical infirmity, but described him as an elderly person. The court ordered the commission to issue, but intimated that if it was proposed at the trial to read the evidence taken under it, strict proof of inability to produce the witness would be required. M'Pherson v. Parnell, 40 L. J., P. 30; 24 L. T. 742; 19 W. R. 784.

Affidavit of Attestation and Subscription.]—When an attestation clause is insufficient, the court will not dispense with the affidavit of the attesting witnesses as to due execution. Latham, In goods of, 33 L. J., P. 186; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 620.

An attestation clause executed abroad being insufficient, the court refused to grant probate without an affidavit by the attesting witnesses as to due execution, although it appeared from a certificate of the British consul, indorsed on the will, that the attesting witnesses had on oath proved due execution. Ib.

—— Of Execution where Witnesses Unknown.]—A testator left a will which concluded, "In the presence of the undersigned as witnesses on this the fifth day of June, 1871, I set my hand and signature." The testator's family had no personal knowledge of the persons who subscribed the will as attesting witnesses, and they had endeavoured, but in vain, to obtain intelligence of them. In these circumstances the court dispensed with an affidavit as to the due execution of the will, and decreed probate of it, the executrix, the only person who would be benefited by an intestacy, consenting to the grant. Huw, In goods of, 46 L. J., P. 39; 35 L. T. 909; 25 W. R. 273. And see Benson v. Benson, 21 L. T. 731.

Attesting Witness not to be found—Affidavit.]—In a suit for revocation of probate on the grounds of undue execution and incapacity, where it appeared that every effort had been made to find one of the attesting witnesses, but without success, the court allowed the affidavit made by him eight years before, at the time of proving the will at the district registry, to be admitted as evidence of execution and capacity. Gornall v. Mason, 56 L. J., P. 86; 12 P. D. 142; 57 L. T. 601; 35 W. R. 672; 51 J. P. 663.

Parol Evidence to prove Date.]—Parol evidence is admissible to prove that a will was executed on a date other than that which appears on the face of it. Reffell v. Reffell, 35 L. J., P. 121; L. R. 1 P. 139; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 910; 14 L. T. 705; 14 W. R. 647.

Presumption of Proper Execution.]—See ante, col. 343.

Evidence—Omnia esse rite acta—How rebutted.]—Where the evidence of the attesting witnesses directly negatives due execution, such evidence not being rebutted either by direct or circumstantial evidence, and the veracity of the witnesses is unimpeached, the court cannot by reason of a formal attestation clause, and on the presumption Omnia esse rite acta, pronounce for the will. Croft v. Croft, 4 Sw. & Tr. 10; 34 L. J., P. 44; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 183; 11 L. T. 781; 13 W. R. 526.

Where a will is written on several sheets of paper, and the last sheet only is duly executed, although the attesting witnesses did not observe the others, the primâ facie presumption is that they all formed part of the will at the time of its execution; but where there is evidence from the provisions and structure of the will and other sources tending to rebut and confirm this presumption, the question must be decided upon that evidence. Marsh v. Marsh, 1 Sw. & Tr. 528; 30 L. J., P. 77; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 380.

A. made her will in 1842; at her death there appeared the names of three witnesses subscribed, but no attestation clause. The only surviving witness, whose name stood first of the three, stated that A. signed the will in his presence only; that he suggested the necessity of two witnesses, but could remember no particular circumstances:—Held, that the presumption of due execution was not rebutted by the evidence of the surviving witness. Thomas, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 255; 28 L. J., P. 33; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 104; 7 W. R. 270.

When a will appears on the face of it to have been duly attested, and surrounding circumstances imply that this was so, the contrary evidence of one attesting witness is not sufficient to rebut the presumption Omnia rite esse acta. Wright v. Rogers, 38 L. J., P. 67; L. R. 1 P. 678; 21 L. T. 156; 17 W. R. 833. And see supra, col. 361.

Rule as to Instruments more than Thirty Years Old.]—An unproved will, more than thirty years old, coming from the possession of one of the family of the testator, may be read without accounting for the subscribing witnesses, though the person producing it is not strictly entitled to the custody. Doe d. Wildgoose v. Pearce, 2 M. & Rob. 240.

A will being more than thirty years old, and attested by three witnesses:—Held, on production, that the fact of the attestation was sufficiently proved, although one witness was still alive and was not called. Doe d. Spilsbury v. Burdett, 4 A. & E. 1; 6 N. & M. 259; 6 L. J., K. B. 73.

A will was thirty years old from the date of execution; it came from the custody of the person in whose favour it was made:—Held, that this was sufficient evidence of the fact of due execution. Orange v. Pickford, 3 Drew. 463; 27 L. J., Ch. 808; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 649; 6 W. R. 738.

The application of the rule that an instrument more than thirty years old produced from the proper custody is admissible without further proof is not affected by circumstances which may lead to an inference that the instrument had been cancelled, the only question being whether the custody of the instrument is proper. Andrew v. Motley, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 514; 32 L. J., C. P. 128.

Want of Attestation—Effect.]—A will disposing of real and personal property, with a clause of attestation, but no witnesses, established as to the personal property. Habberfield v. Browning, 4 Ves. 200, n.

Where a testatrix made her will, disposing of real and personal property, and signed and sealed it, and a clause of attestation in the common form was subjoined, but to which there was no subscription of witnesses, and where the will was found at her death wrapped in an envelope, on which was written, "I signed and sealed my will to have it ready to be witnessed the first opportunity I could get proper persons":—Held, that the instrument, appearing to be incomplete (something more having been intended), was not a good will as to the personal property. But parol evidence admitted as to the circumstances of the papers, and as to the testatrix's intention. Walker v. Walker, 1 Mer. 503.

Money due on mortgage will pass by will unattested. Hassell v. Tynte, Amb. 320.

Trust of copyhold estate and copyhold surrendered to use of will pass by will unattested. Tuffnell v. Page, Dick. 76.

An unattested codicil (before the Wills Act) cannot be looked at for any purpose by the court, so far as it affects to devise realty, and no case of election is raised against the heir or devisee in consequence of such attempted devise; but if such codicil imposes a condition respecting the real estate on a bequest of personalty to the heir, he must perform it. Louis v. Louis, 3 N. R. 369; 10 L. T. 25.

Attestation Clause, but no Attestation.]—The presumption raised against the intended finality of a paper by the existence of an attestation clause without actual attestation:—Held, to be sufficiently rebutted by the evidence, particularly that of the testator having been told, with reference to the will of another person, that actual attestation was not necessary, the court observing upon the weight that was due, in such cases particularly, to the opinion of the judge below. Stewart v. Stewart, 2 Moore, P. C. 193.

Probate refused to a paper professing to dispose of a testator's real and personal property, and subjecting them both to the payment of his debts and funeral expenses, which was in the testator's handwriting, and signed and sealed by himself, but not attested, although an attestation clause was subjoined to it. The circumstance of a testator having subjected his real estate to the payment of his debts and funeral expenses, in a writing not attested so as to pass real estate, furnishes a strong, though not a completely irresistible, presumption against his final intention that that writing should be his last will. Douglas v. Smith, 3 Knapp, 1.

Probate granted of a paper written in ink, but dated and signed in pencil, with the addition, "In case of accident I sign this my will," having also an attestation clause unsigned, the facts pleaded in the allegation being sufficient to rebut the legal presumption against the paper. Bateman v. Pennington, 3 Moore, P. C. 223.

Attestation Clause where None Required.]—Where an attestation clause is not required, the mere circumstance that there is an attestation clause specifying certain things does not exclude evidence that other things were done besides those which are attested. Warren v. Postlethwaite, 2 Coll. C. C. 108; 14 L. J., Ch. 422; 9 Jur. 721.

V. REVOCATION.

a. PRINCIPLES AS TO.

In General.]—The same circumstances ought to be proved to have happened on part of testator, to show his intent of revoking will, in equity as in law, unless they were prevented by party interested. Piggott v. Penrice, 1 Comb. 250.

An executor may be admitted to prove the revocation of any legacy though he has proved the will. Jervis v. Duke, 1 Vern. 19.

The rule is the same as to revocation of a devise of lands and a revocation of a sum of money charged on lands: they must be revoked in the same manner. Brudenell v. Boughton, 2 Atk. 272.

There are virtual as well as express revocations, as by extinguishing or destroying the thing devised, which are out of the statute and remain as they did before. Ib.

A feoffment to the use of a testator and his heirs is a revocation. If a man charge his lands with a debt, and afterwards pays that debt, it is extinct, though there is no formal revocation. Lands charged with a portion by a will, and the same given by testator in his lifetime, is a virtual revocation, though no actual one. Ib.

In all cases where a man gives a personal legacy charged on a real estate, and the will is revoked, the legacies are gone, for when the land is meant only as a collateral security, if the thing secured be taken away, the security itself cannot subsist. Ib.

Where a particular estate is expressly devised, a contrary intent is not to be implied by subsequent words. Popham v. Banfield, 1 Salk. 236. But see as to this report of this case 1 Ves. 26. See S. C. nom. Popham v. Bamfield, 1 P. Wms. 54.

By Abandonment.]—A will is not revoked by mere abandonment; in order to operate as a revocation, there must be some unequivocal act of cancellation or obliteration by the testator himself, or by some person in his presence and by his direction. Andrew v. Motley, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 514; 32 L. J., C. P. 128.

By Act showing Intention to Revoke.]—At common law, a will might be revoked by any act of the testator which showed his intention, without the use of any words whatever. Doe d. Reed v. Harris, 2 N. & P. 615; 8 A. & E. 1; W., W. & D. 684; 7 L. J., Q. B. 76.

A testator duly executed his will by signing his name at the foot of each sheet, and at the end of the will. On his death it was found that he had written "Cancelled—Wm. B." across each signature, and at the end of a memorandum of a date subsequent to the date of the will, which, after declaring the will revoked, concluded—"I intend to make another will, whereupon I shall destroy this." This memorandum was signed by him, but not in the presence of witnesses. No other will could be found:—Held, that he had done no sufficient act in law to revoke his will. Brewster, In goods of, 29 L. J., P. 69; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 56.

—— Parol Evidence of Intention of Testator.]—If, upon the face of a testamentary document and the facts known to the testatrix at the time of its execution, it is doubtful whether the testatrix intended altogether to revoke a former will, the court will admit parol evidence to ascertain the intention. Jenner v. Efinch, 49 L. J., P. 25; 5 P. D. 106; 42 L. T. 327; 28 W. R. 520.

Mutual Wills.]—Mutual will can only be revoked by both jointly or by one separately, by giving notice of such revocation, and not at all after death of one party. Dufour v. Pereira, Dick. 419.

A. and his wife, who were British-born subjects, but who had been naturalised subjects of Denmark, and for several years previous and up to 1805 been domiciled in the Danish island of St. Croix, in that year came to England, where they continued domiciled till their respective deaths. In 1809 they made a joint will, whereby they bequeathed a sum of money invested in mortgage in St. Croix, and to which they were jointly entitled, in certain shares among their children and grandchildren, and appointed as executors a son and son-in-law, both Danish subjects, and domiciled in St. Croix. In 1814 A. made a separate will, expressly revoking all former wills, and bequeathing the money due on mortgage to his wife. She survived him, and, in 1822, also made a will disposing of the property:—Held, that the legatees under this will, and not those under the joint will, were entitled to the money. Price v. Dewhurst, 4 Myl. & C. 76; 8 L. J., Ch. 57; 2 Jur. 1006. Affirming 8 Sim. 279.

Testator by codicil in 1796, reciting that he had devised his real estate by his last will, dated 25th November, 1752, charged his real estates with his debts and legacies given by the codicil, and appointed executors; the bill was by devisees of the real estate under another will of 1756, one of whom was a legatee in the codicil, stating that the will of 1756 was executed in pursuance of an agreement to make mutual wills; that the testator, by the death of the other party, was bound, if not in law, in honour, and did not mean to revoke the will of 1756, and revive that of 1752; and praying that the will of 1756 and the codicil might be established, the trusts carried into execution, and the legacy paid; upon an issue directed the will of 1752 was established, evidence of mistake being rejected; on further directions to plaintiffs, relied on agreement, and offered evidence in support of it; the bill was dismissed, the lord chancellor being of opinion that the relief sought was inconsistent with the frame of the bill, and therefore could not be given under the general prayer; that the evidence ought not to be received; and that, upon the evidence, the agreement was uncertain and unfair, and therefore not to be executed. Walpole (Lady) v. Orford (Lord), 3 Ves. 402; 4 R. R. 38.

By the Roman-Dutch law, the mutual will of a husband and wife, notwithstanding its form, is to be read as the separate will of each. Denyssen v. Mostert, 41 L. J., P. C. 41; L. R. 4 P. C. 236; 20 W. R. 1017; 8 Moore, P. C. 502. And see Dias v. De Livera, 49 L. J., P. C. 26; 5 App. Cas. 123; 42 L. T. 267.

The dispositions of each spouse are to be treated as applicable to his or her half of the joint property. Ib.

Each is at liberty to revoke his or her part of the will during the co-testator's lifetime, with or without communication with the co-testator, and after the co-testator's death; but when a spouse who dies first had bequeathed any benefit in favour of the survivor, and has afterwards limited the disposal of the property in general after the death of such survivor, then such survivor, if he or she accepts such benefits, may not afterwards dispose of his or her share in any manner at variance with the will of the deceased spouse. Ib.

Revocation or Substitution.]—Testator gave 4,000*l.* to trustees upon trust for his two daughters at twenty-one, and directed that the legacy duty due in respect thereof shall be paid by his executors out of the residue. By codicil reciting this bequest, and that he is desirous of increasing the same to 5,000*l.*, he revoked the gift of 4,000*l.*, and gave 5,000*l.* upon the same trust, &c. By a second codicil reciting the former, and that he is desirous of further increasing to 6,000*l.*, he revokes the gift of 5,000*l.*, and gives in lieu thereof 6,000*l.* upon the same trusts. This is not a revocation, but substitution in each instance, and the 6,000*l.* is therefore exempt from legacy duty. Cooper v. Day, 3 Mer. 154.

If a will is revoked by cancellation for the purpose of giving effect to different disposition, such revocation is ineffectual if the substituted dispositions are not effective. The rule of the English law, following that of the civil law, is this — Tunc prius testamentum rumpitur cum posterius perfectum est. Ibbott v. Bell, 34 Beav. 395.

Revocation of prior Will obtained by Fraud—Effect on later Will.]—A later will is not necessarily invalid, upon the ground, per se, that the revocation of a former will had been procured by fraud. Longford (Earl) v. Purdon, 1 L. R., Ir. 75.

Of Will exercising Power of Appointment.]—A widow, under the powers given her by her marriage settlement, executed a will in favour of B., without having executed any fresh settlement of the property included in her first marriage settlement: — Held, that she had a right to revoke the will so made by any of the methods prescribed by the Wills Act. Hawkesley v. Barrow, 35 L. J., P. 67; L. R. 1 P. 147; 14 L. T. 672; 14 W. R. 822.

Presumption of Revocation—Non-production of Will known to have been in Testator's Possession.] — The presumption of fact, that a will, known to have been in the testatrix's custody, and not forthcoming at her death, was destroyed by her animo revocandi, is a primâ facie presumption only, and may be rebutted by probable circumstances, among which declarations of unchanged affection and intention have much weight. Patten v. Poulton, 1 Sw. & Tr. 55; 27 L. J., P. 41; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 341; 6 W. R. 458.

E., in 1846, made a will, which he revoked by another will made in 1855. On his death the former will was found, but not the latter:— Held, that it must be presumed the deceased destroyed the missing will, animo revocandi. Brown, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 32; 27 L. J., P. 20; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 244.

A will was found after a testator's death, but parol evidence was given that he had executed a subsequent will, which contained a clause of revocation, and which remained in his custody until his death, and could not then be found, and that he had declared an intention to destroy it. The court pronounced for an intestacy. Wood v. Wood, 36 L. J., P. 34; L. R. 1 P. 309; 15 L. T. 593.

In 1856, a person duly executed a will, which remained in his custody and possession. In 1861, the draft of a new will was forwarded to him for perusal, but such will was never completed. A few months before his death, in conversation, he referred to the executed will as being still in existence, and at a later period expressed an intention to settle the terms of the new one; he died, however, without carrying out his intention. On his death the draft of the new will was found, but not the executed will: —Held, that as the executed will having been in his possession was not found on his death, the presumption arose that he had destroyed it animo revocandi; and that, as no evidence was forthcoming to rebut that presumption, he died intestate. Mitcheson, In goods of, 32 L. J., P. 202; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 360.

The presumption that a will in the testator's possession, and not forthcoming after his death, has been revoked, does not arise unless there is evidence to satisfy the court that it was not in existence at the time of his death. Finch v. Finch, 36 L. J., P. 78; L. R. 1 P. 371; 16 L. T. 268; 15 W. R. 797.

The only person present at the making of a will swore that it was not duly executed. The will was afterwards destroyed. Although there was reason to suspect that the will was duly executed notwithstanding the evidence, the court declined to pronounce on that mere suspicion for a will not in existence. Eckersley v. Platt, 36 L. J., P. 7; L. R. 1 P. 281; 15 L. T. 327; 15 W. R. 232.

The presumption that a will which was in the testator's custody until his death, and could not then be found, was destroyed by the testator with the intention of revoking it, must prevail unless it is rebutted by clear and satisfactory evidence. Ib.

A testator executed his will at his solicitor's office and took it away with him. It was never seen afterwards, and could not be found after his death in his repositories. He had made declarations inconsistent with his testamentary dispositions shortly before his death, but the court held, that he being the last custodian of the will, and it not being forthcoming, the presumption of revocation arose, and was not rebutted. Homerton v. Hewett, 25 L. T. 854.

When a will traced to the possession of the testator cannot be found after his death, and there is no evidence what has become of it, the presumption arises that the will has been destroyed by the testator for the purpose of revoking it, but this presumption may be rebutted by parol evidence. Sugden v. St. Leonards (Lord), 45 L. J., P. 49; 1 P. D. 154; 34 L. T. 372; 24 W. R. 860—C. A.

The rule of law is, that if a will is traced to the possession of the deceased, and last seen there, and is not forthcoming on his death, it is presumed to have been destroyed by himself, and that presumption must prevail, unless there is sufficient evidence to repel it, and to raise a higher degree of probability to the contrary. The onus of proof in such cases lies upon the party propounding the will. Welsh v. Phillips, 1 Moore, P. C. 299.

When the substance of a will is propounded, the first point to be ascertained is whether such a will was duly executed. If that is established, the next point is, whether it was in existence at the death of the deceased. If it was not, then the primâ facie presumption that it was destroyed by the deceased, with intention to revoke, arises, which may be rebutted by further evidence. Podmore v. Whatton, 3 Sw. & Tr. 449; 33 L. J., P. 143; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 756; 10 L. T. 754; 13 W. R. 106.

A subsequent will (the contents of which were unknown) having remained in the custody of the testator, and not being forthcoming, the presumption of law was that it was destroyed by him animo revocandi, and did not revoke a prior will uncancelled. Cutto v. Gilbert, 9 Moore, P. C. 131.

Duplicates — One in Testatrix's Possession missing.]—Where a will has been executed in duplicate, one only being retained by the testatrix, and such duplicate is not forthcoming after her decease, the presumption of law is that she destroyed it animo revocandi. The court, while doubting whether this presumption must necessarily arise on the bare fact of one of the duplicates having disappeared, and while suggesting that a stronger presumption was necessary in cases where a duplicate will was known to a testator or testatrix to be in existence, nevertheless felt bound by the authority of an unreported case of Luxmoore v. Chambers, and held, that the presumption of law must be upheld, that the will was duly revoked, and that the testatrix died intestate. Jones v. Harding, 58 L. T. 60 ; 52 J. P. 71.

—— Will and Codicil — Codicil not forthcoming.]—A testator made and duly executed a will and afterwards a codicil revoking certain portions of the will. Both documents were handed to him by his solicitor. They were in separate envelopes which were sealed up. On the testator's death the will only was found, with the seal of the envelope containing it broken :—Held, that, although the presumption of law must prevail as to the destruction of the codicil, probate could only be granted of such parts of the will as the codicil by its execution had not revoked. Debac, In goods of, 77 L. T. 374.

—— Codicil — No Will.] — See Gardiner v. Courthope, ante, col. 268.

—— Non-Production of Memorandum referred to.]—Where a codicil refers to two memorandums, and only one is found, effect must be given to that which is found ; for either the ordinary presumption must prevail that the missing paper was destroyed by the testator animo revocandi, or the principle must be applied that the apparent testamentary intentions of a testator are not to be disappointed merely because he made other dispositions of his property, which are unknown by reason of the testamentary paper which contained them not being forthcoming. Dickinson v. Stidolph, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 341.

—— Mutilation.]—See post, col. 424.

Rebuttal of—Statements made by Testator before Death.]—Where a will and a codicil (the drafts of which were produced) were proved to have been left by the attorney who drew them with the testator, after execution, but were not forthcoming after his death ; declarations of the testator to various members of his family, down to a few days before his death, expressive of his satisfaction at having settled his affairs, and intimating that his will was left with his attorney, are properly admitted, in order to rebut the presumption that the will and codicil had been destroyed by the testator animo revocandi. Whiteley v. King, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 756 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1079 ; 11 L. T. 342 ; 13 W. R. 83.

—— Subsequent Insanity of Testator.]—The presumption that a will which was in the testator's custody up to the time of his death, and cannot be found after his death, was destroyed by him animo revocandi, does not apply where the testator became insane after the execution, and continued insane until his death. In such a case the burden of showing that the will was destroyed whilst he was of sound mind lies on the party setting up the revocation, and in the absence of evidence as to the date of the destruction the contents of the will are entitled to probate. Sprigge v. Sprigge, 38 L. J., P. 4 ; L. R. 1 P. 608 ; 19 L. T. 462 ; 17 W. R. 80.

—— Other Circumstances.]—L. duly executed a will, dated the 19th August, 1857, whereby her property was almost equally divided amongst her nephews and nieces. This will was left in her possession, and was not found at her death. On the day before the funeral, P., the deceased's maid, produced a document, dated the 3rd August, 1857, which she alleged to be the deceased's will. It was written in large awkward characters, and was very ill spelt. By it the nephews and nieces, with two exceptions, would have received 1*s.* each, and P. have been materially benefited. This paper was not propounded :—Held, that the presumption that a will left in the custody of a testator, and not found at his death, has been destroyed by the testator, was rebutted in this case, by reason of the suspicious conduct of the maid, as connected with the document dated the 3rd August, 1857. Battyll v. Lyles, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 718.

A. made her will in March, 1854, and a codicil in June, 1854, one of the legatees under the will having died since its execution. In May, 1856, she executed another codicil, among other things appointing one of the parties benefited by the codicil of 1854 to be executor, in the room of one appointed in the will. At her death in December, 1857, the will and second codicil were found in a tin box, at the Bank of England, in which she kept her papers ; but the first codicil, of which the testatrix took possession immediately after its execution, was nowhere to be found. On motion for probate of the draft of the first codicil, with the consent of the residuary legatees :—Held, that the primâ facie presumption of revocation was strengthened rather than rebutted by the circumstances, and probate of the draft was refused. Shaw, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 62.

A. executed a will in 1858, which at the time of his death, in December, 1860, was found in a box torn into several pieces. A woman, who cohabited with him for some years, deposed, that in August, 1860, at his request, she took the will from a box and gave it to him, and that he then tore it in pieces, and returned it to her, with directions to put the pieces behind the fire, but that the pieces were replaced in the box with his sanction. Her statement was confirmed by her brother-in-law, who pretended to have been present :—Held, that notwithstanding the direct evidence thus given, the incredibility of the story, the probabilities of the case, and the letters of the deceased, raised a counter-presumption that the will was not revoked by or with his knowledge. Staines v. Stewart, 2 Sw. & Tr. 320 ; 31 L. J., P. 10 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 440 ; 5 L. T. 457.

Burden of Proof.]—After the due execution of a will has been proved, the burden of proving that it was revoked lies upon those who set up the revocation, and, in the absence of evidence, revocation will not be presumed. Benson v. Benson, 40 L. J., P. 1; L. R. 2 P. 172; 23 L. T. 709; 19 W. R. 190.

A will duly executed before the passing of the Wills Act, and remaining in the testator's custody until his death, after the passing of the act, was found with his signature crossed out. In the absence of evidence as to the date when the act of crossing out was done, the court refused to presume that it was before 1838, and therefore pronounced for the will. Ib.

The facts that the second will was last seen in the custody of the deceased, and could not be found, raised a presumption that he destroyed it, animo cancellandi, and cast on those seeking to establish the will the onus of rebutting that presumption. Brown v. Brown, 8 El. & Bl. 876; 27 L. J., Q. B. 173; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 163. See Brown, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 32; 27 L. J., P. 20; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 244.

A woman having duly executed her will, subsequently became insane. Shortly before her death, it was discovered that the will had been mutilated by her; but it was proved to have been in her custody for a short time, subsequent as well as prior to her insanity:—Held, that there being satisfactory evidence of the due execution of the will, the onus of showing that it had been mutilated by the testatrix when of sound mind, was upon the party alleging its revocation. Harris v. Berrall, 1 Sw. & Tr. 153; 7 W. R. 19.

b. METHODS OF.

1. By Marriage.

Marriage with Legatee.]—Marriage with a legatee was no revocation. Ewbank v. Halliwell, 2 Bro. C. C. 220.

Where a testator made a will in which he bequeathed all his property—including certain funds over which he had a power of appointment—to a lady whom he married subsequently to the execution of the said will:—Held, that having regard to s. 18 of the Wills Act, the subsequent marriage did not entirely revoke the will; and a grant of administration with the will annexed was made to the widow of the testator, limited to the property over which the testator had a power of appointment. Russell, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 80; 15 P. D. 111; 62 L. T. 644.

Marriage followed by Change of Domicil.]—A testator being domiciled in Scotland, in anticipation of his marriage, which subsequently took place in Scotland, executed a deed of settlement, which he also intended should operate as his will. By the law of Scotland, such a document as a disposition of property at death would not be revoked by the marriage of the contracting parties. The testator after his marriage became domiciled in England:—Held, that as the settlement was valid by the law of domicil as a testamentary disposition at the time of execution, as also subsequently to the marriage and at the moment when the testator left the country, it continued valid notwithstanding the change of domicil. Reid, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 43; L. R. 1 P. 74; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 300; 13 L. T. 680; 14 W. R. 316.

Void Marriage.]—A will is not revoked under 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 18, by a marriage which is absolutely void by the law of this country, and there is no distinction in such a case between a testator who is a natural-born subject and one who is a naturalised British subject. Mette v. Mette, 1 Sw. & Tr. 416; 28 L. J., P. 117; 7 W. R. 543.

Birth of Issue.]—Marriage, and the birth of a posthumous child, amounted to an implied revocation of a will of lands made before marriage. Doe d. Lancashire v. Lancashire, 5 Term Rep. 49; 2 R. R. 535.

But the birth of a child was not alone a revocation. Sheppard v. Sheppard, 5 Term Rep. 51, n.

A man married, and afterwards made his will and devised to his niece, and afterwards died, leaving his wife enceinte with a daughter, which was unknown to him:—Held, that the birth of the daughter was not a revocation of the will. Doe d. White v. Barford, 4 M. & S. 10.

Marriage and birth of child held revocation of will made prior to both. Christopher v. Christopher, Dick. 445.

Marriage of feme sole before statute of frauds, held revocation of will (4th Co. no cases since the statute). Id. 449.

Marriage and birth of a child revoked a will of personal estate. Jackson v. Hurlock, Amb. 494.

Marriage simply was not a revocation. Id. 495.

Subsequent marriage and having children, constructed a revocation of a will. Cook v. Oakley, 1 P. Wms. 304.

Since the decision in Marston v. Roe (8 A. & E. 14) the revocation of a will by marriage and birth of child was put on the footing not of presumed intention, but of a tacit condition attached to the will, and taking effect when the circumstance happens; a principle which would exclude that sort of evidence that the ecclesiastical courts in particular have been used to admit, as to the intention of the testator. But in this case, in which it was sought to exclude the revocation by the fact of a settlement of part of the property having been made upon the marriage, giving a provision to the wife and children, the court thought that even upon the footing of presumed intention, the presumption of revocation was not rebutted. Israell v. Rodon, 2 Moore, P. C. 51.

Marriage alone not a revocation of a will, as with the birth of a child it was. Exception where the will provided for children. Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 V. & B. 465; 12 R. R. 255.

Widower having son and devising away real estate; subsequent second marriage and birth of child:—Held, no revocation of devise. Sheath v. York, 1 V. & B. 390.

But where no heir a revocation might be implied. Id. 397.

Marriage and birth of child an implied revocation of a will of personal property. Ib.

Second marriage and birth of children, the wife and children provided for by settlement, and there being children by the former marriage, did not revoke the will made prior. Ilchester (Earl), Ex parte, 7 Ves. 348; 6 R. R. 138.

Whether a will was revoked by marriage and the birth of a child under particular circumstances, quære. Baxter v. Dyer, 5 Ves. 663.

A subsequent marriage and the birth of a child revoked a will; quære, as to the propriety of admitting evidence against the presumption. Gibbons v. Gaunt, 4 Ves. 848.

Marriage and the birth of a child:—Held, a revocation of a will of land. Sprauge v. Stone, Amb. 721.

Feme Sole — Surrender to Use of Will.]—Surrender by feme sole to use of will becomes void or suspended by marriage. George v. Jew, Amb. 628.

—— Power to Dispose by Will.] — Where power is given to a woman to dispose of estate by will, and she marries; semble, it is a suspension of the power, sed quære. Rich v. Beaumont, 6 Bro. P. C. 152.

Power of Appointment exercised by Will.]—A will made in the exercise of a power of appointment is not revoked by a subsequent marriage, when in default of appointment the property of which it disposes passes under the settlement containing the power, although the same persons would take under such settlement as would have taken in case of intestacy under the statute of distributions. Fenwick, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 54; L. R. 1 P. 319; 16 L. T. 124.

A will made in the exercise of a power of appointment is not revoked by a subsequent marriage, when in the event of certain contingencies happening, the property thereby appointed will not in default of appointment pass to the persons who would have taken in case of intestacy under the statute of distributions. Ib.

A., under his marriage settlement, had in the event of his surviving B. (his wife), a power of appointing by deed or will amongst his children certain trust moneys, and in default of such appointment the moneys were to be equally divided amongst them. A. survived B., and by a will, executed in 1847, he, being then a widower, directed the then unappropriated portion of such moneys to be equally divided amongst his sons (a portion having been previously assigned to his daughter on her marriage). A., in 1855, contracted a second marriage, and died in 1858, without having executed any other will or any further appointment of the trust moneys:—Held, that the will of 1847, so far as it was an execution of the power of appointment, was not revoked by A.'s second marriage, though the same persons would take under the settlement, in default of appointment, as would have taken in case of an intestacy under the Statute of Distributions. Fitzroy, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 133; 6 W. R. 863.

A., by his will, gave a power to B. to dispose by will of property, which in default of appointment by her was to devolve on the person or persons who, at her decease, should be her next of kin. B., in pursuance of such power, executed a will in favour of C., whom she afterwards married, but who died in her lifetime:—Held, that B.'s will fell within the exception of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 18, and was therefore not revoked by her subsequent marriage. M'Vicar, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 84; L. R. 1 P. 671; 20 L. T. 1013; 17 W. R. 832.

By a deed of settlement executed between a wife and her intended husband, property was conveyed to trustees to pay the income to the wife herself during her life, and if she predeceased her husband, then to him for life, if she should so appoint by will, but not otherwise, and if she did not so appoint, then it was to go to the issue of the marriage. The same day she made a will exercising her power of appointment in favour of her intended husband:—Held, that the will came within the exception of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 18, and was not revoked by the subsequent marriage. Worthington, In goods of, 25 L. T. 853; 20 W. R. 260.

A woman, being about to marry, enters into an agreement with the future husband (without seal or stamp), by which her property is settled upon the survivor for life, with power to the wife to dispose by will made after the marriage: she then immediately makes a will, by which she bequeaths her property to the intended husband absolutely, and afterwards (on the same day) she marries. The articles resting in agreement give the husband an equitable estate for life, but the will is revoked (not being protected by the power) by the subsequent marriage. Hodsden v. Lloyd, 2 Bro. C. C. 534.

Subsequent Will reviving prior.]—A testator executed a will and afterwards married. He subsequently executed a second will, and by it he revived and brought into force again the first will in the event of there being no child of the marriage living at the time of the death of his wife. The same executors were appointed in both wills. The testator died leaving surviving him his widow and one child. The court allowed the first will to be included in the probate of the second will. Bangham, In goods of, 45 L. J., P. 80; 1 P. D. 429; 24 W. R. 712.

A testator made his will in 1871. He married in 1872, and on the day of the marriage, but after the ceremony, he executed a codicil, by which he made provision for his wife, and revived his will. His wife predeceased him and on his death the will only was found among his papers. The court being satisfied that in destroying the codicil he had no intention of thereby revoking the will, decreed probate of both papers. James v. Shrimpton, 45 L. J., P. 85; 1 P. D. 431; 35 L. T. 428; 24 W. R. 740. See also cases post, col. 446.

Will made in Contemplation of Marriage.]—A., in 1828, made his will in contemplation of his intended marriage, providing for his intended wife and for the children of such marriage, and making his intended wife executrix:—Held, that the marriage which ensued, together with the birth of a child, operated as a total revocation of the will. Cadywold, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 34; 27 L. J., P. 36; 6 W. R. 375.

Settlement and Codicil made in Contemplation of Marriage.]—One devises real estates to certain uses; afterwards by deed he conveys it to the same uses until he marries, and then to new uses; after the deed and before marriage, he, by codicil, attested by three witnesses and directed to be annexed to his will, imposes a forfeiture upon persons disturbing his wife, and after the codicil marries: the settlement revokes the will, but the codicil sets it up again, and the new uses springing on the marriage do not revoke the codicil. The subsequent marriage is no revocation of will. Jackson v. Hurlock, Amb. 489; Eden, 263.

Mutual Wills.]—Mutual wills by two unmarried sisters under twenty-one; the marriage of one does not revoke the will of the other. Hinckley v. Simmons, 4 Ves. 160.

a. Revocation of Will by Will.

Execution of Instrument Revoking Will.]—The Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 20, does not alter the law as to revocation of wills, except by requiring that the instrument of revocation shall be executed in the same manner as a will. Baker v. Story, 31 L. T. 631; 23 W. R. 147.

Revocation by Will.—A wife executed a will, in which, referring to a power to that effect given to her under her marriage settlement, she disposed of all her property in favour of her husband. She subsequently made a second will, in which she referred to the same power, and bequeathed the greater portion of the property affected by the settlement to certain persons. This will contained words revoking all former wills made by the testatrix:—Held, that the first will was revoked thereby. Eustace, In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 46; L. R. 3 P. 183; 30 L. T. 909; 22 W. R. 832.

A testator executed two wills, the first in England, and the second in Italy, where he was domiciled at the time of his death. The English will disposed of realty and personalty, and nominated an executor. The second, or Italian will, disposed of the personalty only, but contained a general revocatory clause:—Held, that the second will revoked the first, including the appointment of the executor. And the executor, who resisted revocation of the probate of it, granted to him in common form, was condemned in costs. Cottrell v. Cottrell, 41 L. J., P. 57; L. R. 2 P. 397; 26 L. T. 527; 20 W. R. 590.

One devised his personal estate to A., and the real estate to B., and after A.'s death, and the devisor having acquired other real property, some by devise and some by purchase, he made a second will, disposing by name of his after-acquired testamentary estate to C., and then added, "as to the rest of my real and personal estate, I intend to dispose of it by a codicil, hereafter to be made, to this my will"; this is no revocation of the first will, whether considering that he meant to include the same property therein devised, because it is a mere declaration of an intent to dispose of it in future: and non constat that such disposition would be inconsistent with the first will; nor is it any revocation, considering that he meant only to include his after-purchased property not before devised, and his personal estate, the bequest of which had lapsed by the death of A. Thomas d. Jones v. Evans, 2 East, 488.

Will sufficient to pass personal estate did not revoke a prior will of real estate made according to Statute of Frauds. Limbery or Lunbury v. Mason, 2 Comb. 451.

—— By Revival of prior Will.]—A. made a will in 1858, which he subsequently destroyed. After its destruction, he made a will containing a disposition of his property different from that contained in his former will, and dated January, 1859. These wills were prepared by different solicitors. In February, 1859, he applied to the solicitor who had prepared the will of 1858, and who was ignorant of the existence of the will of 1859, to prepare a codicil. The codicil on its face appeared to be a codicil to the will of 1858, and referred to the provisions of that will. The testator afterwards destroyed the codicil of February, 1859, with the intention of setting up the will of 1859, and died without making any further or other testamentary disposition:—Held, that he died intestate. Newton v. Newton, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 118.

—— By Lost Will.]—A. executed a will, and afterwards executed a second will, which he took away with him. On his death the earlier will was found, but the second will could not be found. The solicitor who prepared the second will gave evidence, from recollection, of its contents, which were inconsistent with the first will, and revoked it:—Held, that secondary evidence might be given of the contents of the last will, and that the evidence given sufficiently showed that it revoked the first will. Brown v. Brown, 8 El. & Bl. 876; 27 L. J., Q. B. 173; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 163. See Brown, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 32; 27 L. J., P. 20; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 244.

Declarations of a deceased that he has revoked a certain will, by a subsequent will, not forthcoming, cannot be admitted as evidence of revocation, neither can they as to revocation by any other means, as by burning, tearing, or by cancellation. Staines v. Stewart, 2 Sw. & Tr. 320; 31 L. J., P. 10; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 440; 5 L. T. 457.

A vague declaration that he had destroyed a will, not specifying by what means or for what purpose, is still more objectionable. Ib.

The testator made a will, in 1807, of his realty and personalty, in favour of his wife, for life, remainder to his daughter C. absolutely, having other daughters, but no son. After the will he had other children, and, by a codicil in 1824, reciting that in his will he had given his property to his brother D. R., on certain trusts, and had given a certain freehold for the benefit of his eldest son, he revoked that gift, and everything else in the will, and gave his freehold and other property to his wife and brother, upon the trusts declared in his will of the freehold given to the son, and gave a copyhold to his second son in the same manner as the freehold was given by the will to the eldest son, and in all other respects confirmed his will. The only will found was that of 1807. The court, holding that the first will became operative by the loss of the second, refused to declare an intestacy. Rainier v. Rainier, 1 Jur. 754.

—— By Invalid Devise.]—A husband made a will, devising his real estate to his wife absolutely; afterwards he executed another will giving his real estate to trustees upon trust after his wife's death for the Bristol General Hospital, and he devised to his trustees all the residue of his real estate, and "the proceeds which by any law to the contrary might not by that will pass to the hospital, fully relying upon my trustees to carry out my wishes and desires." The gift to the hospital was void, and the trustees claimed to take the real estate beneficially under the ultimate gift. The court held that they did not take beneficially. The question then arose as to whether the first will was revoked by the second:—Held, that the first will was revoked by the devises in the second, notwithstanding that these devises were invalid. Baker v. Story, 31 L. T. 631; 23 W. R. 147.

—— By Invalid Will.]—See post, col. 390.

General Revocatory Clause—Effect of.]—A general clause in a will revoking all former wills revokes a prior testamentary appointment. Merritt, In goods of (1 Sw. & Tr. 112), and Joys, In goods of (infra), considered. Sotheran v. Dening, 20 Ch. D. 99—C. A.

A married woman having a general power of appointment by will over real estate executed a will appointing the estate. After the death of her husband she made another will revoking all former wills, and containing a general devise and bequest of all her real and personal estate. She afterwards made a third will, also revoking all former wills, and bequeathing her personal estate, but not devising or appointing her real estate. She had no real estate except that subject to her power of appointment:—Held, that the testamentary appointment under the first will was revoked by the second will, and the second will by the third, and that the real estate went as in default of appointment. Ib.

The testatrix duly executed a power of appointment under her father's will in the form of a "testamentary appointment." Some years later she made a will, and in it exercised fully all powers of appointment under her control, but did not refer in any way to the power of appointment she had under her father's will, or to her previous exercise of it in the "testamentary appointment" already made by her:—Held, that as the will contained a complete execution of all the powers at the deceased's disposal, that instrument revoked all preceding wills, and was therefore entitled to probate alone. Tenney, In goods of, 45 L. T. 78.

A married woman made a will in 1848, in execution of a power of appointment, and in 1857 made another in execution of another power of appointment. The latter will contained a general revocatory clause, but it did not refer to the will of 1848, or to the power in execution of which it was made, or to the property thereby appointed:—Held, that the will of 1848 was not revoked. Joys, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 214; 30 L. J., P. 169.

A married woman, having in a settlement a special power of appointment by will over real estate, executed a will during coverture in 1866, appointing the same. After the death of her husband she made three other wills. In the first and second she said: "I revoke all other wills," and in the third: "I . . . hereby revoke all wills, codicils, and other testamentary dispositions heretofore made by me, and declare this to be my last will and testament," and then disposed of all her estate, "including as well real estate as personal estate over which I have or shall have a general power of appointment," but she did not in any way exercise or affect to exercise the power in the settlement, nor did she refer to it, or to the property the subject of the power:—Held, that the testamentary appointment of 1866 was revoked. Kingdon, In re, Wilkins v. Pryer, 55 L. J., Ch. 598; 32 Ch. D. 604; 54 L. T. 753; 34 W. R. 634.

A general revocatory clause of "all former wills" leads to the inference that the deceased at that time intended to leave a subsisting will. Marsh v. Marsh, 1 Sw. & Tr. 528; 30 L. J., P. 77; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 380; 1 L. T. 523.

General revocatory words are not included in the expression, "any bequest of personal property described in a general manner," in 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 27, so that they can operate upon "any personal estate which the testator may have power to appoint in any manner." Merritt, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 112; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1192. S. P., Meredith, In goods of, 29 L. J., P. 155.

A married woman, having duly executed a will, by which she disposed of stock over which she had a power of appointment, subsequently, with an intention of disposing of other stock held in trust for her under her marriage settlement, made and executed a second will, which concluded with a clause of revocation of all former wills. This last was not valid for the purposes intended, nor was it rendered valid by any consent on the part of her husband:—Held, that this last will could not, merely by its general revocatory clause, operate as an execution of the first-named power, and so revoke the will already made in execution of such power. Ib.

—— Onus Probandi.]—A testator executed a will in 1825, which was found uncancelled at his death, which event took place in 1853. In 1852, he executed another testamentary paper, the contents of which were wholly unknown, except the circumstance of the paper commencing with the words, "This is the last will and testament." This latter instrument was not forthcoming at his death, but there was no evidence of its destruction. The prerogative court held that the instrument, executed in 1852, was not to be considered as a codicil, but as a substantive will, which operated as a revocation of the prior will of 1825, and that under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 22, the deceased must be considered to have died intestate, as the former will was not revived by the destruction of the latter:—Held, first that the onus probandi lies upon the party setting up the subsequent instrument as a revocation of the former will. Cutto v. Gilbert, 9 Moore, P. C. 131.

Held, secondly, that to establish a revocation of a former will relating to personalty, by a subsequent testamentary paper not forthcoming, by parol evidence of execution only, in the absence of any draft or instructions for such instrument, such evidence must be strong and conclusive as to its contents. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the mere fact of such an instrument, commencing with the words, "This is my last will and testament," does not render it a revocatory instrument, as those words do not necessarily import that such instrument contained a different disposition of the property, and that to make it operate as a revocation of a former will, it must be proved that the contents of the latter instrument were different from the former. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that a subsequent will (the contents of which were unknown) having remained in the custody of the testator, and not forthcoming, the presumption of law was, that it was destroyed by him animo revocandi, and did not revoke a prior will uncancelled. Ib.

Observations on the report of the case of Moore v. Moore (1 Phillim. 375, 406). Ib.

When the revocation of an existing will is sought to be established by the proof of the execution of a subsequent will not forthcoming, the evidence should be clear and conclusive, not only as to the execution of such subsequent will, but also as to its contents. Berthon v. Berthon, 18 L. T. 301; 16 W. R. 673.

b. Of Will by Codicil.

In General.]—In interpreting a will and a codicil the general rule is, that the whole will takes effect so far as it is not inconsistent with the codicil. Robertson v. Powell, 2 H. & C. 762; 33 L. J., Ex. 34; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 442; 9 L. T. 543; 12 W. R. 623.

A codicil not to be presumed a revocation unless it distinctly appears. Griffiths v. Grieve, 1 Jac. & Walk. 31.

A codicil is never held to revoke a will further than is necessary to give effect to the intentions of the testator. Young v. Hassard, 1 Dr. & War. 638.

The intention to revoke in a codicil must be as clearly expressed as the intention to devise in the will, otherwise the codicil will not operate as revocation. A doubt, however reasonable, is not sufficient, if the two instruments are not absolutely inconsistent. Pilsworth v. Mosse, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 163.

If a devise in a will is clear, it is incumbent on the party who contends that it is not to take effect by reason of a revocation in the codicil, to show an intention to revoke equally clear with the original intention to devise. Robertson v. Powell, supra.

A testator devised nine houses to his son A. for life; and after his death, to his children who should attain a certain age; but in case all such children should die under that age, then to trustees to permit his three daughters, B., C. and D., to receive the rent during their lives, in equal shares; and after their decease, to their children in fee. He afterwards made a codicil in these words:—"I hereby revoke that part of my last will and testament whereby I give the nine houses unto my son and to his heirs; and my will is that my daughters C. and D. should enjoy them. I give and bequeath the freehold ground and houses to my daughters C. and D., equally and jointly between them, and to the survivor of them; and after their decease to their child or children equally; and if they should both die leaving no child or children, then the freeholds to go as ordered by my will." C. and D. died, leaving no child. A., the son, died, leaving a daughter, his only surviving child, who was born in the lifetime of the testator, and attained the required age; but A. had had another daughter born in the lifetime of the testator, who had married, and had a son, but both she and her son died in the lifetime of her father. The testator's daughter B. was also dead, but leaving two children:—Held, that notwithstanding the general words of the commencement of it, the codicil operated only as a partial revocation; that it operated as a revocation only so far as to effectuate the intention of the testator, as declared in the codicil, to prefer his daughters C. and D. and their children to his son A. and his children; that it operated nothing more; and that, failing the objects of the preference, the testator's declared intention was that the will should operate as if there had been no revocation; and therefore that the daughter of A. was entitled to a moiety of the houses. Doe d. Evers v. Ward, 21 L. J., Q. B. 145; 18 Q. B. 197; 16 Jur. 709.

A. bequeathed leasehold premises to his daughter M. for her life; and after her death to and amongst her lawful issue equally, share and share alike, with benefit of survivorship; and "in default of such issue," to his son G. for life; and after his death to his children equally, share and share alike, with benefit of survivorship. By a codicil, the testator recited that he had by his will bequeathed to his son G., after the decease of his, the testator's, daughter M., "and in default of her leaving lawful issue," the leasehold premises; and stated, that in case his son should not indemnify his estate from a debt incurred by the testator for the accommodation of his son, such bequest in the will in favour of the son should be revoked:—Held, that the codicil did not revoke the will, but showed the sense in which the testator used in the will the words "in default of such issue." Darley v. Martin, 13 C. B. 683; 22 L. J., C. P. 249; 17 Jur. 1125.

A testator executed a codicil to his last will, and by such codicil absolutely revoked and made void all bequests and dispositions in the will, and nominated executors, but did not in direct terms revoke the appointment of executors and guardians in the will:—Held, that the will was not revoked. Howard, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 32; L. R. 1 P. 636; 20 L. T. 230.

When there is a clear and manifest intention to devise, it is incumbent on a party alleging a revocation by a codicil to prove that the intention to revoke was equally clear and manifest; if there was only a reasonable doubt, the first devise ought to stand. Hearle v. Hicks, 1 Cl. & F. 20. Affirming S. C. nom. Doe d. Hearle v. Hicks, 1 Y. & J. 470; 8 Bing. 475; 1 M. & Scott, 759.

A testator devised a copyhold messuage, called Plomer Hill House, with the appurtenances, to trustees for his wife for life, and subsequently, by one of several codicils, revoking several of the dispositions made by his will of all his freehold, copyhold, and personal estate, he instead of such dispositions devised all his freehold, copyhold, and personal estate to his daughter:—Held, that the devise of the estate to his wife for life was not affected by this codicil. Ib.

By a will a testator in one cause devised all real estate whatsoever in Ireland of or to which he should be seised or entitled (subject to a trust term to raise moneys in aid of the personalty for payment of debts and legacies) to H. for life, with remainders over, and in another, he left all personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever after payment of debts and legacies to H. absolutely. By a codicil he revoked "the bequest contained in my will of the residue of all my real and personal estates to my brother H.," and gave such residue to W. "absolutely":—Held, that the devise to H. of the Irish estate was revoked by the codicil. Wallace v. Seymour, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 219, 343; 20 W. R. 634—Ex. Ch.

A testator, having executed a will and codicil, signed a second codicil, in which he expressed a desire to cancel his will, and that a document which he described as a will of earlier date, and the first and second codicils, should together stand as his last will and testament. The only document executed at the earlier date was a settlement on his marriage, which was not of a testamentary character:—Held, that the revocation of the will was absolute, and not dependent on the incorporation of the settlement in the papers admitted to probate. Gentry, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 49; L. R. 3 P. 80; 28 L. T. 480; 21 W. R. 888.

A testator, having bequeathed legacies to his daughters, and annuities by way of maintenance to them and to one of his sons, to whom he also devised real estate, made a codicil by which he purported to appoint amongst them, in full discharge of all claims which they could have upon his estate or assets, a sum of money which under his marriage settlement he had power to appoint amongst his younger children:—Held, that, irrespectively of the validity or effect of the codicil as an appointment, it did not operate to revoke the prior gifts in the will. M'Dermot v. O'Conor, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 352.

Devise to the children of A. :—Held, not to be revoked by an expression in a codicil, that they were not intended to take any beneficial interest under the will or codicil. Cleoburey v. Beckett, 14 Beav. 583.

A testator devised his real estate to his brother William for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainders over ; and he bequeathed his residuary personal estate between his nephews and nieces. By a codicil he revoked his will, so far only as it was altered by the codicil, and he gave to his nephews and nieces, except (as he said) his brother William's children, "who are not intended to take any beneficial interest under this will or this codicil," 1,000*l.* each :—Held, that the devise to the children of William was not revoked. Ib.

Devise of real estates to be sold, and the produce applied in the same manner as the residue of the personal estate. Codicil not executed so as to pass real estates, revoking the bequest of the residue, does not affect the will as to the real. Gallini v. Noble, 3 Mer. 691.

Case of revocation of will by codicil. Fry v. Prentice, 9 Jur. 894.

—— By Invalid Gift—Codicil.]—Testator by his will gave 850*l.* in legacies to different charitable institutions. By a codicil he revoked the before-mentioned legacies, and in lieu thereof gave to the treasurer of another charitable institution 1,000*l.* for the extension fund of such house of charity :—Held, that the house of charity being incapacitated under 9 Geo. 2. c. 36, from taking this gift for the extension fund, which involved the purchase of land and building thereon, the gifts to the charities mentioned in the will were absolutely revoked. 1 Kay & J. 665 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 917 ; 3 W. R. 616.

Appointment in Will—Invalid Appointment by Codicil.]—Testator by will, who said his estate would realise at least 10,000*l.*, wished 4,000*l.* to be invested on trust for his sister, A. P., for her life. At her death the principal might be divided between her husband, if surviving, and children as she might by will determine. After giving other legacies, the testator bequeathed the remainder to the children of J. F. A sum of 4,000*l.* was invested in consols and transferred into court. A. P. by will gave all the residue of her property, including the sum of 4,000*l.* left to her by the testator, and over which she had a disposing power, to her husband and children in equal terms. One son after the date of the will died, leaving two children, and by a codicil made afterwards, A. P. bequeathed the share which would have gone to him in trust for his children. On petition by the husband and surviving children for sale of the trust fund and payment of the proceeds to them :—Held, that the invalid appointment by the codicil did not operate as a revocation pro tanto of the gift by the will to the class, and that the husband and surviving children were entitled to the whole of the fund. Duguid v. Fraser, 55 L. J., Ch. 285 ; 31 Ch. D. 449 ; 54 L. T. 70 ; 34 W. R. 267.

A testator having a power by will to charge hereditaments with 7,000*l.*, to be divided amongst his children in such shares as he should by will appoint, and in default amongst them equally, by his will charged the hereditaments with the 7,000*l.*, and directed that 4,000*l.*, part thereof, should be paid to his younger son, and the remaining 3,000*l.* to his three daughters equally. By a codicil he revoked the appointment or charge of 7,000*l.* made by his will, and charged the same hereditaments with the payment of 7,000*l.* to the younger son alone :—Held, that though the appointment made by the codicil was invalid, the revocation nevertheless took effect. Quinn v. Butler, L. R. 6 Eq. 225.

Revocation of Gifts "in favour of" Donee of Power.]—A testator by his will gave to his sister H. a life interest in a share of his residuary estate, and a special power of appointment by will over the capital of the share. By a codicil he revoked all devises and bequests whatsoever "in favour of" H. :—Held, that the power was revoked as well as the life interest. Brough, In re, Currey v. Brough, 57 L. J., Ch. 436 ; 38 Ch. D. 456 ; 58 L. T. 788 ; 36 W. R. 409.

By Destroyed Codicil.]—A. made a will in 1858, which he subsequently destroyed. After its destruction he made a will containing a disposition of his property different from that contained in his former will, and dated January, 1859. These wills were prepared by different solicitors. In February, 1859, he applied to the solicitor who had prepared the will of 1858, and who was ignorant of the existence of the will of 1859, to prepare a codicil. The codicil on its face appeared to be a codicil to the will of 1858, and referred to the provisions of that will. The testator afterwards destroyed the codicil of February, 1859, with the intention of setting up the will of 1859, and died without making any further or other testamentary disposition :—Held, that he died intestate. Newton v. Newton, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 118.

c. Of Codicil by Codicil.

In General.]—An aunt by her will gave shares in her residue to her nephew. By a codicil she revoked all devises and bequests to her nephew. By a second codicil she devised after-purchased property to the trustees of her will and confirmed her will :—Held, that the second codicil did not revoke the first, and that the after-purchased property went according to the will and first codicil together, and not according to the will alone. Green v. Tribe, 47 L. J., Ch. 783 ; 9 Ch. D. 231 ; 38 L. T. 914 ; 27 W. R. 39.

A prior codicil, operative in itself, is not revoked by a subsequent codicil which refers to the will by its date and confirms it without mentioning the prior codicil ; but a prior codicil inoperative in itself, will not be set up by such a subsequent codicil. Ib.

The words "I give, devise and bequeath to A. and B. all the residue of my real and personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever undisposed of by my will and this codicil thereto," revoked an intermediate codicil. Hastings, In goods of, 26 L. T. 715 ; 20 W. R. 616.

A testator made a will (dated before the Wills Act), by which he directed his residuary real estate to be sold and the proceeds to be divided (in the events which happened) among twelve persons, of whom A. and B. were two. He made a first codicil (dated after the Wills Act), by which he directed certain real estate acquired subsequently to the date of the will to be sold, and the proceeds divided in the same way as the proceeds of his other real estate. This codicil was attested by A. and B. He then made another codicil, described as a codicil to his will of a certain date, but not referring to the prior codicil:—Held, that the second codicil did not operate as a republication of the first codicil; that the gifts to A. and B. of two twelfth shares of the proceeds of the property comprised in the first codicil failed; and that these shares fell into the residue, and were divisible between A. and B. and the other ten residuary legatees. Burton v. Newbery, 45 L. J., Ch. 202; 1 Ch. D. 234; 34 L. T. 15; 24 W. R. 388.

—— Will and First Codicil by Second Codicil.]—O. by his will devised and bequeathed the legal estate in all his real and personal property to L. and C., whom he nominated executors, on trust to pay certain annuities, and subject thereto to pay the income to F. for the life of A., and after the death of A. to transfer to F. all the testator's real and personal property absolutely, subject to the then existing annuities, and in case of the death of F. during the lifetime of A. without lawful issue, the testator devised and bequeathed all his real and personal property to J., his heirs and assigns for ever, subject to the said annuities. By a codicil to his will O. declared that if F. should die either in the lifetime of A. or after her death, without lawful issue, or making any disposition of the testator's real and personal property by will or deed, that then the same might be and become the property of J., his heirs and assigns for ever, subject to the annuities aforesaid. O. made a second codicil in the words following: "I, O., hereby, by way of further codicil to this my will, do hereby revoke and declare void the appointment of L. and C. as trustees and executors in the within will named, and do leave and bequeath all my said real, freehold and personal property to the within-named F., subject to the annuities and other conditions therein mentioned, and do hereby appoint and nominate the said F. as my sole executor and administrator." The testator made a third codicil, whereby he declared that the annuities in his will mentioned should be chargeable solely on his landed property of G., and that all his other property should be free from the same. The real estate of the testator consisted of the G. estate, held for lives renewable for ever, and limited to heirs. F. died in the lifetime of A. intestate, without having had issue, and without having made any disposition of the real or personal property comprised in the will. S. was his heiress-at-law:—Held, that the second codicil did not revoke the modifications made in the will by the first codicil; that, in the clause providing for the death of F. without lawful issue or making any disposition, in the first codicil, the word "or" should be read "and"; that the gift over was void; and that S. was absolutely entitled to the G. estate. Stretton v. Fitzgerald, 23 L. R., Ir. 466—C. A.

Codicil revoking Will does not revoke prior Codicil.]—A codicil revoking a will does not necessarily revoke a prior codicil. Farrer v. St. Catharine's College, Cambridge, 42 L. J., Ch. 809; L. R. 16 Eq. 19; 28 L. T. 800; 21 W. R. 643.

A testator made a will and two codicils, by none of which he gave anything to St. Catharine's College, and many years afterwards he made another codicil, describing it as a codicil to his last will; and thereby, after reciting that by his will he had bequeathed 1,000*l.* to St. Catharine's College, he confirmed the bequest, but in all other respects he revoked his will; and he gave to St. Catharine's College (in addition to the bequest of 1,000*l.*) 5,000*l.*, and appointed executors of his will and codicil:—Held, that the last codicil revoked the will of the testator, but not the codicils of prior date. Ib.

Implied Revocation of Intermediate Codicil.]—A testator by will gave legacies to three of his daughters, and devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate upon trusts for his wife and children. By a first codicil in 1878 he revoked one of the legacies in his will and increased another, concluding, "In all other respects I confirm my said will." By a second codicil, after reciting that he was desirous of altering the residuary devise contained in his will, he made a specific devise, and in all other respects confirmed his will. He afterwards made a third codicil, by which, after referring to his will by date and reciting a promise to that effect, he directed his trustees to grant an underlease of a house to his daughter-in-law, and gave his wife a pecuniary legacy in addition to the benefit she derived under his said will, and concluded, "In all other respects I confirm my said will except as altered by a certain codicil made thereto in 1878, whereby I revoked a legacy to my daughter Mary":—Held, that the words of confirmation in the first and third codicils were to be read as meaning that the testator did not intend to alter his general testamentary dispositions further than in the specific way mentioned in those codicils; and that the devise in the second codicil being clear, no intention to revoke it had been shewn with sufficient clearness to enable the court to reject that devise. Follett v. Pettman, 52 L. J., Ch. 521; 23 Ch. D. 337; 48 L. T. 865; 31 W. R. 779.

The testator died leaving a duly executed will, dated the 20th October, 1888, and four duly executed codicils, dated respectively the 20th October, 1888, the 7th April, 1890, the 20th October, 1891, and the 22nd October, 1891. His three brothers were appointed executors and trustees in England, under the said will and codicils. By the third codicil the testator revoked the first and second codicils. The fourth codicil confirmed the testator's "will and former codicils." The executors now applied for probate of all five documents, or for directions as to which of these should be admitted to proof:—Held, that, as the third codicil was confirmed by the fourth, the revocation of codicils one and two remained good, and that accordingly probate should go in respect of the will and last two codicils only. Carritt, In goods of, 66 L. T. 379.

d. Of Codicil by Revocation or Re-execution of Will.

By Revocation of Will.]—T. M. B. having executed a codicil at the foot of his will, cut off his signature to the will. Upon proof that he thereby intended to revoke the codicil the court held that the codicil was also revoked. Bleckley, In goods of, 52 L. J., P. 102; 8 P. D. 169; 31 W. R. 171; 47 J. P. 663.

A. made a will and a codicil thereto which he retained in his own possession. He subsequently executed a second testamentary paper, which he also called a codicil, and this paper he gave to one of the legatees named therein. The will and first codicil were not forthcoming at his death:

—Held, that as the second codicil had not been revoked by any of the modes indicated by 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 20, it was entitled to proof. Black v. Jobling, 38 L. J., P. 74; L. R. 1 P. 685; 21 L. T. 298; 17 W. R. 1108.

A testamentary paper purporting to be a codicil to a will, but being substantially independent of it, is not necessarily revoked by the revocation of the will. Ellice, In goods of, 33 L. J., P. 27; 12 W. R. 353.

A testamentary paper in the form of a codicil to a will is not revoked by the revocation of the will. It can only be revoked by one of the modes indicated by the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 20. Savage, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 25; L. R. 2 P. 78; 22 L. T. 375; 18 W. R. 766.

A person executed a will and codicil. In the latter she referred in several paragraphs to the dispositions contained in her will, and more particularly she bequeathed a legacy to be held under conditions stated in her will. She subsequently destroyed the will by burning it, but preserved the codicil:—Held, that as the codicil was not revoked by any of the methods prescribed by the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 20, it must be admitted to probate. Turner, In goods of, L. R. 2 P. 403; 27 L. T. 322; 21 W. R. 38.

A codicil is primâ facie dependent on the will. Where a will and a codicil to it have been in existence, and the will has been subsequently destroyed by the testator, the burden of proof is on the party setting up the codicil, to shew that it was the intention of the testator that it should operate separately from the will, otherwise the presumption is, that by the destruction of the will the codicil was revoked. Grimwood v. Cozens, 2 Sw. & Tr. 364; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 497.

By Re-execution of Will.]—Where a testator made and duly executed a codicil to his last will, and afterwards re-executed the original will without referring in any way to the codicil:—Held, that although the original will contained a clause revoking "all other wills," &c., yet in the absence of any evidence of an intention to revoke the will, the inference from the wording of the attestation clause being that the will was re-executed for the purpose of giving effect to certain alterations that had been made in it, the codicil was not revoked by such re-execution. Rawlings, In goods of, 41 L. T. 559; 44 J. P. 60.

e. By Duplicates.

Principles.]—S. executed a will in 1776, and in 1778 he executed a copy of the will, and a codicil in duplicate on the same day. The object of the codicil was to provide for his youngest son, who was born in 1777. In 1808 S. died, leaving four sons him surviving. After his death the will of 1776, with the duplicate codicil annexed, was found in his portfolio, and the will executed in 1778, with the duplicate codicil annexed, in a box in the same room. The will and codicil in the portfolio contained erasures which diverted the limitation of certain estates from the younger sons to the eldest son. The altered will and codicil were proved by the executrix, and acted upon until the death of all the sons of S., except the youngest son, who, when his turn to inherit, according to the unaltered will, arrived, brought ejectment against the successor of the eldest son of S. The judge asked the jury whether the two wills, with the duplicate codicils annexed to each, formed the last will of S., and whether the erasures in the will and codicil in the portfolio were intended to be final or deliberative only; and he directed the jury, that if their opinion on these two questions was in the affirmative, then the cancellation of one part was the cancellation of the other part, and the passage uncancelled was the last will of S.:—Held, that the questions left to the jury, and the direction in point of law, were correct. Doe d. Strickland v. Strickland, 8 C. B. 724; 19 L. J., C. P. 89.

Where there are duplicates of a will, one in the custody of the testator and the other not, and the testator cancels that which is in his custody, it is an effectual cancelling of both. Burtenshaw v. Gilbert, Cowp. 52; Lofft, 465.

A testatrix executed a will in duplicate, and retained one copy herself, but placed the other in independent keeping. Subsequently she revoked the copy in her own possession, tearing off the signature. The court declined to grant probate on motion of the unmutilated paper which had remained out of her possession. Slade, In goods of, 20 L. T. 330.

Where there are duplicates of a will, and the testator cancels one of them only, and the other part is left entire, yet it is an effectual cancelling of the will. Onions v. Tyrer, 2 Vern. 742; Pre. Ch. 149; Gilb. Eq. R. 130; 1 P. Wms. 343.

Presumption that the cancellation of one duplicate of a will cancels the other, though both are in the testator's possession, and the cancelled instrument has been altered. In the two latter cases the presumption weaker. Pemberton v. Pemberton, 13 Ves. 310.

Evidence.]—The testator in 1891 executed a will in duplicate and retained both parts in his possession at the time, but, in the following year, he sent one part to the defendant, who, some time in 1893, tore it up by accident along with some other papers, but, finding he had done so, caused the pieces to be pasted together. No testamentary papers were found in the testator's repositories, but soon after his death, which occurred in July, 1895, a friend of the testator produced to his solicitors holograph copies of the will and of a document which purported to have been executed as a codicil to the will and to bear date 1892, and also an original holograph document duly executed and bearing date August 22, 1892, and described as "a second codicil to my will." The last document gave a legacy of 800*l.* among the children of the friend to whom the testator had sent it and in whose custody it had remained:—Held, that the will and first codicil had been revoked, and that the second codicil alone was entitled to probate. Paige v. Brooks, 75 L. T. 455.

Evidence of declarations of a testator is not admissible to prove that he executed his will in duplicate, nor to prove that he has destroyed one part with the intention of revoking the will. Atkinson v. Morris, 66 L. J., P. 17; [1897] P. 40; 75 L. T. 440; 45 W. R. 293—C. A.

f. By Deeds and other Writings.

By Deed.]—A will executed since the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, can only be revoked by ademption of the subject-matter of the will, or by a subsequent instrument, executed according to the requirements of the statute, or otherwise as therein prescribed. Ford v. De Pontes, De Pontes v. Kendall, 30 Beav. 572; 31 L. J., Ch. 185; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 323; 5 L. T. 515; 10 W. R. 69.

Where, therefore, a married woman, having a power of appointment by will, duly executed that power by her last will, and subsequently executed two deeds, which also purported to exercise the power, but dealt differently with the property, and were not duly executed as testamentary instruments:—Held, first, that the will was a valid exercise of the power. Ib.

Held, secondly, that the will was not revoked by the deeds or either of them. Ib.

By Attested Writing.]—A testator duly executed his will. On the day of his death he wrote to his brother the following letter: "Enclosed I hand you an order to get my will from Mr. D., which please burn as soon as you receive it without reading it. I will leave you my share as a deed of gift, leaving it to your honour to pay out of it 100*l.* each to each of my two sisters, and 100*l.* to P." His signature was attested by two witnesses, and the paper was valid as a testamentary paper:—Held, that it was a writing declaring an intention to revoke, within 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26 (the Wills Act), s. 20, and that it revoked the will. Durance, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 60; L. R. 2 P. 406; 26 L. T. 983; 20 W. R. 759.

At the foot of his will the deceased wrote a memorandum to the effect: "This will was cancelled this day"; and he duly executed such memorandum in the presence of two witnesses:—Held, that such memorandum was not a will or a codicil, but only a writing, which could not be admitted to probate. Fraser, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 20; L. R. 2 P. 40; 21 L. T. 680; 18 W. R. 263.

A paper writing, signed by the executors and others, purporting to be an acknowledgment of what they understood to be the will of the testator, when he was unable to speak, although proved in the spiritual court as a testamentary paper, yet will not operate as a codicil in this court, and the bill claiming legacies under such an instrument will be dismissed. Gowler v. Standerwick, 2 Cox, 16.

By unattested Writing.]—An act inconsistent with will, though, by some accident independent of will, it fails of effect, is a revocation. Ilchester (Earl), Ex parte, 7 Ves. 370; 6 R. R. 138.

An express revocation, if only subservant to another purpose for which it is incompetent, shall not revoke. Ib., 379.

Will may be revoked by an instrument not attested as would be required to give it effect. Any disposition that would, by the instrument, have completely put an end to that will, shall have that effect. The instrument becomes ineffectual by accident or circumstances dehors the will. Ib., 374.

Where the act is valid for the whole purpose, but, by disability of person to take, or some matter dehors or subsequent to the will, it is ineffectual, it is a revocation. Ib., 373.

Disposition, so made by will as to have legal effect, and afterwards another, by which the former would be revoked, but the other substituted, and it is evident that testator did not intend revocation for any other purpose than to give it effect, if the second instrument cannot have effect of disposition, it shall not be a revocation. Cited, Ib., 372.

Testamentary appointment of guardian not revoked by a subsequent testamentary appointment not executed according to the Statute of Frauds, and not directly importing revocation. Ib.

By Invalid Will.]—An envelope containing a will and codicil properly executed, and also a subsequent will (all of real estate), not so executed, and bearing an indorsement relative to the first will and codicil erased, and, by fresh indorsement, specifying to contain the will of last date, as "the last will," &c.:—Held, that first will and codicil were not revoked thereby. Grantley v. Garthwaite, 2 Russ. 90.

Where a testamentary instrument incomplete as a will appears, on the face of it, to be intended as a substitution for a former complete will, the legacies given by the latter only shall take effect, notwithstanding both instruments are proved in the spiritual court. Jackson v. Jackson, 2 Cox, 35.

Devise of lands to A., and afterwards the devisor devised the same lands to B., a papist: both devises are void; for though the last is void as a will, yet it is good as a revocation. Roper v. Constable, 8 Vin. Abr. 141, note to pl. 2; 2 Eq. Abr. 771, pl. 8.

A domiciled Englishman married in 1822 an Englishwoman in England. In 1839, in consequence of differences, they separated, and a deed was executed, under which a power of appointment was given to the wife, which she executed by a will and codicil in 1854. A decree for a divorce, on the ground of adultery, was subsequently obtained by the wife in Scotland, and she shortly afterwards was married to a Frenchman in Scotland, and went to reside with him in France, where she died, having previously made a will in the words following: "I revoke all foregoing wills made by me up to this date, the 23rd day of June, 1856. Paris":—Held, that there was no revocation of the will and codicil of 1854. Dolphin v. Robins, 3 Macq. H. L. 563; 7 H. L. Cas. 390; 29 L. J., P. 11; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1271; 7 W. R. 674.

By Invalid Codicil.]—A former will of land is cancelled, the testator supposing a later will by him made of the same land to the same effect was good. If that proves not to be duly executed, equity will set up the former will. Onions v. Tyrer, 2 Vern. 743; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 130; 1 P. Wms. 343.

A codicil revoked valid bequests in a will, and bequeathed the property to a fund which was being raised for the purpose of buying land for a charity:—Held, that although the gift by the codicil failed, the revocation nevertheless took effect. Onions v. Tyrer (ante, col. 388) distinguished. Tupper v. Tupper, 1 Kay & J. 665; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 917; 3 W. R. 616.

A testator, by a codicil to his will, imposed a condition respecting real estate of which he had, by his will, made a specific devise. The condition was to have effect upon the personalty bequeathed by the will. The codicil was unattested, but admitted to probate. This was before the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26:—Held, that such codicil could not be looked at by the court in the construction of the will, so far as it affected the real estate. Louis v. Louis, 10 L. T. 825.

Testator, by his will, gave an annuity payable out of his freehold, copyhold and personal estate, and, by a codicil not duly attested, revoked the annuity:—Held, that this was a subsisting charge upon the freeholds. Mortimer v. West, 2 Sim. 274; 27 R. R. 98. See Smith v. Newboult, 1 W. R. 230.

A testatrix left a will and a codicil prepared by her solicitor and duly executed, and a third paper purporting to be a second codicil. At her death there appeared at the foot of the will in her handwriting, "I declare this to be null and void," with her signature annexed. The first codicil also contained the words "null and void." The third codicil was in her writing; it contained no attestation clause, but two witnesses had signed it, who could say no more than that the paper had writing on it. They did not know that it was a will, nor could they say that her signature was on the paper:—Held, that the second codicil was not duly attested, and therefore that the will and first codicil remained unrevoked. Fischer v. Popham, 44 L. J., P. 47; L. R. 3 P. 246; 33 L. T. 231; 23 W. R. 683.

g. Effect of Several Conflicting Wills, Clauses or Codicils.

Two Wills of same Date.]—If will be made, and afterwards another will without cancelling the former, and either will is proved to be confirmed after the other will, the whole estate comprised in the will so last confirmed will go according to the limitations in that will. Phipps v. Anglesey, 7 Bro. P. C. 445.

If there are two inconsistent wills of the same date, neither of which can be proved to be last executed, they are both void by the common law of uncertainty, and will let in the heir-at-law, unless such wills are explained by some subsequent act of the testator, so as to reconcile such inconsistency. Ib.

If two wills appear, and the limitations in both are consistent, and they have both been confirmed by various codicils, the wills and codicils may be taken together as one testamentary disposition, and such construction made as that the limitations in both wills shall take place, to the disherison of the heir-at-law. Ib.

Two Wills of different Purport—No Revocatory Clause.]—G. H. made two wills. By the first of such wills he gave the whole of his real and personal estate and effects to his wife E. H., absolutely, and appointed her sole executrix thereof, and revoked all former wills. By the second will he gave his household furniture and effects and all moneys whatsoever deposited or invested to his wife for life, and after her decease to his wife's sister, M. B., absolutely, whom he also appointed joint executrix with his wife. The said will contained no disposition of the real estate or the residue of the personal estate, and no clause revocatory of previous wills. The court granted probate of both papers as together constituting the will of the testator, but before doing so required that notice of the application for such probate should be served on the heir-at-law. Hartley, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 1; 29 W. R. 356.

When a later will does not expressly revoke an earlier one, and the two may stand together in several important matters, it lies on the party impugning the earlier will to prove the intention of the testator to revoke it by the later; and, in deciding such a question, conjecture or slight probabilities are not sufficient, and the words "this is my last will," are not entitled to any weight whatever. Leslie v. Leslie, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 332.

A mother bequeathed the residue of her estate, after payment of debts and certain legacies, to her daughter absolutely, and appointed her sole executrix. By a subsequent testamentary paper which purported to be her last will, but contained no revocatory clause or bequest of the residue, she gave all her estate to her daughter for life, and appointed her sole executrix, and then gave certain legacies payable after her daughter's decease:—Held, that as the second will did not dispose of the residue, it did not revoke the residuary bequest in the earlier will, and that both instruments were therefore entitled to probate. Petchell, In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 22; L. R. 3 P. 153; 30 L. T. 74; 22 W. R. 353.

A husband made a will, devising his real estate to his wife absolutely; afterwards he executed another will giving his real estate to trustees upon trust after his wife's death for the Bristol General Hospital, and he devised to his trustees all the residue of his real estate, and "the proceeds which by any law to the contrary might not by that will pass to the hospital, fully relying upon my trustees to carry out my wishes and desires." The gift to the hospital was void, and the trustees claimed to take the real estate beneficially under the ultimate gift. The court held that they did not take beneficially. The question then arose as to whether the first will was revoked by the second:—Held, that the first will was revoked by the devises in the second, notwithstanding that these devises were invalid. Baker v. Story, 31 L. T. 631; 23 W. R. 147.

If it can be collected from the language of the will, taken in connection with the facts with which it was used, that it was the intention of the testator to dispose of his property in a different manner to that in which he disposed of it by an earlier will, the earlier will will be revoked, and this although in some particulars the later will does not completely cover the whole subject-matter of the earlier will. Dempsey v. Lawson, 46 L. J., P. 23; 2 P. D. 98; 36 L. T. 515; 25 W. R. 629.

A person executed a will in 1858, by which she disposed of the whole of her property. In 1860 she executed another will, which commenced, "This is the last will and testament of me," &c. It varied and repeated several bequests given in the first will, appointed the same executors for England as in that document, but contained no residuary nor revocatory clauses:—Held, that, from the general tenor of the last will, it was clear that the testatrix did not intend the first will to remain in force, and that it therefore was revoked. Ib.

The doctrine that a will disposing of the whole property of a testator is ex necessitate a revocation in toto of a former will, also disposing of the whole, only applies where the dispositions are so inconsistent that the papers cannot stand together. O'Leary v. Douglass, 1 L. R., Ir. 45.

A will disposing of the whole of the testator's property will act as a revocation of a will disposing of a part only of the property of the testator. Moorhouse v. Lord, 10 H. L. Cas. 272; 1 N. R. 555; 32 L. J., Ch. 295; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 677; 8 L. T. 212; 11 W. R. 637.

If a subsequent testamentary paper is only partly inconsistent with one of an earlier date, the last-mentioned instrument is only revoked as to those parts where it is inconsistent, and both of the papers are entitled to probate. Lemage v. Goodban, 35 L. J., P. 28; L. R. 1 P. 57; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 32; 13 L. T. 508.

Where there are two testamentary papers, each professing in form to be the last of the deceased, the court, in determining whether one is or both are entitled to probate, must be guided by the consideration, not whether the testator intended them both together to form his will, but what dispositions of his property he designed to revoke or to retain. Ib.

A., by will, made in 1853, gave all his real and personal estate to B. and appointed B. sole executor, and by a subsequent will, which contained no clause of revocation, he gave two houses to C., and appointed C. sole executor:—Held, that the latter will was not inconsistent with the earlier, and therefore did not revoke it, and that B. and C. were entitled to probate of both instruments. Geaves v. Price, 3 Sw. & Tr. 71; 32 L. J., P. 113; 8 L. T. 610; 11 W. R. 809.

A testator, by his will, dated in June, 1881, gave all his property of every description to J. S., and appointed her sole executrix. In September, 1881, he executed another testamentary document, by which he gave, devised and bequeathed his share and interest in certain real property to his sister E. H., and appointed her sole executrix. The second will did not in terms revoke the first will. The second will was afterwards mutilated by the testator to such an extent as to revoke its effect entirely. The first will was, however, left intact. On the death of the testator J. S. applied for probate of the first will. It appeared that the whole estate of the testator was substantially represented by the realty, but that there was also personalty of a small amount, subject to debts:—Held, that, having regard to the provisions of s. 22 of the Wills Act, 1837, the second will in part revoked the first will, namely, as to the real estate of the testator; and that, therefore, the probate of the first will must be limited to the personal property of the testator, there being an intestacy as to his real estate. Hodgkinson, In goods of, 62 L. J., P. 116; [1893] P. 339; 69 L. T. 540—C. A.

The expression, "This is my last will and testament," does not operate as a revocation of a former will, without words to that effect, as regards real estate. A testator being entitled to a reversion in fee in copyhold property, which he had not surrendered to the use of his will, and being also entitled to certain freeholds in fee simple in possession, made a will in 1804, by which he affected to devise these copyholds and all other his freehold, leasehold and copyhold estates, to his wife for life, with remainder to his three younger children, Thomas, John and Eliza. In 1807 he made another will, commencing with the words, "This is the last will and testament of me," &c., and thereby, after reciting that on his death his eldest son, Edward, would become entitled to all his freehold estates, the testator gave all his real and personal estates to his wife for life, and after her death all his "property" and effects to all his children, except Edward, equally, share and share alike. The testator died in 1807, leaving his said four children, and also two others born since the date of the former will. In 1851 the reversion of the copyholds fell into possession:—Held, that, as there was freehold property upon which the general devise in the second will could operate, there was no ground for deciding that it revoked the intended devise of the copyholds by the former will:—Held, further, that it was impossible to consider the intention to devise the copyholds expressed in the first will to be a reason for supplying a surrender to the uses of the testator's will generally, and thus to make the general devise in the second will operate to pass the copyholds, by revoking the former will, except so far as it expressed that intention, because the intention expressed by the first will was to give all the copyholds to three only of the five objects to whom the general devise in the second will was made, and therefore that intention could not apply to the second will. Freeman v. Freeman, 1 Kay, 479; 2 Eq. R. 522. Affirmed, 5 De G. M. & G. 704; 23 L. J., Ch. 838; 2 W. R. 658.

A testator left three testamentary papers. The first disposed of the whole of his property. The second disposed of part only, and began with the words, "This is my last will and testament." The third, of the same date, and written on the same sheet of paper as the second, appointed executors in these terms: "Of this my will I appoint the said W. W. and C. S. executor and executrix":—Held, that, although there were no express words of revocation, and the deceased had disposed of part only of his property, the first will was revoked. Plenty v. West, 16 Beav. 173; 22 L. J., Ch. 185; 17 Jur. 9; 1 W. R. 3; 1 Robert. 264.

A testator left four testamentary instruments, duly executed. After the ecclesiastical court had held that the second and third alone were valid as to the personal estate, this court, on the certificate of the common pleas, decided that, as to the real estate, the last instrument alone constituted the last will. Ib.

A testamentary paper relating to real estate alone, commencing, "This is the last will and testament of me, relating to all my real estate whatsoever":—Held, totally to revoke a prior will. Ib.

Substitution.]—A testatrix, having made a formal will, subsequently executed a holograph will which did not contain residuary or revocation clauses, nor any powers for the administration of the estate, such as the first will did:—Held, that, as the second will disposed of all the property of the testatrix, it was to be taken to be in substitution for, and must be admitted to probate in exclusion of the first will. Turnour, In goods of, 56 L. T. 671; 50 J. P. 344.

A testator left two substantive wills, each disposing of his entire property. By the first, dated in 1838, he appointed executors, to one of whom he gave the residue of his estate. By the second will, dated in 1839, which contained no revocation of the prior one, he gave the whole of his property to his wife, with the exception of 5*l.*, but appointed no executors:—Held, that the second will operated as a revocation of the first will, and was alone entitled to probate. Henfrey v. Henfrey, 4 Moore, P. C. 29; 6 Jur. 355.

On construction of two wills, second held to be in substitution of first. Hemming v. Gurrey, 2 Sim. & S. 311. See 25 R. R. 209.

Inconsistent Clauses in same Will—Effect of.]—A testator devised different estates, consisting of houses and land, to different devisees, some of whom were of his own name, to some in fee, and to others for life only; and, by a residuary clause, devised all the rest, residue and remainder of his messuages, lands, &c., not thereinbefore disposed of, to his wife, her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, for ever. The following clauses were added by the testator, immediately before executing the will: "I do further give to my wife the house wherein I now live, also the cottage, and all the buildings, cattle and everything belonging to me in and about this house." I also entail my land to the Spencers' male heir, so long as one shall remain." The testator's own name was Spencer:—Held, that the devise to the wife of the residue was not affected by the subsequent specific devise, or the devise to the Spencers' male heir; that the devise of the residue, and the specific devise to the wife, were not inconsistent, and might both stand together; and that the clause as to the entail was either unintelligible or inapplicable to the property devised to the wife. Doe d. Spencer v. Pedley, 1 M. & W. 662; 1 Tyr. & G. 882; 5 L. J., Ex. 221.

A testator seised of freehold and copyhold property made his will, ordering, first, that his debts should be paid, and then devising to his wife for her life his house, croft and garden, part of the freehold, with remainder over. The will then proceeded: "Also I give unto my wife, her heirs and assigns, for ever, all my real and personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever unto me belonging, both freehold and copyhold, and now surrendered to uses of my will, and to have the same at my decease; but if my personal estate should not be sufficient to discharge my debts, then I charge my copyhold estate with the payment of the same." And he appointed his wife and others executors:—Held, that the latter clause of the will did not revoke the former, but gave the wife, in addition to her life estate in the freehold house, croft and garden, an estate in fee in the copyhold and the other freehold property, leaving untouched the remainder created by the first clause. Roe d. Snape v. Nevill, 11 Q. B. 466; 17 L. J., Q. B. 119.

Conflicting Wills and Codicils.] — Testator bequeathed a year's wages and 150*l.* to his servant, J. F. By a codicil he revoked those bequests, and gave J. F. an annuity in lieu of them. By a subsequent codicil he revoked every gift in his will bequeathed to J. F., his late outler, both the one year's wages and the further pecuniary legacy of 150*l.*:—Held, that the annuity given by the prior codicil was not revoked. Pratt v. Pratt, 14 Sim. 129; 8 Jur. 507.

A testator appointed A. B. and C. D. trustees and executors of his will. By a codicil he bequeathed to each of the trustees named in his will the sum of 5,000*l.*, on condition that he accepted the trusts thereof. By a subsequent codicil he revoked all that part of his will which related to C. D., and requested E. F. "to undertake and fulfil the same purposes and intentions, and on the same conditions for the effecting of which he had appointed the said C. D." By a subsequent codicil he revoked the appointment of A. B. and C. D. as trustees and executors, and all legacies to them, and he nominated E. F. executor and trustee thereof:—Held, that E. F. was entitled to the legacy of 5,000*l.* Radburn v. Jervis, 3 Beav. 450.

A testator bequeathed to A., B., C. and D., the sons and daughters of X., 500*l.* apiece. By a codicil he bequeathed 2,000*l.* to be divided between A., B. and C. By a further codicil he revoked and cancelled all the moneys bequeathed "to the sons and daughters of X.," in whatever will or codicil such sums might theretofore have been bequeathed, and, "in lieu thereof," he bequeathed 10,000*l.* "to the sons and daughters of X., to wit, A., B. and C.," to be divided equally between them:—Held, that the second codicil did not revoke the gift of 500*l.* made to D. by the will. Barclay v. Maskelyne, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 12.

A testator bequeathed to A. and B. 500*l.* stock apiece; he then gave his "particular residue," consisting of the residue of all his moneys and securities for money, but without including any portion which could not be bequeathed for charitable purposes, to trustees, upon charitable trusts; and he bequeathed his general residuary personal estate, including therein his particular residuary estate, if the trusts thereof should fail, to A. and B. By his first, second and third codicils he gave other stock and a sum of money to A. By his fourth codicil he revoked all the moneys bequeathed to A. and B., in whatever will or codicil such legacies might have been bequeathed, and in lieu gave stock to be divided between them:—Held, that the fourth codicil revoked the gifts of stock and money made by the will and preceding codicils to A. and B. respectively, but did not revoke the gift of the general residue contained in the will. Ib.

A testator, by his will, gave the residue of his personal estate to A., B. and C., to be equally divided between them. By a codicil he gave A. the arrears of rent due to him for his real estate, and the amount of any salary due to him, and also bequeathed to A. all his clothes and any other property, goods and articles belonging to him at the time of his death. By another codicil he revoked the bequest made to B. by his will:—Held, that the gift to A. by the first codicil was a general one, and that the words, "property, goods and articles," were not to be confined to articles ejusdem generis with clothes; and that consequently A. was entitled to two-thirds and C. to one-third of the residue. Everall v. Browne, 22 L. J., Ch. 376; 1 Sm. & G. 368; 1 W. R. 210, 226.

Testatrix, by her will, gave legacies of 200*l.* each to the seven children of J. B., and also other interests. By a first codicil she revoked the legacies of 200*l.* to the children of J. B., and all other gifts to them by the will, and in lieu thereof gave legacies of 200*l.* each to Samuel and four other of the children by name. She made a second codicil, simply "cancelling all legacies left on her will to the children of J. B." By a third codicil she revoked "the legacy of 200*l.* given by a previous codicil" to Samuel:—Held, that the other four legacies given by the first codicil were not revoked. Bunny v. Bunny, 3 Beav. 109; 9 L. J., Ch. 335; 4 Jur. 716.

A testator gave the income of his property to F. and two other persons successively for life, and on the death of the survivor he gave all his property to the eldest son then living of W., his executors, administrators and assigns. W. had three sons, of whom W. W. was the eldest. The testator by a codicil revoked so much of his will as related to W. W., and left F., on the death of the tenants for life, in the full enjoyment of all his property :—Held, that the gift to F. in the codicil enlarged his life estate into absolute ownership, and being inconsistent with the gift to the eldest son of W., revoked it, whether the revocation of the gift to W. W. operated as a revocation of the gift to the "eldest son of W.," or not. Wells v. Wells, 17 Beav. 490 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 691 ; 17 Jur. 1020 ; 2 W. R. 6.

Testator by his will devised the lands of K., held for a term of years, to H. and J. Ryan, and the longest liver of them. He afterwards executed two codicils on the same day. In the first he did not mention K. by name ; but after directing two bonds to be given to his eldest son, "to create a fund to pay the rent of their lands of K.," he relinquished "a settlement made to J. Ryan, of an interest concern on this occasion, and desired that the entire interest and property arising out of this farm, after the demise and extinction of the present lease, be converted into one fund." By the other codicil he gave certain property to pay the head-rent of K. : —Held, that the bequest of K. to J. Ryan was not revoked by the codicils. O'Shea v. Howley, 1 Jo. & Lat. 391 ; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 56.

Testator by his will gave real estate, with various limitations, and also stock to his wife for life or widowhood, and after her death to the person who should be entitled to his residuary real estate, either as tenant for life or in tail male. By his first codicil he gave his residuary estate to his widow. By the fourth codicil he revoked the dispositions made of his real and personal estate ; and instead he gave his real and personal estate to his daughter ; remainder as to the same to his grandson and his heirs in strict entail, as in his will directed, but he was not to take possession till he should attain thirty-one, and, on failure of issue of his grandson, he ordered that his estate and effects should go and descend as by his will directed :—Held, that gift of the residuary property by the first codicil was not revoked by the fourth codicil, that the funded property did not fall into the residue, but was given for life to the daughter, remainder in strict settlement to the grandson for life, remainder to his eldest son. Patch v. Graves, 3 Drew. 348.

Testator devised all his real estate to his sister for life, remainder to her children as she should appoint : for want of appointment, to all her children and their heirs as tenants in common. His sister having two daughters, by a codicil, declared to be a codicil to his will, not then at hand, he gave one of them an annuity, and, directing his annuities to be paid out of his 3 per cent. stock, he charged them on his real estate in case of a deficiency, and, directing the residue of his personal estate to be invested in freehold lands and hereditaments, he recommended to his sister to settle and convey, or join with her husband in settling and conveying, all his estates and property which she might derive from him after his decease to the use of her two daughters for life, in such parts, shares and proportions as she would approve, with remainder to their respective issue, and cross-remainders, and the usual powers and clauses in strict settlement. The testator's sister died in his life, and her two daughters were co-heiresses. Some real estates were purchased between the executions of the will and codicil. As to the real estate, the will is not revoked, but is republished by the codicil, and the two nieces are entitled to all the real estates, and to those directed to be purchased as tenants in common in fee. Meggison v. Moore, 2 Ves. 630.

Effect of Several Instruments Taken Together.] —Testator, by his will, gave 500*l.* to A. and 1,000*l.* to B., to be paid within twelve calendar months after his wife's death. By a codicil of the same date he reduced those legacies to 300*l.* and 500*l.* respectively. Afterwards he formally republished his will. By a second codicil, after reciting the bequest in his will of 500*l.* to A., he revoked that bequest, and, in lieu of it, gave A. 300*l.*, to be paid at the same time as the revoked bequest was directed by his will. By a third codicil, after reciting that by his will he had given R. 3,000*l.*, he reduced that legacy to 2,000*l.*, and then directed that the 300*l.* given to A., as well as the 1,000*l.* given to B., should not be paid till twelve months after the death of his wife :—Held, taking all the instruments together, that B. was entitled to a legacy of 1,000*l.* Grand v. Reeve, 11 Sim. 66.

Construction of several testamentary papers, that some revoked others, probate having been granted of all. Beauchamp v. Hardwicke (Earl), 5 Ves. 280.

A testator, by his will, gave 3,000*l.* to his brother B. for life, with remainder, as to 1,000*l.*, to his wife for life ; remainder, as to the whole, to his children. He then gave 6,000*l.* to his sister S. for life, with remainder to her husband for life, remainder to her children ; and, after bequeathing 10*l.* a year to each of his two maid-servants for their lives, he gave all his real estate, and the residue of his personal estate, to his sister H. absolutely. By a testamentary paper, described as a codicil to his will, he left his brother B. an equal share of his effects with his sister, to have the interest for his life, with remainder to his children, subject to a life interest in 1,000*l.* to his wife, if living at his death ; and his sister S. was to have an equal share with his sister H. By a subsequent testamentary paper, also described as a codicil, he left his two maid-servants 10*l.* a year each for their lives, and nominated a person to act as trustee with the executors named in the will :—Held, upon the effect of all the testamentary papers taken together, that the will, though modified, was not wholly revoked by the first codicil. Cookson v. Hancock, 2 Myl. & C. 606 ; 6 L. J., Ch. 56. Affirming 1 Keen, 817.

Testator, by his will, gave all his property to his wife absolutely. By a subsequent incomplete testamentary paper he gave all his property to his wife and two other persons, in trust, to sell and pay the interest of the proceeds to his wife for her life, and after her decease to dispose of the principal to the purposes after mentioned. The testator then gave several legacies and annuities, and directed that, after the death and failure of issue of one of the annuitants, the annuity should be paid to his residuary legatee, but he did not name any. In another testamentary paper, the testator gave legacies and annuities to the legatees and annuitants named in the former paper, and also to other persons :—Held, that the three papers formed together the testator's will ; that the bequest to the wife, in the first paper, was not revoked, except so far as was necessary to provide for the legacies and annuities ; and that the legacies given by the second and third papers were single, and not cumulative. Brine v. Ferrier, 7 Sim. 549 ; 1 Myl. & Cr. 338.

Construction of a will and several very inaccurate codicils upon a disposition of the personal estate: as to the interest, whether absolute or for life; as to the extent, whether general or specific and exempt from debts. Coxe v. Basset, 3 Ves. 155.

—— Of Gift of whole Estate.]—Where a codicil contains an unbroken set of limitations not reconcilable with those in the will and exhausting the fee, it is to be inferred that the testator intended to dispose of the whole fee by the codicil, which he had otherwise disposed of by his will. Daly v. Daly, 2 Jo. & Lat. 752. S. C., on rehearing, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 508.

Testator devised lands to the use of H. for life without impeachment of waste, remainder to trustees during his life to preserve, &c., remainder after his decease to trustees for a term of 500 years, upon trust to raise portions for his younger children, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with several remainders over. By a codicil to his will the testator revoked any bequest or devise to H. by any former will or codicil, and he devised the same lands to H. during his life, subject to an annuity which he had by deed charged thereon, remainder to M. during his life to preserve, &c., remainder to the first and other sons of H. in tail, remainder to M. D. in fee; and he directed that the codicil should be taken as part of his will. Semble, that the devise of the term of 500 years and the trusts thereof are revoked by the codicil. Ib.

A bequest of all the property that the testator might die possessed of:—Held, from expressions in a codicil of even date, to pass only a part of the testator's property. Att.-Gen. v. Wiltshere, 15 Sim. 37; 11 Jur. 792.

—— Of Inconsistent Directions.]—A testator directed that his trustees should stand possessed of all his freehold and copyhold estates, out of the rents and profits, but not by way of mortgage or sale, to discharge the mortgages and incumbrances affecting the same, and by a codicil directed that his trustees should out of such rents and profits (after the death of his wife) lay apart 5,000*l.* yearly, to form, with the interest, an accumulating sum for the purpose of discharging such mortgages:—Held, that the direction in the codicil was not a revocation of the direction in the will; and therefore that the trustees during the life of the wife should appropriate the whole of the rents and profits in discharging the mortgages. Lovat (Lord) v. Leeds (Duchess), 2 Dr. & Sm. 62. Affirmed, 7 L. T. 36.

A will, devising estates for life without impeachment of waste, not revoked by codicil directing the trustees to let, until tenant for life married, such leases under restrictions, one of which was that the lessees should not be unimpeachable of waste. Lushington v. Boldero, G. Cooper, 216; 14 R. R. 251.

Additional or Substituted Gift.]—A testator in his lifetime by bond secured to H. C. C. an annuity of 300*l.* for life, payable on the usual quarter-days, &c., and by his will confirmed it, and bequeathed a further annuity of 200*l.* payable in the same manner, it being his intention that she should receive an annuity of 500*l.* instead of 300*l.* By a codicil the testator directed his trustees to raise 500*l.* a year, and pay the same to H. C. C. during her life by quarterly payments:—Held, that the second annuity was not cumulative. Radburn v. Jervis, 3 Beav. 450.

Omission not Revocation.]—A testatrix, by her will, bequeathed money to trustees, upon trust, to accumulate for a period exceeding what the law allows, and to pay and divide the principal sum, interest and accumulations unto and amongst a certain class, with a power of advancement in favour of sons. By a codicil, after reciting that she had, by her will, bequeathed this sum upon trust to accumulate, and to pay and divide the same sum, and all accumulations thereof, in manner therein mentioned, she directed, that in lieu of the accumulation and disposition made thereof, by her will, the trustees should accumulate for twenty-one years after her decease, and should stand possessed of the principal money, interest and accumulations upon trust for such of the class as should be then living. The codicil did not repeat the power of advancement, but concluded by confirming the will in every particular in which the same was not thereby altered:—Held, that the power of advancement was a valid and subsisting power, and was not revoked by the codicil. Hill v. Walker, 4 Kay & J. 166.

Gift of Residue by both Will and Codicil.]—The gift of a residue which is totidem verbis the same in the first and fourth codicils, makes it manifest that the testator intended to substitute one in place of the other. St. Albans (Duke) v. Beauclerk, 2 Atk. 636. And see 1 Bro. C. C. 392.

A testator by his will gave the residue of his personal estate to his wife for her life, and after her decease to Sir C. E. D., absolutely; he subsequently, by a codicil which did not affect the gift of the residue, altered his will in some respects, and confirmed it in every other. Next day he made a second codicil, by which he gave some pecuniary and specific legacies, and concluded thus: "All the rest and residue of my property not hereinbefore (or by my will or any other codicil) disposed of, I give and bequeath to my nephew, C. P. Y., and to Sir C. E. D., their executors, administrators and assigns, after the death of my said dear wife, equally to be divided between them":—Held, that the above clause of the second codicil was a revocation of the gift by the will of the residue to Sir C. E. D., and that he was accordingly only entitled to an equal share thereof with C. P. Y. Hardwick (Earl) v. Douglas, 7 Cl. & F. 795; West, 555. Reversing S. C., nom. Douglas v. Leake, 5 L. J., Ch. 25.

A testator bequeathed all the residue of the estate and effects, which at his death he should have power to dispose of, to trustees in trust for the separate use of a married woman for her life, with a general power of appointment over the capital of the fund, and a limitation (in default of appointment), in trust for such persons of her blood and kindred as would be entitled, under the Statute of Distributions, to her personal estate, if she had died unmarried. By a codicil he bequeathed an annuity and gave all his property, in houses or in the funds, or of any other sort, not disposed of by his will, and which had accumulated since the making thereof, in trust for the married woman and three other legatees, equally to be divided amongst them. There was, at the testator's death, no description of property not disposed of by his will or accumulated since:—Held, that the beneficial title to the testator's property was not affected by the codicil, unless in the event of the married woman's death without having fully exercised her power, and without leaving any person of her blood and kindred living at her death. Lee v. Delane, 4 De G. & Sm. 1; 14 Jur. 861.

A testatrix gave to A. for life the interest of 300*l.*, or thereabouts, invested by her in the General Steam Navigation Company, and the interest of 200*l.*; and after A.'s death she gave the "said principal sum of 500*l.*" to A.'s children; and she directed that in case of her personal estate proving insufficient for the payment of her legacies such deficiency should be made up out of her real estate by sale or mortgage. By a codicil, she gave "all her personal estate" to B.:—Held, that the whole personal estate passed by the codicil; that the legacy of 300*l.* was specific, and was revoked by the codicil, and that the legacy of 200*l.* was not revoked, but remained charged on the real estate. Kermode v. Macdonald, 37 L. J., Ch. 879; L. R. 3 Ch. 584; 19 L. T. 179; 17 W. R. 4.

Testator bequeaths as follows:—"As to all that my leasehold house in L. and all my household goods and furniture there and at S., and as to all my plate, linen, china, pictures, live and dead stock, and all the residue of my goods, chattels, and personal estate, &c., I give and bequeath the same to A." By a codicil he revokes the bequest "of the residue" to A., and gives "the residue of his said personal estate" to B.; the gift of the general residue only, and not of the articles enumerated, is revoked by this codicil. Clarke v. Butler, 1 Mer. 304: 15 R. R. 118.

Effect of conflicting dispositions in a will and in a codicil of the same residuary personal estate. Sanford v. Sanford, 1 De G. & Sm. 67; 11 Jur. 322.

Testator, by will, distributed 7,300*l.* stock amongst several legatees, except 200*l.* surplus of the stock, which he directed to be applied in defraying any necessary expenses. By a codicil, dated two years after the will, at which time there was, by reason of certain erasures made in his will, a much larger surplus than 200*l.* stock, he left "the surplus of his money in funds," to be appropriated as his executors might think proper among the several legatees. By a subsequent codicil, dated a few days after the former, the testator, after bequeathing certain snuff-boxes, &c., and stating that there appeared "a surplus remaining after the legacies aforesaid were paid," begged his executor to distribute the same among the children of his son W. There was property of inconsiderable amount besides stock, to which the residuary bequest contained in the last codicil might be applied:—Held, that that bequest did not operate as a revocation of the bequest of the surplus of the funds contained in the second codicil. Inglefield v. Coghlan, 2 Coll. C. C. 247.

A testator directed his trustees and executors to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses out of his personal estate, and if that should be insufficient, he charged them on his real estate; and he bequeathed all the rest and residue of his personal estate to his daughters. By a codicil, after making alterations in the dispositions of his real estate, he proceeded: "As to all moneys that may be left after my decease, I give and bequeath the same" upon the trusts therein mentioned:—Held, that the gift in the codicil was only a gift of the money which was in the testator's hands at his death; and that, subject to this exception, the residuary gift in the will remained in force. Williams v. Williams, 47 L. J., Ch. 857; 8 Ch. D. 789; 39 L. T. 180; 27 W. R. 100.

h. Effect of Erroneous Assumption or Recital.

Erroneous Assumption of Fact.]—Where a devise in a will is clear, it is incumbent on those who contend that it has been revoked by a codicil to shew that the intention to revoke is equally clear and free from doubt with the original intention to devise; for if there is only a reasonable doubt whether the clause of revocation was intended to include the particular devise, then such devise ought to stand. Barclay v. Maskelyne, 1 Johns. 124; 28 L. J., Ch. 115; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1293; 7 W. R. 43.

A bequest of specific chattels by will is revoked by a bequest simpliciter of the chattels by a codicil to another; but where the latter bequest is not made, but is prefaced by a recital shewing that it was founded on a misconception of the true effect of the will, the same result will not necessarily follow. Ib.

Thus where a will bequeathing specific chattels to A. (who was not personally known to the testator) was followed by a codicil reciting (erroneously) that by the will they were bequeathed to B. (who was uncle to A., and a personal friend of the testator), revoking that bequest on the ground that B. was lately dead, and testator's connection with his family thereby almost null, and bequeathing the same chattels to another family:—Held, that the bequest in the will was not revoked by the codicil. Ib.

The circumstance that it might reasonably be doubted whether, if the real effect of the will had been present to the testator's mind, he would not still have disposed of the property differently:—Held, not to affect this conclusion. Ib.

M., by will in 1734, before the Mortmain Act, devised particular lands and his personal estates to be laid out in land to charitable uses. By codicil, in 1736, after the act, M. declared, that if by the Mortmain Act his estates could not pass to those uses, he then devised them to B. By a second codicil in 1737, testator, reciting that he was advised his devise of the land to the charity was void, bequeathed his personal estate to the charity, and the real to B. Testator died in February, 1738. On a case stated to King's Bench, the judges certified that the estates were well devised to B. by the second codicil, and Lord Chancellor decreed the same to him accordingly. Att.-Gen. v. Lloyd, 3 Atk. 551; 1 Ves. 32.

Testatrix, by codicil, gave to A. the legacy given by her will to the children of B., "as I know not whether any of them are alive, and if they are well provided for, though they are living." B. is entitled; the construction being that, if they are living, they are well provided for. Att.-Gen. v. Ward, 3 Ves. 327.

Testator by his will gave legacies to A. and B., describing them as grandchildren of C., and their residence in A. By a codicil he revoked these legacies, giving as a reason that legatees were dead. The fact not being true, they were held entitled upon proof of identity. Campbell v. French, 3 Ves. 321; 4 R. R. 5.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his daughter, on trust for her maintenance and support until she attained twenty-one, or married with the consent of his trustees under that age, and, upon her attaining such age or her marriage, for her separate use, with remainder to her children, and, in case of her death without issue, then over. The testator afterwards declared by a codicil that, in consequence of a nervous debility, his daughter was unfit for the control of herself, and his will was that she should not marry, and in case of her marriage or death he gave the property he had bequeathed to her over to the same legatees in remainder:—Held, that the limitation over by the codicil, being in general restraint of marriage, was void as to the life interest of the daughter; that the court would not inquire into the fact of whether the testator was mistaken or not with reference to his daughter's health or capacity, quære. Morley v. Rennoldson, 2 Hare, 570; 12 L. J., Ch. 372; 7 Jur. 938.

A testator having by his will given 4,000*l.* to certain charitable institutions, made a codicil as follows: "Presuming and believing that the rental of my estate will produce 16,000*l.* a year, I give those institutions 4,000*l.* more." The income of the estate, however, was at his death much less than 16,000*l.* a year:—Held, that the testator's reason for the gift of the second 4,000*l.* being the supposed increase of his property, and the fact of such increase being incorrect, the gift of this 4,000*l.* failed. Thomas v. Howell, 43 L. J., Ch. 511.

A testator destroyed his will, believing that it had already been revoked by a later will, which was, in fact, invalid; and the only evidence of his object in destroying it was a declaration made at the time that it was no use to keep it, as he had another:—Held, that the will was not revoked. Clarkson v. Clarkson, 2 Sw. & Tr. 497; 31 L. J., P. 143; 6 L. T. 506; 10 W. R. 781.

—— Of Law.]—The destruction of a last will by burning or otherwise does not revive an earlier will; and therefore where a testatrix caused her last will to be destroyed by burning it, at the same time expressing a wish that the provisions of an earlier will (which had been in terms revoked by a clause in the said last will) should thereupon again become operative:—Held, to be only a conditional revocation of the last will, and that, as the condition was inoperative, the act of destruction was nugatory, and the last will was still valid and subsisting, and was entitled to probate. Welch v. Gardner, 51 J. P. 760.

Erroneous Recital.]—Testator, by codicil, revoked the legacy of 50*l.* bequeathed to his sister. The only legacy given to her was 100*l.* given by the will; as to the effect of the codicil, quære. Carrington (Lord) v. Payne, 5 Ves. 405; 5 R. R. 87.

Testator gave the interest of 2,000*l.* to G. S., and at his death to his children, and after making some other gifts, "the sum of 1,000*l.* to G. S., in addition to 1,000*l.* before mentioned":—Held, that the gift of 2,000*l.* was not cut down by the subsequent gift, and that the limitations affecting the first gift were not carried on to the subsequent gift, which was to G. S. absolutely. Mann v. Fuller, 1 Kay, 624; 2 Eq. R. 1085; 23 L. J., Ch. 543; 2 W. R. 510.

A testatrix by her will gives a legacy of 500*l.* to be invested, and the annual produce paid to E. H. for life, and after her death to J. H. absolutely. The testatrix then makes five codicils, by some of which she gave several legacies of the same amount to the same persons as she had previously given by other codicils anterior in date, expressing, in other instances of legacies given, that those legacies were in addition to those already given, but not using the words, "in addition to," where she gives the same sums to the same persons as before in a former codicil. E. H. dies before the testatrix, who, after the death of E. H., by a codicil to her will, declares that she revokes the legacy of 100*l.* given to J. H. Evidence is adduced to shew that the testatrix intended to cancel two of the codicils, supported by the fact that she calls her fourth codicil her third codicil, and also that she promised to settle 400*l.* on J. H. The will and all the codicils are proved, notwithstanding such evidence; and on the questions, whether the legacies given twice over were, in the second instance, substitutionary or cumulative, and whether the revocation as to the legacy called 100*l.* revoked the legacy of 500*l.* given to J. H.:—Held, that, the codicils being all admitted to probate, the legacies given twice over were cumulative and not substitutionary, and that the revocation of the legacy of 100*l.* meant to revoke the legacy of 500*l.* to the extent of 100*l.* only, and therefore J. H. was entitled to 400*l.* Thurnall v. Rayner, 4 W. R. 404.

A testator gave by will 3,000*l.* upon trust for A. and her children, and after the decease of A. without issue for the children of B. By a codicil of later date he recited that he had by his will given the 3,000*l.* to A. for life, with remainder to her children, and afterwards to B. for life, with remainder to his children; and revoked the will as to 2,000*l.*, part of the 3,000*l.*, from and after the devise to A. and her children, and instead of giving the 2,000*l.* to B. and his children, bequeathed the same to C.:—Held, that the erroneous recital in the codicil, that the 3,000*l.* was given to B. for life, did not amount to a gift of an estate in the 1,000*l.*, which remained unrevoked. Smith, In re, 2 John. & H. 594.

By the will the testator had also given 2,000*l.* to B. for life, with a gift over on insolvency:—Held, that if the codicil had been read as an implied gift of 1,000*l.* to B. for life, the gift over on insolvency would have attached to the 1,000*l.* as well as to the 2,000*l.* Ib.

A father left a legacy of 1,000*l.* to each of his two sons, H. and L., and his residuary estate between his two daughters. He subsequently executed a codicil: "Not being satisfied with the conduct of my eldest son, I hereby bequeath to him 300*l.* instead of 500*l.*, which I have bequeathed to my other children":—Held, that the codicil was inoperative, and that H. was entitled to 1,000*l.* only. Armit v. Hipkins, 28 L. T. 222; 21 W. R. 575.

The mere misrecital of a will by a codicil is inoperative, and will not modify the dispositions of the will; but an erroneous recital of a will, coupled with or followed by a clear indication of the testator's intention to make some modified or different disposition, inconsistent with the dispositions of the will, is operative to modify or alter the earlier gifts. Margitson, In re, Haggard v. Haggard, 48 L. T. 172; 31 W. R. 257.

A testator by his will gave to his daughter (in events which happened) an estate tail in his real property, and an absolute estate in his personal property. By a codicil, after reciting that his daughter would take an estate for life in his property, with remainder to her issue, he directed that the life estate should be for her separate use, that she should have a power of appointing a life estate to any husband who should survive her, and that if she should have more than one son, and her eldest son should inherit property from other sources of a certain value, then her second son should succeed to the property given by the will, with certain gifts over:—Held, that the estates given by the will were modified by the codicil, and that the daughter was entitled to a life estate only in the real and personal property of the testator, with remainder by implication to her eldest son absolutely, subject to the appointment by her of a life estate in favour of a husband, and to a shifting use in favour of a second son. Ib.

A testatrix, after giving certain legacies to the children of her deceased nephews and niece, gave the residue of her estate in equal moieties to two other nephews. By a codicil, after reciting that she bequeathed to her two nephews one-fifth of her estate, and had given the residue equally between the children of her deceased nephews and niece, she gave certain directions concerning the share of any of the said children who should not apply for it within a year:—Held, that the recital in the codicil was merely an erroneous reference to the will, and did not cut down the original residuary gift to the nephews, nor give the children of the deceased nephews and niece any greater interest than that which they took under the will. Scarlett v. Thurlow, 28 L. T. 583; 21 W. R. 728.

Testator directed his trustees to invest such a sum as would produce 40*l.* a year, and to pay the same to his daughter, and after her death to transfer the fund to his residuary legatees; and he gave 100*l.* to his daughter absolutely. By a codicil he revoked the sum of 1,200*l.* given to his daughter for her life, and gave her 500*l.* in lieu thereof:—Held, that as the 40*l.* a year was the only sum given to the daughter for life, it was revoked by the codicil. Pilcher v. Hole, 7 Sm. 208; 4 L. J., Ch. 50.

i. Revocation of Legacies, Trusts, and Limitations.

Legacy.]—A distinct gift by will is not to be revoked by a codicil, unless by direct words or necessary implication. Such implication will exist where the clear intention of the codicil is inconsistent with the particular gift, but not where the inconsistency existed to an equal degree in the will itself. Butler v. Greenwood, 22 Beav. 303.

A testator, by his will, gave a specific chattel to A. Afterwards, by a codicil, he gave a number of articles, and of a different kind, and of much less value, to B., and, in enumerating those articles, introduced an imperfectly written word, which might be supposed to designate the chattel previously given to A.:—Held, that the bequest to A. was not thereby revoked. Goblet v. Beechey, 2 Russ. & M. 624. Reversing 8 Sim. 24; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 200.

A testator, by will, gave B. 80*l.* per annum, long annuities, to 1860, and a deferred annuity "of 80*l.* from Christmas, 1859." By a codicil which did not mention B.'s name, he said, "I direct that my executors make my long annuities of 80*l.*, instead of 80*l.*, be only 30*l.* per annum, and a reversionary annuity purchased on her life 30*l.*, as I have lately expended money on her account":—Held, that B. was referred to, and that she was entitled to 30*l.* a year. Ellis v. Bartrum, 25 Beav. 107.

R., being in possession of mines and iron works, under leases of unequal duration, by will bequeathed 25,000*l.* to B., "as a capital for him to become partner with my executors of one-fourth share in the trade of all those works so long as the lease endures," with a devise to H. and his wife of residue of his estates, real and personal. By codicil testator gave to W. three-eighths of concern of iron works, "the partnership will stand at my death; W. three-eighths, H. three-eighths, B. two-eighths." After R.'s death, W., H. and B. carried on works for two years, selling iron manufactured not only from the produce of the mines, but from other sources:—Held, that codicil revoked residuary clause in favour of H.'s wife as to the trade, and that concern was a partnership in trade. Crawshay v. Maule, 1 Swanst. 495; 1 Wils. 181; 18 R. R. 126.

Devise.]—A testator, by a will made in 1832, devised his real estate to A. By a codicil he said, "I acknowledge B. to be my next of kin and heir-at-law of all my personal property":—Held, that the codicil revoked the devise to A., and B. took the estate absolutely. Parker v. Nickson, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 451; 7 L. T. 813; 11 W. R. 533.

The word "acknowledge" was sufficient to indicate an intention that the person named should be recognised as filling that character, which would entitle him by law to the whole of the real estate. Ib.

Testator devises to A. all his dividends on his South Sea annuities, and afterwards by codicil gives to C. an annuity for life, payable out of his South Sea annuities:—Held, not to be a revocation in toto, but both devises may stand consistently together. Stone v. Evans, 2 Atk. 86.

After a trifling specific bequest a testator gave his residuary real and personal estate for the benefit of his grand-daughter and her children. By a codicil, which he directed to be annexed to and taken as part of his will, he, in consideration of the faithful services of his servant R., gave and bequeathed to him the whole of his estate and all his household goods and furniture, linen, china, watches, and all other his personal property and effects, free from legacy duty; and confirmed his will in all other particulars:—Held, that the devise in the will of the real estate was not revoked by the codicil. Molyneux v. Rowe, 8 De G. M. & G. 368; 4 W. R. 539.

Contingent Gift.]—A legacy is given to M., with a contingent limitation over to N. in the event of M. dying without children. The legacy to M. is adeemed by a subsequent gift to M. in the lifetime of the testatrix, to which no limitation in favour of N. is attached. The legacy is not merely adeemed as to M., but also extinguished as to N. Twining v. Powell, 2 Coll. C. C. 262.

A testator, by his will, gave the income of shares in a bank to E., a married woman, for life, provided she were a widow at the time of his death, or should become such afterwards, but during her widowhood only; and gave the income during the coverture of E. to P. He also gave P. 800*l.*, in case E. should become a widow, in lieu of the income of the shares. By a codicil, the testator revoked the gift of this income, and gave a portion of the income to E. for life, whether she were a widow at the time of his death or not, or should become such afterwards or not. At the time of the testator's death E. was under coverture:—Held, that P. was not entitled to the 800*l.* at the death of the testator, and would become entitled only in the event of E. becoming a widow. Morrison v. Morrison, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 652; 13 L. J., Ch. 68; 8 Jur. 304.

What Property Referred to.]—A., by will, bequeathed his ready money, and money out at interest at his decease, to trustees, upon trust to pay thereout legacies, and in the next place to pay, distribute, and divide all the remainder unto and between his nephews and nieces; but directed that in case of the death of any of his nephews or nieces before receiving their shares, then the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying should be paid to the survivors. By a codicil he gave to his wife all his real and personal estate and effects which he should be possessed of or entitled to at time of his decease, to hold the same during her life:—Held, that the bequest in the codicil did not include the ready money, &c., mentioned in the will. Arrowsmith, In re, 2 De G. F. & G. 474; 30 L. J., Ch. 148; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 9; 9 W. R. 258—C. A.

A., after giving legacies to charities and individuals, directed that the residue of moneys to arise by sale and conversion of his real and personal estate, after payment of debts and the legacies "herein" mentioned, should be divided between certain charities, and that such part of his estate as charities could not take should be first applied in payment of "legacies herein mentioned" not given to charities. By a codicil he revoked the residuary bequest, and varied the amounts of charitable legacies, and after payment of funeral expenses and legacies he might subsequently make gave the residue of his property to charities:—Held, on the construction of will and codicil as one instrument, that the direction in the will extended to the codicil, and that "property" must be cut down to "pure personalty." Jauncey v. Att.-Gen., 3 Giff. 308; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 6; 5 L. T. 374; 10 W. R. 129.

A testator devised to his sister nine houses absolutely. He then bequeathed 4,000*l.* to trustees, upon trust, by a proper deed and declaration of trust, to provide stipends and annuities for aged persons, with a direction that such deed should contain rules for the management of the institution, and for regulating the age and conditions upon which persons should be admitted thereto; and he begged to point out to his sister, but not intending to impose any obligation whatever upon her, that the nouses which he had devised to her might be converted into eligible almshouses for the recipients of his bounty. He made a codicil, confirming his will in all respects, except such parts thereof "as relate to the building of almshouses, which part I hereby revoke, and desire that my executors may be released from carrying out the same, and the stipends and annuities connected therewith":—Held, that the bequest of the 4,000*l.* was revoked by the codicil. Baldwin v. Baldwin, 22 Beav. 419; 26 L. J., Ch. 121; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 773.

A testator gave seven cottages specifically described, together with other property, also specifically described. By a codicil he recited the gift by the will, referring in terms to the property described other than the seven cottages; he then revoked the gift of the property described in the recital, and gave the property "included in the hereinbefore-mentioned devise" in a different manner and upon other trusts:—Held, that the gift of the seven cottages was not revoked, but they passed under the devise upon the trusts named in the devise. Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe, 2 Dr. & Sm. 96; 5 L. T. 660.

A testator bequeathed 12,000*l.* among his younger children, and his household furniture and live and dead stock to such of his daughters who should attain twenty-one, and other portions of his property, real and personal, to his children, and the residue of his property to his daughters. He made a codicil to his will, commencing thus: "Codicil to my will of the, &c. Four of my children having died since the execution of the will, I alter the disposition of my property as follows." He bequeathed 4,000*l.* each to his three surviving daughters; and in case of one dying unmarried, her portion to go to the survivors; but in the event of more than one dying unmarried, her portion to go among his sons, as he was of opinion that the sum of 6,000*l.* was a sufficient portion for any girl; and he bequeathed to his two surviving sons the remainder of his property in equal proportions, of whatever kind it might consist at the time of his death. He gave certain directions as to the management of mills which he held in partnership, devised his property over in the event of his sons dying without issue, and appointed executors of the codicil, as of "his last will and testament":—Held, that the bequest of the household furniture, &c., in the will was not revoked by the codicil. Pilsworth v. Mosse, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 163.

Testator drew two cheques on his banker in favour of two of his servants, and delivered them to the servants, with directions to present them after his death. About a year afterwards he made a testamentary instrument, by which, after giving legacies to different persons, and an annuity to each of the two servants, he bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to A. B., and revoked any former will or codicil by him made, and declared that instrument to be his last will. Three paper writings were admitted to probate as constituting together the testator's last will:—Held, that though the court of chancery was bound to consider the amounts of the cheques as legacies, they were revoked by the subsequent instrument. Walsh v. Gladstone, 13 Sim. 261. Affirmed, 1 Ph. 294; 13 L. J., Ch. 52; 7 Jur. 1143.

Effect of Trusts or Limitations subsequently Imposed.]—Where a will shews plainly that the original intention of a testator was to give a legatee an absolute interest in a legacy, a subsequent alteration of such bequest in a codicil will not vary the will to any greater extent than is plainly expressed on the face of the codicil. Norman v. Kynaston, 3 De G. F. & J. 29; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 129; 3 L. T. 826; 9 W. R. 259. Affirming 29 Beav. 96; 30 L. J., Ch. 189.

A testatrix by her will desired that all her fortune should be divided between R. N. and A. K. By a codicil, after stating that A. K. was dead, she expressed her desire that her fortune should be divided between R. N. and T. K., adding these words: "For the use of their children, and when they come of age to have settled upon them, share and share alike." R. N. died after the testatrix, never having had any children:—Held, that the absolute gift of the moiety to him was not revoked; it was only limited to the extent that a beneficial interest was given to his children which afterwards failed. Ib.

Bequest, by codicil, that dividends only of legacies which had been bequeathed by will should not be paid to legatees, and that the legacies should not be paid to them, leaving the principal not further disposed of, is equivalent to gift of the corpus, and is a gift of the principal. Richards v. Richards, 9 Price, 219; 23 R. R. 665.

Testator gave 4,000*l.* to his granddaughter and directed his executors to pay it to her on her attaining twenty-one, and to apply the interest of it for her maintenance during her minority. By a codicil he directed that his granddaughter should have only the interest of 2,000*l.* for her maintenance until she attained twenty-three, and that the interest of the other 2,000*l.* should be accumulated, and that, on her attaining twenty-three, his executors should have the whole settled upon her for life, and, after her death, to her child or children, in equal proportions, so that no husband of hers might spend it. The granddaughter attained twenty-three, and died without having had a child, and without the executors having made any settlement of the legacy:—Held, that the gift in the will was an absolute gift, and that, in the events that had happened, it was not affected by the codicil. Bell v. Jackson, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 547.

A testatrix having a son and two daughters, gave 6,000*l.* 3 per cent. stock to her son for life, remainder as to one moiety of it to eldest male child living at her decease, and as to the other moiety to his other children. She also gave 6,000*l.* like stock to her daughters for their respective lives in equal shares, remainder to their children, and she further gave a sum of bank stock to her three children in equal shares during their lives, and the share of each was at his or her death to revert to their issue in equal shares. Subsequently she made a codicil, in which she desired that her grandchildren's shares of these two stocks should be settled upon them for their lives and afterwards upon their children:—Held, that by the operation of the codicil the moiety of 3,000*l.* 3 per cent. stock, which by the will was given absolutely to the eldest male child of the testatrix's son living at her death, was well limited to that male child for life, with remainder to her children; that as to all the other bequests the attempt to extend the limitations to great-grandchildren was ineffectual, and that the absolute interests given by the will to the grandchildren were not destroyed or restricted by the codicil. Arnold v. Congreve, 1 Russ. & M. 209; Taml. 347; 8 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 88; 31 R. R. 106.

—— Of Two Residuary Gifts in the Same Instrument.]—A testator, possessed of considerable real and personal estate, primarily charged the real estate with the payment of certain annuities to his wife, his two daughters, and his son, and desired that his trustees should, during the lives of his wife and daughters, accumulate the rents of his real estate for the purposes of his will, and on their deaths devised those estates over. He also bequeathed a sum of 3,000*l.* 3½ per cent. stock to the trustees upon trust, out of the interest and dividends to pay an annuity of 105*l.* to his youngest daughter for her life, and upon trust as to the principal, in case she married with the consent of the trustees, for her issue; but if she married without such consent, then as to 1,000*l.* upon trust as she should appoint; and as to the remaining 2,000*l.*, that it should form part of the testator's estate, to be applied as he should direct. The testator also directed that, in case the annuities given to his wife and daughters and son should be unpaid for four months after due, the trustees should, "out of the accumulation of the moneys in their possession, exclusive of the sum of 3,000*l.* so left to his youngest daughter, and which he directed should be left untouched for the purposes of his will, pay and assist in discharging the annuities so in arrear, and should, out of the moneys which should next come to their possession, replace the sums" so advanced. And he directed that the trustees should, after first paying those annuities and the several legacies charged upon one of his real estates, invest the rents of that estate in government stock, and pay thereout to his grandchildren living at his death 300*l.* each, and any deficiency in those legacies he desired should be made good out of his other real estates. And all his other property, of what nature soever, including a policy of insurance, he devised and bequeathed to his trustees to invest for the purposes of his will. And as to the proceeds of that policy and the remainder of his personal property invested, or to be invested, as well as the overplus of his income not thereby disposed of, excepting the sum of 3,000*l.* left as above to his youngest daughter, and excepting such parts of his personal property as might be necessary to be applied in payment of the annuities and legacies bequeathed by him, he directed that it should remain invested during the lives of his wife and daughters, and until his grandchildren should attain twenty-one or marriage, and be paid to those grandchildren in equal shares at twenty-one or marriage, with interest at 5 per cent., to commence from one year after his death. Then came a clause directing that any surplus which should remain after satisfying the several purposes of the will should be applied by the trustees in payment, or assisting in payment, of a sum of 5,000*l.*, charged by settlement on one of his real estates for the younger children of his late son J.; and in case such surplus should be more than sufficient to discharge that sum, then the surplus to be paid to such younger children in equal shares on attaining twenty-one or marriage, subject, however, to the payment and discharge of all and every the sums and charges thereinbefore charged and created on said general fund by the will:—Held, that the annuity of 105*l.* given to the testator's youngest daughter was not reduced by the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 5, which lowered the rate of interest upon 3½ per cent. Government stock to 3¼ per cent.; and that the trustees should make up any deficiency arising in the dividends of the sum of 3,000*l.* out of the accumulated fund; held, also, that the residuary bequest to the grandchildren generally of the testator was inconsistent with the residuary bequest to the younger children of his son J., and, therefore, that the latter bequest must prevail. Fitzpatrick v. Knaresborough, Ir. R. 13 Eq. 338.

A., after many pecuniary and other specific bequests, proceeded, "The remainder of my property I leave to my sister S.," then, after a few legacies, "I appoint my two sisters, S. and O., my executrixes and residuary legatees of this my last will":—Held, that the gift of the remainder of her property to S. was not revoked, and that the appointment of S. and O. residuary legatees only gave them any legacies which had lapsed. Jessop, In re, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 424.

A testator bequeathed his residue in trust for his sisters and their issue, and he afterwards, by the same instrument, appointed his wife "his residuary legatee":—Held, that the latter clause did not revoke the former. Davis v. Bennet, 30 Beav. 226.

A residuary bequest following upon a gift of the remainder of an estate does not operate to defeat the gift of the remainder, the word "residue" meaning anything or nothing, as the event may prove. Kilvington v. Parker, 21 W. R. 121.

When, therefore, a testator gave the remainder of his property to three legatees after satisfying certain legacies and annuities, and made his son legatee of the residue, the respective amounts answering the annuities for the lives of the annuitants went to the legatees in remainder, and not to the residuary legatee upon the deaths of the several annuitants. Ib.

A testator, after directing the payment of his debts and giving certain specific legacies as to the rest, residue, and remainder of his real and personal estate, devised and bequeathed the same to trustees upon trust to pay a certain pecuniary legacy, and as to the remainder of his real and personal estate upon trust for conversion, and after making an elaborate disposition of his property in favour of his sons and daughters and his granddaughter, the testator, as to all the rest, residue, and remainder of his real and personal estate, gave, devised, and bequeathed the same to all his sons and daughters and his granddaughter, or the survivors of them, their heirs and assigns, share and share alike, as tenants in common:—Held, that the gift of the residue contained in the last clause of the will did not operate to extinguish the previous disposition made by the testator, but to dispose of such interest as was left undisposed of by the previous disposition. Kilvington v. Parker, supra, followed. Bristow v. Masefield, 52 L. J., Ch. 27; 31 W. R. 88.

Gift to Individuals or Class—Subsequent Alteration.]—By a will specific and pecuniary legacies were given to several legatees by name, and the testator gave all the residue of his personal estate to all the before-mentioned pecuniary legatees, with certain exceptions, to be divided between them in proportion to their pecuniary legacies. By a codicil, after reciting the death of one of the pecuniary legatees, the testator bequeathed the legacy given to her by the will to B.:—Held, that there was an intestacy as to the share of the residue given by the will to the deceased legatee. Gibson's Trust, In re, 2 J. & H. 656; 31 L. J., Ch. 231.

Bequest of residue to the children of A., the children of B., to C., to the children of D., and to E., in equal shares. Revocation by codicil of the gifts to C. and to the children of A., with a declaration that they should not be residuary legatees:—Held, that the gift of residue was to the residuary legatees as a class, notwithstanding that some of the individuals to take were named; and that the effect of the will and codicil, taken together, was to give all the residue to the legatees whose bequests were not revoked. Clark v. Phillips, 17 Jur. 886.

Will to be read as if Name of Legatee omitted.]—A testatrix by her will bequeathed her watch to her granddaughter M. and her brooch to her granddaughter J.; and, after giving certain pecuniary legacies, bequeathed to M. a legacy of 200*l.* A codicil made by the testatrix three years later, after reciting the legacies of the watch and brooch, continued as follows:—"Now I hereby revoke and make void the said legacies and bequests in my said will contained in favour of the said M. and J., and declare that my said will shall be read and construed in all respects as if the names of the said M. and J. had not been inserted therein, and in all other respects I confirm my said will":—Held, that the legacy of 200*l.* was not revoked by the codicil. Percival, In re, Boote v. Dutton, 59 L. T. 21—C. A.

Testator, by a will made since the statute 1 Vict. c. 26, bequeathed the residue of his personal estate and certain freehold and leasehold estates in equal shares to L., M., N., O. and P.; in a subsequent part of his will he bequeathed to H. one-half of the legacy named to each of the other legatees, that is to say, one-half what his brother M. ought to receive. By a codicil the testator declared as follows: "I revoke all that part written in my former will which leaves a legacy to H., written in my will on the thirty-second and thirty-third lines":—Held, that by force of this revocation the will was to be read as if the gift to H. were not in it; consequently, that such revocation enured to the benefit of the other devisees and legatees. Harris v. Davis, 1 Coll. C. C. 416; 9 Jur. 269.

Trusts or Limitations—Total Revocation of.]—By a will a testator bequeathed stock to his granddaughters absolutely. By a codicil he revoked the bequest, and directed his trustees to hold the stock for his granddaughters for life, with remainder to their issue:—Held, that this was a total revocation of the first gift, and the issue having failed, that the stock fell into the residue. Nevill v. Boddam, 28 Beav. 554.

Several legacies given to R. J. by name, and a bequest to E. I. and S. C. for their lives, and to the survivor of them, and after the decease of the survivor equally among all the children of E. I. and S. C. living at that time, to be vested at twenty-one, or on death before leaving issue. Codicil revoking all the legacies, bequests, and benefits, in and by the will given to R. J. therein named, in lieu whereof the testator gave to R. J. 1,000*l.* 2 per cents. R. J. was the only issue of E. J. and S. C.:—Held, that the gift to him as such issue was revoked by the codicil. Cotterell v. Sanderson, 1 Jur. 474.

Testator devised his estates at S. and H. to trustees, in trust, if there should be only one son of D. who should attain twenty-one, for that son, and in case there should be two or more such sons, in trust for the second of them, and gave all the residue of his estates to trustees in trust to sell. He afterwards erased, and by codicil declared that he intended to erase the direction to sell only; he then gave all his estates to the son of D. who should first attain twenty-one, and change his name to E. D., at death of testator, had a son who was still an infant, and afterwards had another son:—Held, the codicil revoked the devise of the S. and H. estates, and also the devise of the residues of his estates to the trustees, and that D.'s eldest son took under this codicil an immediate vested interest, both in the estates of which the testator was seised at the date of his will, and those he afterwards purchased, and consequently was entitled to the rents during his infancy. Duffield v. Elwes, 2 Sim. & S. 544; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 189. See 25 R. R. 266. See this case on appeal, 3 Bli. (N.S.) 260.

Revocation of both Intermediate Estate and Remainder.]—The testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his daughter upon trust for her maintenance and support, until she attained twenty-one, or married with the consent of his trustees under that age, and upon her attaining such age or her marriage, for her separate use, with remainder to her children; and in case of her death, without issue, he bequeathed the same to certain legatees in remainder. The testator afterwards declared by a codicil, that, in consequence of a nervous debility, his daughter was unfit for the control of herself, and his will was that she should not marry; and in case of her marriage or death, he gave the property he had bequeathed to her over to the same legatees in remainder. The limitation over by the codicil, being void as to the life interest of the daughter, as being in general restraint of marriage, quære, whether the interest in remainder bequeathed to the children of the daughter by the will was revoked by the codicil. Morley v. Rennoldson, 2 Hare, 570; 12 L. J., Ch. 372; 7 Jur. 938.

A will reciting that the testator was entitled to a remainder in fee, expectant on the death of his wife, he devised the same, after the death of his wife, to his son W. for life, and after his decease to the child or children of W.; and for default of such issue to his own heirs. By a codicil he retracted the devise to W., and gave to his wife and grandchildren (issue of his son J.) what he originally allotted to W.:—Held, that the remainder in fee passed by the codicil to the wife and grandchildren. Madden v. Kirwan, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 570.

Semble, the gift in the will to the children of W. was revoked by the codicil. Ib.

A testator gave to his eight nephews and nieces, naming them, provided that if any of them should die in his lifetime without leaving children; or, as to the nephews, should survive him and die under twenty-one, without leaving children; or, as to the nieces, should survive him and die under twenty-one, without having been married, the share of each of them so dying, as well original as accruing, should go to the survivor and survivors, other and others. The testator revoked the trust created as regarded two of his nephews, A. and B. A. had attained twenty-one, survived the testator, and was living. B. attained twenty-one and died, living the testator:—Held, that the limitations over of their shares were revoked, and that they went to the heir-at-law and next of kin. Boulcott v. Boulcott, 2 Drew. 25; 23 L. J., Ch. 57; 18 Jur. 231; 2 Eq. Rep. 457; 2 W. R. 52.

Testator, by his will, devised his messuages, tenements, &c., called P., to J. L., for life, with remainders to his first and other sons in tail; and he devised his messuages, tenements and lands, known by the name of C., to J. P., for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail; and, in subsequent parts of his will, he mentioned the estate as his P. and C. estate. By a codicil, after reciting that he had given the P. estate to J. L., he revoked the said P. estate, and gave it to J. P.; and, after further reciting that he had given the said C. estate in his will to J. P., he revoked the said bequest, and gave the said C. estate to J. L.:—Held, that the limitations in the will of the two estates were revoked, and that J. P. took P. in fee; and J. L., C. in fee. Phillips v. Allen, 7 Sim. 446.

A testatrix having, by her will, devised two different properties among her nephews successively for life, remainder to their issue in strict settlement, making A. the head of one set of the limitations, and B. of the other, by a codicil reciting that she had made devises to A. and B. respectively, and that she wished to make them change places as to the properties so devised, revoked "the said bequests by my will made to the said A. and B. respectively," and left and bequeathed "the property and provision by my said will devised to the said A. to B., his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns," and in like manner "as to A. and his heirs, &c.," with respect to the property devised by the will to B.:—Held, that the codicil revoked all the limitations in the will subsequently to A. and B.'s estates respectively, and vested the respective properties in A. and B. absolutely. Murray v. Johnston, 2 Con. & L. 104; 3 Dr. & War. 143.

—— Of Power of Appointment.]—A testator, by his will, gave his real estates to his wife for life, and, after her death, he directed them to be sold, and one moiety of the proceeds to be paid to his wife's relations as she should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to her next of kin, and the other moiety to his own next of kin. By a codicil he expressed his will that his real estate should be sold at any time, either before or after his wife's death; the interest of the share bequeathed to his own relations after his wife's death to be paid to her, and the other moiety devised by his will to be paid to his wife for her own use:—Held, that the power of appointment given by the will was revoked by the codicil, and that the wife took an absolute interest in one moiety of the proceeds of the testator's real estate. Ankers v. Sandford, 4 Jur. 817.

—— Of special Power of Sale by Inconsistent Devise.]—Power given by will and codicil to sell to certain persons at a fixed price, revoked by a subsequent codicil devising the premises to trustees to be sold for the payment of debts, and subject thereto upon the limitations of the will. Bridges v. Rice, 1 Jac. & Walk. 74.

Whether power in a will to sell several estates to certain persons at a fixed price, is entirely revoked by a codicil devising one of the estates to different uses, quære. Ib.

Partial Revocation — Of Trust declared by Reference.]—A testator, in the case of an event which happened after his death, directed a freehold estate to be sold, and the produce applied upon the trusts, intents and purposes afterwards expressed in his will, as to his residuary personal estate; by a codicil he revoked the gift in his will of his residuary personal estate, and made a new disposition of it. The produce of the freehold estate is not thereby affected, but passes upon the trusts, intents and purposes which were expressed in the will as to the residuary personal estate. Francis v. Collier, 4 Russ. 331.

A testator gave to each of his daughters a legacy of 1,500*l.*, and also gave a legacy of 6,500*l.* upon trusts to each of them and her children, and in the event of any of the daughters dying without issue, or, having children, they should die without attaining a vested interest, he directed that the 6,500*l.* legacy of each of such last-mentioned daughters should go over to the other daughters and their children, in equal shares per stirpes, their respective shares to be held upon the same trusts for them and their respective children as were declared concerning their original legacies of 6,500*l.* Afterwards, on the marriage of E., one of his daughters, he settled on her by deed 8,000*l.* By a codicil reciting the gift of the two sets of legacies and the advance of the 8,000*l.*, and that the testator intended it to be in satisfaction of the two legacies of 1,500*l.* and 6,500*l.*, bequeathed to or for her benefit as aforesaid, he revoked the legacies of 1,500*l.* and 6,500*l.*, in and by his will given and bequeathed "to or for the benefit" of his daughter A., "and otherwise as in the will" was mentioned:—Held (reversing 3 Jur. (N.S.) 151; 5 W. R. 329), that the codicil revoked only the original legacies of 6,500*l.* and 1,500*l.* to E. and her children, and not their contingent interest under the gift over of the other 6,500*l.* legacies. Agnew v. Pope, 1 De G. & J. 49; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 625; 5 W. R. 512.

Held, also, that though the trusts of the accruing shares in favour of E. and her children were declared only by reference to the trusts of their original legacy, the revocation of the original legacy did not invalidate the declaration of the trusts of the accruing shares. Ib.

—— Of Gift of Income, not of Corpus.]—A testator, by will, bequeathed the sum of 6,000*l.* to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his widow for life, for the maintenance of herself and two infant children, and, after her death, he gave the corpus to the children on their attaining twenty-one. One of the children having died in the testator's lifetime, he made a codicil to his will, by which, after reciting the gift of 6,000*l.* to have been intended as a provision for his widow, and to enable her to support the infants, he revoked "the said legacy," and bequeathed to his trustees the sum of 4,000*l.*, the income of which he directed to be paid to his wife for the support of herself and the surviving infant child:—Held, that the revocation by the codicil of the 6,000*l.* given by the will was confined to the income of the widow, and that the gift of the corpus of the 6,000*l.* was not affected by the codicil. Stocks v. Hammond, 2 N. R. 307.

The will also contained a power to the executors to make a specific appropriation of any investments of the testator to the extent of 6,000*l.* for the purpose of answering the annuity given to the widow. The codicil which substituted the 4,000*l.* for the 6,000*l.* did not repeat or contain any reference to this power:—Held, that the power must be deemed to be revoked, and that consequently the widow was not entitled to have the income of bank shares of the value of 6,000*l.* belonging to the testator at the time of his death, and yielding a large rate of interest, specifically appropriated for her benefit. Ib.

—— Of Shares, not of Manner of Gift.]—A testator gave real and personal estate to trustees to pay the rents and dividends and interest to his father and mother for their lives in succession, and then to E. D. and her issue equally, after the determination of the previous estates; with remainder, in default of such issue, or if they died under twenty-one, as to one-half part of the realty, and residue of the personalty, amongst the sons and daughters of his uncle L. living at the testator's death, and the issue of such as were then dead. And as to the remaining half of the rents and dividends and interest to his aunt for life, remainder to her daughter E. for life, and after the death of the survivor to the children of E. then living, and the issue of such as were dead, with benefit of survivorship. By a codicil the testator revoked the ultimate distribution of the residue directed by the will, and instead of dividing it into two parts, gave it to all his cousins equally, E. taking as one. The testator's uncle had seven children, and five predeceased the testator:—Held, that the codicil was a revocation of the shares, not the manner in which they were given; and that the property was divisible into fifths—two to the surviving children of L., and the others to E., and the issue of the deceased children of L. Leicestor v. Wood, 15 W. R. 308.

A testatrix gave her residuary personal estate to trustees in trust as to one-fourth for her granddaughter A., and as to the remaining three-fourths in trust for the children of her daughter B., with certain after limitations. Afterwards, by an informal codicil, she desired her will to be altered, so that instead of her granddaughter A. receiving one-fourth part of the trust estate, such estate should be equally divided between A. and the children "now born or hereafter to be born" of her daughter B. The will directed the trustees to hold the residuary personal estate in the proportions above mentioned on certain trusts in favour of A. and the children of B., with certain limitations over:—Held, that the codicil merely altered the proportions and did not affect the trusts and limitations. Armitage v. Ashton, 20 L. T. 102.

—— Of Intermediate Estate, not of Remainder.]—A. by his will devised certain lands to B. and his heirs, in trust for the use of his son R. for life, remainder to be to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the first and other sons of R. in tail male, with remainders over. A., by a codicil, reciting that by his will he had devised these lands to R. and his heirs on the trust therein mentioned, proceeded thus: "I do hereby revoke that part of my will whereby I devised the said lands unto my son R.; and I hereby devise, &c., the said lands unto my sons W. and R. and to the survivors of them, and the heirs of such survivor, upon certain trusts thereinafter mentioned, and to and for no other use, &c., whatever; and I do hereby ratify and confirm my said will in all its parts, save so far as it has been revoked and altered by this present codicil, which is to be taken as part of my said will." The trusts of the codicil did not exhaust the fee, and were such as might be satisfied during the life of R.:—Held, that the life estate of R. alone was completely revoked, and that, subject to the new trusts, the remainder to his sons in tail was unaffected by the codicil. Fitzmaurice v. Sadlier, Ir. R. 12 Eq.

544. Reversing on this point, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 136. And see S. C., 9 Ir. Eq. R. 595.

A testator gave the dividends of a sum of stock to his son A., and after his death he gave the capital to A.'s children on their attaining twenty-one; and after giving other legacies in similar terms to his other sons and daughters, he gave the dividends of his residuary personal estate, after his wife's death, to his seven children, "or such of them as should be entitled thereto," during their several and respective lives, to be divided between them in the proportions which the yearly dividends thereinbefore specifically bequeathed to them respectively bore to one another; and after the deceases of the said children, he gave the capital between the children of all his seven children equally on their attaining twenty-one. By a codicil, the testator, after reciting the gift of the dividends to his son A., revoked "the said legacy," and gave him the dividends of a similar sum:—Held, first, that the codicil revoked only the life interest given to A., and that his children were entitled to the larger legacy under the terms of the original will; secondly, that the difference of interest of these legacies during A.'s life and the difference of the interest of the shares of the residue, which was reduced in like proportion, fell into the income of the residue; thirdly, that in the case of children of the testator dying either before or after the widow the surviving children were entitled to the income of the shares of the deceased children until the death of the last survivor. Alt v. Gregory, 8 De G. M. & G. 221; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 577; 4 W. R. 436.

A testator gave to trustees for the benefit of his wife "as concerning my mansion-house, land, and premises called O., now in my occupation, to permit her to reside in and occupy the same so long as she shall think proper," with conditions as to residence, and from and after her decease to his son for his own absolute use. By a codicil he recited that he had pulled down the mansion-house, offices, and buildings, called O., and was erecting another mansion-house, and he directed that his trustees should hold the new mansion-house on the like trusts as by his will were expressed and declared of and concerning his mansion called O., and in all other respects he confirmed his will:—Held, that the codicil was, pro tanto, a revocation of the will, and the gift over of the estate at O. to his son took effect on the testator's death. Poore v. Wright, 3 L. T. 773.

Devise and bequest of real and personal estate to a person for life, with limitations over. By a codicil reciting the devise and bequest, and also the limitations over, the devises and bequests were revoked "so far as related to the tenant for life"; but "estates," both real and personal, out of which the interest of the tenant for life was carved, were directed to sink into the residue:—Held, that this was a revocation of the interest of the tenant for life only. Ives v. Ives, 4 Y. & Coll. 34; 4 Jur. 265.

A testatrix gave all her personal estate to her sisters Mary, Sarah, and Ann upon trust to invest and pay the income to her said sisters in equal shares during their lives, with benefit of survivorship, and after the death of the survivor, in case any of her nephews D. W. S. and R. O. S. and her niece M. A. S. should be then living, she gave her personal estate to T. R. and J. upon trust to transfer the sums invested as aforesaid, and all interest unto the said D. W. S., R. O. S., and M. A. S. in equal shares and proportions; and if but one of them should be then living, then the whole of such principal sums, &c., to be paid or assigned to such one, his or her executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely. But in case of the death of the testatrix's said nephews and niece, leaving either of her said sisters surviving, the testatrix gave and bequeathed all the said principal sums, &c., and all other her estate unto the survivor of her said sisters absolutely. The testatrix made a codicil, whereby she requested "all names of T. R., J., and of D. W. S., R. O. S., and M. A. S., and any other of her friends except her three sisters, to be considered the same as if omitted from her will":—Held, that the omission of these names did not strike out the gift of the capital to the surviving sister, who took absolutely. Stephenson v. Stephenson, 56 L. T. 75—C. A. Affirming, 54 L. J., Ch. 928.

A testator bequeathed his residuary estate upon trusts for the benefit of his children, and as to the sons' shares he directed that one moiety should be held absolutely, and that the other moiety should be settled. By a codicil the testator revoked every devise and bequest to or in favour of his son S.:—Held, a revocation of the interest of the children of S. in the settled moiety. Tabor v. Prentice, 52 L. T. 85; 32 W. R. 872.

—— Of Charge on Realty not of Charge on Personalty.]—A testatrix having by her will blended the proceeds of her real and personal estate into one fund, and having made a charge not exceeding 5,000*l.* on such mixed fund in favour of A., subsequently by codicil devises her real estate to A. in fee simple, freed and discharged from all her debts, liabilities, and engagements, and also from any charges created by her said will, if any. On the question whether the exoneration of the real estate devised to A. by the codicil threw the burthen of the whole charge of 5,000*l.* upon the residuary personal estate:—Held, that it did. Tatlock v. Jenkins, Kay, 654; 23 L. J., Ch. 767; 18 Jur. 891.

—— Of General Power of Appointment not of Discretionary Power to Trustees.]—A testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of a sum of money upon trusts in favour of his son and his son's wife and children, with a power to the son, on failure of issue, to appoint the fund by will or codicil. He also gave the trustees a discretionary power to give the fund to his son, discharged of all the trusts. By a codicil he revoked the power given to the son, and directed that after the son's death, and on the failure of issue, the fund should go to the son's wife for life, and after her death form part of the testator's residuary estate:—Held, that the discretionary power given by the will to the trustees was not revoked by the codicil. Butler v. Greenwood, 22 Beav. 303.

—— Personalty Settled on Trusts of Realty—Uses of Realty Modified.]—Devise of real estates to trustees and their heirs, upon trust to convey upon certain trusts, and subject thereto to several natural sons successively in strict settlement. The testator also gave the residue of his personal estate upon trust to be laid out in land to be settled to the same uses, &c. A codicil, revoking so much of the will as directed the settlement of his said estate upon his sons, and varying the order of limitations to his heirs, was considered as confined to that object, operating by way of substitution only, not as a revocation of the devise, and therefore extending to the estates to be purchased with the personal estate. Carrington (Lord) v. Payne, 5 Ves. 404; 5 R. R. 87.

Testator devised real estate to A. in tail male, remainder over, and gave a sum of money in trust to be laid out in land to be settled to the same uses; by codicil he devised the same real estate to B. and his heirs, and gave everything that he had given by his will to A. in as ample a manner to B.: B. is tenant in fee of the real estate, and is entitled to have the money paid to him. Younge v. Combe, 4 Ves. 101.

A testator devised his freehold estates to certain uses. The will contained a name and arms clause and powers of leasing and sale and exchange. He then devised his copyhold and leasehold estates upon trusts to correspond with the uses declared of the freeholds. By a codicil to his will he varied the uses declared concerning the freeholds, but made no mention of the copyholds and leaseholds. He directed that the codicil should be taken as a part of and added to his will. All the circumstances of the case rendered it exceedingly inconvenient that the copyholds and leaseholds should devolve in a different way from the freeholds:—Held, that the trusts of the copyholds and leaseholds declared by the will were not revoked by the codicil, and that the copyholds and leaseholds passed according to the trusts declared by the will, and the freeholds according to the uses declared by the codicil. Martineau v. Briggs, 45 L. J., Ch. 674; 33 L. T. 283; 23 W. R. 899—H. L.

Held, that though it was in the highest degree probable that the testator intended the copyholds and leaseholds to go with the freeholds, and it was productive of great inconvenience that they should not do so, yet as there were no words in the codicil to give effect to such intention, the court could not supply them, and the copyholds and leaseholds must go as originally declared by the will. Ib.

A testator after devising his H. Lodge estate to his cousin H. for life, then to H.'s wife for life, and then to their children successively in tail, and in default of issue to his cousin F. absolutely, or on the happening of a certain event, to his cousin S. absolutely, gave his household goods and other things in and about H. Lodge to trustees to permit the same to be held and enjoyed as heirlooms by the person or persons who for the time being should be entitled to H. Lodge under the devise thereinbefore contained, but so as the same should not vest in any tenant by purchase who should die under twenty-one without leaving issue. The testator then gave to the trustees a sum of 20,000*l.* upon trust to invest for the benefit of the person or persons for the time entitled to the H. Lodge estate, or as near thereto as the different nature of real and personal estate would admit, and so as the income only be paid to the tenant for life of such estate, and so that no person or persons becoming entitled to the H. Lodge estate as tenant in tail should be entitled to an absolute interest in the fund until the age of twenty-one or dying under that age leaving issue. Power was given to grant leases of the estate, which might include the heirlooms. By a codicil the testator gave the H. Lodge estate to his cousin H., and his wife and their children, and after them to the son of C. L. absolutely, and if he should die under age to another son, if any, and then to F. "as before," or on the happening of a certain event to S. and issue. After mentioning other properties, the testator said "20,000*l.* to trustees—the same as will," and except as therein intimated he confirmed his said will. There was no reference in the codicil to the heirlooms. The cousin H. and his wife died without issue. C. L. had one son, who had attained the age of twenty-one years, and on his behalf a petition was presented claiming the heirlooms and the 20,000*l.* absolutely:—Held, that, notwithstanding the expression "under the devise hereinbefore contained," there was a governing intention shown in the will that the chattels and the legacy of 20,000*l.* should go with the H. Lodge estate; and that although the devolution of the H. Lodge estate was altered by the codicil there was no revocation of such governing intention; and that the court would give effect to that intention by declaring the petitioner entitled to the chattels and legacy. Carrington (Lord) v. Payne (supra) followed. Martineau v. Briggs (supra) distinguished. Towry, In re, Dallas v. Towry or Law, 58 L. J., Ch. 593; 41 Ch. D. 64; 60 L. T. 715; 37 W. R. 417—C. A.

A testator devised his freehold estates to certain uses, and provided that any person becoming entitled thereto should take and use his name and arms. He then devised his copyhold estates (upon which stood his principal mansion house) and his leasehold estates to trustees, to be held by them upon trusts, as far as the nature of the several estates would allow, to correspond with the uses before declared as to his freehold estates. Subsequently, by a codicil, which he stated was to be taken as part of, and added to, his will, he altered the uses declared in his will as to his freehold estates, and declared that the proviso respecting the use of his name and arms should follow the new limitations. No mention was made in the codicil of the copyhold and leasehold estates:—Held, that though it was probable, from the circumstances, that he intended his copyhold and leasehold estates to follow the limitations of his freeholds as declared in the codicil, still, as there were no words therein which effected it, the court would not supply them, and that the copyhold and leasehold estates passed according to the trusts originally declared in the will. Langdale v. Briggs, Ex parte Bacon, 8 De G. M. & G. 391; 26 L. J., Ch. 27; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 982; 4 W. R. 703.

A testator devised freeholds in Dorsetshire upon certain trusts, and bequeathed 3,000*l.* to his trustees to purchase lands in Dorsetshire to be held upon the same trusts. By a codicil he revoked the devise of his freeholds, and declared other trusts, without alluding to the 3,000*l.*:—Held, that there was no implied revocation of the bequest of 3,000*l.*, which would pass under the will as if no codicil had been made. Bridges v. Strachan, 8 Ch. D. 558; 38 L. T. 502; 26 W. R. 691.

k. Revocation of Offices.

Of one of several Offices.]—On a devise to three upon certain trusts, and giving the guardianship to the trustees and his wife, who were to maintain, &c., out of the trust property, the testator afterwards, by codicil reciting their appointment as executors and trustees of his will, revoked the appointment of two, and substituted two others to act as trustees and executors with the others:—Held, that this did not revoke the original appointment of the two so removed to act as guardians. Park, In re, 14 Sim. 89; 13 L. J., Ch. 369; 8 Jur. 372.

A testator appointed his wife sole executrix, and he made her and A. trustees. By a codicil he revoked the appointment of his wife as an executrix, on the ground that "the duties were too arduous for a lady," and he appointed A., B. and C. "executors in trust of his will." By another codicil he referred to his having revoked the executorship, and to having appointed A., B. and C. executors:—Held, that the revocation was confined to the office of executrix only. Graham v. Graham, 16 Beav. 550; 22 L. J., Ch. 937; 17 Jur. 569.

A testatrix by her will appointed A. and B. executors and trustees thereof. By a codicil, she revoked the appointment of A. as executor, and appointed C. executor, and gave to C. "all the powers and authorities to enable him to carry out the trusts of her will as were given by the will to A." The testatrix thereby also declared her intention to be, that the codicil should only "affect the appointment of A. as executor of her will":—Held, that B. and C. were executors, and A., B. and C. trustees of the will. Worley v. Worley, 18 Beav. 58; 2 W. R. 216.

The testator appointed A., B. and C. his executors and trustees, and devised and bequeathed to them his real and personal estate in trust. By a codicil, he desired that A., named in his will as "executor," be no longer such, and he nominated D. to succeed him; but he made no alteration in the devise:—Held, that A. still remained a trustee of the will. Cartwright v. Shepheard, 17 Beav. 301.

The testator appointed A., B. and C. to be trustees and executors. He revoked the appointment of C. as executor and trustee by his first codicil. By a second codicil he revoked the appointment of B. and C. as executors, but ratified his will, except as altered thereby:—Held, that the first codicil was not revoked, and that C. was not a trustee. Ib.

The testator appointed his widow and two other persons guardians of his children. By a codicil, he "left their care, charge, and education" to his widow:—Held, that the appointment by the will of guardians was not revoked by the codicil. Hare v. Hare, 5 Beav. 629; 12 L. J., Ch. 344; 7 Jur. 336.

—— Of Appointment of Executors — By Codicil.]—A testator, by his will, appointed A. and B. executors, and, by a codicil, he appointed his wife sole executrix of his will:—Held, that the appointment of the executors by the will was revoked. Lowe, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 478; 33 L. J., P. 155.

A testator by his will, dated the 9th December, 1857, made several dispositions of his property, and appointed executors. He subsequently executed a codicil, by which he altered two bequests in his will, and gave directions that his executors should not require the payment of a debt of 50*l*. The codicil commenced, "This is a codicil to my last will, dated the 9th of December, 1857," and concluded, "And in all other respects I revoke my will." The word "revoke" was inadvertently written by the solicitor who prepared the codicil instead of "confirm," and was inconsistent with the expressed intentions of the deceased. On an application by the executors named in the will for probate of the will and codicil, the court declined to act on the assumption that the testator intended to "confirm" his will, but granted probate on the ground that the direction in the codicil, that the executors should not require payment of the debt, implied that their office was to continue. Davy, In goods of, 29 L. J., P. 161.

A. appointed W. and B. trustees, and, besides other instructions, directed them to pay his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the legacies bequeathed by the will, or to be bequeathed by any codicil thereto. In a subsequent part of his will he appointed the same individuals executors. In a codicil to his will, after stating that he had appointed B. one of the trustees under his will, he continued, "It is my will and desire to substitute in his stead and place T. Now I do hereby, by this my codicil, nominate and appoint T. to be one of the trustees of my will and codicils in the place and stead of B., to act with and in conjunction with W.; and I hereby give T. the same powers and authorities as I have throughout my will given to and reposed in B., in the same and as full and ample a manner as if the name of T. had throughout my will been inserted in the place of the name of B.":—Held, that the appointment of B. as executor was revoked. Barrett v. Wilkins, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 687.

A testatrix appointed A. trustee, with power to convert the residue of her estate into money, and after payment of her debts and personal expenses, to dispose of the property in accordance with the directions given in such will, and she also appointed him executor. By a codicil to the will, she revoked that part of her will which gave the property in trust to A., and in lieu of him appointed her nephews B. and C., and providing C. should not be in England his brother D. to act in his capacity. She also revoked the appointment of A. as executor, and in his place appointed B. and C. B. renounced probate of the will of the deceased; C. at the time of her death was not in England:—Held, that D. was an executor according to the tenor of the will, but that power must be reserved to make a grant to C. in case he should return to this country. Goodworth, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 49.

H. by his will appointed A. and B. trustees, executors, and guardians of his three minor children. He subsequently executed two codicils. By the first he revoked all the dispositions in favour of his son, and in all other respects confirmed his will. By the second he absolutely revoked and made void all bequests and dispositions in his will, and bequeathed all his property to C., his housekeeper, whom, with D. and E., he also appointed executor. The court granted probate of the three papers to C. and E., power being reserved to A. and B., the executors named in the will, to come in if entitled and prove. Howard, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 32; L. R. 1 P. 636; 20 L. T. 230.

—— By Second Will.]—A testator executed a will in 1856, whereof he appointed W. H. B. and P. B. executors. He executed another will in 1860, referring to and confirming the previous will, whereof he appointed W. H. B. and M. J. B. "sole" executors. Probate was granted of both papers, as together containing his last will, to W. H. B. and M. J. B. (excluding P. B.), the court being of opinion that the use of the word "sole" in the will of 1860 indicated an intention to revoke the appointment of executors contained in the earlier will. Baily, In goods of, L. R. 1 P. 628; 20 L. T. 278; 17 W. R. 401.

In February, 1859, L. executed a testamentary paper, whereof he appointed W. L., E. K., and J. W. executors. In October, 1860, he made another testamentary paper, disposing in a different manner of his personal property, but not affecting realty, which was dealt with by the first paper; of the second paper he appointed the same W. L. and T. D. executors:—Held, that the second appointment of executors was no revocation of the first appointment, and that, as the bare nomination of executors entitles a paper to probate, leave should be reserved, on the second set of executors taking probate of the two papers, as together containing his last will, to the first set of executors to come in and prove. Leese, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 442; 31 L. J., P. 169; 5 L. T. 848.

Where a testatrix executed two wills partially consistent and partially inconsistent, by the first will disposing of property over which she had a power of appointment, bequeathing legacies and the residue, and appointing W. H. and J. H. executors, and by the second will, which contained no revocatory clause, bequeathing specific legacies, disposing of the residue, and appointing the said J. H. and two other persons executors, the court granted probate to J. H. of the two instruments, so far as they were not inconsistent, reserving power to W. H. and the two other executors appointed in the second will to come in and take probate. Budd, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 196.

—— By cutting off Attestation from Will.]—A testator made his will, appointing two executors. Subsequently he became dissatisfied with one of them, and shortly before his death he cut from the will his own signature and those of the attesting witnesses, with the presumed intention of revoking the appointment of the obnoxious executor:—Held, that the court could not look at the intention, such acts always amounting to a revocation. Marshall, In goods of, 17 W. R. 687.

—— Whether of Office or Estate.]—Testator gave the residue of his personal estate to his niece, and appointed her executrix. By a codicil he appointed A. and B. his residuary legatees and executors:—Held, that though power to prove the will and codicil was reserved to the niece, the gift of the residue to her was wholly revoked. Evans v. Evans, 17 Sim. 107; 14 Jur. 383.

A testator devised real estates to two trustees. By a codicil he appointed another person to be a trustee and executor of his will, in the place of one of the two trustees whom he did not wish to act as executor, in consequence of his being an interested party in the disposal of his estate:—Held, that the codicil was a revocation of the devise to the displaced trustees, as well as of the office. Hough's Will, In re, 4 De G. & Sm. 371; 20 L. J., Ch. 422; 15 Jur. 943.

A testator, having bequeathed 2,000*l.* to G., and appointed him executor and trustee, made a codicil whereby he revoked his appointment as executor and trustee, and nominated T. in his stead, and directed that the will, and a codicil previously executed, should be received and construed "as if the name of T. had been inserted in the place and stead of that of G.":—Held, that the legacies were not revoked, it appearing on the construction of the will and codicil that they were not gifts to G. virtute officii. Bunbury's Trusts, In re, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 408.

A legacy given to the testator's trustees and executors as a mark of his respect for them:—Held, not revoked by a codicil appointing other trustees in their room, and giving a legacy of equal amount to the newly appointed trustees and executors in similar language. Burgess v. Burgess, 1 Coll. C. C. 367; 8 Jur. 660.

A devise of lands to trustees, who are afterwards changed by a codicil, is not revoked by the codicil; but the new trustees shall stand seised upon the trusts of the will, although the word "heirs" is made use of in the codicil. Acherley v. Vernon, 3 Bro. P. C. 85; 9 Mod. 68; 1 P. Wms. 733; Comyn. 381; 2 Eq. Abr. 209.

Testator, by his will, directed that his trade should be carried on by his daughter and others, as trustees, for ten years, when the concern should be closed, the property sold, the produce invested in the funds, and the funds held in trust as to one moiety for the benefit of the daughter and her children, and as to the other moiety for the benefit of the children of his brother. By a codicil the testator revoked that part of his will which empowered his trustees to sell his effects, and instead thereof he authorised his daughter to take possession of all furniture, stock in trade, and every description of property found on his (the testator's) premises, to be disposed of at her discretion:—Held, that the effect of the codicil was not to alter the enjoyment of the property, but only to constitute the daughter sole trustee under the will. Newman v. Lade, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 680.

A testator devised all his real property to his youngest son and his heirs, but if he should die unmarried, then to his sisters and their heirs. By a codicil, he declared that he left in trust to his executors the whole of the property of every description which he had willed to his youngest son:—Held, that the beneficial disposition made by the will was not revoked, but that the executors took subject to the trusts thereby declared. Froggatt v. Wardell, 3 De G. & Sm. 685; 14 Jur. 1101.

Testator gave the residue of his estate to two trustees in trust, out of the produce, to invest 4,000*l.* in the funds in trust for his granddaughter for her life, and after her death for her children, and on failure of children he directed that the capital should fall into the residue. By a codicil reciting that he had, by his will, given to the two trustees, in trust, for his granddaughter 4,000*l.* 5 per cents. standing in his name, and that he was desirous that such trust should be executed by three persons, he appointed another person to be a co-trustee and guardian of his granddaughter jointly with the two named in his will, and he directed that his said trustees should transfer the said stock to his granddaughter free from all deductions:—Held, that the testator did not intend to give 4,000*l.* stock to his granddaughter absolutely, but merely that the trusts declared by his will of the 4,000*l.* should be performed by three persons instead of two. Barry v. Crundall, 7 Sim. 430; 4 L. J., Ch. 264.

3. By Destruction or Mutilation.

By Tearing.]—In 1879, after the decease of W., who had made his will in 1863, there was found among his papers a portion of it torn off, and containing (besides the date as of 1863 and the signature duly attested) only the words, "and appointed the said William Domville Handcock to be executor of this my will"; and at the foot, in the handwriting of the deceased, "as some circumstances have changed":—Held, that W. must be taken to have revoked his will, and accordingly, that the mutilated document could not be admitted to probate. White, In goods of, 3 L. R., Ir. 413.

If a testator tears off that which he has made a substantial, though by law it is not an essential, portion of his will, such tearing is a sufficient tearing within 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 20. Williams v. Tyley, Johns. 530; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 35; 7 W. R. 116.

Therefore, where a will concluded with a testimonium as follows: "In witness whereof I have to this my last will and testament, contained in five sheets of paper, to the first four sheets thereof set my hand, and to the last sheet thereof my hand and seal," and was executed in the manner described in the testimonium, and the testator subsequently tore off the signatures to the first four sheets with the intention to revoke:—Held, that such tearing revoked the will. Ib.

A paper writing, inclosed in a half sheet of foolscap paper, and indorsed in the handwriting of the deceased, "Will of Major J. S.," was found with other papers in a locked drawer. It had been cut in two pieces immediately above the signatures of the deceased and the attesting witnesses, but both pieces were preserved:—Held, that the court could not grant probate of such a document. Simpson, In goods of, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1366.

A. having an intention to make a new will, and thereby to revoke a legacy contained in his then existing will, requested this last to be brought to him. As soon as he had it in his hand, he tore it as it was doubled, from the edges, very nearly through, so that only a small portion of each sheet, where it was doubled, held the two parts together. He stopped, however, on being reminded that a party whom he wished to benefit would lose everything if he destroyed that will and did not make another, and dropped the paper on the floor. With his knowledge it was taken from thence, and carried upstairs. He frequently expressed an intention to make a new will, but did not do so:—Held, that it was not necessary, to constitute a revocation by tearing, that the testator should rend the will into more pieces than it originally consisted of, but in order to make the act effectual he must have intended that which he actually did of itself to have the effect of revocation, without more. Elms v. Elms, 1 Sw. & Tr. 155; 27 L. J., P. 96; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 765; 6 W. R. 864.

A testatrix executed a will which revoked an earlier will. Two years subsequently, while alone in her bed-room, she destroyed such will, and immediately afterwards told her daughter that she had done so with the intention that the earlier will might take effect:—Held, that the destruction of the instrument under the circumstances amounted to an absolute revocation. Weston, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 53; L. R. 1 P. 633; 20 L. T. 330.

By Tearing off Seal.]—A person having made his will, executed under seal, and published and attested as a sealed instrument, afterwards, for the purpose of revoking it, tore off the seal, and with it part of a word:—Held, that the act of tearing off the seal was sufficient, and that the will was thereby revoked. Price v. Price, 3 H. & N. 341; 27 L. J., Ex. 409; 6 W. R. 597.

Mutilation.]—The will of a testatrix was found after her death with the signature and attestation clause cut off and folded inside the will. There was no other evidence of intention:—Held, that this was a sufficient evidence of an animus revocandi. Maynesi or Maynes v. Hazleton, 44 L. T. 586; 45 J. P. 816.

G. duly executed a will on six or eight detached sheets of paper. At the time of execution he subscribed his name at the foot of each sheet, in the presence of the attesting witnesses, who thereupon also subscribed in his presence each sheet. On his death, two of the middle sheets of the will were found among his papers, and there was no trace of the remaining sheets. On motion to decree letters of administration with these sheets annexed as the will of G.:—Held, that the signatures at the end of the will, being the only ones that satisfied the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, having been destroyed, the will must be presumed to have been revoked. Gullan or Gullon, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 23; 27 L. J., P. 15; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 196; 6 W. R. 307.

Seven days before his death, A. caused a will to be prepared for him; it was left in the custody of his mother. The day before his death he took possession of it at his own request. After his death it was found in his bed, with the signature and attested clause torn off:—Held, that there was a presumptive revocation of it. Lewis, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 31; 27 L. J., P. 31; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 243.

Partial Revocation — Probate granted in Mutilated State.]—A testatrix, having duly executed her will, proceeded some time afterwards to cut out, with a pair of scissors, the name of one P., who was named as an executor therein, wherever the said P.'s name appeared in the document. She stated to one or more persons that she had "cut P. out of her will," her alleged reason being on account of some disagreement which had arisen between the said P. and his wife, who was a daughter of the testatrix:—Held, that the will was only partially revoked, and that it was entitled to probate in the state in which it was found upon the death of the testatrix. Leach, In goods of, 63 L. T. 111.

The testatrix duly executed her last will. At some date subsequently she added something in writing at the foot of the will. She afterwards appeared to have cut off this addition, and, in doing this, cut through the name of one of the attesting witnesses. Sufficient, however, remained for the name to be still legible. There was also a piece cut out in the margin of the will. The signature of the testatrix and all the other material parts of the will remained intact. The court, upon motion, admitted the document to proof in its mutilated form. Taylor, In goods of, 63 L. T. 230.

Revocation of Appointment of Executors.]—A testator by his will appointed two executors, with the usual directions as to payment of debts, &c. He also appointed the same persons trustees, with directions to pay the income arising from his property to his wife and his only son in equal shares during her life or widowhood, and after her death or remarriage the whole estate was bequeathed to the son absolutely. There were also alternative trusts in the case of the son dying in the wife's lifetime, either unmarried or married leaving children. After his death the will was found with the clause appointing executors cut out of it, and there was evidence of declarations by the testator that he had cut it out with a pair of scissors, with the intention of cutting out the name of one of the executors. The wife died in the lifetime of the testator, and in the events which had happened at his death, the son was the only person entitled to the estate :—Held, that the appointment of executors was revoked by the mutilation of the will; that the trustees were not executors according to the tenor; and that the son was entitled to a grant of administration with the will annexed. Maley. In goods of, 56 L. J., P. 112; 12 P. D. 134; 57 L. T. 500; 35 W. R. 764; 51 J. P. 423.

By Cutting out Signature.]—H. executed a will by signing her name at the foot of the first five sheets, and at the end. The testimonium clause stated that she had done so. A codicil was also executed, which was written at the foot, and on the back of the last sheet of the will. Subsequently the deceased cut off her signature at the bottom of the five sheets, and drew a pen through the name at the end, adding the words, "Cancelled, A. D. H.—15th September, 1857." There was evidence that she intended by the act done to revoke her will, and to preserve the codicil :—Held, that the deceased had cut off a substantial part of the will and had torn it in a manner sufficient to satisfy the statute. Harris, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 485; 33 L. J., P. 181; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 684; 11 L. T. 276.

Scratching out of Signatures.]—A will which after execution had remained in the custody of deceased was found in her repositories after her death with her own signature and the signatures of the attesting witnesses scratched out as with a knife :—Held, that there was a revocation within the requirements of s. 20 of the Wills Act. Morton, In goods of, 56 L. J., P. 96; 12 P. D. 141; 57 L. T. 501; 35 W. R. 735; 51 J. P. 680.

A testator two days before his death, being paralysed on one side and partly speechless, intimated to the two medical men in attendance on him his desire to make a will. They interpreted his wishes by signs and wrote them down on a card. He executed the document by making his mark, which however appeared in the middle of the writing, and they then put their initials as witnesses at the back. Subsequently, after a conversation with one of the testator's relatives, they returned to his room, and telling him that they had taken on themselves more responsibility than they ought to have taken, and that what they had written must be regarded as a memorandum, they erased their initials at the back. The testator seemed to acquiesce in this, but the card was found after his death in a handbag which he kept near his bed, and there was evidence that he had shown it to the lady whom he intended it to benefit, telling her it was for her, and wished her to take it :—Held, that what passed at the erasure of the witnesses' initials did not amount to a revocation. Margary v. Robinson, 56 L. J., P. 42; 12 P. D. 8; 57 L. T. 281; 35 W. R. 350; 51 J. P. 407.

Testator's Signature still Legible—Witnesses' Signatures Struck through.]—A will, which after execution had remained in the custody of the deceased, was found after his death with the attesting witnesses' signatures struck through with a pen, and the testator's signature apparently scratched with a knife but still legible :—Held, that there was no revocation within the requirements of s. 20 of the Wills Act. Godfrey, In goods of, 1 R. 484; 69 L. T. 22.

At A.'s death his will and codicil were found in this condition—the names of the attesting witnesses and the attestation clauses were torn away from the last sheet of the will and the foot of the codicil, but his signature remained intact both at the end of the will and codicil, and at the foot of each sheet of the will. Certain lines and parts of lines in the will were also struck through with blue ink :—Held, that the act of tearing was sufficient to revoke the will, when combined with the presumption, arising from the circumstances, that it was strongly against A.'s intention that this will should stand. Abraham v. Joseph, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 179.

A person, besides a will, left a second testamentary paper, to which his signature was attached. The place, however, in which the names of the attesting witnesses should have appeared was scratched over with a pen and ink, so that no letter of a name could be deciphered :—Held, that this latter paper was revoked. James, In goods of, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 52.

Cutting off Name of Attesting Witness, but Piece Preserved.]—Testator cut from the will the portion of the document on which the name and address of the second attesting witness were written. The excised part was also mutilated, but the name and address of the witness remained legible upon it, and it was found with the will in the testator's writing-desk. The court being satisfied that the name had not been removed animo revocandi, decreed probate of the instrument. Wheeler, In goods of, 49 L. J., P. 29; 42 L. T. 60; 28 W. R. 476; 44 J. P. 285.

—— Names of Witnesses Essential.]—Semble, that the names of the attesting witnesses are an essential part of the will, and that their removal from the will animo revocandi will render it inoperative. Ib.

Striking out Words of Limitation.]—J. E. made a will, in which he devised his house, lands and tenements to his mother, "Elizabeth E., her heirs and assigns for ever": he afterwards struck his pen through the words, "her heirs and assigns for ever" :—Held, that this was, under the 6th section of the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), a valid revocation, by obliteration, of a clause in his will; the mother took only an estate for life. Swinton v. Bailey, 48 L. J., Ex. 57; 4 App. Cas. 70; 39 L. T. 581; 27 W. R. 293—H. L. (E.)

The 6th section of the statute was satisfied by this act of obliteration of the words in question, which amounted to an actual revocation, and not a mere alteration. Ib.

The word "clause" in the first portion of the section may properly be read "part." Ib.

Per Lord Penzance: "Devise" in the statute means a disposition of lands, in writing, and when the statute says the testator may revoke any "clause thereof," it means any intelligible portion of the devise, whether the effect is to increase the beneficial interest of the taker or the reverse. Ib.

Abandonment not Destruction.]—A testator drew his pen through the lines of various parts of his will, wrote on the back of it "This is revoked," and threw it among a heap of waste papers in his sitting-room. A servant took it up and put it on a table in the kitchen. It remained lying about in the kitchen till the testator's death seven or eight years afterwards, and was then found uninjured:—Held, that the will was not revoked, the words "or otherwise destroyed" in 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26 (Wills Act, 1837), s. 20, not being satisfied, as, whatever the testator intended, the will had not been actually injured. Cheese v. Lovejoy, Harris, In re, 46 L. J., P. 66; 2 P. D. 251; 37 L. T. 294; 25 W. R. 853—C. A.

Partial Cancellation—Presumption.]—Where a will was written in ink, and formally executed, and the testator afterwards drew a line in pencil through a clause in the will:—Held, that the erasure in pencil raised no presumption of revocation, and that without other explanation it was properly regarded not as a revocation of the clause, but as merely deliberative, or indicative of some future and incomplete purpose. Francis v. Grover, 5 Hare, 39; 15 L. J., Ch. 99; 10 Jur. 280.

Testator directed his executors to pay an annuity to his sister ——, the wife of Francis Betley, or to such persons as the said Elizabeth Betley should appoint, to the intent that the same might be for the separate use of the said E. Betley, and the receipt of the said —— to be a sufficient discharge. The testator, after executing his will, drew his pen through his sister's name in those places where blanks are left:—Held, that the bequest was not revoked. Martins v. Gardiner, 8 Sim. 73; 5 L. J., Ch. 305.

—— Proof in Fac-simile.]—Where a will, on the face of it, had been executed in 1858, and subscribed by two legatees named in it as witnesses, and was re-executed in 1860, and attested by different witnesses, and after the death of the testatrix, was found, with the first attestation clause and the names of the witnesses to it cancelled; but there was no evidence to show the date of the cancellation:—The court refused to exclude the part cancelled from probate, and directed the probate to go in fac-simile. Smith, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 589; 34 L. J., P. 19; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1243; 11 L. T. 684.

R. executed his will and a codicil thereto in the presence of three witnesses, two of whom subscribed their names as such to both instruments. Immediately afterwards, before any person had left the room, R., having been informed that one of such subscribed witnesses would forfeit her interest under the will, ordered her name to be struck through, and the third witness to sign the will and codicil, which was done:—Held, that the court could not allow the probate to issue with the omission of the name struck through, but might permit it to be taken in fac-simile. Raine, In goods of, 34 L. J., P. 125; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 587.

Presumption as to Date of Mutilation, &c.]—The same principles apply to mutilations as to alterations and interlineations, so that if no evidence can be given as to the time at which they were made, it will be presumed that they were made after the execution of the document in which they appear, and, if there is a subsequent testamentary paper to that, after the execution of such testamentary paper. Christmas v. Whingates, 3 Sw. & Tr. 81; 32 L. J., P. 73; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 283; 8 L. T. 801; 11 W. R. 371.

Animus revocandi.]—A testator being led to believe by a friend that his will was invalid, tore it and told his wife to put it in the fire. The fire had not been lighted, but the wife placed the pieces in the grate. A few minutes afterwards the testator bethought himself that his friend might possibly be wrong, and he took the pieces from the grate and preserved them:—Held, that there had been no revocation, the act of tearing not having been accompanied by the animus revocandi; and probate was granted of the will as contained in the pieces. Giles v. Warren, 41 L. J., P. 59; L. R. 2 P. 401; 26 L. T. 780; 20 W. R. 827.

Where a will of which the testator has the custody is found mutilated after his death, the presumption is, that the mutilation was the act of the testator, done animo revocandi. Dallow, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 128.

A testator, having duly executed his will, subsequently, when suffering under an attack of delirium tremens, tore it in pieces. The pieces were preserved, and on his recovery he was informed of what he had done, and he answered he must have been mad when he did the act, and that he would make a fresh will, which intention he did not carry out:—Held, that the will was not revoked. Brunt v. Brunt, L. R. 3 P. 37; 28 L. T. 368; 21 W. R. 392.

A will was found, the signature to which had been cut out, but gummed on to its former place. The will had been in the custody of the testator up to the time of his death. Declarations of the testator made subsequently to the date of the will were proved of an intention to benefit his wife by will. No other will was forthcoming:—Held, that the presumption that the testator had cut out the signature animo revocandi was not rebutted, and that the gumming on the signature in its original place did not revive the will. Bell v. Fothergill, L. R. 2 P. 148; 23 L. T. 323; 18 W. R. 1040.

On the death of a party a will was found in an iron chest, in which he kept important papers. It had been written on the first side of seven sheets of brief-paper, and had been signed by the deceased and witnesses on each sheet and at the end. The first seven or eight lines had been cut and torn off, but in other respects the will was complete:—Held, that from the mere cutting or tearing off the beginning of the will without other circumstances, it could not be inferred that the testator intended to revoke the whole will, and that it must be admitted to probate in its incomplete state. Woodward, In goods of, 40 L. J., P. 17; L. R. 2 P. 206; 24 L. T. 40; 19 W. R. 448.

—— "Writing declaring an Intention to Revoke."]—The testator had obliterated the whole of a codicil, including his signature, by thick black marks, and at the foot of it had written the words, signed by himself and attested by two witnesses: "We are witnesses of the erasure of the above":—Held, that the codicil was revoked, for the words above mentioned were "a writing declaring an intention to revoke" it within s. 20 of the Wills Act. Gosling, In goods of, 55 L. J., P. 27; 11 P. D. 79; 34 W. R. 492; 50 J. P. 263.

—— Mistake.]—Where a testator by misinformation as to the effect of a subsequent deed, settling his property in his lifetime, had been induced to revoke his will by cancellation, the court refused to grant probate of a copy on motion, but compelled the parties to propound in solemn form. James, In goods of, 19 L. T. 610.

—— Will Destroyed in Presence of Testatrix, but without her Direction or Authority—Ratification.]—Where a testatrix showed her will to her sister-in-law, and the latter in her presence, but without her direction or authority, and contrary to her wishes, first tore and then burnt the will, but the testatrix subsequently, though pressed to do so, refused to make another will, saying that "she could not bring her mind to it, and it must remain as it was":—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence of a subsequent ratification by the testatrix of the wrongful act, so as to make it a destruction of the will "in her presence and by her direction," within the meaning of s. 20 of the Wills Act, and that probate ought to be granted of the original will as contained in the affidavit of the executor. Mills v. Hillward, 59 L. J., P. 23; 15 P. D. 20; 61 L. T. 651.

Quære, whether any subsequent ratification can constitute a revocation of a will within the meaning of s. 20 of the Wills Act, where such will has been destroyed, not only without any direction or authority from the testator, but also contrary to his wishes. Ib.

Destruction—Incorporated Document—Testamentary Intention.]—Because part of the will of a testator fails by reason of some legal objection to it, it is not, therefore, to be regarded as struck out of the will for all purposes. Although, so far as the law intervenes, a clause may be inoperative, it may still be read with a view to ascertaining the general testamentary intention. A testator, who died in May, 1886, by his will, dated in December, 1871, disposed of all his property in favour of his children, and declared that whereas he had advanced, or might advance, for the benefit of his children, certain sums towards their advancement in life or for their benefit, and all which sums respectively would appear and be mentioned in a book marked "A," and signed by him, every sum of money appearing or mentioned in such book to have been so advanced or paid on account of any child should be taken in or towards satisfaction of such child's share, and brought into hotchpot. In January, 1886, the testator tore from the book marked "A" several leaves, upon which entries of such advances had been written, and directed them to be burnt in his presence, and wrote on the book, the cover of which was preserved, a memorandum, stating that the book had been destroyed by him. It appeared that some of the sums advanced had been advanced before the date of the will, and others subsequently. An originating summons was taken out for the purpose of determining the effect of the above clause:—Held, that the book would probably have been admitted to probate if it had contained writing; and that if a document formed part of a will it was liable to revocation in the same manner as the will itself:—Held, therefore, that, as the book had been destroyed by the testator, no sum advanced by him, whether before or after the date of the will, could be brought into hotchpot. Coyte, In re, Coyte v. Coyte, 56 L. T. 510.

Before 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26.]—A slight tearing of a will, and throwing it on the fire, with a deliberate intent to consume it, by the testator, though it fell off and was preserved by a bystander, without his consent or knowledge, was a sufficient revocation. Bibb d. Mole v. Thomas, 2 W. Bl. 1043.

The mere act of cancelling a will was no revocation unless done animo revocandi. Burtenshaw v. Gilbert, Cowp. 52; Lofft, 465.

A testator, having quarrelled with one of the devisees named in his will, began to tear it in a fit of passion, with the intention of destroying it, and having tore it into four pieces, he was prevented from proceeding further, partly through the efforts of a bystander, and partly by the entreaties of a devisee; he afterwards became calm; and having put by the several pieces, expressed his satisfaction that no material part of the writing had been injured, and that it was no worse:—Held, that it was properly left to the jury to say whether he had completely finished all that he intended to do for the purpose of destroying the will; and the jury having found that he had not, the court refused to disturb the verdict. Doe d. Perkes v. Perkes, 3 B. & Ald. 489; 22 R. R. 458.

To cancel a will by burning, some part of the body of the will must be burnt. A mere intent, though the will was thrown on the fire, was not sufficient. Doe d. Read v. Harris, 1 N. & P. 405; 6 A. & E. 209; W. W. & D. 106; 6 L. J., K. B. 84.

Evidence.]—A will, which had remained in the custody of the testator since the time of its execution, was not forthcoming at his death. A draft was propounded, and evidence of declaration was admitted to show an intention to adhere to the will. On the other side evidence was offered to show that the testator did not intend to leave his property in the manner in which it was disposed of by his will, and that he had destroyed it by burning it:—Held, that such declarations were admissible, not as evidence of destruction, but of intention not to adhere to the will. Keen v. Keen, 42 L. J., P. 61; L. R. 3 P. 105; 29 L. T. 247.

In order to revoke a will under s. 20 of the Wills Act, there must be a positive act of destruction, together with an intention to revoke. No symbolical act of destruction is sufficient. Cheese v. Lovejoy, Harris, In re, supra.

The words of s. 20, "otherwise destroying," must be construed as intending some mode of destruction ejusdem generis with the preceding words, not an act which is not a destroying in the primary sense of the word. Ib.

Striking through words with a pen, unless initialed as required by s. 21, is not valid, and the will stands as though the alterations had not been made. Ib.

4. Dependent Relative Revocation.

Generally.]—In order to establish a case of dependent relative revocation, it must be shown by the evidence of disinterested witnesses that the act of destruction of a will was referable wholly and solely to an intention to set up some other testamentary paper. Eckersley v. Platt, 36 L. J., P. 7; L. R. 1 P. 281; 15 L. T. 327; 15 W. R. 232.

A will destroyed by the testator, on the supposition that he had substituted another for it, will be valid, and probate of a copy of it will be granted, if the latter will is not duly executed. Scott v. Scott, 1 Sw. & Tr. 258; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 298.

A testatrix duly executed a will in 1855, and in 1862 she signed another will, being a copy of the former one, with the exception of bequests to a niece, but which was not duly attested. In 1864 she cut out the names of the attesting witnesses to the earlier will, in the presence of a fellow-servant. Both documents were retained in her possession until her death:—Held, that the doctrine of dependent relative revocation applied, and that the will of 1855 was entitled to probate. Middleton, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 583; 34 L. J., P. 16; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1109; 11 L. T. 684.

The court will not apply the doctrine of dependent relative revocation to a case where the testator has destroyed a will through a mistaken notion of the legal effect of its destruction, if it is satisfied that he intended entirely to revoke that will. Dickinson v. Swatman, 4 Sw. & Tr. 205.

A testator executed a will bequeathing a number of legacies, the amounts of which were stated in words, and afterwards erased some of those words and inserted others, the alterations being unattested; and he also cut out a portion of the will:—Held, first, that the doctrine of dependent relative revocation applying, the substituted words should be struck out, and the original amounts stand part of the will. Nelson, In goods of, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 569.

Held, secondly, that where no words were substituted, the original words, where apparent, but not otherwise, should be admitted to probate. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the part cut out should be rejected. Ib.

A testatrix, having her will in her hand, dictated the alterations she desired to be made in the first part of it to a friend, who wrote them down. Feeling unwell, she desired her friend to stop there, and then tore off and burnt so much of her will as had been covered by the memorandum written at her dictation. This memorandum, together with the rest of the will, which contained the residuary clause and the signatures of the testatrix and witnesses and the attestation clause intact, was placed in a desk by her and locked up, and she believed when she did so that these papers constituted a new will, and were not merely instructions for such a will:—Held, that it was a case of dependent relative revocation, a revocation dependent upon the papers locked up constituting a new will, and probate was granted of the original will as contained in the portion which remained and the draft of the part which was destroyed. Dancer v. Crabb, 42 L. J., P. 53; L. R. 3 P. 98; 28 L. T. 914.

The court will not apply the principle of dependent relative revocation except there is proof of the actual destruction of the instrument. Homerton v. Hewitt, 25 L. T. 854.

A., having a will and a codicil, cut off the last page of the will, on which were the names of A. and the witnesses, and desired B. to burn the page so cut off. A. then made some alterations in the remaining pages of the will; desired B. to write out a new will, and send for A.'s solicitor. B. wrote the new will, but did not burn the part cut off, as A. knew. A. died before executing the new will:—Held, that the former will was entitled to probate, there being no intention to revoke, except in connection with the completion of a new will. Cockayne, In goods of, Deane, Ecc. Rep. 177; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 454; 4 W. R. 555.

Where Condition Unfulfilled.]—A testator executed a will in 1864, revoking all former wills. In 1865 he destroyed this will, with an intention, expressed at the time, that he wished to substitute for it a will of 1862, which he held in his hand:—Held, that the act of destruction by the testator was referable solely to his intention to validate the will of 1862, and that act being conditional, and the condition being unfulfilled, there was no revocation. Powell v. Powell, 35 L. J., P. 100; L. R. 1 P. 209; 14 L. T. 800.

Any alterations, though in a will made before the 1 Vict. c. 26, must by s. 21, in order to take effect as dispositions of the property, be attested in the manner pointed out by the act; and where there were obliterations of part, and such alterations made with a view of substituting the new provisions, it was:—Held, that, the intention of the testator being only to revoke conditionally, the will should be admitted to probate as it stood before the alteration. Brooke v. Kent, 3 Moore, P. C. 334.

Evidence.]—The principle of dependent relative revocation applies to the case where a testator has so entirely erased the name of a legatee that it is no longer apparent, and has substituted another name for it. The court will receive evidence to show what the original name was, and restore it to the probate if satisfied that the testator only revoked the first bequest on the supposition that he had effectually substituted a new legatee. McCabe, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 79; L. R. 3 P. 94; 29 L. T. 249.

5. By Alteration of Estate or Interest Devised.

By Bankruptcy.]—Devise of real estate was not revoked by bankruptcy. Distinction in that respect between bankruptcy and disseisin. Charman v. Charman, 14 Ves. 580.

By Conveyance.]—Though conveyance for particular purpose will necessarily operate as a revocation of will no further than the particular purpose; yet, if the conveyance goes beyond what the particular purpose requires, it will be a revocation. Vawser v. Jeffery, 2 Swanst. 272.

So a conveyance of whole estate though for a partial purpose. Id. 274.

Where a man has an equitable interest in fee in an estate, and devises it, and makes a subsequent conveyance of the legal estate "to the same uses," it is no revocation. Parsons v. Freeman, 3 Atk. 749.

Lease and release of estate, subsequent to will, is a revocation thereof. Pollen v. Huband, 1 Eq. Abr. 412.

Suppose a will is made according to form, and afterwards the lands sold and conveyed to others, though the form of revocation the statute prescribes is not pursued, yet it is a virtual revocation. Brudenell v. Boughton, 2 Atk. 272.

E., by will, orders his estate to be sold, and the produce to be divided. He afterwards sells the estate; this is a revocation of the will. Arnold v. Arnold, Bro. C. C. 401; Dick. 645.

A., being seised in fee of an estate subject to a term for raising 5,000*l.* for B., made a devise, in general terms, sufficient to comprise the estate.

Afterwards, part of it was sold, for the remainder of the term, for 7,600*l.*, under a decree for raising the 5,000*l.*; and A. sold the reversion to the purchaser for a further sum; and an assignment and conveyance were made to complete the sales. The 5,000*l.* was paid to B. out of the 7,600*l.*; but the surplus remained in court until long after A.'s death:—Held, that as an excessive sale had been made under the decree, the surplus retained the character of real estate, and that, notwithstanding the assignment and conveyance, the devise remained unrevoked with respect to it. Jermy v. Preston, 13 Sim. 356.

Although the owner in fee of lands which had been sold to a corporation had made a will sufficient to pass personal estate:—Held, that the words of the will being vague and unequivocal, there was not sufficient evidence of an intention to elect that the produce of such lands should pass as personal estate. Cramer, Ex parte, Stewart's Estate, In re, 1 Sm. & G. 32; 22 L. J., Ch. 369; 16 Jur. 1063; 1 W. R. 17.

Testatrix devised all her freehold messuages, &c., in S. to trustees, in trust to sell and stand possessed of the proceeds in trust for A., and gave the residue of her personal estate to the trustees, in trust for B. After the date of her will, she sold the houses, and conveyed them to the purchaser, and he deposited the conveyance and title-deeds thereof with her, to secure part of the purchase-money:—Held, that the security and the money due on it did not pass, under 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 27, s. 23, to the trustees in trust for A., but to the trustees in trust for B. Moor v. Raisbeck, 12 Sim. 123.

—— To Use of Testator in Fee.]—A., seised in tail of the lands of K., and other lands, suffered a recovery of those lands, in 1834, and by will, dated in 1832, devised them. In 1836 A. borrowed money on a mortgage of K., and a collateral judgment. On that occasion a disentailing deed of all the lands was executed and inrolled, by which A. conveyed all the lands to the use of himself and his heirs:—Held, that the deed was a total revocation of the will. Power v. Power, 9 Ir. Ch. R. 178.

A feoffment to the use of a testator and his heirs is a revocation. Brudenell v. Boughton, 2 Atk. 272.

The ultimate limitation of the use in a settlement to raise a sum of money within twelve months, and if the money was not raised then the deed to be void, was to A. in fee. After the expiration of the twelve months A. made his will, devising all his estates. And, after the execution of the will, A. and B. revoked the uses of the settlement, and limited the use to A. in fee. The deed revoking the uses of the settlement operates as a revocation of the will. The will was made before, and the deed of revocation after, the 1 Vict. c. 26:—Held, that the deed revoking the uses of the settlement operates as a revocation of the will. The reversion in fee, of which the devisor was seised at the time of his decease, did not pass by his will. Langford (Lord) v. Little, 2 Jo. & Lat. 613.

—— To Trustee.]—Devise of fee-farm rents revoked in equity, as well as at law, by subsequent conveyance to trustee, operating as an alteration of estate beyond mere purpose of securing a mortgage; but on account of laches of plaintiffs, the heirs-at-law, court would not give relief farther than by retaining bill, with liberty to bring action, &c., to give an opportunity of taking the opinion of a court of law upon the question whether there is a revocation at law, or whether court of law will presume republication from the long possession, leaving open the question whether the plaintiffs are entitled to any account, and how far back. Harmood v. Oglander, 6 Ves. 199.

—— To Bar Dower.]—Devise by the testator, who died in 1821, of all his estates whatsoever, or which he had contracted to purchase, held not to be revoked pro tanto by a subsequent reconveyance to uses to bar dower of real estates mortgaged by the testator prior to the date of his will, nor by a subsequent conveyance to such uses of real estates for the purchase of which the testator had contracted before the date of the will. Plowden v. Hyde, 2 De G. M. & G. 684; 21 L. J., Ch. 796; 16 Jur. 823.

—— To Pay Debts.]—A conveyance of an estate to trustees upon trust to sell for payment of debts is not a revocation of a prior will, because it declares that the surplus moneys arising from the sale shall be personal estate of the testator; but if it have the further purpose to provide an annuity for the separate use of the wife, until the sale, it will be a revocation, because the wife will be entitled to the annuity after the death of the husband, if the sale do not take place in his lifetime. Hodges v. Green, 3 Russ. 28; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 33.

A. devises lands to trustees to pay his debts, and then to pay his wife 200*l.* per annum for her life. Testator lived several years, and his debts increased from 2,500*l.* to 10,000*l.*, for 8,000*l.* whereof his said trustees were bound. A., the testator, by deed and fine, conveys his lands to his said trustees to sell, to pay his debts, and the surplus to him and his heirs, and his wife joins in the fine and conveyance. Whether this is a revocation of the wife's 200*l.* per annum, or whether she shall have the 200*l.* a year out of the surplus of the money after the debts paid, quære. Decreed for the wife. Vernon v. Jones, 2 Vern. 241; Pre. Ch. 32; 2 Freem. 117.

By Imperfect Conveyance.]—Revocation of a will by a conveyance never completed. Cave v. Holford, 3 Ves. 653.

A feoffment in fee, executed after a will, is a revocation, even if there was no livery. Sparrow v. Hardcastle, 3 Atk. 803.

Imperfect conveyance may, as evidence of intent, operate as a revocation. Vawser v. Jeffery, 3 Russ. 479; 7 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 38. See this case, 16 Ves. 519.

By Inoperative Conveyance.]—A deed obtained by fraud is not a revocation of a prior will. Hawes v. Wyatt, 3 Bro. C. C. 156. Reversing, 2 Cox, 263.

Grant by a husband to his wife in his lifetime will not revoke his will, giving everything from her. Beard v. Beard, 3 Atk. 72.

A deed executed under circumstances which render it void in equity, and not at law, is a revocation of a prior will. Simpson v. Walker, 5 Sim. 1.

A testatrix devised real estates, and, by a subsequent deed, attested by two witnesses, she conveyed them on other trusts:—Held, that the deed (assuming it to be void as turpis contractus) was not such a "writing declaring an intention to revoke" the will, as is required by 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 20, and therefore that the will operated on such estate and interest as she possessed in the property at her death. Ford v. De Pontès, 30 Beav. 572; 31 L. J., Ch. 185; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 323; 5 L. T. 515; 10 W. R. 69.

Revocation of a devise by an exchange, though the land, after the death of the devisor, was restored to his heir, under an arrangement in consequence of a defect discovered in the title of the other party to the exchange. Att.-Gen. v. Vigor, 8 Ves. 256.

Disseisin and remitter by entry, no revocation of will. Id. 282.

By Settlement.]—Where a feoffment was made to the same uses with those of a preceding will, it was held a revocation, and the rule of revocation of wills is the same in equity as at law. Abney v. Miller, 2 Atk. 593.

By marriage articles the husband covenanted to convey to the use of himself for life, remainder in trust to secure an annuity to his wife for life, in bar of dower; remainder to trustees for years to raise portions; remainder to the sons and daughters successively in tail, remainder to his own right heirs. Afterwards he devised, upon condition that he should have no issue; and, after the will, he, in pursuance of the articles, conveyed to trustees and their heirs to the uses and trusts of the articles; the will is not revoked. Williams v. Owens, 2 Ves. 594.

The rules as to revocation applied to legal estates are, in equity, applied to equitable estates. Ib.

Where a devised estate is differently modified there is a revocation; otherwise where the testator remains with the same estate and interest, and subject to the same means of disposition, though changed as to the legal or equitable quality. Id. 599.

Articles to settle estates of husband subject to certain uses and trusts on first and other sons in tail male; remainder to husband in fee. The husband, confirming the articles, devised the same estates, in case he should die without issue male, or on failure of issue male in life of wife; and by a subsequent settlement in performance of articles conveyed to trustees (after certain uses and trusts) to the use of his first and other sons in tail male; remainder to himself in fee. The whole fee being conveyed, and some of the purposes being inconsistent with the will and the articles, the will is revoked as to the settled estate. Chandos (Duke) v. Brydges, 7 Bro. P. C. 505. Affirming, 2 Ves. 417, 430.

Settlement of personal estate upon a second marriage, upon trust to pay such persons, &c., as the settlor shall by deed or will appoint, and in default thereof to his issue. Construction upon the whole, that it was to operate unless a subsequent instrument should be executed: a prior will, therefore, revoked. Leigh v. Norbury, 13 Ves. 340.

One devises to his wife six messuages, and the rest of his real estate equally to his two daughters in fee, and afterwards, on the marriage of his eldest daughter, he covenants to settle one moiety on her and her husband; the devise of the six houses shall be good, and subsist out of the remaining moiety. Rider v. Wager, 2 P. Wms. 332.

A. has two daughters, B. and C., and devises one moiety of his real and personal estate to B., the other moiety of his real and personal estate to C.; and afterwards, A., in consideration of marriage, covenants to settle a moiety of his real estate upon the husband that marries B.; the husband shall have one moiety by the settlement, and the wife the moiety of the other moiety by the will. Ib.

A. devises lands, in trust to permit his daughter S. to receive the rents until her marriage, or death; and in case she should marry with the consent of trustees, then to convey the premises to her and her heirs; but if she died before marriage, or married without such consent, then to convey to other persons. S. afterwards marries, with the consent of her father, who settles part of the lands on her and her husband, and dies. This settlement is no revocation of the will as to the devise of the other lands to S. Clarke v. Berkeley, 2 Vern. 720.

A testator devised all his estates to trustees and their heirs to the use of L. for life, without impeachment of waste, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male. By a codicil he revoked in part the disposition made by his will, and devised part of his estates to trustees, their executors, administrators and assigns, during the life of a married woman, without impeachment of waste, upon trust to permit her to receive the rents, issues and profits for her life for her separate use, with restraint upon anticipation, and divers remainders over. Subsequently the testator conveyed the hereditaments by deed to the use of a trustee during the life of the same woman, upon trust to permit her to receive the rents and profits for life for her separate use without anticipation, with remainders over. Neither the trustee nor the lady herself was made by that instrument dispunishable for waste:—Held, that the life estates given by the codicil were revoked by the settlement, and that the life tenants were impeachable of waste under the latter instrument. Lowndes v. Norton, 33 L. J., Ch. 583; 11 L. T. 290; 4 N. R. 452—L.JJ.

A., in 1830, devised her real estate in trust for the benefit of her brothers and their daughters. In 1837, and subsequently, A. mortgaged the same estate; and in 1844 she conveyed the equity of redemption to the mortgagee, in trust, after payment of the interest upon the mortgages, to pay the surplus rents to W. for life, with remainder to A., or as she should appoint. A. died in September, 1846, and her executrix subsequently paid off the mortgage debts out of A.'s personal estate:—Held, that the conveyance of 1844 was a revocation of the devise. Briggs v. Watt, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1041; 4 W. R. 786.

By Covenant to Surrender Copyholds.]—A testator, having devised freeholds and copyholds to the same persons, afterwards executed a settlement in contemplation of his marriage, by which he bargained and sold the freeholds to trustees and their heirs, to the use of himself during his life; and after his death to the intent that the wife might receive annually a rent-charge, which was secured by powers of distress and entry, and by a term of years; and subject to the rent-charge and the term, to the use of the settlor, his heirs and assigns; and he covenanted to surrender the copyholds to the uses of the settlement; the marriage was solemnised, and the testator died, leaving his wife surviving, without having surrendered the copyholds to the uses of the settlement. The covenant to surrender did not operate as an entire revocation of the devise of the copyholds, but was a revocation only so far as the particular purposes of the settlement required. Vawser v. Jeffery, 3 Russ. 479; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 38.

A covenant to surrender copyhold previously devised is a revocation of the will in equity, if the surrender would have been a revocation at law. S. C., 2 Swan. 268.

By Contract to Sell.]—One devises land, and afterwards articles for a valuable consideration to sell or settle the premises: this in equity is revocation of the will. Cotter v. Layer, 2 P. Wms. 624; Mos. 277.

Articles to sell a devised estate are a revocation in equity, but not at law. Williams v. Owens, 2 Ves. 601.

Lands devised, and afterwards contracted to be sold, become personal estate. Mayer v. Gowland, Dick. 563.

Revocation by contract to sell a devised estate. Rawlins v. Burgis, 2 V. & B. 382. S. P., Knollys v. Alcock, 7 Ves. 558.

A testator devised all his real estates to his children equally, and afterwards entered into contracts for the sale of his estates, but died before they were completed. The purchasers afterwards abandoned their contracts, because they were unable to procure a conveyance from some of the devisees who were infants:—Held, that, though the contracts were properly abandoned, the will was revoked as to the premises therein comprised. Tebbott v. Voules, 6 Sim. 40.

Revocation of a devise by a contract for sale, though rescinded after the devisor's death. Bennett v. Tankerville (Earl), 19 Ves. 171.

A binding and valid contract for the sale of lands devised is, in equity, as much a revocation as a conveyance would be at law. Id. 178.

The subject of an intended provision on marriage being disposed of by will, made after 1 Vict. c. 26 came into operation, and before the offer to settle, forms no objection to its being carried into execution; a contract to sell being a revocation pro tanto, as much now as before, though its effect on the estate of the devisee may be doubtful. Greene v. Cramer, 2 Con. & L. 54. S. C., nom. Saunders v. Cramer, 3 Dr. & War. 87; Ir. R. 5 Eq. 12.

Quære, whether the devisee of an estate which the testator subsequently contracts to sell is entitled to the purchase-money. Ib.

A testator, by will, gave and bequeathed to trustees his "leasehold estates and securities for money." Prior to the date of the will he was owner of leasehold property, but at the date of the will he had contracted to sell it, the purchasers, until completion, becoming his tenants at an agreed rent:—Held, that the leaseholds contracted to be sold did not pass by the will to the trustees. Goold v. Teague, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 116; 7 W. R. 84.

A testator contracted to sell lands which he had devised with stipulations as to easements by reference to a plan, which was lost, and had never been stamped. The purchasers paid the deposit and entered into possession on the footing of the contract; but before any conveyance was executed, or any further payment made, they became bankrupts. Their assignees elected not to complete the contract, and the property was sold under the bankruptcy, on the petition of the testator, as having a lien for the unpaid purchase-money. He bought it back at the sale for less than the amount due to him, and proved for the difference. On his dying without altering or republishing his will:—Held, that the will was revoked by the contract, and set up again by its abandonment. Andrew v. Andrew, 8 De G. M. & G. 336; 25 L. J., Ch. 779; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 719; 4 W. R. 161. Affirming, 3 Sm. & G. 130.

Under his marriage settlement, A. had power to appoint the reversion in fee of the settled estates, and the trustees had a power of sale, with his consent. He, by his will, appointed it to trustees, to sell and stand possessed of the produce in trust for a class; and he gave all his real and personal estate, "not thereinbefore specifically disposed of, to his widow." Subsequently the trustees, with A.'s consent, sold the estate; but at his death the conveyance had not been executed by one of the trustees, and the purchase-money had not been received:—Held (notwithstanding the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, ss. 19, 23), that the gift to the class was inoperative, and that the purchase-money passed, under the residuary gift, to the widow. Gale v. Gale, 21 Beav. 349.

A testatrix devised a real estate, and afterwards sold it. The purchase was not completed until after her death:—Held, that the purchase-money belonged to the personal representatives, and not to the devisees of the testatrix, notwithstanding her lien on the estate for the purchase-money and the 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 23. Farrar v. Winterton (Earl), 5 Beav. 1; 6 Jur. 204.

Devise of land and subsequent contract for sale to a railway company, with compensation for severance and death of testator before completion and conveyance:—Held, first, that the purchase-money belonged to the testator's personal representatives, and not to the devisee of the land. Secondly, that the compensation money for severance went in the same way. Thirdly, that the company must pay all the costs except those occasioned by litigation between adverse claimants. Manchester and Southport Ry., In re, 19 Beav. 365.

When a testator had specifically devised certain lands, but such lands were contracted to be sold in his lifetime, so that the devise was adeemed:—Held, that the rents received between his death and the conveyance of the property passed to the devisee. Watts v. Watts, 43 L. J., Ch. 77; 29 L. T. 671.

Effect of Direction in Codicil to sell Real Estate specifically devised by Will.]—C. by will devised his estate at Worcester Park to F. C. for life, and after his death to his eldest son, and if F. C. should die under twenty-seven intestate and without issue, he directed that the said estate should be sold by his executors, and the proceeds should form part of his residuary estate. And he appointed A. B. and D. executors. By a codicil the testator appointed the said A. and D. executors, revoked previous appointments, and directed his executors to sell and dispose of his estate at Worcester Park:—Held, that the codicil did not deprive F. C. and his son of the beneficial interest given them by the will. Chifferiel, In re, Chifferiel v. Watson, 73 L. T. 53.

Devise by Purchaser after Contract to Purchase — Subsequent Conveyance.]—Devise of the equitable fee, under a contract to purchase, revoked by the conveyance to a trustee and his heirs to such uses as the devisor should appoint by deed, with two witnesses, or will, with remainder to him for life; to the trustee for the life of the devisor, to bar dower, and to the devisor in fee. Rawlins v. Burgis, 2 V. & B. 382.

Distinction between intention to revoke and alteration of estate as the ground of revocation of a will. Id. 386.

Revocation by feoffment to such uses as the devisor shall appoint, with remainder to himself in fee. Ib.

In cases of contract for land before, but executed after making a will of land, the subsequent execution is not a revocation; the legal interest coming in esse afterwards, would not pass by the will at law, but in equity is bound by the prior devise of the equitable interest. Perry v. Phelips, 1 Ves. 255.

Purchasing the reversion in fee, after a devise of the life estate, was a revocation pro tanto, and descends upon the heir. Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 425; Ridgw. 301.

Where a written agreement for the purchase of an estate has been executed, the purchaser has the estate in equity, and it will pass by his will, which will not be revoked by the subsequent conveyance. Rose v. Cunynghame, 10 Ves. 554.

If A., being entitled to estate under a contract to purchase, devise it to B., and afterwards takes a conveyance of the estate to himself and C., though only in trust for himself as to C. and for the purpose of barring dower, it is a revocation of the devise; but secus if he had taken a conveyance simply to himself alone. Ward v. Moore, 4 Madd. 368.

A., the cestui que trust, devised to B., and then directed her trustees to make new conveyances to other trustees to her and her heirs, and died without new publication:—Held, a revocation. Id. 276.

By a written contract for the purchase of an estate, it was stipulated that the conveyance should be made to the purchaser, his heirs, appointees, or assigns. The purchaser immediately afterwards made a devise of the estate, and subsequently took a conveyance of it to himself and his heirs, to the usual uses to bar dower:—Held, that the devisee could not make such a title as a purchaser would be bound to accept, inasmuch as all the existing authorities show that the devise was revoked by the subsequent conveyance. Bullin v. Fletcher, 2 Myl. & Cr. 432; 6 L. J., Ch. 140. Affirming, 1 Keen, 369.

A party, having contracted to purchase the fee-simple of an estate from a person who was at that time only tenant for life of the same, devised such estate in fee; afterwards the vendor, having acquired the fee, conveyed the same to a trustee for the testator:—Held, that nothing passed by the will. Duckle v. Baines, 8 Sim. 525; 6 L. J., Ch. 327; 1 Jur. 670.

A devise by a will made before 1838 (1 Vict. c. 26, ss. 24, 34) of all the real estates of which the testator then was or at the time of his death should be seised to his heir-at-law, if the testator acquired real estates subsequent to the date of his will, puts the heir to his election. Schroder v. Schroder, 1 Kay, 578; 2 Eq. Rep. 895; 23 L. J., Ch. 916. Affirmed, 18 Jur. 987; 3 Eq. R. 97; 3 W. R. 55—L. C.

So, also, would such a devise by a testator, who died before 1834 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106, s. 3), from the mere intention thereby shown to give the heir property under the will, notwithstanding that he would take nothing in fact under the will, but by his better title as heir. Ib.

In such a case the testator, subsequently to the making of his will, contracted to buy a certain freehold estate, and then made a codicil directing the executors and trustees of his will to complete the purchase, and hold the estate upon the trusts of the will, which were partly in favour of the heir, and then the testator took a conveyance of the same estate to uses to bar dower in his own favour:—Held, that the devise by the codicil was revoked, and that the heir must elect. Ib.

By Fine or Recovery.]—Testator makes a feoffment after will to the use of himself in fee, or suffers a recovery; it is a revocation. Cave v. Holford, 3 Ves. 664.

A. devises use of furniture, &c., at B. to his wife for life, on consideration of her residing there. He afterwards suffers a recovery of estate, and, dying without republishing will, the estate descends to heir-at-law:—Held, that wife was entitled to use of furniture, &c., discharged of condition of residence. Darley v. Langworthy, 3 Bro. P. C. 359; Ambl. 653.

A recovery suffered of lands devised by will previously made is a revocation of such will as to the lands. Ib.

Tenant in tail male, remainder to himself in fee, devises his lands to J., and then suffers a recovery to the use of himself in fee, and dies without issue male; this is a revocation of the will. Marwood v. Turner, 3 P. Wms. 163.

Semble, the doctrine of election ought not to be applied to the case of a revocation by a recovery merely. Tennant v. Tennant, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 516.

By Lease.]—A demise of lease for years to the same person to whom the fee is devised, and which commences in the life of the devisor, is no revocation of the fee. Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 72.

A man devises land in fee, and then makes a lease for years of the same land. The lease, if not made to the devisee, is a revocation at law pro tanto only. Perkins v. Walker, 1 Vern. 97.

A. devises lands to his son B. for ninety-nine years, determinable upon three lives, and charges the same with an annuity of 40*l.* to his daughter M. The testator afterwards devised these lands to S. for ninety-nine years, determinable on three other lives, reserving a yearly rent of 50*l.*:—Held, that the demise was a revocation of the devise, but not of the annuity, there being rent enough reserved to satisfy it. Parker v. Lamb, 3 Bro. P. C. 12; 2 Vern. 495.

Lease for years or life is a revocation of a will pro tanto only. Cave v. Holford, supra.

By Mortgage.]—Lands devised to one in fee, and afterwards mortgaged to the same person, is a revocation in toto; but if mortgaged to a stranger, a revocation quoad the mortgage only. Harkness v. Bayley, Pre. Ch. 514.

A. devises lands and then makes a mortgage thereof in fee. This is a revocation in law, but otherwise in equity. Hall v. Dench, 1 Vern. 329.

One by deed and fine mortgages; this is a revocation of a will only pro tanto. Rider v. Wager, 2 P. Wms. 334.

A. devised lands to his executor for payment of his scheduled debts, remainder over; afterwards he mortgaged part of the lands, and paid most of the scheduled debts; this mortgage was held no revocation, but the decree was afterwards reversed, without prejudice to the heir-at-law. Barnardiston v. Carter, 8 Vin. Abr. 147, pl. 25.

A. devised lands, and afterwards mortgaged them for years, and then levied a fine sur conusance de droit come ceo, &c., and not a fine sur concessit: this will be a revocation; but if there had been a fine sur concessit, it would have revoked only pro tanto. Anon., 8 Vin. Abr. 136, pl. 10.

Power of assignment of a mortgage, and the loan increased after the will, is a revocation only pro tanto of the will. Jackson v. Parker, Ambl. 687.

A mortgage in fee after a devise of the estate is, in law, a total revocation; in equity, pro tanto only. Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atk. 606. S. P., Williams v. Owens, 2 Ves. 601.

If lands devised are conveyed for a principal purpose as a mortgage or payment of debts, it is a revocation pro tanto only. Brydges v. Chandos (Duke), 2 Ves. 417.

By a mortgage in fee of a devised estate, or a conveyance in fee for payment of debts, the will is revoked pro tanto only. Temple (Earl) v. Chandos (Duke), 3 Ves. 685.

A devise not revoked by a mortgage in fee to the devisee. Baxter v. Dyer, 5 Ves. 656.

Mortgage to devisee, after making of will, is no revocation. Peach v. Phillips, Dick. 538.

No instance of a revocation of a will at law being held not a revocation in equity where the partial, particular purpose was not for charges or incumbrances, or to pay debts. Harmood v. Oglander, 8 Ves. 126. Reversing as to this point, 6 Ves. 221.

Devise of fee-farm rents revoked in equity as well as at law, by subsequent conveyance to trustees, operating as an alteration of estate beyond mere purpose of securing a mortgage; but, on account of laches of plaintiffs, the heirs-at-law, court would not give relief further than by retaining bill, with liberty to bring action, &c., to give an opportunity of taking opinion of court of law whether there is a revocation at law, or whether court of law will presume a republication from long possession; leaving it open whether plaintiffs are entitled to any account, and for how far back. S. C., 6 Ves. 199.

Wherever the whole legal estate is conveyed, whether for a partial or general purpose, with the single exception of the case of partition, a court of law has nothing to do with the purpose, but is to see whether the interest remains the same in the devisor as at the date of the will; if not, whether the purpose is partial or general, by way of charge or not, it is a revocation at law. Id. 218.

Mortgage in fee, after a devise, is a revocation pro tanto only. Tucker v. Thurston, 17 Ves. 134.

After will, testator mortgaged estate in fee, with proviso, in case of repayment, to reconvey to testator, or to such person, or for such estate, and to such lawful trusts, &c., as testator by deed, &c., should appoint, &c. Such conveyance operates as a revocation of the will pro tanto only. Brain v. Brain, 6 Madd. 221.

A remainderman in fee joined with his mother, the tenant for life, in a mortgage in fee, by which it was provided that if the remainderman, his heirs, executors, &c., should repay the sum borrowed on a certain day, the mortgagee, his heirs or assigns, should reconvey the estates to the person or persons for the time being entitled to the reversion and inheritance of the estates, and his, her, or their heirs or assigns, or unto such other person or persons, and in such other manner and form, as he, she, or they should direct or appoint:—Held, that a devise of the estates previously made by the remainderman was not revoked by the mortgage. Youde v. Jones, 14 Sim. 162.

A testator mortgaged an estate in fee; he afterwards paid off the mortgage money, and the estate was reconveyed to him to uses to bar dower. Shortly afterwards the testator again mortgaged this estate, and the proviso upon redemption was, that the estate should be reconveyed to the testator, his heirs, appointees, or assigns, or to such other person or persons to such uses and in such manner as he or they should direct. Subsequently the testator made his will, and devised all his messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all other his real estate whatsoever, or which he had contracted to purchase, or to which he or any person in trust for him was seised or entitled for any estate of freehold and inheritance, or, if freehold only, in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, or which he had power to dispose of by his will, to a trustee to certain uses and upon certain trusts therein mentioned. Afterwards the testator paid off the mortgage, and took a reconveyance of the estate to the common uses to bar dower. Previously to the date of the will the testator had contracted to purchase another estate, which was subsequently conveyed to him to uses to bar dower:—Held, that the will was revoked as to the mortgaged estate, and the estate contracted to be purchased before the date of the will, by the reconveyance of the mortgaged estate and the conveyance of the purchased estate to uses to bar dower. Plowden v. Hyde, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 171; 21 L. J., Ch. 329; 16 Jur. 512; but this was reversed as to the purchased estates per Lords Justices, S. C., 16 Jur. 823.

Devise by Mortgagee—Subsequent Purchase of Equity of Redemption.]—W., in 1824, became mortgagee in fee of Blackacre. The form of the conveyance was to him on trust to sell, and out of the proceeds to retain the debt, and pay the surplus, if any, to the mortgagor. In February, 1826, he made his will, whereby he devised all his real estate (except mortgage and trust estate) and all his personal estate to trustees, upon trust for Y. and H. He also devised to the same trustees all his mortgage estates upon trust, on payment of the moneys due, to convey the same to the person who should be entitled to the equity of redemption, and directed the moneys to form part of his personal estate. In March, 1826, the mortgagor of Blackacre became bankrupt, and in June, 1826, W. contracted with the assignees in bankruptcy for the purchase of the equity of redemption. The purchase-money was paid by W., but no conveyance from the assignees was ever executed. In October, 1826, W. died, leaving Y. and C. his co-heirs. C. by deed renounced to the trustees of the will all claim under the contract of June, 1826. The trustees under the will entered into receipt of the rents of Blackacre, and administered the same as part of the testator's estate until 1869. Y. then claimed the right to a conveyance of one moiety of Blackacre as co-heir of W.:—Held, that the purchase of the equity of redemption by the testator revoked the devise by his will, not only of the beneficial interest, but of the legal estate in the mortgaged property; that no dry legal estate in Blackacre was remaining in the trustees of the will at the testator's death; that the mortgaged estate had by the contract ceased to be a mortgage, and had become a new absolute interest; and that Blackacre was undisposed of by the will. Yardley v. Holland, L. R. 20 Eq. 428; 33 L. T. 301.

Held, also, that the claim of Y. as co-heir against the trustees had become barred by the Statute of Limitations. Ib.

Mortgaged estates in fee will not pass by a general devise of all lands, tenements, and hereditaments, though the equity of redemption is afterwards foreclosed or released. Strode v. Russel, 2 Vern. 624.

By Partition.]—Partition is not revocation of will. Swift v. Roberts, Ambl. 618; 3 Burr. 1488; 1 W. Bl. 467.

Partition of estate subsequently to devise is no revocation thereof. Ward v. Moore, 4 Madd. 372.

Partition is no revocation of a devise; otherwise if the object extends further, even merely to a power of appointment. Brydges v. Chandos (Duke), 2 Ves. 429. And see Rawlins v. Burgis, 2 V. & B. 386.

Fine for the mere purpose of a partition is no revocation even at law. Williams v. Owen, 2 Ves. 600.

The ground upon which a partition does not revoke a devise. If the object is to do anything beyond mere partition, it is a revocation. Att.-Gen. v. Vigor, 8 Ves. 281.

Distinction as to the effect of a partition upon a devise. If the conveyance goes no further, the devise is not revoked, as it is if one takes the divided estate, with a power of appointment. Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. 256; 7 R. R. 393.

A., having the legal estate in leaseholds, and being beneficially entitled to one-third of them in right of his late wife, and as to another third having, under the will of B., whose executor he was, a life interest in it, with a power to appoint among his children, makes a will, giving one-half of his two-thirds to one daughter, and the other half to another daughter. He subsequently joins with the beneficial owner of the other third in a deed of partition whereby the leaseholds are assigned in trust as to one-third for A. as administrator to his wife, and as to another third for A. as executor of B.:—Held, that the will was not revoked. Woodhouse v. Okill, 8 Sim. 115; 5 L. J., Ch. 326.

A testator devised his moiety of an estate, and then made partition with his co-tenant; on this the estate was conveyed to a trustee, as to one part to the use of the testator in fee; and a mortgage term created by the co-tenant in his moiety was assigned to attend the inheritance:—Held, that this is not a revocation of the will. Barton v. Cranall, Tam. 164; 7 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 188.

The effect of revocation in equity, produced by an agreement for partition, in such a manner as to deprive the testatrix in equity of any interest in the estate devised; and the devisee disappointed has no right to compensation from heir. Knollys v. Alcock, 7 Ves. 558.

Mere partition, whether by compulsion or agreement, is not a revocation of a will; but the slightest addition as a power of appointment, prior to the limitation of the uses, is sufficient. Id. 564.

Agreement for a partition established against a conveyance, and against a devise, it operating as a revocation, by depriving the testatrix of all interest in the estate devised. S. C., 5 Ves. 648.

Joint tenant devised his moiety, and afterwards the jointure was severed; nothing passed by the will. Swift v. Roberts, Ambl. 617; 3 Burr. 1488; 1 W. Bl. 467.

Partition is not revocation. Id. 618.

A. and B. were tenants in common of lands in fee; A. devised his moiety in fee, after which A. and B. made partition by deed and fine, declaring the uses as to one moiety in severalty to B. in fee:—Held, that the will of B. was not revoked by the deed and fine levied in pursuance thereof. Luther v. Kidby or Kirby, 8 Vin. Abr. 148, pl. 30; 3 P. Wms. 169, n.

A testatrix before the Wills Act devised an estate, to which were attached various rights of pasturage and common rights over certain lands. By a subsequent deed she, in conjunction with the other persons entitled, conveyed these rights, and the lands subject to them, to trustees, on trust to allot the same among the several grantors, according to their interests. The trustees afterwards reconveyed to the testatrix a portion of the allotted lands:—Held, that the conveyance by her to the trustees revoked the devise as to such lands. Grant v. Bridger, 36 L. J., Ch. 377; L. R. 3 Eq. 347; 15 W. R. 610.

VI. REVIVAL AND REPUBLICATION.

a. General Principles.

No Revival of Will that has ceased to exist.]—There can be no revival of a will which has ceased to have both a physical and legal existence. Rogers v. Goodenough, 2 Sw. & Tr. 342; 31 L. J., P. 49; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 391; 5 L. T. 719.

Subsequent Will reviving Prior.]—A testator executed a will and afterwards married. He subsequently executed a second will, and by it he revived and brought into force again the first will in the event of there being no child of the marriage living at the time of the death of his wife. The same executors were appointed in both wills. The testator died, leaving surviving him his widow and one child. The court allowed the first will to be included in the probate of the second. Baugham, In goods of, 45 L. J., P. 80; 1 P. D. 429; 24 W. R. 712.

By gumming in Signature Cut out.]—A will was found, the signature to which had been cut out, but gummed on to its former place:—Held, that the presumption was that the testator had cut out the signature animo revocandi, and that the gumming on the signature in its original place did not revive the will. Bell v. Fothergill, L. R. 2 P. 148; 23 L. T. 323; 18 W. R. 1040.

By Destruction of Later Will.]—A. made a will in 1826, and another in 1851, inconsistent with the former. Before his death he burned the second will animo cancellandi, accompanying the act with declarations which showed that he supposed that the will of 1826 had thereby been revived:—Held, first, that the earlier will was not revived, as, though made before 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, it could only be revived in the way pointed out by that statute, and not by declarations of the testator. Dickinson v. Swatman, 30 L. J., P. 84; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 831.

Held, secondly, that the doctrine of dependent relative revocation did not apply to the burning of the later will, but that it was absolutely revoked. Ib.

By Revocation of Revoking Will.—Like as with statutes, the revoking a will which has revoked a former one revives the first. Harwood v. Goodright, Lofft. 576.

The execution of a second will is a revocation of the first, and cancelling the second afterwards does not set up the first again. Hellier, Ex parte, 3 Atk. 798. But see 1 Ves. 495.

By Reference — Sufficiency.] — The revised statutes of Nova Scotia, fifth series, c. 89, provide that "no will or codicil shall be revived otherwise than by a codicil executed in the manner hereinbefore required, and showing an intention to revive the same":—Held, that the mere reference to the document intended to be dealt with, whether will or codicil, by its date is not sufficient. It is necessary to look to the context, and to anything else in the document which may explain whether the intention of the testator was to confine the action of the testamentary disposition to the document of that date, or to extend it to something more. McLeod v. McNab, 60 L. J., P. C. 70; [1891] A. C. 471; 65 L. T. 266—P. C.

A testator executed a will in 1867, and two codicils to it in 1869 and 1874. In 1875 he made another will, by which he expressly revoked all previous wills and testamentary papers. Subsequently his two sisters, who were benefited by the codicil of 1874 and the will of 1875, died; and he made another codicil in 1881, disposing of the property which he had left to them—which he described as a codicil to his last will and testament—and which began in these words: "Whereas my two sisters named in my codicil, dated May 12, 1874, are both since dead," &c.:—Held, that the reference to the codicil did not revive it, and it was therefore excluded from probate. Dennis, In goods of, [1891] P. 326.

Of Will Revoked in Error.]—A former will of land is cancelled, the testator supposing a later will by him made of the same land to the same effect to be good. If that proves not to be duly executed, equity will set up the former will. Onions v. Tyrer, 2 Vern. 743; Pre. Ch. 459; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 130; 1 P. Wms. 343.

Of Will of Married Woman.]—The object of s. 34 of the Wills Act is to get rid of republication as a method of conferring testamentary validity even as regards a will made before the date of the act, and not to extend its operation to wills made since the act. Therefore the will of a married woman, made in 1869, with the assent of her husband, was held not to be revived by republication after his death, and whatever support, authority, or efficacy the will might have derived from the husband's concurrence was extinguished by his death. Noble v. Willock or Phelps, 40 L. J., P. 60; L. R. 2 P. 276; 25 L. T. 65; 19 W. R. 1115.

Republication before 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26.]—Testator saying his will was in a box in his study amounted to a republication. Alford v. Earle, 2 Vern. 209; Nels. Ch. Rep. 162.

To make a republication there must be animus republicandi; and therefore when testator was looking for a paper, and person assisting him took up his will by mistake, testator said, "That is my will," not meaning to republish it:—Held, not a republication. Abney v. Miller, 2 Atk. 599.

A testatrix gave an ultimate remainder in fee of all her lands to trustees, in trust for J., in fee. By a codicil, which she directed to form part of the will, she devised these lands (which were acquired subsequently to the date of the will), together with her other estates, to trustees for J. for life, and after J.'s decease for his child or children living at the time of her decease, instead of the devise contained in the will; but did not in the codicil dispose of the ultimate remainder in fee. The trustees named in the codicil were not the same as those in the will:—Held, that the codicil operated as a republication of the will, and was not a revocation of it; that the subsequently-acquired land, therefore, passed both by the will and codicil, and the ultimate remainder in fee was in J. Doe d. Murch v. Marchant, 6 Man. & G. 813; 7 Scott (N.R.) 644; 13 L. J., C. P. 59; 8 Jur. 21.

A testator, in February, 1837, devised all his lands in B. to two trustees, to the use of Y. for life, with remainders over; he also bequeathed to the same trustees and Y. sums of money on certain trusts and appointed them executors; and he gave to the three legacies of 100*l.* each for their trouble in the execution of his will. By a codicil dated in February, 1838 (after the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26 came into operation), after reciting the devises and bequests contained in his will, and that he had since determined to appoint C. an additional trustee for the purposes in his will mentioned, he gave and devised all his messuages, lands, &c., described in and devised by his will, and also the several sums of money therein mentioned, to C., his heirs, executors, &c., upon the trusts in the will mentioned, and nominated him one of his executors; and directed and declared that it should be read and construed in the same manner, and have the same operation and effect, as if C. had been named a trustee and an executor with the other trustees, and bequeathed to him a legacy of 100*l.*; and in all other respects the testator ratified and confirmed his will:—Held, that the will was republished by the codicil, and passed real estates purchased by the testator after the date of the will and of the codicil. Doe d. York v. Walker, 12 M. & W. 591; 13 L. J., Ex. 153.

Where a testatrix devised all her estate to L. E. for life, and to his sons and daughters successively in strict tail, and L. E. and his only son died in the lifetime of the testatrix; but he left a daughter, E. E., of whose birth she knew nothing; and she thereupon made a codicil in which she recited her former will, and that L. E. had died without leaving any issue, and then devised over:—Held, that as this codicil was made in ignorance of the existence of E. E., it was only a conditional revocation. Some time after making the codicil, the testatrix was made acquainted with the existence of E. E., but made no further testamentary disposition:—Held, that this did not set up the codicil; for having been once revoked, it could only be republished according to the Statute of Frauds. Doe d. Evans v. Evans, 2 P. & D. 378; 10 A. & E. 228; 8 L. J., Q. B. 284.

A testator devised lands to his wife for life, and after certain other devises introduced a residuary clause in favour of his wife in fee. He afterwards purchased other lands, and then made a codicil, whereby, after reciting that he had made a will disposing of all he was then possessed of, he ratified and confirmed the will; he then gave his wife a life estate in part of his newly-purchased estates, and devised the other part in a manner that could not take effect:—Held, that the effect of the codicil was to make the residuary clause in favour of the wife applicable to the after-purchased lands. Goodtitle d. David v. Williams, 10 B. & C. 895; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 326.

A testator, by will executed in 1824, made a general devise of all the residue of his real estate not otherwise disposed of, whether in possession, reversion, remainder or expectancy, to T. and the heirs of his body. By a codicil, made in 1834, he revoked that devise, and devised all his real estate not otherwise disposed of by his will or codicil, to trustees for T. for life, and at T.'s decease, if he should have lawful issue, to T.'s heirs, and, in default, to the testator's own right heirs. Subsequently to the date of this codicil, and in 1835, the testator acquired by purchase other real estate. In 1836 he executed another codicil, by which he altered the devises contained in the will and codicil, but made no mention of the estate acquired in 1835. This codicil contained these passages: "And whereas by my will or codicil, or one of them, I did give and bequeath all my real estate, not specifically otherwise disposed of, to trustees, the remainder in trust for my son T., now I revoke and annul such part of my bequest as relates to my own right heirs, and leave and bequeath the same real estate, in the event of my son's death without issue, to all the children of J. T. and of my nephew, J. H., and of my daughter H., who shall be then living, share and share alike, as tenants in common":—Held, that the last codicil did not amount to a republication of the will and former codicil, so as to pass the real estate subsequently acquired, but was confined to the dispositions of the estate he was seised of at the date of the will, and that the testator died intestate as to the after-acquired real estate. Hughes v. Hosking, 11 Moore, P. C. 1; 4 W. R. 755.

By Subsequent Testamentary Instrument.]—A married woman having a power of appointment made a will whereby she appointed the property subject to the power and all other, if any, property over which she had any power of disposition. After her husband's death she signed, in the presence of two witnesses, a paper which contained no reference to her will, but merely stated that certain specific property was a present to X. Y., and after her death this paper was admitted to probate together with her will:—Held, that this subsequent testamentary instrument did not constitute a republication of the will, and that the testatrix was intestate as to her property (not being separate property or within the power) other than that portion of it specifically mentioned in the instrument. Rowley v. Eyton (2 Mer. 128; 16 R. R. 157) explained. Smith, In re, Bilke v. Roper, 60 L. J., Ch. 57; 45 Ch. D. 632; 63 L. T. 448; 39 W. R. 93.

B. BY CODICIL.

1. In General.

Republication—Extent.]—A codicil does not for all purposes republish a will, so as to make it speak at the time of the testator's death. Stilwell v. Mellersh, 20 L. J., Ch. 356.

Though a codicil for certain purposes confirms a will, and brings it down to the date of the codicil, it does not necessarily make the will operate as if it had been originally made at the date of the codicil. Hopwood v. Hopwood, 7 H. L. Cas. 728; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 897.

Although republication of a will brings down the will to the date of such republication for certain purposes, it does not of necessity alter the construction of the will. The date of the will may still be a factor for determining the construction of the will. Mountcashell v. Smyth, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 346—C. A.

—— When Intermediate Codicils Included.]—A codicil, which refers to a will of a particular date, and does not refer to a subsequent codicil, does not operate as a republication of that subsequent codicil. Burton v. Newbery, 45 L. J., Ch. 202; 1 Ch. D. 234; 34 L. T. 15; 24 W. R. 388.

A testator made a will (dated before the Wills Act), by which he directed his residuary real estate to be sold and the proceeds to be divided (in the events which happened) among twelve persons, of whom A. and B. were two. He made a first codicil (dated after the Wills Act), by which he directed certain real estate acquired subsequently to the date of the will to be sold, and the proceeds divided in the same way as the proceeds of his other real estate. This codicil was attested by A. and B. He then made another codicil, described as a codicil to his will of a certain date, but not referring to the prior codicil:—Held, that the second codicil did not operate as a republication of the first codicil: that the gifts to A. and B. of two twelfth shares of the proceeds of the property comprised in the first codicil failed; and that these shares fell into the residue, and were divisible between A. and B. and the other ten residuary legatees. Ib.

When a testator by a codicil confirms his will, the will, together with all previous codicils, is taken to be confirmed. Green v. Tribe, 47 L. J., Ch. 783; 9 Ch. D. 231; 38 L. T. 914; 27 W. R. 39.

Where a prior codicil has a proper force of its own, the mere fact that a testator in a subsequent codicil describes the will by reference to its original date is not sufficient to exclude the inference that the will referred to is the will as modified by the prior codicil. Ib.

—— Invalid Gift made Valid.]—A testatrix gave a share of her residuary real and personal estate to B., and one of the attesting witnesses to the will was B.'s wife. By a codicil, which was attested by other witnesses, the testatrix, after a direction to her executors to allow an extended time for payment of a debt to her from one of her legatees, confirmed her will in other respects:—Held, that the duly-attested codicil had the effect of republishing and incorporating the will, so as to render the gift to B. valid, notwithstanding attestation of the will by his wife. Anderson v. Anderson, 41 L. J., Ch. 247; L. R. 13 Eq. 381; 26 L. T. 12; 20 W. R. 313.

—— Unattested Codicil Included.]—Testator, having estates in Jamaica and England, by his will directed his English estates to be sold, and 10,000*l.* to be paid out of the produce to the plaintiff. He afterwards sold his English estates, and, by an unattested codicil, recited that he had so done, and directed that, notwithstanding, the 10,000*l.* should be paid to the plaintiff, and charged all his estates with the payment thereof. he then made another codicil, which was duly attested, and in which he referred to his will and ratified and confirmed all the provisions and bequests which he had thereby made in the plaintiff's favour:—Held, that the Jamaica estates were liable to the payment of the 10,000*l.* Gordon v. Reay (Lord), 5 Sim. 274.

——Where Will before, Codicil after, Statute.]—Bequest of personalty by will dated prior to 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, to be laid out in lands for a charity. It is afterwards confirmed by a codicil dated after the statute; the codicil operates as a new will, and the devise is void. Att-Gen. v. Heartwell, Ambl. 451.

A will dated before the change of currency, by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 79, and a codicil dated subsequently, was held such a republication of the will that the legacies were deemed bequeathed in British currency, although the codicil merely appointed new executors. Hamilton v. Carroll, 1 Ir. R. Eq. 175.

The testator, by a will made before the Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26) came into operation, bequeathed a share of his residuary estate to one of his sons, who was also thereby made one of the devisees in trust and executors of the estate; the son died after the Wills Act came into operation, leaving issue, and after his death the testator made a codicil to his will altering a bequest to another child, but in other respects confirming his will:—Held, that the gift to the son did not lapse, but that the same, so far as it was real estate, descended to the heir-at-law of the son, and so far as it was personal to his executrix, under a will made before the Wills Act came into operation; and that, under the 34th section of the Wills Act, the effect of the republication of the will by the codicil was the same as if the testator had at the date of the codicil made a will in the words of the will so republished. Winter v. Winter, 5 Hare, 306.

Revival—Of Revoked Will.]—The testator made a will on the 13th of March, 1876, and a second will on the 29th of April, 1876, by which he revoked the former will, and made some changes in the disposition of his property, and a codicil, dated the 9th of June, 1880, commencing thus: "I make and publish this codicil to my will, dated 13th March, 1876. I cancel the gift of 400*l.*, willed to my son, W. J., having paid him that amount since I made said will":—Held, that the codicil revived the first will, and that the three documents should be admitted to probate. Edge, In goods of, 9 L. R., Ir. 516.

A testator executed a will in 1866, and a codicil to it in May, 1871. In November, 1871, he executed a will which revoked all previous testamentary papers. In 1872 he executed a paper which was headed: "This is a codicil to the will of R., dated May, 1866." It concluded with the appointment of the son as executor of the will and codicil, and the attestation clause commenced: "Codicil to the will of R., dated May, 1866, in presence of, &c.":—Held, that the only intention to be gathered from the words of the codicil was that the testator intended to revive the will of 1866, but not the codicil of May, 1871. Reynolds, In goods of 42 L. J., P. 20; L. R. 3 P. 35; 28 L. T. 144; 21 W. R. 512.

A testator made his will in 1871. He married in 1872, and on the day of the marriage, but after the ceremony, he executed a codicil by which he made provision for his wife and revived his will. The codicil was destroyed, but the court, being satisfied that he had no intention of thereby revoking his will, decreed probate of both papers. James v. Shrimpton, 45 L. J., P. 85; 1 P. D. 431; 35 L. T. 428; 24 W. R. 740.

The testator made a will on the 5th February, 1886, and a codicil thereto on the 30th September, 1886, both of which were prepared by the same solicitor. On the 7th October, 1887, he made a second will, prepared by another solicitor, making additional disposition of the property, and not referring to the first will. On the 17th March, 1888, he made a second codicil to his first will, prepared by the first solicitor, and not referring to the second will. In 1890 he made two codicils to his second will, prepared by the second solicitor, making further alterations in the disposition of his property:—Held, that the second will was revived, and should, with the codicils to it, be admitted to probate. Courtenay, In goods of, 27 L. R., Ir. 507.

L. left two wills, each of which disposed of his whole property; he also executed a codicil, which referred to the earlier will by its date and by its contents, and confirmed it. In the instructions for the codicil he merely expressed a wish to make a certain bequest, and in no way made mention of any will. The codicil was prepared by the attorney who had drawn the first will, and who at the time was entirely ignorant that any subsequent will had been executed. The codicil was not read over to the testator before he signed it:—Held, that the codicil revived the first executed will. Lewis, In goods of, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 220.

The testator died at Calcutta in April, 1888. By a will made in 1873, he appointed three persons (two of whom had since died) to be his executors, and after disposing of all his property, appointed his wife "during her widowhood, and, after her death, his trustees therein named and the survivors or survivor of them, guardians of my infant children for the time being." In 1878 he executed a holograph will, at the foot or end of the will of 1873, in these terms: "I hereby revoke the above will in its entirety, declaring all its provisions null and void, and constitute my wife the sole heiress and executrix of any property I may die possessed of." In 1882 the testator executed a further testamentary document, as follows: "I declare this to be a codicil to my last will. I hereby confirm my said will in all respects, and particularly the appointment therein of my wife as guardian of my infant children, and I hereby appoint my sister, L. C. Griffith, guardian of my infant children after the death of my said wife." The widow now moved the court for directions:—Held, that the word "confirm" in the codicil, coupled with the reference to the guardianship of the infant children, no mention of which was made in the revocative second will, was sufficient to revive the earlier will of 1873 as against the second will of 1878, and that probate should go of the will of 1873 and the codicil of 1882, as together constituting the true last wishes of the deceased. Van Cutsem, In goods of, 63 L. T. 252.

—— Mistake.] — Two inconsistent wills; a codicil referring to the first by date, as the last will, cancels the intermediate will, and evidence of mistake cannot be admitted. Crosbie v. Macdonal, 4 Ves. 610; 4 R. R. 301.

The testatrix, forgetting the existence of a will and codicil duly executed by her in 1885, or under a misapprehension as to the legal effect thereof upon an earlier will and codicil, executed, in 1889, "a second codicil" to the earlier will and codicil, which she thereby purported to "ratify and confirm." The solicitors who drew the first will and codicil and the last codicil knew nothing of the existence or execution of the intermediate will and codicil until after the death:—Held, that the first will and codicil were not revived by the last codicil. Turner, In goods of, 64 L. T. 805.

The testatrix executed a will in 1889, and early in 1892 instructed S., a solicitor, to prepare a codicil thereto. The draft was prepared, but taken away by the testatrix, and never executed. In May, 1892, she executed another will without the knowledge of S., revoking the will of 1889. In 1893 S. was instructed by the testatrix to prepare a codicil to "her will." S., knowing nothing of will of May, 1892, prepared codicil purporting to be codicil to will of 1889, and to confirm that will. Such codicil was duly executed:—Held, that the wills of 1889 and 1892 and the codicil of 1893 must be admitted to probate, and that it must be left to a court of construction (if necessary) to determine their meaning. Chilcott, In goods of, 66 L. J., P. 108; [1897] P. 223; 77 L. T. 372; 46 W. R. 32.

—— Of Part only of Will.]—All codicils are part of the will; therefore, a codicil merely for particular purpose, as to change an executor, and confirming the will in all other respects, does not revive a part of the will revoked by a former codicil. Crosbie v. Macdonal, supra.

—— Of Adeemed Bequest.]—S. R. directed his executors to place out 1,000*l.* at interest, and to apply the interest for the maintenance, &c., of his grandson, empowering them to pay part of the principal as an apprentice fee, and the residue to be transferred to him at twenty-one. Testator put his grandson apprentice, and paid 126*l.* with him; a year after testator made a codicil to his will, and gave him a legacy of 1,000*l.* The question whether paying the apprentice fee was an ademption pro tanto:—Held, that as the 1,000*l.* was not given for that purpose alone, the codicil was a confirmation of the legacy, and a republication of the will. Roome v. Roome, 3 Atk. 181.

An adeemed bequest is not set up again by a subsequent confirmation of the will. Cowper v. Mantell, 22 Beav. 223; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 745; 4 W. R. 500.

The confirmation of a will by a codicil does not revive a legacy adeemed in the interval between the will and codicil. Montague v. Montague, 15 Beav. 565.

—— By Revocation of Substituted Gift.]—Gift to an executor of 100*l.*; gift by a codicil of 500*l.* in substitution thereof, then that gift revoked; the prior gift of the 100*l.* is not set up again. Boulcott v. Boulcott, 2 Drew. 25; 2 Eq. Rep. 457; 23 L. J., Ch. 57; 18 Jur. 231; 2 W. R. 52.

2. Form of Codicil.

Where Expressed to Ratify Will.]—A codicil attested by three witnesses, and ratifying a will, amounts to a republication of that will, and both ought to be considered together as one will. Acherley v. Vernon, 3 Bro. P. C. 91; 1 Comyn, 381; 9 Mod. 68; 1 P. Wms. 783; 2 Eq. Abr. 209.

Where not Expressed to Ratify.]—By the addition of a codicil everything is set up in the will not altered by the codicil; and though the codicil has no date, yet if it appear by evidence to have been executed subsequently to an act which might amount to a revocation, it will operate as a republication. Carte v. Carte, Ridgw. 210; Ambl. 28; 3 Atk. 174.

T. made a will giving a life interest in his property to his wife, Sarah. She died, and he subsequently married B. On the day before his death he told an attendant that he wished the name of Martha (his present wife) to be substituted for it, and requested her to write a memorandum on his will to carry out his wishes. The attendant thereupon wrote a memorandum upon the will, which was duly executed. The memorandum did not, in direct terms, refer to the will:—Held, that the memorandum operated as a codicil to the will so as to revive the will. Terrible, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 140; 6 W. R. 816.

When Conditional.]—A codicil conditioned to take effect only upon an event which does not happen republishes a will, and is on that ground entitled to probate. Da Silva, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 315; 30 L. J., P. 171; 5 L. T. 140.

Intention to Revive.]—A codicil may, by referring in adequate terms to a revoked will, revive that will, if it is in existence, but the codicil must "shew an intention to revive the same." Steele, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 72, n.; L. R. 1 P. 575; 19 L. T. 91; 17 W. R. 15.

In order to satisfy those words the intention must appear on the face of the codicil, either by express words referring to a will as revoked and importing an intention to revive the same, or by a disposition of the testator's property inconsistent with any other intention, or by some other expression conveying to the mind of the court with reasonable certainty the existence of the intention. Ib.

Since the passing of 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, a will cannot be revived by mere implication. Ib.

References in codicils to revoked wills by their dates are insufficient to revive them, there being no evidence on the faces of such codicils of an intention to revive the wills so referred to. Ib.

A codicil referring by date only to a revoked will does not revive the will. Ince, In goods of, 46 L. J., P. 30; 2 P. D. 111; 36 L. T. 519; 25 W. R. 396.

A testatrix made a will on the 26th of January, 1876, and added a codicil thereto on the 21st of February following. On the 18th of January, 1877, she executed a new will, by which she revoked all previous wills, and on the same day executed also a codicil to the will. The documents were prepared in a hurry, and an erroneous reference to the will was given in the codicil, which purported to be a codicil to

'her last will, dated the 26th of January, 1876." The court being satisfied that she had no intention of reviving the will of January, 1876, and that the reference to it was a mistake, decreed probate of the will and codicil of February, 1877. Ib.

Evidence of Intention—Annexation.]—Making a codicil, and annexing it to the will:—Held, no republication of the will. Hutton v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 722; Pre. Ch. 439; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 115, 120.

Codicil does not operate as a republication of a will unless it is annexed to it, or the contents shew the intention. Att.-Gen. v. Downing, Ambl. 573.

Every codicil properly attested is a republication of the will. Sed quære. Gibson v. Rogers, Ambl. 97; 4 Ves. 288, n.

Republication of will by codicil does not require any precise form, nor need it be annexed to, or indorsed on, the will. Potter v. Potter, 1 Ves. 442.

Since the Statute of Frauds, annexation of a codicil to a will not admissible evidence of republication, because parol. Barnes v. Crowe, 1 Ves. 495; 3 Bro. C. C. 2; 2 R. R. 154. But see 3 Atk. 798.

The physical annexation (by a piece of tape) of a duly-executed codicil of later date to testamentary papers duly executed, but not revoked, is no ground for inferring the intention to revive, required by the statute. Marsh v. Marsh, 1 Sw. & Tr. 528; 30 L. J., P. 77; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 380; 1 L. T. 523.

3. Effect on After-acquired Property.

Principles.]—A codicil, republishing a will, makes the will speak as from the date of the codicil, for the purpose of passing after-purchased lands; but not for the purpose of reviving a legacy revoked, adeemed, or satisfied. Powys v. Mansfield, 3 Myl. & Cr. 359; 7 L. J., Ch. 9; 1 Jur. 861. And see S. C., 6 Sim. 528; 5 L. J., Ch. 153.

Where a codicil in its dispositive part is applicable solely and expressly to the property previously devised by the will, it has not the effect of republishing that will, so as to carry after-purchased property, notwithstanding a more general intent indicated in its recital. Monypenny v. Bristow, 2 Russ. & M. 117; 1 L. J., Ch. 88.

A married woman appointed and devised "all the manors and hereditaments which she had power to appoint or devise." After her husband's death she confirmed the will by a codicil:—Held, that her property not included in the power did not pass. Du Hourmelin v. Sheldon, 19 Beav. 234; 2 W. R. 639.

Lands subsequently Purchased.]—Lands purchased after the date of a will held to pass by codicil made subsequently to their purchase, the codicil containing no expressions limiting the effect of the devise to lands comprised in the will. Yarnold v. Wallis, 4 Y. & Coll. 160; 10 L. J., Ex. Eq. 5.

Codicil with three witnesses, though relating only to a personal estate, expressing no intention as to republication of will, is a republication; and therefore, will containing a general devise, lands purchased in the interval pass. Pigot v. Waller, 7 Ves. 98.

Lands, purchased after a general devise, pass under it, republication being implied from a codicil concerning personalty, referring to the will, directed to be taken as part of it, and attested by three witnesses. Barnes v. Crowe, 1 Ves. 486; 4 Bro. C. C. 2; 2 R. R. 154.

Testator, by will, charges all his estates with payment of debts, and makes his son residuary devisee; afterwards purchases copyholds which are duly surrendered to the use of his will, and by codicil devises those copyholds to his son in fee; the codicil held a republication of the will, so as to subject those copyholds to the payment of debts. Rowley v. Eyton, 2 Mer. 128; 16 R. R. 151.

A testator devised all his freehold and leasehold property whatsoever, of which he was or might be seised or possessed at the time of his decease, upon certain trusts. He subsequently made three codicils, altering the names of his trustees, and devising all his said property described as by the will. He had acquired one estate after the date of his will and first codicil, but before the second codicil:—Held, that this estate passed under the words of the will and codicils. Bridge v. Yates, 14 L. J., Ch. 426.

Testator devised all his real estate to his sister for life, remainder to her children as she should appoint; for want of appointment, to all her children and their heirs, as tenants in common. His sister having two daughters, by a codicil, declared to be a codicil to his will, not then at hand; he gave one of them an annuity; and directing his annuities to be paid out of 3 per cent. stock, he charged them on his real estate, in case of a deficiency, and directing the residue of his personal estate to be invested in freehold lands and hereditaments, he recommended to his sister to settle and convey, or join with her husband in settling and conveying, all his estates and property which she might derive from him after his decease, to the use of her two daughters for life, in such parts, shares and proportions as she should approve, with remainder to their respective issue and cross remainders, and the usual powers and clauses in strict settlement. The testator's sister died in his life, and her two daughters were his co-heiresses. Some real estates were purchased between the executions of the will and codicil; as to the real estate the will is not revoked, but is republished by the codicil; and the two nieces are entitled to all the real estates, and to those directed to be purchased, as tenants in common in fee. Meggison v. Moore, 2 Ves. 630.

Estate contracted for after general devise will pass by republication, and must be paid out of personal estate. Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. 605; 8 R. R. 48.

Testator by his will devises all his freehold and copyhold manors, &c., and real estate whatever upon certain trusts; and gives to the same trustees a sum of 35,000*l.* to lay out in the purchase of lands, to be settled upon the same trusts. He afterwards contracts for the purchase of several estates; and, by a codicil, specifying some of the estates which he had so contracted to purchase, devises them to the same trustees, upon the trusts of his will; and directs that the purchase-moneys shall be taken as part of the 35,000*l.*, confirming his will in all other respects. The codicil amounts to a republication of the will, so as to pass not only the estates therein specified, but all the estates contracted to be purchased between the dates of the will and codicil. Hulme v. Heygate, 1 Mer. 285.

Renewed Lease.]—One devises a lease to his daughter, and afterwards renews the lease, and afterwards adds a codicil to his will; whether the renewal of the lease is a revocation, and whether the adding a codicil to his will is a republication, quære. Alford v. Earle, 2 Vern. 209; Nels. Ch. Rep. 162.

Renewal of a prebendal lease is an ademption of a bequest of it; but a codicil to the will, though to pass after-purchased property, is a republication of the will, and the lease shall pass by republication. Coppin v. Fernyhough, 2 Bro. C. C. 291.

A. held a church lease, of which nine months remained unexpired; he made his will in sickness, and devised all his interest in such lands to B.: A., recovering, renewed his lease, and republished his will:—Resolved, the renewed lease passed by the republication. Anon., 2 Freem. 116.

Where testator, after making his will, surrendered college lease, and took a new lease:—Held, a revocation, and that a republication of the will would not alter the case, the very thing itself being entirely annihilated. Abney v. Miller, 2 Atk. 599.

Property falling in after Death of Testator.]—A testator, before 1837, devised two freehold messuages to his wife, who predeceased him, for her life, and after her death to E. in fee, to whom he also gave certain legacies. Afterwards, by settlement on the marriage of E., he conveyed the same two messuages to the use of E.'s husband for life, remainder to E. for life, remainder to certain uses which did not take effect, with ultimate remainder to his own right heirs. Afterwards, by codicil (also before the Wills Act), reciting the provision made for E. by the settlement, he revoked the legacies, and in other respects, except as therein mentioned, confirmed his will. By the death of E. and her husband (after the testator), leaving no issue, the ultimate remainder to the testator's right heirs took effect in possession:—Held, that the specific devise in the will was revived by the codicil, and passed the reacquired fee. Harvey v. Lloyd, 38 L. J., Ch. 634; 17 W. R. 990.

Where Codicil made for Particular Purpose only.]—A codicil which concerns only personal legacies will not amount to republication of the will, so as to pass lands purchased after the making of the will. Strode v. Russel, 2 Vern. 625; 3 Ch. Rep. 169.

A testator, by will executed in 1824, made a general devise of all the residue of his real estate not otherwise disposed of, whether in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, to T. and the heirs of his body. By a codicil, made in 1834, he revoked that devise, and devised all his real estate, "not otherwise disposed of" by his will or codicil, to trustees in trust for T. for life, and at T.'s decease, if he should have lawful issue, to T.'s heirs, and, in default, to the testator's own right heirs. Subsequently to the date of this codicil, and in 1835, the testator acquired by purchase other real estate. In 1836 he executed another codicil, by which he altered the devises contained in the will and codicil, but made no mention of the estate acquired in 1835. This codicil contained these passages: "And whereas by my will or codicil, or one of them, I did give and bequeath all my real estate, not specifically otherwise disposed of, to trustees, the remainder in trust for my son, T., now I hereby revoke and annul such part of my bequest as relates to my own right heirs, and hereby leave and bequeath the same real estate, in the event of my son's death without issue, to all the children of J. T. and of my nephew, J. H., and of my daughter, H., who shall be then living, share and share alike, as tenants in common":—Held, that the last codicil did not amount to a republication of the will and former codicil, so as to pass the real estate subsequently acquired, but was confined to the dispositions of the estate he was seised of at the date of the will, and that the testator died intestate as to the after-acquired real estate. Hughes v. Hosking, 11 Moore, P. C. 1; 4 W. R. 755.

A testator devised to his wife, who died in his lifetime, certain estates, subject to certain bequests; and also all other his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates whatsoever not before otherwise disposed of. By a codicil, after reciting the devise to his wife, he, in case she should die before him, gave and devised all his said estates to trustees upon certain trusts:—Held, that the codicil was not a republication of the will, so as to pass estates purchased between the date of the will and the codicil. Smith v. Dearmer, 3 Y. & J. 280.

A married lady, having, under her settlement, freehold property settled to her separate use, and power to dispose of it by will, exercised that power by devising a certain part of the property to A. for life, with remainder to her nephew; and gave all the other freehold tenements which she had in any wise power to dispose of to her nephew for life, with remainder to his children. She afterwards purchased some leasehold tenements out of her separate property, and had them assigned to M., in trust, as she should by deed, will, or codicil, appoint; and, in exercise of that power, she, by a codicil, bequeathed the leaseholds to her nephew, and confirmed her will. Some time afterwards she purchased the reversion in fee of the leaseholds, and had it conveyed to N., in trust as she should by deed or will appoint. She then made another codicil, in exercise expressly of the power reserved to her by the settlement and of all other powers, and thereby, after reciting the specific devise made by her will, she gave the property which was the subject of that devise to A. in fee:—Held, that the second codicil did not republish the will, and, therefore, that the reversion in fee in the leaseholds did not pass by the residuary devise in the will, but the testatrix died intestate as to it. Jowett v. Board, 16 Sim. 352; 18 L. J., Ch. 53; 12 Jur. 933.

M. D., by a codicil to her will, duly attested to pass real estate, revoked an annuity given by her will; and, after reciting that one of the trustees named in her will was dead, she revoked the estates and powers given by her will to such deceased trustee, and devised the same to a new trustee, thereby placing the new trustee in the place and stead of the deceased trustee, as trustee for the purposes of her said will. She then gave a legacy to the new trustee, in consideration of his taking on himself the trusts thereby in him reposed, and she revoked a legacy given to the deceased trustee:—Held, on a rehearing, that this codicil did not operate as a republication of the testatrix's will, so as to pass an estate purchased between the date of the will and the date of the codicil. Hughes v. Turner, 3 Myl. & K. 666; 4 L. J., Ch. 141.

A testator, by his will, made a general devise of his lands to A. and B., upon trust for sale; he then purchased other lands, and afterwards by a codicil he revoked the appointment, devise, and gift, in the said will contained, so far as regarded B., and appointed C. to be a trustee, to act in conjunction with A. in the place of B.:—Held, that the after-acquired lands did not pass. Ashley v. Waugh, 9 L. J., Ch. 31; 4 Jur. 572.

A codicil appointing a new executor:—Held, a republication of the will, and to give to the latter the effect of passing after-acquired lands. Earl's Trusts, In re, 4 K. & J. 673.

The cases on this subject reconciled. Ib.

VII. PROBATE AND LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION.

A. Jurisdiction of Court.

Letters of Administration—In general.]—The court has, as a general rule, no jurisdiction to grant letters of administration unless the deceased leaves personal property in this country. Evans v. Burrell, 4 Sw. & Tr. 185; 28 L. J., P. 82.

—— No further Grant until existing Grant revoked.]—Where there is an existing grant of administration, the court cannot make a second grant. Hornbuckle, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 78; 15 P. D. 149; 63 L. T. 464; 39 W. R. 80.

—— Proceeds of Realty.]—The proceeds of real property sold under the Settled Estates Acts, and not yet converted into realty, have not become personal property in respect of which letters of administration can be granted. Lloyd, In goods of, 53 L. J., P. 48; 9 P. D. 65; 32 W. R. 724; 48 J. P. 456.

—— Domicil.]—The administration of the personal estate of a deceased person belongs to the court of the country where he was domiciled at his death. Enohin v. Wylie, 10 H. L. Cas. 1; 31 L. J., Ch. 402; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 897; 6 L. T. 263; 10 W. R. 467.

In the administration, in an English court, of property bequeathed by a testator domiciled in France, the interest payable on legacies given by the will is governed by the law of the country in which the estate is being administered. Hamilton v. Dallas, 38 L. T. 215; 26 W. R. 326.

—— Jurisdiction of Judge of Domicil.]—All questions of testacy or intestacy belong to the judge of the domicil. Enohin v. Wylie, supra.

—— Duty of Judge of Domicil.]—It is the right and duty of that judge to constitute the personal representative of the deceased. Ib.

To the court of the domicil belong the interpretation and construction of the will, and to determine who are the next of kin or heirs of the personal estate of the testator. Ib.

Effect of Judgment of Court of Domicil.]—The judgment of the court of the domicil of a deceased party at time of death is binding on the court of a foreign country in all questions as to the succession and title to personal property, whether under testacy or intestacy, where the same questions between the same parties are in issue in the foreign court which have been decided by the court of the domicil. Doglioni v. Crispin, 35 L. J., P. 129; L. R. 1 H. L. 391; 15 L. T. 44. Affirming 11 W. R. 853.

Over Will of Sovereign.]—The probate court has no jurisdiction to inquire into the validity or invalidity of a will of a sovereign of the realm. Geo. III., In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 199; 32 L. J., P. 15; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1134; 11 W. R. 190.

Foreigner—Limited to Chattels Real.]—A French subject domiciled and resident in France, by his will, executed as required by the 1 Vict. c. 26 (but not made and executed as required for the validity thereof by the law of France), bequeathed his personal estate in England and Ireland to trustees, whom he also named executors, and he gave and devised leaseholds for years in Cork, in Ireland, and all other his real estate and chattels real in England and Ireland to the same trustees:—Held, that the will was valid as to the chattels real, but invalid as to the personal property of the testator, other than the chattels real, and so far as it purported to appoint executors, or to revoke any prior testamentary disposition of personal property other than chattels real, and the court granted to the trustees in that character alone administration cum test. ann. limited to the chattels real in Ireland. De Fogassieras v. Duport, 11 L. R., Ir. 123.

Power of Crown.]—The right to goods belonging to persons dying intestate, without leaving husband or widow, and without kindred, as bona vacantia, has from the earliest times been vested in the king, in right of his crown. Dyke v. Walford, 5 Moore, P. C. 434; 12 Jur. 839.

Former Power of Ordinary.]—The church never had at any time in this country, by law, any beneficial interest in the property of intestates, but merely the right or duty of jurisdiction and administration, and the right of possession for the latter purposes. Ib.

The ordinary, when acting officially, had no private or personal discretion respecting the granting of administration. Canterbury (Archbishop) v. House, Cowp. 140; Lofft, 622.

Prerogative.]—To an action on a deed, by an administrator under a prerogative administration from the archbishop of Canterbury, it is no answer that the intestate died abroad, and that, at the time of his death, the deed was in Ireland, and was bonum notabile to be administered in Ireland. Whyte v. Rose, 2 G. & D. 312; 3 Q. B. 493; 11 L. J., Ex. 457—Ex. Ch.

Where a mortgage deed in the form prescribed by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 81, assigned the tolls and toll-houses of a turnpike road to hold for the residue of the term for which the tolls were granted, unless the mortgage with interest were sooner repaid:—Held, that the mortgage was bonum notabile where the road and toll-houses were situate, and not where the deed was at the time of the death of the mortgagee. Reg. v. Balby and Worksop Turnpike Road Trustees, 1 B. C. C. 134; 22 L. J., Q. B. 164; 17 Jur. 734; 1 W. R. 150.

Where there are bona notabilia in a peculiar, and also in other parts of the diocese of the archbishop, a prerogative administration is not absolutely void, and will therefore be considered valid at law, until set aside by proceedings in the ecclesiastical court. Lysons v. Barrow, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 486; 2 Scott, 721; 1 Hodges, 390; 5 L. J., C. P. 102.

Stock and money in the funds are, for the purpose of probate and administration, within the province of Canterbury, having no defined locality. Rex v. Capper, 5 Price, 217; 19 R. R. 568.

—— Judicial Committee.]—Subsequently to the order in council made upon the appeal reversing the sentence of the prerogative court, a will, dated March, 1851, was discovered, and application was made to the judicial committee for probate. Such application refused, as the original suit being concluded, the jurisdiction of the judicial committee was exhausted, but the committee intimated that if a petition was presented to her majesty to refer the matter specially to them, they would entertain the application. Upon such petition being presented, and referred, the committee revoked the probate of the will of 1825, and granted probate of the will of 1851. Cutto v. Gilbert, 9 Moore, P. C. 131.

—— Pleading.]—To a declaration by the executor of R., covenantee of a deed, the defendant, after setting out the letters testamentary, pleaded that R. died in the parish of L., and that at the time of his death he resided there, and had the deed there; that the parish is a royal peculiar, and out of the jurisdiction of the archbishop of Canterbury, by reason whereof the proving of the will and the granting of probate of all the goods of R., in respect of the debt, of right belonged and appertained to the Queen and not to the archbishop; that the will was never proved before, nor were the letters testamentary ever granted by the Queen; that the letters testamentary produced, and granted by the archbishop, were of no effect against the defendant in respect of the debt; and save as aforesaid, by the granting of these letters testamentary, the plaintiff never was executor of the will of R.:—Held, that the plea was in bar of the action altogether, and not in bar of the further maintenance. Euston v. Carter, 1 L. M. & P. 222; 5 Ex. 8; 19 L. J., Ex. 173.

Diocesan.]—Action on a policy of insurance under seal, whereby three of the directors of the company did order, direct, and appoint that, if the insured should die, the capital stock and funds of the company should stand charged and be liable to pay to his executors, administrators, and assigns, within three calendar months after his decease should be certified, 500*l*. The insured died in the diocese of Exeter, and the policy was in that diocese at the time of his death:—Held, that a probate from the diocesan court of Exeter was sufficient to enable the executors to recover on the policy, though the directors resided, and all the stock and funds of the company were situate, in the diocese of London. Gurney v. Rawlins, 2 M. & W. 87; 2 Gale, 235; 6 L. J., Ex. 7.

An act for making a navigable canal provided that the shares were to be deemed personal estate, and to be transferable as such; the canal passed through parishes in the diocese of Worcester, and other parishes in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry; the transfers of shares in the canal were filed at the public office of the company, in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, where the dividends were also paid and books of account kept:—Held, that the right of a shareholder to a share of the profits, being personal profits, might be considered as locally situate in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, for the purposes of probate; and that a probate granted by the consistorial court of the bishop of that diocese was sufficient. Horne, Ex parte, 7 B. & C. 632.

In an action by an administrator, the court, in the absence of any allegation upon the subject, will assume that the debt for which the action is brought is bonum notabile in the place where administration is granted. Huthwaite v. Phaire, 1 Man. & G. 159; 1 Scott (N.R.) 43; 8 D. P. C. 541; 9 L. J., C. P. 259.

Probate granted by the court of the archdeacon of Sudbury, to whom the bishop had granted full power to prove the wills of all persons deceased within the archdeaconry, was good, when the testator died within the archdeaconry; although he was possessed of a term of years in lands lying within another archdeaconry in the same diocese. Rex v. Yonge, 5 M. & S. 119.

Action by an administratrix upon a promissory note given to intestate, averring that administration of all and singular the goods of the intestate was duly granted by the bishop of C. Plea, that the plaintiff was not nor ever had been administratrix of all and singular the goods of the intestate, modo et formâ. Proof of the letters of administration as described in the declaration, and that the intestate, at the time of his death, had bona notabilia in another diocese in a different province, but no evidence of the place of the defendant's residence at the time of the intestate's death was given:—Held, first, that the letters of administration were not void, but passed to the plaintiff all the goods of the intestate within the diocese; secondly, that the only issue joined was, whether administration was duly granted by the bishop, and that the question whether the defendant at the time of the intestate's death resided within the diocese, was not parcel of that issue; and thirdly, that if the defendant relied on the fact of his residence within a different diocese, he was bound to plead it specially. Stokes v. Bate, 8 D. & R. 247; 5 B. & C. 491; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 221.

A person whose residence and property were in the diocese of Gloucester went on temporary business to Bristol, and on the way met with an accident, in consequence of which he was taken to the Bristol Infirmary, and died there (and within the diocese of Bristol) a few days after. Probate of his will was granted by the bishop of Gloucester:—Held, that the probate was regular, for the testator died in itinere, and this was a case within the principle of canon 92, Jac. 1, which provided, that, when a man dies on a journey, the goods which he hath about him shall not cause his testament or administration to be liable to the prerogative court. Doe d. Allen v. Ovens, 2 B. & Ad. 423; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 223.

A grant in a chain of executorship by a diocesan court in general terms, and not limited to property within its jurisdiction, is valid under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 87, and entitles the personal representatives of an original testator claiming under such grant to a transfer of stock standing in the Bank of England books in the name of the original testator. Tucker, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 123; 3 L. T. 557; 9 W. R. 420.

Of Court of Probate—Foundation of.]—The foundation of the jurisdiction of the court of probate is, that there are assets of the deceased to be distributed within its jurisdiction. Therefore, the court refused to grant administration to an officer whose domicil was Ireland, but who died in India, and whose only assets were some property in India and a sum of money in the hands of the secretary of state for war. Roche, In goods of, infra, observed on. Butson, In goods of, 9 L. R., Ir. 21.

Letters of administration granted in the Irish probate registry, limited to a certain fund, were presented in the principal probate registry in England to be resealed. They had attached to them a certificate from the inland revenue office, that the deceased had no personal estate within the jurisdiction of the English probate court to be affected by the administration; and from the registrar of the Irish probate court, that a bond had been given sufficient in amount to cover the property to which the said administration was limited:—Held, that the requirements of the statutes 20 & 21 Vict. c. 79, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, had not been complied with, and the letters of administration could not be resealed. Roche, In goods of, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 784.

—— Validity of Execution — Questions of Construction where adjudicated upon.]—Where a question of the valid execution of a power arises upon a will already before the court of probate, that question will be then determined without any inquiry before a court of construction. Phillips v. Jenkins, 44 L. T. 281.

—— When de facto Executor.] — Where there is an executor de facto the court has no power to grant letters of administration with the will annexed. Delacour, In goods of, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 86.

—— Validity of Will as to Realty.]—The court has no jurisdiction under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 61, to determine the validity of a will in respect of realty, unless the same will which regulates the disposition of the personalty also regulates that of the realty. Campbell v. Lucy, 40 L. J., P. 22; L. R. 2 P. 209; 24 L. T. 231; 19 W. R. 568.

A domiciled Scotchman, entitled to personalty and also to realty in England, executed a will and two codicils affecting the realty, all valid by the law of Scotland, but the will only valid by the law of England. The executors propounded this will and codicils, and cited the coheiresses-at-law to see proceedings:—Held, that as the disposition of the realty in England was regulated by the will only, and that of the personalty by the will and codicils, the court had no jurisdiction to make a decree binding on the realty in England. Ib.

—— To inquire whether Judgment of Court of Domicil is in conformity with the Law of the Country where it was Pronounced.]—A suit was instituted in the court of probate, respecting the succession to the personal estate of a person, who was domiciled abroad at the time of his death:—Held, that a judgment of the court of the domicil is binding and conclusive as to any question raised in the courts of the nationality between the same parties and in relation to the same succession. The court of probate has no jurisdiction to inquire whether such a judgment is in conformity with the law of the country where it was pronounced. Doglioni v. Crispin, supra, col. 459.

—— To Compromise.]—In sanctioning arrangements between parties to probate causes, the court acts upon the statement of counsel that the compromise is expedient, but it does not by such sanction thereby intend to bind infants or any other persons. Norman v. Strains, 50 L. J., P. 39; 6 P. D. 219; 45 L. T. 191; 29 W. R. 744.

—— Effect of Judicature Acts.]—The judicature acts do not alter the jurisdiction of the court of probate in non-contentious matters. Tomlinson, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 74; 6 P. D. 209; 30 W. R. 61.

—— Injunction to restrain Parting or Dealing with Property.]—Proceedings had been taken in the chancery division to set aside a devise to the defendant on the ground that the execution of the will had been procured by his fraud, and such proceedings had ended in his favour. The plaintiff then commenced an action for revocation of probate. The property in dispute had been deposited at a bank pending the chancery action, and the bankers informed the plaintiff that they should hand it over to the defendant within a week, if not restrained by a competent authority. The plaintiff was unable to effect service of notice of application for the appointment of an administrator pendente lite. On the ex parte application of the plaintiff, the court granted an injunction restraining the bank from parting with the property pending the probate suit. Meluish v. Milton, 24 W. R. 679.

The defendant, who claimed to be the lawful widow of an intestate, possessed herself of his personal estate, and was alleged to have sold a portion of the property. The plaintiff claimed the grant of administration as next of kin, and denied that the defendant was married to the deceased. On an ex parte application of the plaintiff, after issue of a writ of summons but before service, the court granted an injunction restraining the defendant from disposing of or removing any of the estate of the intestate until further order of the court. Brand v. Mitson, 45 L. J., P. 41; 34 L. T. 854; 24 W. R. 524.

The court of probate, as a division of the high court of justice, has vested in it the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the high court of chancery, and therefore may, under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 65, direct an order to issue prohibiting the dealing in any share of a ship for a time and on conditions to be named therein, and the registrar of shipping, on being served with such order, or an official copy thereof, must obey the same. Nicholas v. Dracachis, 45 L. J., P. 45; 1 P. D. 72; 24 W. R. 461.

—— Jurisdiction of Court to restrain Action in Foreign Court to propound later Will.]—A testatrix who was married to a foreigner, and resided abroad, left a will dated 1865, which by compromise was admitted to probate in common form in the probate court. Subsequently the husband took proceedings before the foreign tribunal to establish a later will dated 1872, whereupon the executor of the prior will propounded it in solemn form, and applied to the court to restrain the husband from proceeding with the foreign suit:—Held, that the court would not grant the application. Dawkins v. Simonetti, 44 J. P. 816. Affirmed in C. A., 29 W. R. 228.

—— To what Property Probate extends.]—Before granting probate of the will of a married woman it is only necessary for the court to be satisfied that she had a power, or some separate estate; and it need not necessarily ascertain or determine what that separate estate is, or to what effects the probate is to extend; but as under s. 24, sub-s. 7, of the Judicature Act, 1873, the court has power to determine all matters in controversy between the parties in any cause or matter, the court should, unless it can be more conveniently determined elsewhere, decide to what effects the probate is to extend. Tharp, In goods of, Tharp v. M'Donald, 3 P. D. 76; 38 L. T. 867; 26 W. R. 770—C. A.

To enable the probate division finally to conclude the parties as to what property the probate is to be granted to, there should be a claim in the pleadings for a declaration to that effect. Ib.

—— To direct Set-off for Costs.]—It is a common practice of the court to award each party a portion of the costs of a cause at the final hearing; and the court has jurisdiction to direct a set-off of costs awarded by the court itself as between two parties. Magrath v. Magrath, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 155.

Probate of Will Abroad—Probate of Codicil.]—If a will has been proved abroad, probate of the codicils, if any, must be granted by the court which granted probate of the will. Miller, In goods of, 52 L. J., P. 93; 8 P. D. 167; 31 W. R. 956.

Erasures—Extrinsic Evidence—Restoration of Words erased.]—Where erasures in a will are found after the death of a testator, the court can hear evidence to shew under what circumstances they were made, and on proof of their having been made after the execution of the will, may order the original words to be restored. Sturton v. Whellock, 52 L. J., P. 29; 48 L. T. 237; 31 W. R. 382; 47 J. P. 232.

Subpœna to lodge Testamentary Paper—Service out of the Jurisdiction.]—The probate division has no jurisdiction in matters where an action or suit is not pending to order service out of the jurisdiction of a subpœna on a person resident in England to bring into a probate registry a testamentary paper. Ambrose, In goods of, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 310—C. A.

Compromise—Terms to be Filed in Register—No Provision to make Terms a Rule of Court—Motion.]—Where a suit has been compromised by an agreement to stay on terms to be filed, but there is no provision that they shall be made a rule of court, the court has no jurisdiction to make the terms a rule of court or to enforce them on motion. Graves v. Graves, 1 R. 485; 69 L. T. 420.

Registrar—Jurisdiction of—Suit for Revocation—Order for Trial at Assizes.]—The registrar, in a suit for revocation of probate, has no power to order the venue to be changed, and to direct that the suit be removed from this court to be tried at the assizes. Lancaster v. Brook, 58 L. J., P. 67; 14 P. D. 80; 60 L. T. 680; 37 W. R. 768; 53 J. P. 343.

Jurisdiction of Court of Chancery.]—After probate of a will of personalty has been granted, the chancery division has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit to set aside testamentary dispositions on the ground of fraud in obtaining the execution of the will, the probate division having exclusive jurisdiction in the matter. Melvish v. Milton, 45 L. J., Ch. 836; 3 Ch. D. 27; 35 L. T. 82; 24 W. R. 892—C. A.

A plaintiff claiming a share of leaseholds, partly in the occupation of the defendant, under an alleged will, which he charged was being fraudulently suppressed by him, brought an action claiming partition of sale, and to have the will established and directions given for probate. The defendant denied all knowledge of the will:—Held, first, that before the plaintiff could obtain any relief upon the will it must first be proved, or probate must be admitted by the defendant. Pinney v. Hunt, 6 Ch. D. 98; 26 W. R. 69.

Held, secondly, that a judge in the chancery division had, under the Judicature Act, jurisdiction to grant probate, but that it would not be using a sound discretion to exercise the jurisdiction; and the action was accordingly ordered to stand over for probate proceedings to be taken in the probate division. Ib.

The court of chancery has no jurisdiction to determine on the validity of a will of personal estate, and in all cases in which parties apply to that court for its construction of a will, or payment of legacies under a will, the court proceeds only on the foundation of a will proved in a court of competent jurisdiction. The court, however, will interfere for the protection of property, pendente lite for probate and letters of administration, and it exercises with great caution and sparingly jurisdiction in cases of fraud practised in obtaining probate, and in the spoliation of wills. Ryves v. Wellington (Duke), 9 Beav. 579; 15 L. J., Ch. 461. See Allen v. M'Pherson, 1 H. L. Cas. 191.

The prerogative court, putting a construction on a will, made a grant of letters of administration to K. The court of chancery held that construction to be wrong, and that W. was entitled, K. appealed to the house of lords. W. applied for the grant to be to him in accordance with the decree of the court of chancery:—Held, that the proceeding in chancery was in the nature of an appeal from the prerogative court, and that its decision must prevail, and the grant was decreed to W. Warren v. Kelson 1 Sw. & Tr. 290; 28 L. J., P. 122; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 415; 7 W. R. 348.

A woman, married in 1878, made her will in 1882, while still under coverture, purporting to dispose of separate property. The husband did not assent to the making of the will. The testatrix died in 1888, and her executor applied for probate. The husband opposed on various grounds, but he chiefly relied on his plea that his late wife had no separate property. After argument, the court admitted evidence on this point, and thereupon finding that she had, pronounced for the will with costs. It was thereupon urged that the court must go further, and decide of what the separate property of the testatrix consisted, and the proper destination of such property:—Held, that these were especially questions for the chancery division, and that this court, having no machinery for arriving at a proper decision upon them, should decline to entertain them. Harding v. Sutton, 59 L. T. 838.

—— Of County Court.]—After a cause has been transferred to a county court, the probate court has no power to make an order as to the costs incurred before the transfer. The judge of the county court has power to make an order as to

—— Value of Estate.]—In estimating the value of the real estate to which a person was entitled at the time of his death, for the purpose of deciding whether the county court has jurisdiction, charges upon such estate cannot be taken into consideration. Davies v. Brecknell, 40 L. J., P. 15; L. R. 2 P. 177; 23 L. T. 569; 19 W. R. 136.

For the purpose of determining whether a case comes within the jurisdiction of the county court, the court cannot inquire into the charges on the real estate where the beneficial interest has been sworn over 200*l*. Ib.

If the estate is of the value of 300*l*., but the value of the deceased's interest in it is reduced by a mortgage to less than 300*l*., the county court has no jurisdiction. Ib.

The county court has no jurisdiction over a probate suit where the deceased died seised or beneficially entitled to real estate of the value of 300*l*., although the persons interested in the realty have not been cited. Thomas v. Nurse, 39 L. J., P. 80; 18 W. R. 471.

—— Sending to.]—When proceedings have been commenced in the court of probate, the court will receive evidence from both sides as to the state of the property, and the place of abode of the deceased, before it determines whether or not it will send the cause to the county court. Slater v. Alvey, L. R. 2 P. 154; 23 L. T. 324; 18 W. R. 1103.

B. To whom Granted.

1. Executors.

According to Tenor of Will.]—When the whole personal property is left to a trustee on trust for a specific purpose, and no executor is named in the will, such trustee is not entitled to probate as executor according to the tenor. Jones, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 155; 31 L. J., P. 199; 4 L. T. 477.

A testatrix concluded her will thus: "I must beg A. to appoint some one to see this my will executed":—Held, that A. might appoint himself. Ryder, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 127; 31 L. J., P. 215; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 196; 3 L. T. 756.

A testator by his will said, "I appoint R. H. P. and J. E. W.," but did not state in what capacity he appointed them. He also bequeathed legacies to "each of my executors," and gave to his "said executors" the residue of his property, with certain directions as to it. The court held upon motion that by the words of the will R. H. P. and J. E. W. were appointed executors, and granted probate to them accordingly. Bradley, In goods of, 52 L. J., P. 101; 8 P. D. 215; 47 J. P. 825.

A testator bequeathed certain things to be paid by "his executors hereinafter named," but there were no executors named, except in a clause which followed his signature:—Held, that probate must go without the clause. Dallow, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 81; L. R. 1 P. 189; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 492; 14 L. T. 573; 14 W. R. 902.

A testatrix executed a will containing these words: "I leave the sum of one sovereign each to the executor and witness of my will for their trouble to see that everything is justly divided," but not naming any executor. Beneath the signature of the testatrix and opposite the names of the attesting witnesses were the words "executors and witnesses":—Held, that there was no appointment of executors. Woods, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 23; L. R. 1 P. 556; 17 L. T. 583; 16 W. R. 407.

A will contained the following clause: "I appoint E. H. my sole trustee, and he is to be paid as an attorney, the same as if he were not a trustee to this my last will and testament." There were debts to be paid, but the only duties created by the will were those which would devolve upon a trustee:—Held, that E. H. was not executor according to the tenor of the will. Lowry, In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 34; L. R. 3 P. 157; 30 L. T. 695; 22 W. R. 352.

A testator made a will in which were these words: "This is to cancel all former wills and to leave all in the hands of my mother and wife, jointly or separately, and they are in no way to be interfered with." No executors were named. The court granted probate to the mother and wife as executors according to the tenor. Glasson, In goods of, 22 W. R. 845.

A mother, by her will, appointed her daughter, who was under age, sole executor and universal intromitter with her movable means and estate, and certain persons trustees for the daughter until she was of legal age. In a subsequent part of the will she directed the trustees, in case her daughter died before coming of age, to divide the residue of her property in a particular way. The court refused to grant probate of the will to the trustees as executors according to the tenor thereof, but ordered that administration with the will annexed should issue to them under the Probate Act, s. 73, by reason that the testatrix had not appointed by her will an executor competent to take probate. Stewart or Stuart, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 37; L. R. 3 P. 244; 33 L. T. 72; 23 W. R. 683.

A testatrix nominated no executor, but the will contained these words: "W., who holds the policy of my life assurance, will, I am sure, act for me in this, and I beg him to pay himself, if he needs it, for his trouble":—Held, that W. was executor according to the tenor. Tracy, In goods of, 31 L. T. 801; 23 W. R. 385.

A sister executed a will, which contained a clause to the effect, "I appoint my sister S. B. my executrix, only requesting that my nephews F. P. and J. A. B. will kindly act for and with this dear sister":—Held, that F. P. and J. A. B. were executors according to the tenor of the will. Brown, In goods of, 46 L. J., P. 31; 2 P. D. 110; 36 L. T. 519; 25 W. R. 431.

A. duly executed his will, and appointed B. and C. trustees, guardians, and executors in as many distinct paragraphs or clauses. Subsequently he scored out the name of B. wherever it appeared in the will, and inserted that of D.; but the alterations in the guardian and executorship clauses were not attested. By the last clause in the will C. and D. were authorised to give receipts for any moneys paid or transferred to them "by virtue of this my will." The court, holding that an executor of a will is either expressly nominated or appointed according to the tenor, declined to look at the construction of the instrument with the view of determining whether D. was executor as well as trustee, and ordered probate to go with the unattested alterations. Gaussen, In goods of, 17 L. T. 354; 16 W. R. 212.

To constitute a person "executor according to the tenor," there must be a trust to administer the estate generally by him. Boardman v. Stanley, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 590.

Or words importing a general power to receive and pay what is due to and from the estate. Jones. In goods of, supra.

Where a testator appointed "trustees and executors" of his will and by codicil cancelled "the appointment of trust" and appointed other persons in their stead: the trustees and executors appointed by will having renounced or being unable to act, the court refused to grant probate as executors according to the tenor, to the persons substituted by the codicil, but made a grant to them of administration with the will annexed. Hartley, In goods of, 11 R. 592.

—— Instructions to Receive and Divide Estate.]—Unless the court can gather from the words of a will that a person named trustee therein is required to pay the debts of the deceased, and generally to administer his estate, it will not grant probate to him as executor according to the tenor. Purchard, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 25; L. R. 2 P. 369; 26 L. T. 526; 20 W. R. 446.

A will contained this clause: "I wish P. A. C. to act as trustee to the estate." Nothing was conveyed to him as trustee, and no duty whatever was cast upon him:—Held, that he was not executor according to the tenor. Ib.

In order to constitute one an executor according to the tenor of a will it must appear, on a reasonable construction thereof, that the testator intended that he should collect his assets, pay his debts and funeral expenses, and discharge the legacies contained in such will. Adamson, In goods of, L. R. 3 P. 253.

A testator gave to W. F. B. and H. H. W. all his real and personal estate, to apply the same "after payment of debts" to the payment of legacies. The court granted probate to W. F. B. and H. H. W. as executors according to the tenor. Bell, In goods of, 4 P. D. 85; 40 L. T. 659.

A direction to an individual to receive the property and divide it, constitutes him an executor according to the tenor of the will. Saunders, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 26; L. R. 1 P. 16; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1027; 13 L. T. 411; 14 W. R. 148.

B., after a direction that his debts and funeral expenses should be paid, bequeathed to certain persons the whole of his property, in trust that they should, as soon as might be after his death, convert into money, get in, and receive the personal estate, and divide it as therein directed, except certain furniture which he bequeathed to his daughter:—Held, that the trustees were also executors according to the tenor of the will. Baylis, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 15; L. R. 1 P. 21; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1028; 13 L. T. 446.

M. duly executed a testamentary paper in the form of a letter, beginning, "My dear Eliza," and containing full information as to the amount of her property, with full directions as to how she wished it to be disposed of, and concluding with these words: "I know of nothing else, my dear Eliza, to trouble you with, and trust that this will not involve you in much." The court decreed probate of the paper writing to E., as executrix according to the tenor. Manly, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 56; 31 L. J., P. 198; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 493; 7 L. T. 200.

In a codicil, A. ordered certain personal ornaments to be transmitted "to the executor B., in England, to whom the proceeds of the sale" (of her property at Jerusalem) "are to be likewise remitted, and with the amount B. is directed to pay 50*l.* due to C., and the residue equally between" the deceased's two unmarried sisters:—Held, that B. was executor according to the tenor of the codicil. Cooper, In goods of, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 394.

A testator left his property, after payment of his debts and funeral expenses, to certain persons, and constituted and appointed A. and B. to be his trustees, with full power to dispose of all his property, and convert the same into money, to be invested in government funds for the purposes above stated:—Held, that they were executors according to the tenor of the will. Chappell, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 32; 17 L. T. 618; 16 W. R. 488.

A. appointed B. and C. trustees to dispose of his effects as they thought fit, and to receive his life assurance for the benefit of his two sons:—Held, that they were executors according to the tenor. Gale, In goods of, 18 L. T. 696; 16 W. R. 942.

—— Trustee.]—Directions to get in the estate of the testator, and to distribute it in a certain manner after the payment of all funeral and other expenses:—Held, sufficient to constitute a trustee an executor according to the tenor. Lush, In goods of, 57 L. J., P. 23; 13 P. D. 20; 58 L. T. 684; 36 W. R. 847; 52 J. P. 199.

A testator bequeathed all he died possessed of "to my two children, subject to the following limitations:—I wish to appoint N., K. and C. my trustees for the objects of this my will, everything I have to be vested in them." The will then declared the trusts of the property to be so vested in the trustees. The trustees were not connected with the ascertainment or realisation of the assets, but were, for the greater part, connected with property to be retained and held by the trustees for the use of the cestui que trusts. The will concluded by giving certain directions as to the testator's burial:—Held, that N., K. and C. were entitled to probate as executors according to the tenor. A direction to pay the testator's debts is not indispensable to the appointment of an executor according to the tenor. M'Cane, In goods of, 21 L. R., Ir. 1—C. A.

A testator bequeathed a part of his household furniture to his wife, and all his personal property (and real, if any), consisting of books, &c., money in bank, together with all household furniture possessed by him before marriage, or purchased by him subsequently, to three trustees, upon trust as to the said furniture for his son A. (or if he should not be alive at the testator's death, for M.), to pay over to A. 1,000*l.*, and to invest the remainder of the testator's money upon other specified trusts, and he gave directions as to his funeral not addressed to the trustees:—Held, that the trustees were not executors according to the tenor. Gray, In goods of, 21 L. R., Ir. 249—C. A.

In a will there was a bequest of all property to three trustees upon trust, first to manage the same as they might think best for those interested, but to invest no part of the same except upon securities within the United Kingdom; secondly and thirdly, to pay the annual proceeds and capital of the property on specified trusts:—Held, that the trustees were executors according to the tenor. Hamilton, In goods of, 17 L. R., Ir. 277.

Where a testator, who had made his will without legal assistance, had neither by his will nor codicils made any direct appointment of executors, but had appointed four persons as his trustees, and had bequeathed to them the residue of his estate in trust for division, and authorised them to receive debts due to his estate and give a receipt for the same; and the will contained directions to "my executors" to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and as to the disposition of various portions of his estate, and the word "executors" occurred frequently, and the language of the will showed generally that the testator intended the four persons named as trustees to act as his executors, and had referred to them sometimes as "trustees" and sometimes as "executors," in either case meaning the same four persons:—Held, that the persons so named were entitled to take probate of the will as "executors according to the tenor." Melville, In goods of, or Leven and Melville (Earl), In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 35; 15 P. D. 22.

A testatrix appointed A. and B. "trustees" of her will, and expressed her wish that they should pay her funeral and other debts:—Held, that A. and B. were thereby constituted executors according to the tenor, and entitled to probate. Wilkinson, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 134; [1892] P. 227; 67 L. T. 328.

Trustees nominated by a testator "to carry out this will," and "for the due execution of this my will":—Held, to be thereby constituted executors according to the tenor and entitled to probate. Russell, In goods of, or Laird, In goods of, 62 L. J., P. 15; [1892] P. 380; 1 R. 456; 67 L. T. 504.

As a general rule, when in a will there is a direction to pay debts, though no person is nominated to pay them, and all the personal estate is bequeathed to a person by name, the court will grant probate of the will to such person as "executor according to the tenor." Where, in such a will, there was a bequest to the testatrix's executor, in case he should act as such, the court made the grant of probate without prejudice to any questions arising as to the right to the legacy. Tandy, In goods of, 27 L. R., Ir. 114.

Where the court can gather from the words of a will that a person named therein is required to pay the debts, and generally to administer the estate, it will grant probate to such person, as executor according to the tenor. Bluett, In goods of, 15 L. R., Ir. 140.

See also Maley, In goods of, ante, col. 426-7.

—— To Pay specific Debt only.]—Where a testator bequeathed all his property to trustees, with directions to pay a specific debt, certain legacies, and to deal with the residue, but the will did not contain any general direction as to payment of debts:—Held, that the trustees were not entited to probate of the will as executors according to the tenor, but that they were entitled to administration with the will annexed. Armstrong, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 23; 62 L. T. 184; 54 J. P. 200.

—— Out of Particular Fund.]—A direction to a person to pay debts or funeral expenses, not out of the general estate, but out of a particular fund, will not constitute him executor according to the tenor. Toomy, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 562; 34 L. J., P. 3; 13 W. R. 106.

H. executed a will, in which was a clause as follows: "I give and bequeath to A. B. and C. D., administrators and assigns, and to be disposed of by them as trustees, all funeral expenses and others to be paid, and afterwards the residue of my personal estate to be paid to, &c.":—Held, that A. B. and C. D. were not executors according to the tenor of the will. Heaton, In goods of, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 832.

—— To Pay Funeral Expenses only.]—A mere direction to a legatee to pay the funeral expenses out of his legacy will not make him an executor according to the tenor of the will. Smith, In goods of, 34 L. J., P. 15; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1084.

—— Trustees to Carry out Will.]—A testator made his will, bearing date the 3rd of January, 1878, by which he appointed W. S. and T. K. trustees to carry out his will; and he also appointed his two sons W. and G. trustees of his estate, with full power to carry out the contents of his will; and if they should not agree, the two trustees previously appointed to set them right:—Held, that W. S. and T. K. were named as executors, and that W. and G. were executors according to the tenor, and that probate might go to the four jointly. Spotten, In goods of, 5 L. R., Ir. 403.

Where a testator does not appoint an executor in his will, but names two persons whom he would wish to see that the intentions of his will are carried out, as far as consistent with law and equity, the court will declare them entitled to probate as executors according to the tenor, even though they do not take any beneficial interest under the will. Archdall, In goods of, 5 L. R., Ir. 618.

A testator by the first clause of his will directed his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses to be paid, and then gave all his personal estate to certain persons on trust to convert into money, get in and receive it in such manner as they should deem expedient, and to divide the proceeds amongst his children, with the exception of some furniture, which he gave to one of his daughters:—Held, that the trustees were executors according to the tenor. Baylis, In goods of, supra, col. 469.

A testator, after giving some specific legacies, bequeathed the residue of his property to three trustees upon trust to sell, and pay the costs and expenses of the sale, his funeral expenses and debts, and some pecuniary legacies, and directed that all the residue of the money remaining in their hands should be divided between his three daughters, or the issue of any of them who should die in his lifetime:—Held, that the trustees were not executors according to the tenor. Love, In goods of, 7 L. R., Ir. 178.

—— Mere Execution of Power.]—A married woman who, under a deed of settlement, had a power of appointment by will over a fund, executed a will in which she directed the trustees of her marriage settlement to distribute her property in a particular way in accordance with the terms of such settlement, and gave them all the necessary powers of sale and mortgage the more effectually to carry her will into execution:—Held, that the will was the mere execution of a power for the distribution of the funds already in the hands of the trustees, who, in such distribution, would still act under the settlement, and that they were not executors according to the tenor of the will. Fraser, In goods of, 40 L. J., P. 9; L. R. 2 P. 183; 24 L. T. 72; 19 W. R. 333.

—— Interpretation of Words relating to Appointment.]—L., who died domiciled in Portugal, made a will, containing an appointment (substitutional) of four executors in Portugal, and another appointment (also substitutional) of four executors in England. The plaintiff, who was named as an executor in both appointments, was resident in Portugal:—The court held, that the words "in Portugal" and "in England" were equivalent to "for Portugal" and "for England." Velho v. Leite, 3 Sw. & Tr. 456; 33 L. J., P. 107.

A will, after a legacy to B., contained a gift of other legacies to S., with directions to the latter concerning the testatrix's funeral, and concluded with these words: "I appoint him, my brother B., executor of this my last will":—Held, that the word "with" should be understood as interposed between the words "him" and "my"; and that as well S. as B. was entitled to probate. Boardman v. Stanley, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 590.

—— Security.]—The testatrix, by her will, desired two persons whom she named to "carry out these my wishes," and for their trouble they were each to take a legacy of nineteen guineas. "After these and all other claims" had been met, they were to deal with the residue in manner set forth in the will:—Held, that they were executors according to the tenor, and that it lay upon the persons asking that the executors should give security to shew a reason why this should be done. Allaw, In goods of, 66 L. T. 382.

Character of Executor.]—The court cannot pass over an executor by reason of his bad character only; he must also be resident out of the United Kingdom at the time of the death of the testator, in which case it may make a grant of administration, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, to some other person with such limitations as it may think fit. Samson, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 59; L. R. 3 P. 48; 28 L. T. 478; 21 W. R. 568.

Executor Bankrupt and Abroad.]—A sole executor named in a will during the lifetime of the testator left England under an assumed name, after selling all his effects to his landlord, and was subsequently adjudicated bankrupt:—Held, that administration with the will annexed should be granted to the testator's widow under s. 73 of the Probate Act, 1857, and the citation of the absent executor was dispensed with. Crawshay, In goods of, 62 L. J., P. 91; [1893] P. 108; 1 R. 477; 68 L. T. 260; 41 W. R. 303.

Executrix and Sole Legatee not to be found.]—Where a sole executrix and legatee—being the illegitimate daughter of the testatrix—had not been heard of for forty years, the court granted administration with the will annexed to the representative of the next of kin of the testatrix, on proof that the executrix had been cited by advertisement, and that the solicitor to the treasury did not intend to apply for administration to her estate, and subject to administration to the next of kin being taken out. Ley, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 110; [1892] P. 6; 65 L. T. 762.

Two Executors—Disappearance of One—Subsequent Death of Executor who had obtained Grant.]—A testator died, leaving two executors surviving him, one of whom obtained probate, leave being reserved to the other executor to come in and prove. The executor who had obtained probate died, leaving a will and executors thereof. The other executor had disappeared, and had not been heard of for fourteen years. The court refused to grant administration with the will annexed to the daughter and sole next of kin of the deceased testator—although the executors of the deceased executor consented to the application—without citing the missing executor, but gave leave for such missing executor to be cited by advertisement. Noddings v. Noddings (2 Sw. & Tr. 15), as explained by the errata and corrigenda at the beginning and end of the volume, followed. Reid, In goods of, 65 L. J., P. 60; [1896] P. 129; 74 L. T. 462.

Renunciation of one Executor — Substitutionary Appointment.]—The testatrix, by her will, appointed as her executors and trustees three persons, C., T. and S., and if either of these should decline to act, she appointed "in their place B. or F. executors and trustees then to act." After the death of the testatrix, S. renounced probate, and nothing could be ascertained as to the whereabouts or existence of F. The court granted probate of the will to C., T. and B. Bradford, In goods of, 72 L. T. 267.

Identity of Executor—Evidence.]—A testator by his will appointed four executors, one of whom was described as "my nephew, G. A." It appeared that there were two persons named "G. A."—one an illegitimate son of the testator's sister, the other the legitimate son of the testator's brother. The testator also nominated as another of his executors "my nephew E. A.," and it appeared that E. A. was his illegitimate grandnephew, the son of his illegitimate nephew. He further described as "my niece" a person who was his illegitimate niece:—Held, that the language of the will shewed that the testator applied the description of nephew and niece to legitimate and illegitimate relatives indiscriminately; and that the court was therefore entitled to admit extrinsic evidence for the purpose of shewing that the illegitimate and not the legitimate nephew was intended by the will. Ashton, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 85; [1892] P. 83; 67 L. T. 325.

More than one Instrument.]—A person left two wills, containing different and inconsistent dispositions of his property. The first will appointed an executor, and the second did not revoke that appointment, and appointed no fresh executor, and contained no general words of revocation. With the consent of all parties probate of both wills, as together containing the last will of the deceased, was granted to the executor named in the first will. Griffith, In goods of, L. R. 2 P. 457; 26 L. T. 780; 20 W. R. 495.

A testator executed a will and codicil, the latter referring to the former by its date. The name of the executor appointed by the will was written on an erasure. The court admitted the declaration of the testator as to the person he had appointed executor, made before the execution of the codicil, and granted probate of the will and codicil to such executor. Sykes, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 17 ; L. R. 3 P. 26 ; 28 L. T. 142 ; 21 W. R. 416.

A testator, by a will fully disposing of his property, bequeathed various legacies, appointed executors, and named a residuary legatee ; and afterwards made another will, beginning, "This is my last will," repeating some of the legacies in the same words, altering others, and making additional ones, but naming no executor or residuary legatee :—Held, that the two documents were to be taken together as his last will and testament. Leslie v. Leslie, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 332.

A testator left two testamentary papers, in the earlier of which was an appointment of executors. In the later one he disposed of his whole property in a manner at variance with the dispositions made in the earlier paper, but no executors were appointed, nor was the previous appointment revoked. The court included both papers in the probate. Lewis, In goods of, 25 L. T. 510 ; 19 W. R. 1038.

A testator executed two wills, one limited to property vested in him as trustee, the other dealing with his own real and personal estate. The court directed that both wills should be included in one probate, but that the probate should be issued in duplicate. Claus, In goods of, 31 W. R. 924 ; 47 J. P. 663.

A testator made two wills. By the first, which disposed of all his property, he appointed his wife executrix. By the second, which disposed of part of his property, and did not revoke the first, he appointed S. his executor :—Held, that the widow was entitled to probate of both instruments, leave being reserved to S. to come in and prove. Andrew, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 38 ; 28 L. T. 238 ; 21 W. R. 391.

A person dying domiciled in England having made two wills in England, one relating exclusively to property in Peru, and the other to property in England, and appointing executors of both wills :—Held, that the executor of the English will, who was also one of the executors of the Peru will, was entitled to probate of both instruments. Winter, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 204.

—— Name of Executor to Will not in Codicil.]—When some of the executors named in a will are omitted in a codicil, they should not be excluded from probate, unless either their appointment has been expressly revoked, or the terms of the appointment make it inconsistent that all should be recognised as executors. Lloyd, In goods of, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 348.

Therefore, where a will named A., B., C. and D. as executors, and a codicil appointed A. and B. only, proceeding to confirm the will "in all other respects, save as altered by this codicil," A., B., C. and D. were all held to be entitled to probate. Ib.

—— Codicil Found—Supplemental Probate.]—Where, after probate granted, a codicil is found which does not affect the appointment of the executors, the proper course is to apply for a supplemental probate. Garner, In goods of, 1 L. R. Ir. 307.

Joint Will disposing of Foreign Assets—Subsequent Will disposing of Property in Ireland.]—A. and B. made a joint will, disposing of property in the United States of America, and appointed executors. B. afterwards made a will, referring to and recognising the joint will, and disposing of property in Ireland, and appointing other executors. The court refused to the executors of B.'s will probate of that will alone, but granted them probate of both wills, reserving the right of the executors of the joint will. Fletcher, In goods of, 11 L. R., Ir. 359.

Executor's Executor.]—The case of an executor's executor is within the spirit of 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, s. 1, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 18. Grant, In goods of, 45 L. J., P. 88 ; 1 P. D. 435 ; 24 W. R. 929.

M. B., the testatrix, by her will appointed her friend C. S. to be her sole executor, but, in case the said C. S. should predecease her, or should die before having fully performed his functions as executor, then she appointed her son A. B. to be sole executor of her will. C. S. survived the testatrix, and took probate of her will, but died in 1873, before having completed his functions as executor, leaving a will, which was duly proved by his executors. A. B. survived the testatrix, but predeceased C. S. :—Held, that the chain of representation to M. B.'s estate was not broken, and that her legal personal representatives were the executors of her deceased executor C. S., who were entitled to administration with the will annexed, in respect of the unadministered portion of her estate. Bond, In goods of, 70 L. T. 813 ; 58 J. P. 529.

——When out of Jurisdiction.]—The executor's executor being out of the jurisdiction, the court granted administration with will annexed to the nominee of parties interested, limited to a particular fund. Grant, In goods of, supra.

The words "at the expiration of twelve months from the death of the testator," in s. 1 of 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, when compared with the words given in the form of affidavit in the second section, and of the grant of administration, must be held to mean at or after the expiration of that period. Ruddy, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 63 ; L. R. 2 P. 330 ; 25 L. T. 950 ; 20 W. R. 319.

When the applicant is the residuary legatee, whose interest is undetermined, the grant will be made under 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, but where a particular sum is set aside for and actually payable to the applicant, the grant can be made under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 18. Ib.

The court will make a limited grant to the personal representative of a legatee, the executor being out of the jurisdiction, though the legatee only is mentioned in 38 Geo. 3, c. 87. Collier, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 444 ; 31 L. J., P. 63 ; 5 L. T. 849.

The executor being out of the jurisdiction, the court made a grant of administration with the will annexed, to the father and guardian of infant legatees, limited to the interest of those legatees in the unadministered estate, under 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 74, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 18. Hampson, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 1 ; L. R. 1 P. 1 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 304.

Probate of the will of C. had been granted by a peculiar court to his executor, who was now abroad, and supposed to be in Australia. C., at the time of his death, had assets out of the jurisdiction of that peculiar. A motion to grant letters of administration with the will annexed to the residuary legatee of C. was refused. Cooper, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 66.

Of Married Women.]—A married woman made a will, appointing executors, and died in the lifetime of her husband, who by deed confirmed the will, and consented to the same being proved. The court granted to the executors administration with the will annexed. Isaacs, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 158.

—— Husband's Assent to Probate of Will of Married Woman.]—A will was made by a married woman who appointed her husband one of the executors. He assented to the making of the will, and after her death expressed his intention to take probate, but died before doing so:—Held, that he had assented to the probate. Cooper, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 41; 6 P. D. 34; 44 L. T. 111; 29 W. R. 444; 45 J. P. 472.

The court will not make a general grant of probate to the executors named in a will of a married woman; but where the husband, or if dead his representative, assents thereto, it will make to them a general grant of administration with the will annexed. Reay, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 215; 31 L. J., P. 154; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 596.

Feme Covert Executrix—Husband objecting to Probate—Grant to Attorney.]—A married woman having been appointed sole executrix of a will and universal legatee, her husband objected to her taking probate. The court, under s. 73 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, made the grant to her attorney:—Quære, whether a husband has an absolute right to object to his wife's taking probate of a will of which she is executrix. Clerke v. Clerke, 50 L. J., P. 69, 78; 6 P. D. 103; 29 W. R. 823; 45 J. P. 588.

Executors surviving, or not appearing on being cited.]—When an executor to whom power has been reserved survives his acting co-executor, and does not appear to a citation, the grant will go as if his name had never appeared in the will, and the executors, if any, of the acting executor will be the representatives of the original testator. Neddiugs, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 15; 3 L. T. 178; 9 W. R. 40.

But on the death of an executor, without having either renounced or taken probate, the executor of the survivor of two acting executors becomes the personal representative of the original deceased. Lorimer, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 471; 31 L. J., P. 189; 6 L. T. 612; 10 W. R. 809.

B., surviving executor of A., died in Australia; his executors proved his will in that colony, in which alone he had any property:—Held, that no administration with the will annexed of the unadministered property of A. could be granted before the executors of B. had been first cited to shew cause to the contrary. Fleming, In goods of, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 486.

In 1859 the presumption arose that A., who had not been heard of for seven years, was dead, but there were no circumstances from which the date of his death could be inferred. In 1857 his father, who would have been entitled to administration had he survived A., died intestate, and no administration was taken out to him. It being uncertain whether A. or his father survived, the court granted administration of the effects of A. to his sister without requiring administration to the father to be taken out. Peck, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 507; 29 L. J., P. 95.

Intermeddling Executor—Failure to take Probate—Citation—Disobedience—Peremptory Order.]—An intermeddling executor is bound to prove, and where, after he has been cited, he has still failed to prove, a peremptory order will be made against him, upon motion, calling upon him to take probate within a certain time. Lister, In goods of, 70 L. T. 812; 58 J. P. 481.

K., who was priest of the parish where a deceased testatrix lived, and another clergyman, were appointed executors. K. attended the deceased as her clergyman on her death-bed, and at the time, or shortly afterwards, was handed (as he stated, for safe keeping) by W., a sister of the deceased, a bank deposit receipt in the joint names of herself and the deceased. He did not before this know of his appointment as executor. W. also gave him certain moneys, assets of the deceased. He deducted therefrom a sum to pay for the funeral office celebrated by him, and a legacy or gift for masses, &c., contained in the will, which he stated W. directed him to keep for these purposes. After these deductions the assets were returned to W., who distributed them to the legatees at a meeting held for the purpose in the vestry of the chapel of which K. was parish priest, and at which meeting K. and the other clergyman named as executor were present. K. refused to take out probate of the will:—Held, that K. had interfered with the assets of the deceased in such a way that he could not repudiate the office of executor, and that he was therefore bound to extract probate. Hanlon, In goods of, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 551.

Renunciation by Executor after intermeddling—Consent of Parties.]—There is no absolute rule that an executor who has intermeddled with the assets of a testator will not be allowed to renounce in a proper case; thus, where an executor had only intermeddled so far as was necessary to protect the assets, and desired to renounce, on the ground of his relationship with the next of kin, who were opposing the will, and the parties interested under the will consented, the court gave liberty to renounce. Fitzpatrick, In goods of, 29 L. R., Ir. 328.

Sole or Joint.]—D., on 3rd January, 1853, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to P., and appointed him "sole executor of this my will." In March, 1862, by a paper purporting to be his last will, he devised and bequeathed two houses as described, and their appurtenances, to G., and made G. "sole executor of this my will":—Held, that the two executors were jointly entitled to probate of both papers. Geaves v. Price, 3 Sw. & Tr. 71; 32 L. J., P. 113; 8 L. T. 610; 11 W. R. 809.

A testator appointed his wife and his son "whole and sole executrix":—Held, that they were entitled jointly to probate of his will. Court, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 485; 31 L. J., P. 61; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 142; 6 L. T. 658; 10 W. R. 809.

P. appointed C. and D. "executors of my will in India," and W. "sole executrix of my will in England." On an exemplification of probate granted in Calcutta to C. being sent home, probate was granted in the principal registry to W., as one of the executors of the will, reserving power of making a similar grant to the other executors in the will. The Bank of England objected to the reservation of this power, but the court refused, on motion on behalf of W., to direct the probate to be altered. Pulman, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 269; 33 L. J., P. 20; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1204; 9 L. T. 347; 12 W. R. 60.

For Limited Objects.]—W. made a will in England in 1861, and appointed B. and C. executors. In May, 1862, being in India, he made a codicil, and on the 9th of June executed a paper whereby he appointed E. and F. "my executors in this country." The court held, that the context of the paper giving the testator's reasons for the appointment of E. and F. shewed that he did not mean them to have any power over his property in England, and granted probate to B. and C., without reserving power to E. and F. Wallich, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 423; 33 L. J., P. 87; 9 L. T. 809.

B. appointed each of his sons, when he came of age, to be an executor of his will, "so far as respects any residuary real and personal estate, and the aggregate fund forming my general estate":—Held, that the sons, on coming of age, were entitled to probate, limited, as far as possible, in the words used by the testator, due regard being had to the fact that such probate could not affect the real estate. Barnes, In goods of, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 195.

Convicted of Felony.]—An executor who, after his testator's death, is convicted of felony is, nevertheless, entitled to probate. Smethurst v. Tomlin, 2 Sw. & Tr. 143; 30 L. J., P. 269; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 763; 4 L. T. 712.

See also EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR.

2. Administrators.

To Administrator of Executor.]—Where A. died, having appointed B. executor of his will, and he proved the will, and died leaving part of the estate unadministered, the court made a grant de bonis non (with the will annexed) to the administrator of B., the parties entitled in priority being abroad and difficult to be found; but required that security should be given to the amount of their share of the property. Hicks, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 27; 22 L. T. 553; 18 W. R. 471.

To Administrators with Will Annexed.]—An administrator with the will annexed cannot be forced to take out administration with a later will annexed when the first administration is revoked, although he has intermeddled with the estate. Davis, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 213; 29 L. J., P. 72.

A mother, by her will, appointed her daughter, who was under age, sole executor and universal intromitter with her movable means and estate, and certain persons trustees for the daughter until she was of legal age. In a subsequent part of the will she directed the trustees, in case her daughter died before coming of age, to divide the residue of her property in a particular way. The court refused to grant probate of the will to the trustees as executors according to the tenor thereof, but ordered that administration with the will annexed should issue to them under the Probate Act, s. 73, by reason that the testatrix had not appointed by her will an executor competent to take probate. Stewart or Stuart, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 37; L. R. 3 P. 244; 33 L. T. 72; 23 W. R. 683.

A testator, after making several specific bequests, "ordered the management of all the rest to John Smith and Judy"; there not being in the will any other words indicative of an appointment of an executor or of a bequest of residue:—Held, that John Smith and Judy had been constituted, not executors according to the tenor, but residuary legatees, and were entitled, not to probate, but to administration with the will annexed. Smith v. Kerrane, Kerrane, In goods of, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 447.

Where there is an executor de facto the court has no power to grant letters of administration with the will annexed. Delacour, In goods of, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 86.

A person died possessed of real and personal estate. By his will he gave the income derivable from his estate and effects to A. for life, and continued, "The whole after her decease goes to my legal heirs and theirs for ever":—Held, that, on the true construction of the words "my legal heirs and theirs for ever," the heir-at-law took as residuary legatee of the personalty as well as realty, and was, therefore, entitled in that character to a grant of administration with the will annexed. Dixon, In goods of, Todhunter v. Thompson, 47 L. J., P. 57; 4 P. D. 81; 39 L. T. 234; 26 W. R. 883.

And see cases, post, col. 499.

Bankruptcy of Administrator.]—An administrator became bankrupt, and in his capacity as administrator proved for a debt owing by him to the intestate's estate. A dividend became payable to the estate, but in the meantime the administrator became bankrupt again, and left the country. The court refused to recall the letters of administration granted to him and to make a fresh grant to his creditor's assignee. Hammond, In goods of, 30 L. T. 76; 22 W. R. 353.

Administrator pendente lite.]—A married woman, under a power given to her to that effect, duly executed a will. Her husband, by his will, made her universal legatee and sole executrix. She survived him, but did not take probate of his will, or re-execute her own. Litigation having arisen on the question whether the wife's executors were entitled to a limited or a general grant of probate, the court appointed an administrator pendente lite to the estate of the husband, as well as one to her estate. Dawes, In goods of, L. R. 2 P. 147; 23 L. T. 397.

A party executed a will and two codicils, and by the will he appointed executors. A suit was instituted to try the validity of the second codicil only, such codicil in no way affecting the appointment of executors. The court refused to appoint an administrator pendente lite. Mortimer v. Paull, 39 L. J., P. 47; L. R. 2 P. 85; 22 L. T. 631; 18 W. R. 901.

Executors could not enforce in the court of chancery an agreement to purchase made with their testator, in consequence of an appeal to the house of lords as to the validity of the will being still undecided, and their consequent inability to shew a sufficient title to the property. The court, on motion by the executors, and all parties consenting, rescinded the order by which it had delivered out probate to the executors, and issued to them in its place a grant of administration pendente lite. Wright v. Rogers, 40 L. J., P. 8; L. R. 2 P. 179; 23 L. T. 569; 19 W. R. 192.

Administration pendente lite was granted to the defendant in a suit, the plaintiff not opposing. De Chatelain v. Pontigny, 1 Sw. & Tr. 34; 27 L. J., P. 18; 6 W. R. 409.

The court will follow the practice of the court of chancery in appointing receivers, and will appoint an administrator pending suit where a bonâ fide suit is pending, irrespectively of the property being in particular danger. Bellew v. Bellew, 4 Sw. & Tr. 58; 34 L. J., P. 125; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 588; 13 L. T. 247.

In appointing an administrator pendente lite the court cannot, except with the consent of all interested parties, give him special powers to pay an annuity, by way of maintenance, to one of the residuary legatees who is also one of the next of kin. Whittle v. Keats, 35 L. J., P. 54.

Where an estate was insolvent and the subject of a suit for administration in chancery, but which was suspended by the death of the administratrix, and could not be proceeded with without the appointment of an administrator, and the children of the deceased were all minors except one, and he was in New Zealand, and the solicitors for the family intimated that none of the children, or any one on their behalf, would take out administration, the court, on an application to grant administration to a creditor, who had proved his debt in the administration suit, declined to grant administration until the children should be cited, and the particulars of the debt, as well as of the estate of the deceased, brought before the court by affidavit. Bradley, In goods of, 14 W. R. 409.

Where the estate of a deceased consists of his share of a business which he was carrying on in partnership at the time of his death, and which is continued to be carried on by the surviving partner, the court will not appoint an administrator pendente lite against the wish of the surviving partner, unless a strong case is made that he is dealing improperly with the business. Horrell v. Witts, 35 L. J., P. 55; L. R. 1 P. 103; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 673; 14 L. T. 137; 14 W. R. 515.

The court ordered, in granting administration pendente lite, that the administrator should not remove certain diamonds which were deposited in the Bank of England by the executors after the death of the testatrix. Smith v. Tebbitt, 16 L. T. 96.

Concurrent suits were pending between the same parties in the court of chancery and court of probate, and the former had appointed a receiver of the personal estate of the deceased. The court at first refused to appoint an administrator pendente lite, but afterwards, being satisfied that no conflict of jurisdictions would arise, and that the justice of the case required the order, appointed the receiver of the court of chancery also administrator pendente lite at the instance of the creditors of the deceased, with the view of enabling them to obtain speedy payment of their debts. Tichborne v. Tichborne and Tichborne, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 55, 70; L. R. 1 P. 730; 20 L. T. 820, 1015; 17 W. R. 832.

Under s. 70 the court has power to appoint an administrator even though the application is made by a third person not party to the suit. Ib.

The powers of an administrator pendente lite cease when a final judgment has been given. Wieland v. Bird, 63 L. J., P. 162; [1894] P. 262; 6 R. 574; 71 L. T. 267.

—— On giving Security.]—An administrator pendente lite was appointed on his giving security to the amount of one year's income of the property, his administration to be under the direction of the court. The court directed that he should not discharge claims on the estate until they had passed before the registrar. Charlton v. Hindmarsh, 1 Sw. & Tr. 519; 2 L. T. 24; 8 W. R. 259.

—— On Administrator's Affidavit that it was for the Good of the Estate.]—In an interest suit between the Queen's proctor and a person asserting himself to be lawful nephew of a deceased intestate, the court appointed the person who had been made receiver in respect of the same estates in proceedings in chancery to be administrator pendente lite on his affidavit that the estates in certain particulars would be benefited by being dealt with by a person clothed with such authority, and on consent of the parties to the suit. Her Majesty's Procurator-General v. Williams, 2 Sw. & Tr. 353; 5 L. T. 765.

Application by Creditor not Party to the Suit.]—Where the parties to a testamentary suit took no steps to bring it to trial, and an action had been commenced in the chancery division in which a receiver had been appointed, this court, on the application of a creditor not a party to the testamentary suit, appointed an administrator pendente lite. Evans, In goods of, 60 L. J., P. 18; 15 P. D. 215; 63 L. T. 254.

Representative of Deceased Next of Kin.]—W. died intestate, leaving a sister and several nephews and nieces, children of a deceased brother and sisters, his next of kin. The surviving sister died, and her administrator applied for a grant of administration of the goods of W.:—Held, that he was not entitled to administration without citing the nephews and nieces. Walker, In goods of, 11 L. R., Ir. 360.

Receivers of Real Estate.]—Before a receiver of real estate will be appointed by the court, it is necessary that it should appear, on affidavit, that the heir-at-law or the devisee, or other person having or pretending interest in the real estate, has been cited. Purday v. Field, 3 Sw. & Tr. 576; 33 L. J., P. 73; 12 W. R. 1088.

The court has no power to appoint a receiver unless the validity of the will by which real estate is affected is in dispute. It therefore refused to appoint a receiver when the only question was as to the person who was appointed executor in the will. Grant v. Grant, 38 L. J., P. 55; L. R. 1 P. 654; 20 L. T. 684.

To an Administrator in a Chancery Suit.]—On an application in the probate division by a defendant in a chancery suit for a grant of letters of administration to the estate of the plaintiff in that suit with a view to wind up the chancery suit:—Held, that an affidavit by the parties interested in the estate and assenting to such a course is necessary. Richardson, In goods of, 35 L. T. 767.

Held, also, that even with an affidavit before the court no order can be made without first a certificate under the hand of the judge in the chancery division before whom the suit is pending, which shall state that the course proposed is a proper one under the circumstances. Ib.

—— Sale ordered in Chancery after Appointment.]—An administrator pendente lite having been appointed by the court of probate, a suit was instituted in the court of chancery to administer the estate of the deceased, and an order was made in such suit upon the administrator to sell certain property for the purpose of raising a fund to pay the debts due from the deceased's estate. The court of probate refused to interfere and stop the sale so ordered by the court of chancery. Tichborne v. Tichborne, 39 L. J., P. 22; L. R. 2 P. 41; 22 L. T. 42.

When Unnecessary — Estates Abroad.]—An administrator of C. in India recovered judgment against M. in an action in Calcutta. M. died, and his estate was being administered in England :—Held, that it was not necessary for the administrator to take out administration in England to C.'s estate. Macnicol, In re, Macnicol v. Macnicol, L. R. 19 Eq. 81 ; 31 L. T. 566 ; 23 W. R. 67.

When Executor Insane or Abroad.]—Where one executor was insane, and the other was a seafaring man engaged on a voyage to the East Indies, the court passed them both over and made a grant of administration with the will annexed to a third person. Lewis, In goods of, 25 L. T. 510 ; 19 W. R. 1038.

d. In Cases of Husbands and Wives.

To Widow or Next of Kin of Deceased Husband.]—The next of kin and heir to the real estate of the intestate contested the right to administration with the widow, on the ground of her want of interest through the insolvency of the personal estate. There was no distinct denial of the insolvency by the widow, but the evidence to prove it was not very conclusive. The court refused to depart from the practice of preferring the widow, and made the grant accordingly. Peat v. Peat, 25 L. T. 108 ; 19 W. R. 856.

A person died intestate, leaving a widow and several minor children by a former wife. During his lifetime he had been assisted in his business by his brother. On the other hand, his widow, to whom he had been married but a short time, was entirely unacquainted with its management. These circumstances were held not to be sufficient to authorise the court to grant a joint administration to the widow and to the brother as guardian of the minor children. Richards, In goods of, 40 L. J., P. 29 ; L. R. 2 P. 216 ; 24 L. T. 142 ; 19 W. R. 443.

A testator appointed an executor, and bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to A. The testator and A. were lost in the same ship, and there was nothing to shew who was the survivor. The executor renounced :—Held, that as the bequest to A. did not take effect, and therefore was not transmissible to his personal representative, the widow of the testator was entitled to administration with the will annexed. Carmichael, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 224 ; 32 L. J., P. 70 ; 11 W. R. 462.

A testator, having in one clause of his will left all his personal property to his wife absolutely, by a subsequent clause gave her only a life interest therein. Under these circumstances a special grant was ordered to issue, which, after reciting the two clauses, should authorise the widow to take administration as the party named in them. Westropp, In goods of, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1318.

A soldier, whilst stationed at the Cape of Good Hope, was married to A., and he being still resident in that colony, such marriage was dissolved by a properly-constituted court there, by reason of A.'s adultery. This decree was made before the Divorce Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85). He subsequently, still serving with his regiment in the same colony, was married to B., and this last marriage, by the law of the Cape of Good Hope, was a valid marriage :—Held, that B. was entitled to administration of his goods upon his death as his lawful widow and relict. Argent v. Argent, 4 Sw. & Tr. 52 ; 34 L. J., P. 133 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 864 ; 12 L. T. 768.

When Widow passed over.]—The court will not, at any rate without notice, pass over the widow, who has been legally separated from her husband by reason of her cruelty, in granting administration to his estate. Ihler, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 18 ; L. R. 3 P. 50 ; 28 L. T. 479 ; 21 W. R. 550.

The court is precluded by 21 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 3, from making a joint grant of administration to a widow and one of the persons entitled in distribution, even with the consent of the next of kin, and of all the other persons entitled in distribution, and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, does not enlarge the power of the court in such a case. Browning, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 634 ; 31 L. J., P. 161 ; 7 L. T. 217 ; 10 W. R. 96.

An intestate left a widow and two children surviving. He had been separated for some time before his death from the widow, and she had been convicted of felony, and was leading a life of prostitution. The court passed her over, and made a grant to the son. Boddan, In goods of, 28 L. T. 368.

For sufficient cause, e.g. the misconduct of a widow in having eloped from her husband and lived in adultery, the court will grant administration to the next of kin in preference to the widow. Anderson, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 489 ; 33 L. J., P. 149 ; 11 L. T. 21.

The testator died, leaving a widow, but no issue. He bequeathed a policy of insurance for 100*l.* to his sister for her separate use, but appointed no executor. Such policy of insurance comprised almost the whole of the personal estate of the testator, and there were charges of adultery against the widow. The court, in the exercise of its discretion, without going into the allegations against the widow, made a grant of letters of administration with the will annexed to the sister of the deceased, as the person having the larger interest, but ordered that the widow should have her costs out of the estate. Homan, In goods of, 52 L. J., P. 94 ; 31 W. R. 955.

An intestate was a clerk in the treasurer's office of a corporation. The borough treasurer had admitted that he had been guilty of embezzling a large sum of money belonging to the corporation, and it was also suggested that money was due from the deceased to the corporation :—Held, that there were no special circumstances within 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, to justify the court in passing over the widow and granting administration of the estate to a third person. Wells v. Brook, 25 W. R. 463.

J. B. died, leaving her husband G. B. and several children her surviving. G. B. remarried, and died without administering the effects of his first wife. Letters of administration of the effects of G. B. were granted to a creditor, who renounced all right to administer the effects of J. B. :—Held, that the children of J. B. were, and not the widow of G. B. was, entitled to the grant of administration of the effects of J. B. Bell, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 288 ; 29 L. J., P. 162 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 473 ; 7 W. R. 349.

Where a testator assigned his property on trust, to take effect on his death, for his widow and children, the court, in favour of the intention, granted administration, passing over the widow, who was first entitled to the trustee. Cosnahan, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 76 ; L. R. 1 P. 183 ; 14 L. T. 337 ; 14 W. R. 969.

The court, being of opinion that the widow of the deceased testator was hostile to the next of kin, and that she was going abroad for some time, passed her over, notwithstanding her opposition, and made a grant to a son of the testator by a former marriage, under s. 73 of the Probate Act. Shirley, In goods of, 66 L. T. 590.

Husband.]—A husband is entitled to take out administration, in right of the wife, to her next of kin, deceased intestate, and her renunciation in favour of a third person, e.g. a creditor of the deceased, will not deprive the husband of his right. Haynes v. Matthews, 1 Sw. & Tr. 460; 8 W. R. 76.

Though the ecclesiastical courts are bound by the statute to grant administration to the next of kin of a wife, yet that does not bind the right in equity; for a surviving husband has her whole right vested in him at the time of her death, and her whole property belongs to him.

Though a husband died before he took out administration to his wife's estate, it shall go to his representatives, for it is vested in him at her death; but had the wife survived, her chose in action not reduced into the husband's possession, would have survived to her. Elliot v. Collier, 3 Atk. 526.

Quære, whether a husband who, by a deed of separation, has resigned all claim to the property of his wife, is thereby excluded upon her death, in his lifetime, from taking any interest as her representative. In such a case the court will not grant administration to the next of kin of the wife unless the husband is cited. Oranmore (Lord), In goods of, 30 L. J., P. 183.

The next of kin of a married woman are not at liberty to question her husband's right to administer to her estate on the ground of the nullity of the marriage by reason of the impotence of the husband. A. v. B., L. R. 1 P. 559; 17 W. R. 14.

A married woman was the only legatee of a will which contained no appointment of an executor. Her husband refused to consent to her taking the grant of administration with the will annexed, or to join the bond. The property being left to her separate use, the court made the grant to her attorney without the husband's consent. Warren, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 12; L. R. 1 P. 538.

Rule 50, 1862, which directs that no person who renounces probate or administration in one character shall be permitted to take representation to the deceased in another, does not apply to the husband of a residuary legatee who signs a renunciation, executed by his wife, merely to signify his assent to her act. As a creditor he may take administration notwithstanding his signature to such a document. Biggs, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 79; L. R. 1 P. 595.

A married woman, with her husband's assent, made a will. After her death, her husband took the property bequeathed to him by the will, and at his death the will was found amongst his papers. The court granted probate of the will to the executors upon the ground that the husband after his wife's death had continued his consent. Child, In goods of, 16 W. R. 407.

A. died leaving all the property over which she had power of appointment to B., who was married and resident in America. B.'s husband came to England and applied for a grant of administration with the will annexed. The court, before making the grant, required that B.'s consent should first be obtained. Williams, In goods of, 17 L. T. 518.

—— Where Executor Named.] — Where a married woman dies leaving a duly executed will and appointing an executor, if the executor survive the testatrix, although no property pass under the will, the executor must take probate, and an application by the husband for administration must be refused. Dodsworth, In goods of, 73 L. T. 315.

—— Where no Executor Named.]—Where a feme covert has a power to dispose of her estate by will, the writing she leaves ought first to be propounded as a will in the spiritual court; and if no executor is appointed, they will grant administration to the husband with the will annexed. Ross v. Ewer, 3 Atk. 160.

—— Of Administratrix.]—A creditor's administration of the personal estate and effects of B. was granted to C., a feme sole. C. subsequently intermarried with D., and died six weeks afterwards, leaving part of the estate of B. unadministered, and the debt in respect of which she had obtained the grant still owing. The court held that D. had not reduced his wife's chose in action in the debt into possession by merely taking possession of that part of B.'s estate which he found in her hands, and refused to make to him a grant de bonis non of the goods of B. until he had first taken out administration to his wife. Risdon, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 40; L. R. 1 P. 637; 20 L. T. 330; 17 W. R. 576.

When Husband passed over.] — Where the estate of a testatrix, who had been deserted by her husband, consisted almost entirely of a share in a partnership business, and no executor or residuary legatee was appointed, the court granted administration under s. 73 with the will annexed to a son, and dispensed with the citation of the husband. Shoosmith, In goods of, 63 L. J., P. 64; [1894] P. 23; 6 R. 567; 70 L. T. 809.

Where the husband of a deceased intestate had left her and resided apart from her for some years before her death, the court, on proof that the husband had been cited to take out letters of administration to the personal estate and effects of his wife, and had entered no appearance to the citation, passed him over, and made a grant to the eldest son of the intestate by a former husband. Moore, In goods of, 60 L. J., P. 98; [1891] P. 299.

The court made a grant, under s. 73, by reason of the "special circumstances" of the case, in respect of a married woman's separate estate, in favour of her father, passing over her husband, who was out of the country, without requiring him to be cited. Hill, In goods of, 66 L. T. 380; 56 J. P. 297.

Moneys belonging to or now vested in the mother of the deceased (her daughter) were, under a misapprehension, paid into a savings bank account standing in the name of the deceased, who died more than six years ago, leaving a husband, who, although he knew of the account, took no steps to obtain administration, and left this country for Hamburg and thence for America:—Held, on motion, that the court would not grant letters of administration to the mother without notice to the husband. Rusch, In goods of, 6 R. 538; 42 W. R. 304.

Where a married woman domiciled in Canada died intestate, leaving a husband and two minor children her surviving, the court, on the affidavit of a member of the Canadian bar that by the law of Canada the children, and not the widower, had the first right to administer the estate of a married woman dying intestate, granted letters of administration to the attorney of the said two minor children. Babin, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 46; 62 L. T. 185.

The marital right of the husband as administrator by law excluded by a limitation to the next of kin of the wife. Anderson v. Dawson, 15 Ves. 537.

To Representatives of Husband and Wife—Death of Wife.]—A wife whose personal estate consisted of a legacy which became payable in 1864 died in 1856 intestate. In 1845 her husband went abroad, and was last heard of in 1853:—Held, that as there was no evidence that she died a widow, her next of kin was not entitled to administer without citing the representatives of her husband. Nichols or Nicholls, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 88; L. R. 2 P. 461; 27 L. T. 323; 21 W. R. 161.

The rule that when husband and wife perish together, and there is no evidence that the one survived the other, administration of their personal estate will be granted to their respective next of kin, is not applicable to such a case. Ib.

Where a married woman makes a will and appoints no executor, the persons interested under the will are entitled to the grant in priority to the husband, who can only obtain the grant on their renunciations being filed in the registry. Bailey, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 135; 30 L. J., P. 190; 4 L. T. 90; 9 W. R. 540.

A woman, being entitled to a legacy on the death of another person, married and died in the lifetime of her husband, who also died before the legacy had become payable and without having taken out administration to his wife:—Held, that the legacy formed part of the estate of the husband, and that administration to the wife in respect of such legacy could only be granted to the representative of the husband. Harding, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 65; L. R. 2 P. 394; 26 L. T. 668; 20 W. R. 615.

In the absence of express words in the grant, the administrator with the will annexed of a married woman, who was an executrix, takes only as administrator of an executrix, and has no relation with the original testator. Bridger, In goods of, 47 L. J., P. 46; 26 W. R. 535.

A husband appointed his wife and two other persons as executrix and executors. The wife remarried and died, having, during her second coverture, made a will in accordance with her power of appointment, and she appointed her husband her sole executor. The husband took out letters of administration with the will annexed. Part of the estate of the original testator remained unadministered, the two other executors having predeceased the wife. The court held that the grant of letters of administration to the second husband, with the will of his wife annexed, did not continue the chain of representation to the original testator, and, with the consent of the second husband, granted administration of the unadministered effects of the testator to his daughter as one of the residuary legatees. Ib.

Where a husband survives the wife, and dies intestate, without administering to her estate, his next of kin must constitute themselves his legal representatives before they have any claim to administer to the wife's estate. Crause, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 146.

A limited probate taken out of the will of a feme covert will not continue the chain of representation under the general probate of the will of the original testator; but the court will make a supplemental grant, limited to the property which the feme covert had as executrix. Bayne, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 132; 6 W. R. 815.

A. died in Ireland. B., his executor, proved his will there. B. died, and C., his executor, proved his will in Ireland and had the Irish grant resealed in the principal registry of the court of probate in England:—Held, that the chain of representation was not continued, and that C. was not entitled to a grant of administration of the personal estate and effects in England of A.'s wife, who predeceased her husband. Gaynor, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 79; L. R. 1 P. 723; 21 L. T. 367; 17 W. R. 1062.

When a married woman, with her husband's consent, had made investments in her own name, and had made a will in his life disposing of property over which she had a power of appointment, and of all her other property, and her husband had, in writing, consented to and approved of the will, and the wife died in the husband's lifetime, the court revoked a limited grant made to her executors, and decreed a general grant of administration with the will annexed to them, upon the consent of the personal representative of the husband to such grant being filed. Reay, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 215; 31 L. J., P. 154; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 596.

A wife separated in 1836 from her husband, on account of his intemperate habits, and afterwards maintained herself. In 1873 she disposed by will of personal property which she had earned after the separation. The court made a grant of probate to the executors limited to the property of which she had disposed, and over which she had power of disposition. Andrews, In goods of, 28 L. T. 479; 21 W. R. 576.

A wife was deserted by her husband, and died possessed of property which was invested in 1871. It did not appear at what time she became possessed of the property, but it was after the desertion. The court granted probate only of the property to which the testatrix had become entitled since the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870. Pepper, In goods of, 31 L. T. 274; 22 W. R. 832.

A couple married in 1811; in 1817 they verbally agreed to separate, and not to interfere with each other, and divided then their furniture and effects. They never again cohabited, and the wife supported herself by her own industry, and acquired property, which she disposed of by will in 1856. Probate of this will was opposed by the husband, who asserted his marital right to his wife's property:—Held, that the property had been acquired to the wife's sole use, and the jus disponendi would therefore attach to such property. Haddon v. Fladgate, 1 Sw. & Tr. 48; 27 L. J., P. 21; 6 W. R. 456.

A husband died intestate leaving a widow. His whole estate was under the value of 500*l.*, and therefore became the absolute property of the widow, by virtue of s. 1 of the Intestates' Estates Act, 1890. The widow died leaving a will disposing of all her property, whereof she appointed an executor, but without having taken out administration to the estate of her deceased husband. On an application by the executor of the widow for a grant of administration to the estate of the deceased intestate, the court made the grant to the executor in preference to the next of kin of the deceased intestate; but, inasmuch as there was a possibility that the estate of the husband might after all turn out to be worth more than 500*l.*, made the grant under s. 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857. Bryant, In goods of, 65 L. J., P. 96; [1896] P. 159.

—— Death of Husband.]—A husband was lost at sea in or about 1846, having made a will by which he left all his property to his wife, who died in 1874 without having taken any steps to prove his will. The widow for several years drew the dividends from money in the funds which had belonged to her husband, but the Bank of England had refused to transfer the stock, or pay the arrears of dividend, to her administrator, until administration to the husband's estate had been taken out. There was no evidence of the name or names in which the stock stood. The court, in the absence of evidence that the husband died possessed of property within the jurisdiction, refused to grant administration with the will annexed of his effects to the widow's administrator. Lock, In goods of, 24 W. R. 281.

The court will not, for the protection or convenience of the Bank of England, depart from the principles on which it is accustomed to act. Ib.

A wife and her husband made an agreement that an annuity to which the former was entitled, and which was in the hands of a trustee, should be equally divided between them. The husband afterwards, viz. in 1841, disappeared, and no payment of his share of the annuity was ever made to him. The wife died in 1856. The wife's executor now applied for a grant of administration de bonis non to the estate of the trustee, limited to a sum of money which was identified as the accumulation of the husband's unpaid share of the annuity, and which was part of certain unadministered estate of the trustee. The court having presumed the husband to have died before the wife, made the grant. Serjeant, In goods of, 26 L. T. 669; 20 W. R. 872.

A husband from time to time gave his wife sums of money, part of which accumulated as stock in his name; he received the dividends, and paid them to her, and in every way treated the stock as her separate property. The wife during coverture, with the husband's consent, made a will, whereof she appointed an executrix, survived him a few hours, and died without republishing the will:—Held, that the testatrix had acquired a separate estate, of which the husband had considered himself trustee for her, and to which the jus disponendi attached, and that her executrix was entitled to a limited probate. Smith, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 125; 27 L. J., P. 39; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1193.

A husband left a will, in which he made his wife executrix, and gave her a life interest in the whole of his property; on her death he directed it should be sold, and the proceeds divided amongst his children; and he appointed his eldest son and another person trustees to carry such division into effect. The widow took probate of the will, and subsequently sold the property of her husband for 600*l.*; and with that sum, and 130*l.* of her own moneys, purchased two leasehold houses. On her death, the court granted administration of her effects to the eldest son, the trustee named in their father's will, in preference to the nominee of the other next of kin, five in number. Stainton, In goods of, 40 L. J., P. 25; L. R. 2 P. 212; 24 L. T. 320; 19 W. R. 567.

—— Grant of Letters of Administration to Wife's Father.]—A husband agreed by deed of separation that if his wife died intestate her next of kin should be entitled to her property. She died intestate, leaving separate property of which she had become possessed by virtue of the deed, and the court, notwithstanding that the husband objected, granted letters of administration to her father, limited to that property. Allen v. Humphreys, 52 L. J., P. 24; 8 P. D. 16; 48 L. T. 125; 31 W. R. 292; 47 J. P. 24.

Official Receiver in Husband's Bankruptcy.]—The court made a grant of administration under s. 73 of the Probate Act, 1857, in respect of the personal estate and effects of a married woman who had died intestate, leaving her husband surviving, upon the application and in favour of the official receiver in her husband's bankruptcy. Thacker, In goods of, 54 J. P. 759.

In a case of the estate of a married woman who had died intestate, leaving her husband, who survived her, an undischarged bankrupt, whose estate was vested in the hands of the chief official receiver in bankruptcy, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 121; the court, upon motion by the chief official receiver, made a grant to him of the personal estate and effects of the deceased intestate, and, on account of the smallness of the estate, dispensed with any citation upon the husband of the deceased. Conolly, In goods of, 74 L. T. 461.

One of the official receivers in bankruptcy, as trustee of the estate of the husband of a deceased intestate, applied for administration without citing the husband. The amount of the estate was 105*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.*, which was claimed by the official receiver on behalf of the creditors of the bankrupt:—Held, that notice of some kind must be given to the husband, but that, upon the registrar being satisfied as to this, the grant might go. Morgan, In goods of, 75 L. T. 190.

Administration Bond—Consent of Husband.]—Since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, when a married woman is administratrix, it is not necessary that her husband should join in the administration bond. Ayres, In goods of, 52 L. J., P. 98; 8 P. D. 168; 31 W. R. 660; 47 J. P. 440.

When a wife is entitled to administration, and the husband refuses to join in the administration bond, or to assist her in obtaining the administration, the court will grant the administration to her, allowing a third person to execute the bond for her. Sutherland, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 189; 31 L. J., P. 126; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 465.

When the universal trustee in a will was a married woman, the property being given to her for her sole and separate use, and the husband refused to execute the bond unless she undertook to share the property with him, the court granted administration with the will annexed to the attorney of the wife under s. 73 of Probate Act. Warner, In goods of, 17 L. T. 221.

Husband and Wife dying together.]—See post, col. 495.

4. On Presumption of Death.

Probable Death at Sea.]—A settler in New Zealand embarked 1st July, 1856, in a vessel bound for Sydney on his way to England. The vessel never reached Sydney, and no intelligence, after inquiries had been instituted, having been obtained, as to the vessel, or any of those on board, she was supposed to have foundered at sea, in some heavy gale, which occurred at the time she was making the voyage in question:—Held, that his death was to be presumed, and that advertisements in newspapers for persons supposed to be dead might be dispensed with, when their history is known and traced within a short period of their being last heard of. Norris, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 6; 27 L. J., P. 4; 6 W. R. 261.

M. sailed from Liverpool in the "Brevet," the 27th January, 1857, for Valparaiso. The voyage should have been made in ten weeks. Nothing had been heard of either the "Brevet" or crew since she left Liverpool. The ship was insured, and the underwriters had paid policy thereon, as upon a total loss:—Held, that his death was to be presumed; the payment of policy by underwriters was strong evidence in favour of such presumption. Main, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 11; 27 L. J., P. 5; 6 W. R. 262.

On the 15th November, 1857, S. sailed from Barcelona to Constantinople, the average duration of the voyage being thirty days. The vessel had never arrived at her destination, nor had anything been heard of her or the crew, and the insurers of the ship had paid as upon a total loss. The court refused to grant administration to his effects, as it did not appear that any inquiries had been made for the crew at Barcelona, but allowed administration to pass conditionally, on an affidavit of such inquiries having been made without the result being filed in the registry. Smyth, In goods of, 28 L. J., P. 1.

A master of a ship sailed in her from Demerara, on the 23rd of October, 1858, bound for London, the ordinary duration of the voyage being five or six weeks. A few days after sailing, a hurricane passed over the West Indian Islands, in which it was supposed that the ship and all hands had been lost, neither the vessel nor any of the crew having been heard of since the vessel sailed. The underwriters on the vessel had arranged to pay the amount insured as upon a total loss. On these facts, a motion made on the 30th of March, 1859, for a grant of administration of the effects of A., was rejected, the court holding that the application was premature, since, though the vessel might be lost, the crew might have been picked up by a vessel bound on so long a voyage, that tidings of them could not have been received in the period that had elapsed since the vessel was last heard of; and that inquiries should have been made at Demerara for the crew; but on the 22nd of June, 1859, the underwriters having paid the amount insured on the vessel, and nothing having been heard of either her or any of the crew, administration was granted. Bishop, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 303; 28 L. J., P. 93; 7 W. R. 375.

Evidence.]—The court will not presume the death of a person until it is satisfied that it has before it the best evidence that can reasonably be obtained on the subject. Therefore, where the affidavits filed in support of a motion for presumption of death spoke of certain letters of the deceased, the court adjourned the case in order that such letters should be produced or their absence sufficiently explained. In these cases it is necessary that the applicant should depose to his own belief in the death of the supposed deceased, and that (if possible) such affidavit should be corroborated by that of some other member of the family, or, if there be none such, a person acquainted with the deceased, who should also swear to his personal belief in the death. Clarke, In goods of, 66 L. J., P. 9; [1896] P. 287.

Upon motion to presume the death of a man who sailed from this country for Western Australia on board a small vessel which called at Cape Town and was never heard of after leaving that port, the certificate of the registrar-general of shipping and seamen was produced, which stated (inter alia) that the person in question was returned as serving upon the vessel as second mate at the time when she was last heard of, and that he was "supposed drowned." The certificate was furnished in pursuance of the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and two members of the deceased's family swore to their belief in his death. The underwriters of the vessel had paid the insurance money, as upon a total loss, and notice had been given to the office with whom the deceased's life was insured. The court presumed the death as having occurred on or since the date when the vessel was last heard of. Dodd, In goods of, 77 L. T. 137.

Consent of Insurance Company—Letter containing such Consent ordered to be filed.]—Where an application was made for leave to presume the death of a sailor as having been drowned at sea, and the applicant had received a letter from an insurance company, in whose office the deceased was insured, consenting to the motion, the court ordered such letter to be filed with the papers. Saul, In goods of, 65 L. J., P. 101; [1896] P. 151.

Advertisement.]—The court refused to dispense with the usual advertisement in newspapers before presuming the death of a sailor who had been last heard of in 1859, as then about to sail from New Zealand to China in a barque now believed to have been lost. Atkinson, In goods of, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 219.

It is a general rule of practice in the probate division that no death will be presumed merely on the ground that the supposed deceased has disappeared for many years, and is probably dead. This rule applies even in cases where the supposed deceased has corresponded with his family for many years, and has suddenly ceased to do so. Semble, this rule is not affected by the smallness of the estate. Robertson, In goods of, 65 L. J., P. 16; [1896] P. 8.

Not heard of for Seven Years.]—The husband of A. had, seven years before her death, left this country for America, and had not been heard of since three days after his arrival there, although he had been advertised for in that country:—Held, that he must be presumed to be dead, and probate was granted of her will as if she had died a widow. How, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 53; 27 L. J., P. 37; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 366.

T. was not heard of from December, 1846. More than seven years afterwards, namely, in September, 1854, he would, if alive, have become entitled, by the death of a relative, to a share in her residuary personal estate. This share had, in his absence, been paid into the account of the accountant-general of the court of chancery, who, it was stated, was prepared to pay it to T.'s administrator. He had no other property in this country. The court declined to make a general grant of administration to his brother, on the ground that he must be presumed to have died before the death of his relative, but made a grant limited to substantiate proceedings to the court of chancery. Turner, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 476; 33 L. J., P. 180; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 708. See also Peck, In goods of, post, col. 496.

Grant to Nominee of Parties interested.]—On a motion for presumption of death of an intestate, the court will also grant administration to a nominee of all parties without requiring a special motion for that purpose. Curling, In goods of, 11 R. 585.

Death of Husband of deceased Intestate—Refusal.] — Where a married woman died intestate in March, 1889, without issue or parent, having lost all trace of her husband since July, 1873, and application was made to the court by her natural and lawful sister and one of her next of kin, for leave to presume the death of the husband of the said deceased intestate:—Held, that it was contrary to the practice of the court to presume the death of a person other than the person whose estate is in question, and refused the application. Semble, the proper course would have been to cite the husband by advertisement. Clark, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 6; 15 P. D. 10; 61 L. T. 653; 38 W. R. 448.

Affidavit supporting Application for Administration.]—It is not necessary, in a case of administration on presumption of death, in an affidavit for administration, to negative the existence of the persons who would, if alive, have prior interests to the applicant at the time of the death of the deceased, if the applicant is unable to do so. It is enough to negative their existence at the time of swearing. Sloane, In goods of, 11 L. T. 149.

Foreign Grant followed.] —Where a foreign court of competent jurisdiction had made a grant of administration on the presumption of the death of the intestate:—Held, that the grant might be accepted by the court of probate as sufficient proof of the death without requiring it to be proved by independent evidence. Spenceley, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 133; [1892] P. 255.

5. Next of Kin.

Generally.]—The consent of the next of kin, who are minors, and some of them of tender years, is not sufficient to justify the court in making a joint grant of administration to the widow and one of the other next of kin, unless there are special circumstances for departing from the general practice of the court. Newbold, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 14; L. R. 1 P. 285; 15 L. T. 248; 15 W. R. 262.

On sufficient grounds shewn, the court will depart from the general practice of the registry by which a party originally entitled in distribution is preferred in making a grant de bonis non to a party having a derivative interest, e.g. the personal representative of the next of kin, and will make the grant to the latter. Carr, In goods of, L. R. 1 P. 291; 16 L. T. 181; 15 W. R. 718.

The next of kin of an intestate has by law the same title to administration as has the widow, though, under ordinary circumstances, the practice is to make the grant to the widow. Corser, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 170.

A person who is entitled to administration as next of kin cannot take the grant as a creditor. Ib.

The next of kin is entitled to administration of the personal estate on the oath that the deceased died intestate, except as to real estate. Parkins, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 465; 29 L. J., P. 47; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1270.

To Father with Will annexed where no clear Disposition of Residue.]—The testator bequeathed to his father "a life interest, or until he shall marry again, of one-third of such money, stocks, funds or other securities, not hereinafter specially devised, as I may die possessed of;" and he gave the other two-thirds of his capital among such of his brothers and sisters as should attain the age of twenty-one. He also directed that, on the death or second marriage of his father, the one-third part, and the share of his mother's estate which would then belong to him, should be divided among his brothers and sisters. There was no specific gift of the residue; both the executors named in the will renounced probate. The court made a grant to the father of the deceased, as next of kin, of letters of administration with the will annexed, with a memorandum to the effect that the will contained no clear disposition of the residue. Aston, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 77; 6 P. D. 203; 30 W. R. 92; 45 J. P. 816; 46 J. P. 104.

To Children.] — The court granted administration to the natural and lawful child of the deceased, she having been born six months after the marriage of her parents. Turnock v. Turnock, 36 L. J., P. 85; 16 L. T. 611.

P. bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to be equally disposed of between five of his children whom he named. One of those children died in his lifetime:—Held, that the five children took as tenants in common, and the share of the deceased child therefore lapsed to the undisposed residue, and the court granted administration with the will and codicil annexed to B., son of the deceased, not as legatee, but as entitled as one of his next of kin to part of the undisposed residue. Pile, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 628; 31 L. J., P. 40; 7 L. T. 194.

—— Widow Abroad in Lunatic Asylum not cited.]—The widow of a deceased intestate being absent in the colonies, and confined in a lunatic asylum, the court allowed the grant of administration to go to one of the children without citing her. Jameson, In goods of, 46 J. P. 40.

—— Divorced Wife not cited.]—Administration of the estate of a deceased intestate whose marriage had been dissolved by the high court of judicature in Bombay, granted to his next of kin without citing the divorced wife. Nares, In goods of, 57 L. J., P. 19; 13 P. D. 35; 58 L. T. 529; 36 W. R. 528; 52 J. P. 231.

Son preferred to Father of Intestate.]—If there be grandfather, father, and son, and the father dies intestate, the son shall have the administration, and not the grandfather. Crooke v. Watt, 2 Vern. 125.

Grandmother preferred to Aunt of Intestate.]—One dies intestate, leaving an aunt and a grandmother his next of kin; the grandmother is nearer of kin than the aunt, and is entitled to administration. Blackborough v. Davis, 1 P. Wms. 41.

Children of First Wife preferred to Second Wife.]—A. died intestate, leaving her husband and children by him surviving. Her husband afterwards married B., and upon his dying intestate, leaving B. and children by both wives him surviving, administration of his effects was granted to a creditor, the widow and children having been duly cited, but not appearing. Afterwards a sum of money, to which A., at the time of her death, was entitled in reversion, became payable to her estate, and the creditor renouncing his right to administration of A.'s estate, B. applied that it might be granted to her:—Held, that B. had no right to the grant, as she was the representative neither of her husband nor of A., but that on the renunciation of the creditor, the representative of B.'s husband, the children of A. were entitled to the grant. Bell, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 288; 29 L. J., P. 162; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 473; 7 W. R. 349.

When Testator of Unsound Mind.]—A person made a will, whilst of unsound mind, in favour of a charitable institution. The only party interested to support it being cited to propound it, or shew cause why it should not be treated as void, did not appear. On an affidavit of the medical attendant of the deceased, as to his testamentary incapacity, administration was granted to one of his next of kin, as in an intestacy. Perry v. Dyke, 1 Sw. & Tr. 12; 27 L. J., P. 7; 6 W. R. 275.

Death of Husband and Wife—No Evidence as to which died first.]—W. perished with his wife and only child, an infant, in the Cawnpore massacre, leaving no will. There being no evidence as to survivorship, the court granted administration of his personal estate, as having died a widower, to his mother as his next of kin. The administrator's oath, instead of being in the usual form, may state that there is no reason to believe that the wife survived the husband. Wainwright, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 257; 28 L. J., P. 2.

G., with his wife and three children, perished in a shipwreck. There being no evidence as to survivorship, and no will, the court granted administration of his estate as having died a widower to the maternal grandfather of the surviving children, and directed that the administrator's oath, instead of being in the usual form, should state that there was no reason for believing that the wife had survived her husband. Grinstead, In goods of, 21 L. T. 731.

When husband and wife die by the same calamity, and there is no evidence that the one survived the other, administration of their personal estate will be granted to their respective next of kin. Wheeler, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 40.

When a testator made a will appointing a sole executrix and residuary legatee, and next day killed his wife and committed suicide when (as found by a coroner's jury) in a state of insanity, and the residuary legatee had been cited and had not appeared, the court refused to grant letters of administration with an earlier will annexed until the next of kin of the residuary legatee had been cited. Thomas v. Payne, 31 L. T. 553; 23 W. R. 71.

A husband and wife executed identical wills, each appointing the other universal legatee and sole executor, and substituting executors in case of the other dying first. They started together upon a voyage in the same ship, which was supposed to have been lost at sea with all on board. There was no evidence that either of them survived the other:—Held, that a grant of administration with the will annexed of the estate of each, as in case of an intestacy, might be made to one of the next of kin of each. Alston, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 92; [1892] P. 142; 66 L. T. 591.

No Evidence as to whether Son or Father died first.]—Where the presumption of A.'s death arose from the fact that he had not been heard of for seven years, and there was no evidence that he was ever married or had left a will, and his father died before the expiration of the seven years, the court, on account of the impossibility of ascertaining whether or not A. had survived his father, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, granted administration to the next of kin of A., without requiring administration to be taken out to his father. Astell, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 38.

A bachelor, who had gone to Australia, had not been heard of for seven years. His father died intestate about two years and five months before the expiration of the seven years. No personal representation had been taken out to the father. It being uncertain whether he died before or after his father, the court granted administration of his effects to his sister. Peck, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 507.

S. died on the 7th August, 1858, a bachelor and intestate, leaving his mother and sister surviving him. His father left England in 1840, and had not been heard of since the receipt of a letter dated the 9th July, 1854; but there was no evidence on which the court could presume that the father was not alive on the 7th August, 1858, and the grant of administration to the estate was accordingly made to the mother, under the power given by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73. Smith, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 508; 31 L. J., P. 182; 7 L. T. 193; 10 W. R. 586.

Death of Testator and Legatee at Same Time.]—When the testator and his residuary legatee have been drowned at the same time and in the same ship, the legacy is extinguished, and the grant will be made as in case of an intestacy. Carmichael, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 224; 32 L. J., P. 70; 11 W. R. 462.

Representative of Next of Kin or Party entitled in Distribution—General Rule—Exception.]—A. having died intestate, leaving his sister his sole next of kin, and several nephews and nieces entitled in distribution, his sister took out letters of administration to his estate, and died, leaving two daughters, whom she appointed executrixes of her will, one of whom having proved that will the court granted to her letters of administration de bonis non of the goods of A. The general rule is, that a party originally entitled in distribution is preferred in making a grant de bonis non to a party having a derivative interest; but the court has a discretion in the matter, and will, in a proper case, make a grant to the party having the derivative interest, provided all the persons entitled in distribution have been cited, or shall by appearance or consent waive citations. Johnson, In goods of, 7 L. R., Ir. 1.

To Mother on Father renouncing.]—One died intestate, unmarried and without issue, leaving his father and mother surviving him. His assets consisted mainly of the amount of a promissory note, which was payable by instalments, which the intestate had, by letters to his mother and his solicitors, directed the latter to hand over to his mother. Several of the instalments had been paid to her before the intestate's death. The court, acting under the 78th section of the Probate Act, 1857 (which corresponds with the 73rd section of the English act), and on the renunciation of the intestate's father, granted administration to the mother. Ferguson, In goods of, 7 L. R., Ir. 176.

To Sister when Mother is of Great Age.]—A spinster died intestate, leaving a mother and a sister. The former was seventy-nine years old, and in very precarious health, and it was thought that she could not be informed of her daughter's death without endangering her life. The court, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, granted letters of administration to the sister for the use and benefit of her mother. Clarke, In goods of, 46 L. J., P. 16; 25 W. R. 82.

To Father-in-law for Benefit of Son.] — A widower died intestate; his only son, the sole person entitled in distribution, was resident in Australia. A legal representative being required immediately for the preservation of the property, administration for the use and benefit of the son was granted to his father-in-law. Jones, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 13; 27 L. J., P. 17; 6 W. R. 276.

Persons equally entitled—Selection.]—In a contest among next of kin prima facie equally entitled to administer to the estate of a deceased relative, the choice of the fittest person should be made on summons before one of the registrars, according to the practice in the probate division, and parties improperly brought into court on motion will be entitled to their costs. John, In goods of, 58 L. T. 683; 52 J. P. 232.

Joint Grant to Next of Kin and another Person entitled in Distribution—Consent.]—A widow died intestate leaving a brother and nine nephews and nieces, the only persons entitled in distribution. Three of her nephews and nieces were in Australia, but the other six consenting, the court made a grant of administration to the brother and one of the nephews under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73. Walsh or Wash, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 123; [1892] P. 230; 67 L. T. 355.

—— All Next of Kin—Security.]—An intestate died leaving a nephew and three nieces her sole next of kin. The nieces executed a power of attorney to their mother to enable a joint grant to be made to the nephew and mother. The court refused to make the joint grant, but under the special circumstances made a joint grant to the four next of kin upon their entering into a bond for double the amount of the gross assets, and on giving justifying security in a separate bond for 200*l*. M'Crossan, In goods of, 29 L. R., Ir. 412.

Property in England and America—Will disposing of American Estate only.]—M. died possessed of property in England and America, leaving a will dealing with her American estate only, which was duly proved by her executors in the American court; but she died intestate as to her English estate:—The court granted administration of the property in this country to her sole next of kin. Mann, In goods of, 60 L. J., P. 95; [1891] P. 293; 40 W. R. 144.

When not to Next of Kin—Special Reason Necessary.]—The court refused to grant administration jointly to the widow and son, no special reason being given for the application, and some of the next of kin being of an age at which they were incapable of consenting to such a grant. Newbold, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 14; L. R. 1 P. 285; 15 L. T. 248; 15 W. R. 262.

A person died intestate leaving an aged uncle and aunt the only persons entitled to distribution; at their desire, administration was granted for their use and benefit to their son on the sureties justifying. Roberts, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 64; 6 W. R. 460.

Administration with the will annexed granted to the nominees of the residuary legatee, who was a married woman, without notice to her husband, the residue being settled to her separate use and at her absolute disposal. Pine, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 95; L. R. 1 P. 388; 17 L. T. 31.

—— When Next of Kin Abroad.]—A person was supposed to have made a will, appointing his cousin his executor, but at his death it could not be found. His brother, the sole next of kin, had been absent in Australia for forty years, and a representative was urgently needed to carry on the business to collect the debts, and to represent the deceased in a chancery suit. The court made a grant ad colligenda to his cousin for the use and benefit of the next of kin, with special directions to make certain payments. Tepper, In goods of, 25 L. T. 853.

Where the estate of an intestate was perishable, and the next of kin were in Australia, the court granted limited administration for the use and benefit of the next of kin, under s. 73. Young, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 80; 15 L. T. 446.

A person died in England intestate leaving two children the only persons entitled to her effects, who were resident in Georgia. She left money in the funds and in a savings bank, a small sum due to her, and a little furniture. The court refused to make a grant to her nephew, for the use and benefit of her children, although communication with her children from England was cut off by reason of the blockade of the southern ports of the United States, on the ground that the property was not perishable, and that there were no special circumstances to justify the court in departing from the ordinary practice. White, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 457; 31 L. J., P. 161; 6 L. T. 162; 10 W. R. 430.

The court granted administration to the sister of a deceased intestate, the mother being willing to renounce, and her husband being in Australia. Llanwarne, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 25; L. R. 1 P. 306; 15 L. T. 193.

C. was possessed of a freehold estate, which he occupied and farmed himself; at his death his only next of kin was in New Zealand. The court, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, granted administration of the personal estate to his sister for the use and benefit of such next of kin, and limited until the next of kin should apply for and obtain administration of the goods of the deceased. Cholwill, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 75; L. R. 1 P. 192; 14 L. T. 338.

—— Where Next of Kin of Unsound Mind.]—A person died intestate, leaving her only sister solely entitled in distribution, a lunatic, and without any committee of her estate or person. Administration for the use and benefit of the sister during her lunacy was granted to the step-mother, who was co-executor and co-trustee with the deceased of the father's will, and beneficially interested under it. Burrell, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 46; 6 W. R. 461.

Renunciation by.]—The court refused to grant administration to a person not having any interest in the estate merely because the next of kin had agreed to renounce in his favour. Blake, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 91; 14 L. T. 769; 14 W. R. 1021.

Where Intestate Illegitimate.]—A bastard dies intestate without wife or issue, and leaving a personal estate; the king is entitled, and the ordinary of course grants administration to the patentee of the crown. Jones v. Goodchild, 3 P. Wms. 33.

6. Cum testamento annexo.

In General.]—When a codicil contained dispositions independently of the will, and also referred to the will, which, however, could not be found, the court granted administration with the codicil annexed. Greig, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 113; L. R. 1 P. 72; 13 L. T. 681; 14 W. R. 349.

A legatee was erroneously described as the sister of the deceased, being her daughter; the court, on being satisfied that it was a mistake, allowed the grant, cum testamento annexo, to pass to such legatee. Hooper, In goods of, 13 L. T. 445; 14 W. R. 210.

A person having had a will prepared, in which an annuity (the amount being left in blank) was given to his wife, and the residue to his children, and the names of executors were not filled in, at the instigation of those about him, executed the same in its unfinished state, at the same time remarking, that it would be no good until the blanks were supplied:—Held, that the court could not, on affidavit, say the deceased did not execute the will animo disponendi, and it must be admitted to probate, but that, as there was an uncertainty as to the residuary bequest, the right of the widow, under 21 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 3, would prevail, and administration with the will annexed must be granted to her. Pool, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 97; 14 L. T. 859; 14 W. R. 976.

An administrator with the will annexed who has intermeddled with the estate cannot be compelled to take a grant with a later will annexed upon the revocation of the original administration. Davis, In goods of, 29 L. J., P. 72.

C. executed a will in which she appointed an executor who subsequently became bankrupt, and left this country for Australia. The property being small, on the consent of the next of kin the court granted administration with the will annexed to one of the parties interested under it, by virtue of the authority given by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73. Cooper, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 8; L. R. 2 P. 21; 21 L. T. 590.

Upon application by the assignee of the freehold and pure personal estate of a testator for a grant of administration, limited to certain leaseholds held by the testator upon trust for the said assignee:—Held, that it was safer in such cases that the will should be annexed to the grant. Butler, In goods of, 67 L. J., P. 15; [1898] P. 9; 77 L. T. 376.

Colonial Grant—Substitution of Executors—Administrator-General.]—A testator domiciled in British Guiana by his will appointed two executors—one resident in the colony, the other in England—with power of substitution in the event of either or both being unable or unwilling to act. The executor resident in the colony administered the estate on his own behalf and on behalf of the other executor until he returned to this country to reside here permanently. By the law of the colony an executor under such circumstances had the right to substitute as executor the administrator-general of the colony, who thereupon became possessed of all the powers necessary for the administration of the estate. This substitution had been effected by the executor before leaving the colony, and there being estate in this country which required a personal representative here, the court made a grant of administration with the will annexed to persons nominated as his attorneys by the administrator-general until such time as the administrator-general or the executor resident in this country who had not renounced should apply, and without requiring justifying security. Black, In goods of, 57 L. J., P. 20; 13 P. D. 5; 36 W. R. 400.

—— Attorney of Executor—Death of Executor—Administration de bonis non.]—A. obtained a grant of administration with a foreign will annexed as the attorney in England of B., the executor of C., the testatrix. After B.'s death a similar grant was made to D. as the attorney in England of A.'s executors:—Held, that the chain of representation was not broken by the grant of administration to the attorney of the original testatrix, and that D. was entitled to deal with the property of C. in this country without a grant of administration de bonis non. Del Carmen Vea Murguia, In goods of, 53 L. J., P. 47; 9 P. D. 236; 32 W. R. 799; 48 J. P. 711.

—— Interest—Sister or Widow.]—In a contest for administration with the will annexed the court preferred the sister of the testator to the widow, as it appeared that the sister, as a legatee, had the larger interest in the property to be distributed. Homan, In goods of, 52 L. J., P. 94; 9 P. D. 61; 31 W. R. 955.

7. Creditors.

Generally—In what Cases a Grant will be made.]—Letters of administration were granted to an assignee of a deceased tradesman, limited to the book debts specified in the deed of assignment. Dixson, In goods of, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 854.

G. being a married woman, and having an interest under her father's will expectant on the death of his widow, joined with her husband in 1841 in executing a mortgage of such interest to B., to secure a running account. G. died in 1851, and her husband in 1853, neither possessed of any other property. On the death of her father's widow, a representative to G. was required to release the trustees. B.'s debt being larger than the amount of G.'s interest under the will, the court granted administration of the goods of G. to B. Godfrey, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 133 ; 4 L. T. 895 ; 9 W. R. 499.

Administration with the will annexed granted to a person as a creditor for funeral expenses, who had undertaken the funeral of the deceased, at the request of the universal legatee named in the will, upon his giving justifying security. Newcombe v. Beloe, 36 L. J., P. 37 ; L. R. 1 P. 314 ; 16 L. T. 33.

The court will not grant administration to an undertaker as a creditor for funeral expenses, unless informed of the circumstances under which the expenses were incurred, and by whose authority the applicant undertook the funeral. Ib.

A person died intestate and insolvent, leaving fifteen persons entitled in distribution, of whom one was in New Zealand. The estate chiefly consisted of the goodwills of public-houses, the full value of which could not be realised save by an immediate sale. Under the circumstances, and all the parties in England consenting, the court granted administration to a creditor, notwithstanding that, to avoid delay, the party in New Zealand had not been cited. Durham, In goods of, 24 L. T. 73 ; 19 W. R. 391.

An intestate died owing debts exceeding in value his personal estate and effects. Gifts of money had been made to him during his life by C., a relative of his deceased wife, to enable him to keep up his establishment, and after his death his debts were paid by C. There were only two next of kin and persons entitled in distribution, and of these one renounced, and the other was a lunatic, and his next of kin renounced on his behalf. The court granted administration of the intestate's estate and effects to C. Bateman, In goods of, 40 L. J., P. 24 ; L. R. 2 P. 242 ; 24 L. T. 399 ; 19 W. R. 759.

Where an executrix who was also universal legatee disappeared, taking the will with her, the court refused to grant administration, with the substance of the will annexed, to a creditor, until the executrix had been first formally cited by advertisement. Wormington, In goods of, 16 L. T. 208.

A husband having died intestate and insolvent, and his widow and next of kin having consented to renounce their prior rights to administration, the court refused to grant administration to a nominee of the deceased's principal creditors, their nominee being a stranger not personally interested in the assets. Prosser, In goods of, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 37.

Semble, in such a case the practice is for one of the creditors to obtain a grant of administration, and then to appoint their nominee to act as attorney. Ib.

J. W., entitled to the property of his wife, E. W., who predeceased him, became indebted to the estate of J. P. The estate of E. W. afterwards became entitled to a share in the residuary estate of J. P. The executrix of J. W. refused to take out letters of administration to E. W.'s estate, and a grant was necessary to enable the creditors of J. W. to obtain E. W.'s share of the residuary estate in satisfaction of their debt :—The court granted (under s. 73 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77) administration of the estate of E. W. to a creditor of J. W. Wensley, In goods of, 51 L. J., P. 21 ; 7 P. D. 13 ; 30 W. R. 431 ; 46 J. P. 264.

When a person, being the sole party interested in, and entitled to represent, the estate of a deceased party, died without having taken out a grant to such person, and his personal representative filed a renunciation and a consent to the grant being made to a creditor of the party so originally interested and entitled to the grant, the court made the grant to such creditor under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73. Fraser, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 63 ; L. R. 1 P. 327 ; 16 L. T. 154.

In creditors' suit against heir, plaintiff allowed to take out administration to deceased debtor, who died intestate, and without personal estate. Long v. Smith, 2 Moll. 340. But see Johnson v. Hamilton, Ib., n.

—— To Nominee of Creditor.]—An intestate was the holder of shares in a company on which a call was made after his death :—The court made a grant of administration to the nominee of the company as a creditor of the estate of the deceased. Tomlinson v. Gilby, 54 L. J., P. 80 ; 33 W. R. 800 ; 49 J. P. 632.

The court, upon the application of a creditor who had obtained a grant of letters of administration with the will annexed to the personal estate and effects of his deceased mortgagor, being satisfied that there were special circumstances bringing the case within s. 73 of the Probate Act, and upon affidavit that the estate was insolvent, rescinded such grant and made a fresh grant in favour of a nominee of the creditor, such nominee to be approved by the registrar. Brown, In goods of, 59 L. T. 523.

B., a pauper lunatic chargeable to the guardians of the Kingston Union, died, a spinster and without parents, leaving three brothers and one sister her surviving, all of whom renounced their right to administration. One other brother, who had gone to America in 1871, but who had not been heard of since 1883, was cited by advertisement, under order of the court. The court, upon the application of the guardians, made a grant of administration to the clerk to the board as their nominee. Byrne, In goods of, 52 J. P. 281. See also Cases post, col. 525.

—— Poor Law Guardians—Deceased Pauper—Expense of Maintenance.]—The deceased had, for over six years prior to her death, been supported as a pauper lunatic at the county lunatic asylum. During the whole of this period she was, in fact, entitled to an annuity of 24*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*, payable by the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt. This fact only came to the knowledge of the guardians at the time of her death, or shortly thereafter :—Held, that the guardians were creditors of the deceased within the provisions of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, ss. 16, 17, and, as such, entitled to administration of her estate. Lambeth Guardians v. Bradshaw, 57 L. T. 86 ; 50 J. P. 472.

An intestate died having been in receipt of outdoor relief for twelve months and more before his death. He was then found to be possessed of certain property. Upon the application of the guardians the court granted administration to their nominee as creditors for the amount of outdoor relief afforded to the deceased during the last twelve months of his life. M'Knight, In goods of, 59 J. P. 135. See also Cases post, col. 512.

On Death of Executrix de son tort.]—An executrix who, without having taken probate, had intermeddled in the estate of her testator, died possessed of property belonging to him:—Held, after citation of her next of kin and their non-appearance, that the representative of the testator was entitled as a creditor to a general grant of letters of administration of her estate. Mellor, In goods of, or Mellor v. Dyson, 52 L. J., P. 62; 8 P. D. 108; 31 W. R. 476; 47 J. P. 280.

Creditor under a Verbal Promise — Claim sounding in Damages.]—Where an applicant for administration claimed the whole estate of an intestate (subject only to the payment of debts, &c.) under a verbal promise made by the intestate, and acted upon by the applicant, that, if the latter would go and live with the deceased and take care of him, he would leave her all his property, and where, through alleged improper overtures, the applicant had ceased to live with the deceased:—Held, that the applicant's claim was not a liquidated debt, but was a claim sounding in damages, and that the applicant must first establish her claim and its amount before she could obtain a grant of administration as a creditor. Clook, In goods of, 62 L. T. 607. See S. C. in C. A., 15 P. D. 132; 63 L. T. 536.

Priority of Application.]—An intestate died by his own hand, after murdering his wife and child, and all three persons were buried at the expense of the parish. A creditor having applied for administration, the guardians of the parish, supported by three other creditors, opposed, and the guardians asked for a grant to their nominee:—Held, that the fact of the guardians having had the duty of burial cast upon them gave them no prior right to administration, and that the creditor who had first applied to the court was entitled to the grant, subject to the usual conditions. Weare, In goods of, 66 L. T. 860; 56 J. P. 394.

In an insolvent estate the court made a grant to the creditor for the largest amount, in preference to one who claimed for a much smaller sum, but who was a prior applicant. Smith, In goods of, 67 L. T. 503.

Where Children of Intestate are Minors.]—A creditor was appointed guardian to minors (the only children of P.), who had no known relations, for the purpose of taking out administration to the estate of P., who had died intestate and insolvent. Peck, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 141; 27 L. J., P. 106; 6 W. R. 793.

Absence of Next of Kin.]—Where the next of kin of an intestate were two nephews, who could not be traced, nor anything be ascertained as to them, the court granted administration to a creditor, under s. 73, by reason of the "special circumstances" of the case. Currie, In goods of, 57 J. P. 745.

Surety who has paid Debt.]—A surety who, after the death of the principal, pays off the debt, is, in case of intestacy, entitled to administration as a creditor. Williams v. Jukes, 34 L. J., P. 60.

Granted to one Creditor although Proceedings commenced by another.]—Administration may be granted to one creditor though the proceedings for obtaining administration may have been initiated by another creditor, the latter being allowed such costs as were reasonably incurred by him before the former took up the application. Andrews v. Murphy, 4 Sw. & Tr. 198; 30 L. J., P. 37.

Right of Action Suspended.]—The rule that when a creditor is appointed executor by his debtor his right of action is suspended, because he is presumed to have retained his debt, and is the person both to pay and receive, applies only when the executor has received assets. Lowe v. Peskett, 16 C. B. 500; 24 L. J., C. P. 196; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1049; 3 W. R. 481.

The rule does not apply where the debt arises on a negotiable instrument which has been legally transferred by the executor. Ib.

Statute of Limitations.]—A creditor was allowed to cite the next of kin to accept administration, or shew cause why it should not be granted to the applicant, although his right of action was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Coombs, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 78; L. R. 1 P. 193; 14 L. T. 635; 14 W. R. 975.

Bond conditioned to administer Estate ratably.]—And on their not appearing he is entitled to the grant, but the bond must contain a condition that he distribute the assets ratably amongst all the creditors. Coombs v. Coombs, 36 L. J., P. 21; L. R. 1 P. 288; 15 W. R. 286.

When administration has been granted to a creditor, and no application was made at the time the grant issued that the administrator should pay the debts ratably, the court will not revoke such grant subsequently in order to compel such administrator to give up his right to retain assets sufficient to repay himself his own debt in full. Brackenbury, In goods of, 46 L. J., P. 42; 2 P. D. 272; 36 L. T. 744; 25 W. R. 698.

For the future, a creditor on taking out administration must, in all cases, if required by the court, enter into a bond conditioned to administer the estate ratably amongst the creditors of the deceased. Ib.

—— And giving Security.]—The next of kin having renounced, the court granted administration of the personal estate and effects of an insolvent intestate to a stranger nominated by the bulk of the creditors, in preference to a particular creditor whose debt was small, but required the nominee to give justifying security and to enter into a bond to pay the debts pro ratâ. Smithson, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 77; 15 L. T. 296.

A testator by his will appointed A. and B. executors and trustees, and directed them to allow his wife to receive the rents and profits of his estate, and to carry on his business of a tailor and draper for the term of her natural life, if she should so long remain his widow. The executors declined the trusts and duly renounced probate, and administration with the will annexed was granted to the widow, who carried on the business down to the time of her death, in January, 1874. She did not marry again, and she died insolvent and intestate. With the exception of a policy of insurance for a small amount, the whole of the testator's property was employed by the widow in carrying on the business, and while she did so C. supplied her with goods in the way of the trade of a tailor to the amount of 399*l*. The debt remained unpaid at her death, and C. held no security for any part of it. The parties interested under the will having been cited, and there being no opposition to the motion, the court decreed administration, with the will annexed, of the unadministered effects of the testator to C. as an equitable creditor of the estate, but required, as conditions to his obtaining the grant, that he should in the first place, as a legal creditor of the widow, take out administration to her estate, and also give justifying security. Fairlamb or Fairland v. Percy, Percy, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 11; L. R. 3 P. 217; 32 L. T. 405; 23 W. R. 597.

Limited to part of Assets.]—The practice of the court of probate is to refuse to make a grant to a creditor of administration limited to part of the estate of the deceased. Carroll, In goods of, 31 L. R., Ir. 388.

A creditor insured the life of his debtor, but the policy having by mistake been made payable to the representatives of the debtor, the court granted administration limited to the policy. Patteson v. Hunter, 30 L. J., P. 272.

Upon a motion by a creditor for a limited grant of administration, the court, while thinking that in this particular case it might be a convenient course to make a limited grant to the creditor, declined to depart from the practice in such cases, which requires that a creditor who applies for administration shall take a general grant. Sheather, In goods of, 71 L. T. 848.

Insolvent Estate.]—The assets being insufficient to pay an intestate's debts and being in the hands of an executor de son tort, who was sued by the creditors, the court granted administration to one creditor, with the consent of the others, he undertaking to administer the assets ratably. Willett, In goods of, 21 L. R., Ir. 377.

Insolvency of Estate doubtful.]—The court will not grant administration with the will annexed to a creditor by reason of the insolvency of the estate of the deceased, if the widow and residuary legatee are willing to take it; much less will it do so if the insolvency is disputed. Hawke v. Wedderburne, 37 L. J., P. 33; L. R. 1 P. 594; 18 L. T. 336; 16 W. R. 712.

When there was a doubt as to the solvency of the estate of an intestate, and the sole next of kin was a woman in a low position of life and alleged to be of drunken and dissolute habits:—Held, that there were special circumstances to justify a grant of administration to a creditor under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73. Farrands, In goods of, 1 P. D. 439; 24 W. R. 1018.

Husband's Rights as Creditor.]—A husband may take a grant with the will annexed, as creditor, although he has signed a renunciation executed by his wife as residuary legatee. Biggs, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 79; L. R. 1 P. 595.

A female having taken administration to an estate as a creditor, married and died. Under the administration she got in a considerable portion of the estate and paid some of the debts, but did not set apart any particular fund in payment of her own debt:—Held, that the husband was not entitled in his own right as a creditor, but only as the representative of his wife, to take administration of the unadministered effects of the deceased. Risdon, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 40; L. R. 1 P. 637; 20 L. T. 330; 17 W. R. 576.

Subsequent Insolvency of Creditor.]—A. died intestate and letters of administration of his personal estate and effects were granted to B., a creditor. B. was subsequently adjudicated a bankrupt, and died leaving part of A.'s estate unadministered. The trustee in bankruptcy of B.'s estate assigned to C., who was also a creditor of B.'s, the debts due from A.'s estate and securities. The court made a grant de bonis non to C., limited to B.'s interest in A.'s estate. Burdett, In goods of, 45 L. J., P. 71; 1 P. D. 427; 34 L. T. 855.

Person buying up Debt after Death of Intestate.]—A person who has bought up a debt after the death of the intestate is not entitled to administration as a creditor; and, therefore, where a bill of exchange accepted by an intestate had been indorsed after his decease, the court refused to grant a citation to the next of kin to accept or refuse administration at the instance of the indorsee. Galbraith, In goods of, 3 L. R., Ir. 169.

Ad colligenda bona.]—The court, under special circumstances, made a grant to a creditor ad colligenda bona, limited to collect the personal estate of the deceased, to give receipts for his debts on the payment of the same, and to renew the lease of his business premises which would expire before a general grant could be made:—The court refused to include in the grant a power to dispose of the lease and goodwill of the business, or a power to carry on the business. Clarkington, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 380; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 84; 7 L. T. 218; 10 W. R. 124.

When a foreigner dies intestate in this country in itinere, without any relative or agent here resident, the custody of his property belongs to the crown; but under special circumstances, and by aid of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, the court will without a formal notice to the Queen's proctor, grant administration to a responsible person limited ad colligenda bona defuncti. Wyckoff, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 20; 32 L. J., P. 214; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 84; 7 L. T. 565; 11 W. R. 218.

The widow and next of kin in this country renounced administration, and the estate, which was insolvent, was liable to depreciation if the property (timber) was not at once sold. The court, under the circumstances, made a grant ad colligenda bona to a creditor, the money realised by the sale of the timber (after deduction for wages and charges) and collection of debts to be paid into the registry, and the next of kin abroad to be at once cited with a view to the applicant taking a creditor's grant. Stewart, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 39; L. R. 1 P. 727; 20 L. T. 279.

A Prussian subject resident in this country died a bachelor and intestate, without any known relations. He carried on the business of a schoolmaster, and an offer was made for the purchase of the goodwill of the school if possession was given forthwith. The court, in these circumstances, made a grant ad colligenda bona to a creditor, with power to dispose of the goodwill of the school, but directed that the administrator should bring into the registry the proceeds of the sale after deduction of expenses and his taxed costs of obtaining the administration. Schwerdtfeger, In goods of, 45 L. J., P. 46; 1 P. D. 424; 34 L. T. 72; 24 W. R. 298.

The court made a grant ad colligenda bona in favour of a creditor, on affidavit that the deponent was informed and verily believed that the deceased died a widow, without any known relatives, and intestate. Ashley, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 72; 15 P. D. 120.

Where a creditor applied for letters of administration without citing the next of kin, who resided at a distance and was of advanced age, the court refused to make the grant passing over the next of kin, but made a grant ad colligenda to the creditor. Malkin, In goods of, 6 R. 568; 70 L. T. 811.

Administrator out of the Jurisdiction.]—An assignee in bankruptcy of an administrator who is out of the jurisdiction is a creditor within the meaning of 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, s. 1, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 18, and as such may obtain administration de bonis non of the intestate, limited to the fund to which the assignee is entitled. Hammond, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 70, 73; 6 P. D. 104; 44 L. T. 649; 29 W. R. 807; 45 J. P. 619.

Application by a Creditor—Necessary Affidavits].—An application by a creditor for a grant of administration of the estate of a deceased intestate, in default of appearance by the next of kin, must be accompanied by an affidavit of the amount and nature of his debt, and of the date when it occurred. Von Desen, In goods of, 43 L. T. 532.

When a deceased intestate's next of kin are abroad, or have no known address, and fail to appear to a citation, by advertisement, an affidavit that service of the citation has been attempted and failed, and that the deceased's next of kin have no known agent in England, is requisite. Ib.

Before administration to a creditor will be granted, an affidavit of the amount of the personal estate of the deceased must be filed. Briggs v. Roope, 29 L. J., P. 96.

Affidavits on which application is made for a grant of letters to a creditor should state that all persons entitled in distribution of the effects of the deceased have been cited. Brown v. Wildman, 28 L. J., P. 54.

The court will not grant administration to a creditor without an affidavit of the date when the debt became due. Rawlinson v. Burnell, 3 Sw. & Tr. 479; 33 L. J., P. 123.

—— Citation.] — Where administration is applied for by the creditor of a person who dies intestate without any known relation, a citation, calling upon the next of kin, if any, and all persons having interest in the estate of the deceased, should be issued, and an abstract of it advertised twice, with an interval of a fortnight, notice also being given to the Queen's proctor. After the lapse of thirty days from the last advertisement, if there is no appearance, and the Queen's proctor declines to interfere, administration will be granted to a creditor. Brown, In goods of, 28 L. J., P. 126.

Where one of the next of kin of a deceased was a minor, and was resident, in service, in Derbyshire, and her mother, her natural guardian, resided in Middlesex, the court granted administration to a creditor, without requiring the citation to be served on the minor in the presence of her mother; a copy of it, sent by post, having been received by the minor. Lainson v. Naylor, 2 Sw. & Tr. 7; 29 L. J., P. 126; 2 L. T. 391; 8 W. R. 451.

The court declined to make a grant de bonis non with the will annexed to a creditor, without citing the residuary legatees named in the will who were resident in Australia. Fairweather, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 588; 6 L. T. 788; 10 W. R. 862.

Where an application is made for a grant to the secretary of an association, on the ground that the deceased was indebted to the association, the court ought to have such information of the constitution of the association as would shew that the secretary can be treated as a creditor. Ib.

An intestate died insolvent, and the only assets were a fund in chancery which bore no interest, while two principal debts which exceeded it in amount bore interest at the rate of 5*l.* per cent.; the court, notwithstanding, declined to grant administration to a creditor until the next of kin, who were in India, had been cited. Gerrard, In goods of, 16 L. T. 267.

The sole executrix and universal legatee of a deceased testator was his widow. She was a lunatic, and a guardian had been appointed in the chancery division to receive certain rents, &c., to which she was entitled. A creditor of the deceased testator applied for a grant of administration with the will annexed, and served a citation on the guardian, who refused to allow personal service on the lunatic:—Held, that a grant might be made to the creditor under the 73rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, without requiring the lunatic to be personally served. Atherton, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 134; [1892] P. 104; 66 L. T. 267.

8. Guardians.

Of Minors.]—A. left surviving him a widow and two minor children. The widow deserted her children to lead an immoral life; the court passed her over, and granted administration to the guardian of the minor children. Creed, In goods of, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 590.

The guardian of a minor of the whole blood is entitled in preference to the half blood. Stratton v. Linton, 31 L. J., P. 48.

The court granted administration to the guardian elected by minors for their use and benefit, without requiring the citation or renunciation of their next of kin, where the property was very small and the next of kin were in Australia and their interest was infinitesimal. Hagger, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 65; 32 L. J., P. 96; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 386; 8 L. T. 470; 11 W. R. 540.

A. died intestate, leaving four children, of whom one was of age, but was abroad, and the other three were minors. An immediate grant of administration being necessary, the court granted administration to the newly-elected guardian of the minors for their use and benefit, limited until one of the children should apply for a grant. Burgess, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 188; 32 L. J., P. 158; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 553; 9 L. T. 86; 11 W. R. 687.

A., whose marriage had been dissolved by reason of the misconduct of her husband, died intestate, leaving one child under age. The court, on copies of the decrees nisi and absolute for the dissolution of such marriage being filed in the registry, ordered that administration should issue to the maternal grandmother of such child for her use and benefit, no notice of the application having been given to the father, who was resident in New Zealand. Hay, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 3; L. R. 1 P. 51; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 936; 13 L. T. 335; 14 W. R. 147.

The guardian of an infant, sole next of kin of an intestate, is entitled in preference to creditors. John v. Bradbury, 36 L. J., P. 33; L. R. 1 P. 245; 15 L. T. 414; 15 W. R. 285.

Where joint guardians have been appointed by the court of chancery to a minor, administration for his benefit cannot properly be granted to one of them only; but under special circumstances, and by authority of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, the court of probate will permit this to be done. Murphy, In goods of, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 416.

When a married woman, living separately from her husband, having obtained a protection order, died, leaving him and a minor son her surviving, the court made a grant of her effects to a guardian elected by the son for his use and benefit without citing the father, requiring justifying security. Stephenson, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 20; L. R. 1 P. 287; 15 L. T. 296; 15 W. R. 286.

C. gave all her property of whatsoever description to her son, when he attained the age of twenty-one, and then concluded, "I appoint C. and K., of &c., trustees." The court held that the trustees were not executors, and granted administration, with the will annexed, to the guardian of the minor. Cozens, In goods of, 16 L. T. 208; 15 W. R. 532.

When it is desired that a stranger should take a grant of administration for the use and benefit of minors, to whose guardianship there is a next of kin entitled, the practice is, not that the minors should elect the next of kin to be their guardian for the purpose of nominating the stranger to procure the grant, but that the next of kin should renounce his right to the guardianship, and that the minors should elect the stranger to be their guardian, in which capacity he can take the grant. Molineux, In goods of, 25 L. T. 162; 19 W. R. 568.

A father left two children in their minorities, his only next of kin. The minors' next of kin were four in number, and three of them renounced their rights to the guardianship and administration. The fourth went to Nevada in 1869, and nothing was now known of him. The court permitted the minors to elect a stranger in blood as their guardian, without requiring the citation or renunciation of the absent next of kin. Langham, In goods of, 25 L. T. 951; 20 W. R. 319.

A brother bequeathed his real and personal estate in two equal moieties to the children of his deceased sisters. The executor renounced, and the children were resident abroad. The sole surviving next of kin was another sister, to whom the testator had left a legacy of "one shilling," and who was leading a dissolute life. Under these circumstances, the court made a grant of administration with the will annexed to a relative not interested, for the use and benefit of the minors until they should appear and take the grant. Thomas, In goods of, 28 L. T. 677.

A husband and wife separated by agreement. The husband covenanted not to claim administration of his wife's estate if she should die during his life. She died during his life. The husband refused to renounce: the court refused to make a grant to the guardian of her children until he had been cited. Pigott, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 77; 29 L. T. 45; 21 W. R. 823.

The nearest relatives of minor children having been abroad for many years, without having communicated with their friends in this country, the court permitted the children to elect another person to take administration on their behalf of the estate of their father, without citing such nearest relatives in the first instance. Burchmore, In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 1; L. R. 3 P. 139; 29 L. T. 377; 22 W. R. 70.

The sole executrix and universal legatee having died in the testator's lifetime, and the next of kin being abroad, the court granted letters of administration with the will annexed to the guardian of persons entitled in distribution. See, In goods of, 48 L. J., P. 70; 4 P. D. 86; 40 L. T. 658; 27 W. R. 665.

A father by will appointed two guardians of his daughter, a minor, and directed that in the event of the death of either of them the survivor should nominate some other person to act as co-guardian with him:—Held, that such direction was within the powers of 12 Car. 2, c. 24, ss. 8, 9, and administration de bonis non was granted to the guardian thus substituted. Parnell, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 35; L. R. 2 P. 379; 26 L. T. 744; 20 W. R. 494.

Where a will duly executed contains simply an appointment of a guardian of his children by a father, but no disposition of personal property, or an appointment of an executor, it is not entitled to probate. Morton, In goods of, 33 L. J., P. 87; 9 L. T. 809; 12 W. R. 320.

A testamentary guardian of minor children is entitled to a grant for their use and benefit, preferably to a guardian elected by the children. Morris, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 360; 31 L. J., P. 80; 5 L. T. 768.

A testator divided the residue of his personal estate between his son, his only next of kin, and his three illegitimate daughters, who were minors. They propounded the will by their guardian. The son unsuccessfully opposed it, and was condemned in costs. He had a larger interest in the specific legacies than the minors, and it was proved that in fact there was no residue:—The court refused, under these circumstances, to make the grant to the guardian of the minors, but decreed it to the son. It also declined to make the grant to the son conditional on his payment of the guardian's costs, as by so doing it would delay the payment of the legacy to the widow. Sawbridge v. Hill, 40 L. J., P. 27; L. R. 2 P. 219; 24 L. T. 320; 19 W. R. 705.

A. and B. having been nominated by a testator to be executors and residuary legatees in trust, as such renounced probate and administration with the will annexed. They were also appointed, on the death or second marriage of the testator's widow, guardians of the minor children of the testator, the substituted residuary legatees named in his will:—Held, that they were entitled, as such guardians, to administration with the will annexed of the goods of the testator left unadministered by the widow, the first administratrix, for the use and benefit of the minors, with the usual limitations. Loftus, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 307; 33 L. J., P. 59; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 324; 10 L. T. 240.

The next of kin of a minor, the universal legatee, were an uncle who was abroad, an aunt who was in poor circumstances, and another aunt who had renounced. The court granted letters of administration with will annexed for the use and benefit of the minor to a guardian elected by her. Gardiner, In goods of, 53 L. J., P. 31; 9 P. D. 66; 32 W. R. 756; 48 J. P. 456.

Where upon an application for administration with the will annexed it appeared that the testator's children were minors, the court granted administration to a stranger in blood elected by the children as their testamentary guardian, without notice to the next of kin entitled to the grant, on proof that one had renounced and that the remainder were at a distance, or that their place of residence was unknown. Webb, In goods of, 57 L. J., P. 36 ; 13 P. D. 71 ; 58 L. T. 683 ; 36 W. R. 847 ; 52 J. P. 231.

Upon an application for administration with the will annexed it appeared that the testator by his will had appointed two executors, and made his daughter, a minor, his sole legatee. Of the two executors one was dead, and the other at the time of testator's death was in Brazil, the date of his return being uncertain. The next of kin of the minor either renounced or were resident out of the jurisdiction. The court, upon proof that there was urgent need of immediate administration, made a grant to the paternal aunt of the minor, whom she had elected her testamentary guardian. Batterbee, In goods of, 58 L. J., P. 38 ; 14 P. D. 39 ; 60 L. T. 838 ; 37 W. R. 416 ; 53 J. P. 231.

Guardian on behalf of one Minor — Other Minors interested.]—A. died unmarried, intestate and insolvent, his only assets being 48*l.* cash, and 11*l.* arrears of rent, leaving his only next of kin the children of three deceased sisters. The children of one sister were minors and wards of court ; the children of another sister were minors, but not wards of court ; the children of the third sister were three daughters, all married, and living abroad. The court made a grant to the guardian of the eldest minor, who was a ward of court, without requiring the married children to be cited. Magrath, In goods of, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 203.

—— Of Minors appointed Executors.]—Where an infant is sole executor, administration shall be granted to the guardian, or such person as the spiritual court think fit, till the infant is twenty-one, at which time, and not before, probate shall be granted to him. Sergison, Ex parte, 4 Ves. 149.

Though mother took out administration during the daughter's minority, yet the moment she comes of age of seventeen, she is, ipso facto, administratrix, and so considered by relation from the beginning. Lee v. Cox, 3 Atk. 422.

—— Office, how and when Determined.]—By the infant's coming of age, administration durante minore ætate ceases, and suit by such administration is thereby determined, and the infant cannot go on therewith, but must begin anew, unless a decree to account were had ; in which case, secus. Jones v. Bassett, Pre. Ch. 174. S. P., Stubbs v. Leigh, 1 Cox, 133.

An administration is granted during the minority of four infant children, one of whom, being a daughter, marries a husband who is of age. The administration is not determined. Jones v. Strafford, 3 P. W. 81.

Where an infant executrix being under seventeen, administration is granted, and the infant marries a husband of age ; this does not determine the administration, by the opinion in 5 Co. 29, which seems to have been extra-judicial, and is not taken notice of by contemporary reporters. Ib., 88.

If administration be granted during the minority of four infants, and one dies ; this does not determine the administration, contrary to the opinion in 5 Co. Brudenell's Case, 3 P. Wms. 89.

Administrator durante minor ætate obtains a decree to account ; the infant marries, and a new administration during her minority is granted to the husband. Coke v. Hodges, 1 Vern. 25.

Where it is probable that there will be a misapplication and wasting of the effects of an intestate by a limited administrator, who is only a trustee for an infant, the court will appoint a receiver. Havers v. Havers, Barnard. 23.

Nominee of Guardian.]—Where a wife had obtained a magistrate's order protecting her property and earnings, and died intestate, leaving minor children, the court granted administration to the uncle of the children, elected by their guardian for that purpose, though the husband was alive. Weir, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 451 ; 31 L. J., P. 88 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 393.

Limited Grant to Guardian ad interim—Section 73.]—Where a naturalized Englishman died leaving three infant children, the two younger of whom were admittedly illegitimate, but the elder had been registered as the legitimate child of the deceased and his wife, and had been so brought up, and proceedings had been commenced in the chancery division, in which the legitimacy of the said elder child was in dispute, and the chancery division had appointed H. B. W. guardian ad interim of the said elder child, for the purpose of applying to the probate division for a grant of administration to the personal estate of the said deceased. The court, under s. 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, made the grant asked for to the said H. B. W., but limited until the persons entitled by law to letters of administration to the said estate should have obtained such letters. Mustapha, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 61 ; 62 L. T. 606.

In making a limited grant, under s. 73, of administration with the will annexed, in favour of the guardian appointed on behalf of minors, who, if of age, would be entitled to administer the estate of the deceased :—Held, that the best form of limitation would be "until one of the minors comes of age and applies." A limited grant, under s. 73, made without notice to the person primarily entitled. Lilley, In goods of, 76 L. T. 164.

Of Union.]—A pauper lunatic died intestate in the possession of 440*l.*, leaving a lunatic sister, his sole next of kin. The court having previously refused the application (see 40 L. J., P. 21 ; L. R. 2 P. 217 ; 23 L. T. 877 ; 19 W. R. 422), afterwards, under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, ss. 16, 17, granted administration, for the use and benefit of the lunatic sister during her lunacy, to the board of guardians of the union to which the deceased was chargeable, as creditors of the deceased. Windeatt v. Sharland, 41 L. J., P. 9 ; L. R. 2 P. 266 ; 25 L. T. 574 ; 20 W. R. 211.

F. died intestate and a widow, leaving M., her daughter, the only person entitled in distribution. M. had been for some years in a county lunatic asylum, maintained at the charge of the hamlet of Mile End Old Town. No committee of her person or estate had been appointed. F. left a sum of money, principally in the funds, in the name of her late husband, under whose will she was entitled to it. After the proper citations, the court, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, granted administration of the goods of F. to the clerk of the guardians of the poor for the use and benefit of the lunatic, limited during the period of her lunacy; the sureties to justify. Findlay, In goods of, Southwell v. Findlay, 3 Sw. & Tr. 265; 33 L. J., P. 21; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1253; 9 L. T. 346; 12 W. R. 59.

The court granted administration of the goods and effects of a pauper dying intestate, without known relations, to the guardians of the union (as creditors) on which she was chargeable, the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, s. 16, empowering them, in the event of a pauper dying possessed of property, to reimburse themselves the expenses incurred by them in and about the burial of such pauper, and in and about the maintenance of such pauper, at any time during the twelve months previously to the decease. Cleaver v. M'Kenna, 35 L. J., P. 91; 13 L. T. 411.

The whereabouts of both the husband and son of a woman, who had died as a pauper lunatic, were unknown, and the husband was cited, by advertisements, to accept or renounce administration to her estate, but had not appeared. Upon the motion of the guardians as creditors for maintenance and funeral expenses, the court granted administration to the nominee of the guardians, subject to an affidavit that the husband outlived the deceased. King, In goods of, 58 J. P. 464.

A woman was taken into a workhouse infirmary and died the following day, a spinster and intestate. Her only known relative was a sister. The guardians expended 7*l.* 15*s.* upon her funeral, and she was found to be possessed of property amounting to over 200*l.* The sister did not wish to take administration. Upon the application of the guardians as creditors, the court granted administration to their nominee. Jowers, In goods of, 58 J. P. 465.

The testatrix left a duly executed will, but appointed no executor; she had been in receipt of outdoor relief. The court granted to the nominee of the guardians, as creditors, letters of administration with the will annexed. Baldwin, In goods of, 55 J. P. 344.

Upon the death of a pauper lunatic, letters of administration were granted to the nominee of the guardians as creditors for her maintenance and burial expenses, the next of kin and the queen's proctor having failed to appear to citations calling upon them to take the grant. Reeves, In goods of, 55 J. P. 24. S. P., Lillicrap, In goods of, 55 J. P. 825.

Upon the application of the guardians of certain united parishes, the court made a grant of administration in favour of their nominee to the estate of a pauper lunatic who had died in the county lunatic asylum, and who, at the time of his death, and for some time previously, was chargeable to the said united parishes. Luce, In goods of, 54 J. P. 695.

The court granted administration to the clerk to the guardians of the estates of a husband and his widow, both of whom had died indebted to the union for maintenance, without requiring the next of kin to be cited. Teece, In goods of, 65 L. J., P. 41; [1896] P. 6; 73 L. T. 631; 44 W. R. 400.

—— Under Special Circumstances — Section 73.]—The value of the whole property of an intestate who died leaving a widow, but no issue, did not exceed 500*l.* The widow was a pauper lunatic, and her father had renounced his right to take the grant on her behalf:—Held, that a grant of administration might be made under s. 73 of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, to a person nominated by the guardians of the union to whom the pauper lunatic was indebted for her maintenance without citing the next of kin of the intestate of the lunatic. Everley, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 53; [1892] P. 50; 65 L. T. 765.

The testator appointed his widow sole executrix and left her all his property except one legacy of 10*l.* to R. The widow did not prove the will, became lunatic, and was taken to an asylum. R. renounced administration and died without any known personal representatives. The chief asset was a mortgage, and there were sundry debts to be paid. Administration with the will annexed was granted to the nominee of the guardians, under s. 73, for the use and benefit of the lunatic, upon an undertaking to secure the legacy if claimed. Sharland, In goods of, 67 L. T. 501; 56 J. P. 682.

The court made a grant of letters of administration in respect of the personal estate and effects of a deceased person, whose widow was a pauper lunatic, in favour of the clerk to the guardians on the ground of "special circumstances" within the meaning of s. 73 of the Probate Act, the next of kin entitled to take administration after the widow having been duly cited, but not having appeared. Richards, In goods of, 53 J. P. 807.

—— Limited Grant.]—Where the next of kin of a deceased intestate was a pauper lunatic confined in the county asylum at the charge of the union, the court, under s. 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), made a grant of administration to a person nominated by the guardians, but limited to such time as the pauper should remain insane. Eccles, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 5; 15 P. D. 1; 61 L. T. 652; 54 J. P. 55.

The sole executrix and residuary legatee of a testatrix, who was also one of her next of kin, did not prove the will, and some time after the death of the testatrix became and remained chargeable to the rates as a pauper lunatic not so found by inquisition. The court required that the other next of kin should be cited, and upon this being done, and no appearance being entered on their behalf, made, under s. 73, a grant of letters of administration with the will annexed in favour of the nominee of the guardians of the union, for the use and benefit of the lunatic executrix, limited to the duration of her lunacy. Hockin, In goods of, 73 L. T. 316; 59 J. P. 472.

9. Legatees.

With Will Annexed de bonis non—Justifying Security.]—The estate of a testatrix having been administered except as to one legacy, the court granted administration with will annexed de bonis non to the legatee, without requiring the representative of the executor or his residuary legatees to be cited, but ordered that the sureties should justify. King, In goods of, 52 L. J., P. 93; 8 P. D. 162; 31 W. R. 843.

Residuary Legatee.]—If an executor dies before probate of the will, his executor cannot prove it, but administration cum testamento annexo must be granted to residuary legatee (if any) or to the next of kin. Day v. Chatfield, 1 Vern. 200.

A father devised and bequeathed the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees for the benefit of his children, but in case of the failure of such trust, for such of his two brothers as should be living at the time the failure of the trust was ascertained. At the time of his death the testator had no child, and his wife was not enceinte; one brother died a fortnight after him:—Held, that the failure of the earlier trust, although not known, was determined on the death of the testator, and the residue vested at that time in the brothers, and therefore that the executors of the deceased brother, on the citation and non-appearance of the other brother, were entitled to a grant of administration with the will annexed of the goods of the deceased. Sidebottom, In goods of, Sidebottom v. Sidebottom, 41 L. J., P. 23; L. R. 2 P. 365; 25 L. T. 855; 20 W. R. 302.

In a will which contained specific bequests of several articles of plate, furniture, &c., the last specific bequest being that of 30*l*., a bequest to S. of "the residue of my things" would not entitle S. to a grant as residuary legatee. Ludlow, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 29; 27 L. J., P. 7; 6 W. R. 409.

A testator left to A. whatever money remained at his agent's, and also any money that might result from the sale of his effects:—Held, that he was not entitled to administration as a residuary legatee. O'Loughlin, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 53; L. R. 2 P. 102; 18 W. R. 902.

The court will not grant administration with the will annexed to the residuary legatee, with the consent of the executor. It can only do so on the executor's renunciation of probate, or after a citation has been served upon him, upon his non-appearance within the prescribed time. Garrard v. Garrard, L. R. 2 P. 238; 25 L. T. 162; 19 W. R. 569.

A testator died leaving a mixed fund of real and personal estate. By his will he left the whole of the income arising from his estate and effects to his maternal aunt A. for life, and "the whole after her decease to my legal heirs and theirs for ever":—Held, that on the true construction of the words "legal heirs and theirs for ever" the heir-at-law took as residuary legatee of the personalty as well as the realty, and was in that character entitled to a grant of administration with the will annexed. Dixon, In goods of, Todhunter v. Thompson, 47 L. J., P. 57; 4 P. D. 81; 39 L. T. 234; 26 W. R. 883.

I. D., by his will, gave all his property to A. H. for life, and then "the whole" . . . . to his "legal heirs and theirs for ever":—Held, that both realty and personalty were given to his co-heiresses, and the grant made to M. T., one of the co-heiresses, as one of the residuary legatees. Ib.

B. died in 1864, leaving a will of which he appointed his wife (with others) executrix. She proved the will, and survived the other executors. She afterwards married S., and during coverture with him made a will under powers vested in her, and appointed her husband sole executor. On her death in 1876 letters of administration (with her will annexed) were granted to S., who was the sole person entitled to the personal estate over which she had no disposing power:—Held, that a further grant was required as to the unadministered effects of B., and such grant was made (with the consent of S.) to the natural and lawful daughter of B., and one of the residuary legatees under his will. Bridger, In goods of, 47 L. J., P. 46; 4 P. D. 77; 39 L. T. 123.

A testator directed, that after payment of his debts and funeral expenses all his remaining property, subject to certain legacies, should be placed in proper securities, and appropriated to the education of his sister's children, as should seem most meet and beneficial to them by the executors of his will:—Held, that the children of the testator's sister were absolute residuary legatees, and, the executors having died in the lifetime of the testator, were entitled as such to administration with his will annexed. Present v. Goodwin, 29 L. J., P. 115; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 404; 2 L. T. 57.

In 1817, administration with the will annexed was granted to certain parties in their character of residuary legatees in trust, who had already renounced as executors. B. had acted as executor under three several wills. His executors, being unwilling to intermeddle in the management of those properties, which were mixed up together and incumbered, renounced probate of his will. They afterwards applied for administration with the will annexed to be granted to them as residuary legatees in trust, which was decreed accordingly. Bennet, In goods of, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 326, n.

A testator on his deathbed gave instructions for a will to a person who was unknown to him, and who, in preparing it, omitted his surname and also introduced the name and description of an executor who was totally unknown to the testator or to any of his friends or relations, and who could not, therefore, be identified with the consent of all parties interested; the court granted administration with the will annexed to one of the residuary legatees. Sawtell, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 448; 31 L. J., P. 65; 6 L. T. 395; 10 W. R. 782.

S. made the following bequest: "My wardrobe, trinkets, and other things to my aunt. In the event of her decease before mine, then all my effects to her two daughters":—Held, that, looking at the language of the will generally, these words did not constitute the aunt residuary legatee. Smith, In goods of, 34 L. J., P. 15; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1084; 13 W. R. 277.

A testator, after making several specific bequests, "ordered the management of all the rest to John Smith and Judy"; there not being in the will any other words indicative of an appointment of an executor or of a bequest of residue:—Held, that John Smith and Judy had been constituted, not executors according to the tenor, but residuary legatees, and were entitled, not to probate, but to administration with the will annexed. Kerrane, In goods of, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 447.

When a will does not dispose of the residue, the legatees are entitled to administration with the will annexed, limited to the property disposed of by the will; the next of kin without the consent of the legatees being entitled to a grant, save and except such property, or to a cæterorum grant. If the deceased dies a bastard and unmarried, the crown takes the same grant as the next of kin. Rhoades, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 125; L. R. 1 P. 119.

A testatrix devised her personal estate to B. for her own use, and for "the education, maintenance, and placing out in business" of B.'s son, and in case B. should die during her son's minority the testatrix directed that all moneys should be invested for the son's benefit until twenty-one, and should be handed over to him at that age:—Held, the executor having renounced, and B. having predeceased the testatrix, that administration with the will annexed should be granted to the son. Arms, In goods of, 11 R. 587; 71 L. T. 699.

—— Duchy of Lancaster.]—Where an intestate had died leaving no known relatives, and his estate had been partly administered by his widow, who died leaving a will, the court made a grant de bonis non to the nominee of the Duchy of Lancaster, who was the residuary legatee of the widow. Avard, In goods of, 11 P. D. 75; 56 L. T. 673.

—— To Limited Representative of.] — A married woman, a residuary legatee under a will, by virtue of powers enabling her to do so, executed a will by which she distributed the property of which she had a right to dispose, her residuary interest being part of the property. The chain of executors being broken, a grant of administration, with the will annexed, of her unadministered estate, was made to the limited representatives of the residuary legatee. Ditchfield, In goods of, L. R. 2 P. 152; 23 L. T. 325; 18 W. R. 1144.

Universal Legatee.] — A testator appointed his nephew universal legatee of his whole property in trust for legatees named in the will. The nephew took no beneficial interest, and the testator left a son living. No executor was appointed. On motion, the court made the grant to the nephew. Ford, In goods of, 23 L. T. 323; 18 W. R. 960.

A. left in the hands of trustees "all the property she might be possessed of at her death," &c., followed by an enumeration of properties, which, however, did not include the whole of her property:—Held, that the specific enumeration did not restrain the general terms preceding it, and that the trustees were entitled to administration, with the will annexed, as universal legatees in trust. Goodyar, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 127; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1243.

A testator left all his property that he was possessed of to his eldest son for life, and if he had no family to revert to his fifth son. He stated that his property consisted of houses, stock, and bank shares, and named R. as trustee in conjunction with D., and directed that the said trustees first pay all debts due by his eldest son, and invest some stock and money as the said trustees should think proper in good securities, and that his grandchild T. should have 500*l.* when he arrived at twenty-one. The court granted administration cum testamento annexo to R. and D. as universal legatees in trust. Palmer, In goods of, 11 L. R., Ir. 1.

An application for a grant (with the will annexed) to the sole legatee on affidavit that the testatrix died possessed of no other property than that specifically described in the will:—Held, that no reason was shewn for not citing the next of kin; that they must be cited; or that administration might be taken limited to the property specified in the will. Watson, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 110.

A testatrix left to her three nieces all her personal effects and everything of every kind "that I have now, or may have at the time of my decease, at my apartments at A. or elsewhere":—Held, that the nieces were universal legatees, and, as no executor was appointed, that they were entitled to administration with the will annexed. Scarborough, In goods of, 30 L. J., P. 85; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1166; 9 W. R. 149.

A universal legatee, under a will which does not appoint an executor, is by the invariable practice of the registry entitled to administration with the will annexed, and not to probate as executor according to the tenor. Oliphant, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 525; 30 L. J., P. 82; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 256; 1 L. T. 446.

A husband, left sole executor and universal legatee under his wife's will, which was made by virtue of a power, renounced as executor. Subsequently, owing to the disposition of the trust fund under his wife's will, his consent was required by the trustees to enable them to deal with it. On motion to the court that he might be allowed to retract his renunciation which had already been filed in the registry, the court directed that the applicant should take administration with the will annexed as universal legatee, in which capacity the applicant had not renounced his beneficial interest under the will. Blisset, In goods of, 44 L. T. 816.

—— Will of Englishman Domiciled in France.]—An Englishman, domiciled in France, wrote a holograph will, in which was the clause following: "J'institue pour ma légataire universelle Madame A. . . . et ce pour lui donner une preuve de ma reconnaissance des bons soins qu'elle a eu pour moi en France le tout sans rien excepter, et notamment pour tous les effets mobilier, et tous les biens meuble, que je possède en France":—Held on the evidence of French advocates, that A. was entitled to the whole personal property of the testator, whether in England or France. Laneuville v. Anderson, 2 Sw. & Tr. 24; 30 L. J., P. 25; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1260; 3 L. T. 304; 9 W. R. 74.

With Limitation.]—A husband by his will made his wife sole executrix and residuary legatee. By a codicil he devised and bequeathed to A. all property held by him upon any trust or by way of mortgage. He died insolvent, and the widow renounced probate of the will and codicil as executrix, and administration as residuary legatee. The court granted administration, with the will and codicil annexed, to A., limited to the trust property so far as it was personally left to him by the codicil. Protheroe, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 8; L. R. 3 P. 209; 31 L. T. 551; 23 W. R. 212.

Where Surviving Executor incapacitated by Illness.]—Where the sole surviving executor is unable from illness to attend to business matters, the court will grant letters of administration with the will annexed to a legatee, for the use and benefit of the executor until he shall recover, and take the grant as executor. Ponsonby, In goods of, 64 L. J., P. 119; [1895] P. 287; 11 R. 613; 44 W. R. 240.

Specific Legatee—No Residue—Citation of Residuary Legatee.]—A residuary legatee resident at a known address in Canada, and who was in regular communication with his relatives in England, was informally asked to renounce his right to administer to his father's estate, but made no reply to the letters of the solicitors.

The estate was being administered in chancery, and the chief clerk had certified that the assets were insufficient for payment of the debts and specific legacies. The court upon affidavits of these facts ordered a grant of administration in favour of one of the specific legatees. Wilde, In goods of, 57 L. J., P. 7; 13 P. D. 1; 57 L. T. 815; 36 W. R. 400; 51 J. P. 775.

When Executor and Residuary Legatee dead—Grant to Superior of Convent as Residuary Legatee.]—Where a testatrix appointed an executor, and after giving a legacy bequeathed the residue to the legatee to be disposed of at her discretion for the benefit of a specified convent, both the executor and the legatee having died in the lifetime of the testatrix, the court granted administration with the will annexed to the superior of the convent, being the head of the council in which the property of the convent was vested. Walsh v. Gladstone (1 Phillim. 290) followed. McAuliffe, In goods of, 64 L. J., P. 126; [1895] P. 290; 11 R. 610; 73 L. T. 193.

When Executors out of the Jurisdiction.]—The words "at the expiration of twelve months from the death of the testator," in s. 1 of 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, when compared with the words given in the form of affidavit in the second section, and of the grant of administration in the third, must be held to mean at or after the expiration of that period. Ruddy, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 63; L. R. 2 P. 330; 25 L. T. 950; 20 W. R. 319.

When the applicant is the residuary legatee whose interest is undetermined, the grant will be made under 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, but where a particular sum is set aside for and actually payable to the applicant, the grant can be made under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 18. Ib.

One of the executors named in the will proved the paper, and then left the country. The second executor named in the will was also out of the jurisdiction. The court made a grant durante absentiâ to a legatee and also one of the next of kin to enable her to become a party to a suit in the chancery division for the administration of the estate. Jenkins, In goods of, 49 L. J., P. 30; 41 L. T. 736; 28 W. R. 431; 44 J. P. 801.

Renouncing Probate.]—A person who has been appointed sole executrix and named universal legatee and has renounced probate may afterwards take a grant of administration de bonis non in the latter character. Wheelwright, In goods of, 47 L. J., P. 87; 3 P. D. 71; 39 L. T. 127; 27 W. R. 139.

B. appointed C. and D. executors and residuary legatees in trust, his widow residuary legatee for life or widowhood, and C. D., E. F., and G. substituted residuary legatees. C. and D. renounced probate and administration as executors and residuary legatees in trust, and letters of administration with the will annexed were granted to the widow; she died, leaving part of the estate unadministered. The court refused to allow C. to retract his renunciation as residuary legatee in trust, but granted him administration de bonis non as substituted residuary legatee. Morrison, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 129; 3 L. T. 786; 9 W. R. 518.

Where Legatee has purposely Destroyed Will.]—Where the court was satisfied, on the evidence, that the defendant, who had taken out letters of administration, had possessed himself of the will after the death of the deceased, and had suppressed or destroyed it, it therefore decreed letters of administration with the will annexed, as contained in a draft, and as the plaintiff and defendant were the residuary legatees in the will, and as such equally entitled in usual course to the letters of administration, ordered the grant to be made to the plaintiff. Podmore v. Whatton, 3 Sw. & Tr. 449; 33 L. J., P. 143; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 756; 10 L. T. 754; 13 W. R. 106.

Misdescription of Legatee.]—Where the object of a testatrix's bounty was erroneously described, the court, on being satisfied that the misdescription was the result of mistake, granted administration, with the will annexed, to such person. Hooper, In goods of, 13 L. T. 445; 14 W. R. 210.

10. Attorneys, Agents, and Nominees.

Person Entitled Resident in England.]—When the person entitled to administration is in England, a grant will not be made to his attorney, unless the estate consists solely of property held in trust. Bullar, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 26; 22 L. T. 146.

Where a person, solely entitled, was resident in this country, and able to take it himself, the court declined to decree it to his attorney for his use and benefit. Burch, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 139; 30 L. J., P. 171; 4 L. T. 451; 9 W. R. 639; and S. C. and S. P., 5 L. T. 119.

Person Entitled Resident Abroad.]—When a party solely entitled to the grant of administration of an estate was abroad, and it was not known where she was, or when she would return to this country, and there was a sum of money payable to the estate, the court made a grant of administration to a person whom she had duly authorised by power of attorney to manage her property in England. Escot, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 186; 28 L. J., P. 17.

A testator left three next of kin, one of whom was resident in Calcutta, and another at New York. These two each nominated an attorney in this country for the purpose of taking a grant. The court, however, refused to make a joint grant to these attorneys. Shepherd, In goods of, 26 L. T. 405.

Where a party entitled to administration is abroad, and has given a simple power of attorney to his agent in England to take out administration for his use and benefit, the court will only grant administration to the agent on the same terms as it would have granted it to the party himself. Goldsborough, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 295; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 417; 7 W. R. 375.

Where a party entitled, being resident out of England, had, by a power of attorney, specially authorised his brother to execute for him an instrument of renunciation and consent, the court acted on a renunciation and consent so executed. Rosser, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 490; 33 L. J., P. 155; 10 L. T. 695; 12 W. R. 1014.

A testator while of unsound mind made a will disposing of large sums of money, although at the time of making the will he was possessed of no property whatever, and was dependent upon his relatives for support:—Held, that administration might be granted as in case of an intestacy to the sister of the deceased as attorney for his widow, who was resident in Australia, and that the oath of the administratrix should be to the effect that the deceased, so far as she knew and believed, had left no will. Rich, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 94; [1892] P. 143.

Intestate Dying Abroad.]—B., having acquired a domicil in British Guiana, died a bachelor and intestate, without any known relations there. Under an ordinance of that colony the administrator-general took possession of B.'s property in that colony, and appointed P., F. and P., of Liverpool, to be his attorneys, and in his name to take letters of administration to the personal estate of the deceased in this country. The court, after notice to the queen's proctor, and citations of next of kin, made the grant accordingly. O'Brien, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 604; 31 L. J., P. 194; 7 L. T. 249.

Testator Dying Abroad.]—A testator named five executors, four of whom took probate in Victoria, in which colony he died, and power to do so was reserved to the fifth:—Held, that administration with the will annexed could not be granted in this country to the attorney lawfully constituted of the four executors who proved the will, unless the fifth executor had been first cited. Fletcher, In goods of, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 572.

Executors Abroad.]—Administration granted under 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, the executor going to Scotland, is not disputable in equity, though it may be at law. Rainsford v. Taynton, 7 Ves. 460.

Administration granted under 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, is not for a limited time but for a limited purpose—viz. to become or be made party to bills in equity, and carry decrees into execution. Ib.

The effect of return of executor is, that he must be made party in the usual course, and then the temporary administrator may account and have his costs, and be discharged; but the proceedings are not put an end to. Ib.

Administration was granted under the statute where the executor went to Scotland. The authority of an administrator appointed according to the provisions of the 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, during the absence of an executor from this country, does not become actually void upon the death of such executor, but only voidable. Taynton v. Hannay, 3 Bos. & P. 26; 7 Ves. 460.

A. died in 1832, leaving a will, whereof he appointed B., C. and D. executors, and B. residuary legatee. C. alone proved the will, power being reserved to grant probate to the other executors. In 1847 B. died, leaving a will, appointing E. sole executrix, who duly proved B.'s will. In 1855, C. died intestate, leaving part of the personal estate of A. unadministered. D., the surviving executor of A., not having appeared to a citation calling on him to accept or refuse probate of the will of A., administration with the will of A. annexed was granted to the attorney of E., then abroad, as the personal representative of the residuary legatee of A., the chain of executorship having been broken. Collison v. Mawe, 28 L. J., P. 90.

A., in April, 1856, executed a power of attorney appointing L. her attorney, for the purpose of managing her real and personal estate, and giving him very extensive powers, but not in terms sufficient to constitute him her attorney for the purpose of taking out letters of administration. A. then went abroad, and during her absence, money having become payable to the personal estate of B., who had died intestate, and in respect of whose estate A. was entitled to administration, it became necessary that an administrator should be appointed in order that a discharge for that sum might be given. It being uncertain when A. would return to this country, or where he was, the court granted administration of the estate of B. to L. Escot, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 186; 28 L. J., P. 17.

Where the sole executor to a will was abroad and not expected to return for at least two years, and could not be communicated with for several months, the court made a grant of administration with the will annexed to two gentlemen who had been appointed his attorneys in a power executed by him previous to leaving England. Barker, In goods of, 60 L. J., P. 87; [1891] P. 251; 39 W. R. 560.

A testator by his will nominated two executors, both of whom at the time of his death were resident out of the United Kingdom. The will contained a paragraph requesting R., the partner of one of the executors, to act for him in the event of his absence. It appeared that there was urgent necessity for the appointment of an administrator of the estate of the deceased:—Held, that administration with the will annexed might be granted to R. under s. 73 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, until such time as one or other of the executors should come and prove the will. Taylor, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 93; [1892] P. 90; 66 L. T. 266.

Where a testator domiciled abroad, having property there and also in England, made a will according to the law of the country of his domicil, and appointed executors thereof, and also appointed certain named persons in England to realise his English estate and transmit the proceeds to the testamentary executors, the court refused to appoint these named persons executors according to the tenor of the will, but made a grant to them under s. 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, to administer the estate in England, for the use and benefit of the testamentary executors. Earl, In goods of (10 P. D. 196), approved. Briesemann, In goods of, 63 L. J., P. 159; [1894] P. 260; 6 R. 558; 71 L. T. 263.

To Attorney of Heir, with Decree of Persian Court annexed.]—A., a native of and domiciled in Persia, made and duly executed his will according to Persian law. By the law of Persia, which does not recognise the principle of representation of the estate of a deceased person, his will, as well as all his property, is taken possession of by the court having exclusive jurisdiction in matters of wills, inheritance and succession. This court is composed of ecclesiastics called "Moojateheds." It is presided over by one of the body, styled the "Superior Religious Head and Highest Authority," and his decrees are irrevocable. Neither the original nor any copy of the will is allowed to go out of the possession of the court. The contents of the will are published by the court in the presence of the persons (legatees and heirs) interested in the property of the deceased, and a document is given to each, certifying the portion of the property to which he is entitled. The testator died possessed of certain property (funds standing in his name in the books of the Book of England), and this property was appointed to B., his eldest son, by the "Superior Religious Head," who gave a document under his hand and seal certifying that fact. The court granted to the duly-appointed attorney of B. letters of administration (with the decree of the Persian court annexed), limited to the property specified in the said decree. Dost Aly Khan, In goods of, 49 L. J., P. 78; 6 P. D. 6; 29 W. R. 80.

Receiver appointed by Chancery Division.]—Upon an application for administration it appeared that the widow of the intestate was a lunatic, and his only other next of kin, his brother, was unable to furnish justifying security. A suit had been instituted in the chancery division for the administration of the estate and a receiver appointed; but a portion of the estate, consisting of stock in a waterworks company, could not be realised except by a personal representative of the deceased:—Held, that administration could not be granted to the brother of the deceased without requiring justifying security, but that a grant might be made to the receiver, to issue when the registrar had been satisfied that the chancery division had continued his appointment. Moore, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 119; [1892] P. 145.

Person appointed Factor loco tutoris by Scotch Court of Session.]—Administration of the personal estate in England of a domiciled Scotchman granted to A., appointed by the court of session at Edinburgh factor loco tutoris to the infant children of the deceased. Jones, In goods of, 28 L. J., P. 80.

Power of Attorney dispensed with.]—If the court, on the document before it, is satisfied that the party entitled desires the person applying to act as his attorney, it will not require a regularly-executed power of attorney. Morley, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 425; 33 L. J., P. 108; 10 L. T. 540; 12 W. R. 1064.

To Attorney out of the Jurisdiction.]—Administration will be granted to an attorney of the next of kin, such attorney being resident without the jurisdiction of the court, if the sureties to the bond are resident within the jurisdiction. Leeson, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 463; 29 L. J., P. 19; 1 L. T. 74; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1270.

In the Case of Foreigners.]—Administration of the effects of an intestate who died domiciled abroad, granted to the agent of a foreigner entitled by the law of the domicil to administration. Bianchi, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 511; 28 L. J., P. 139.

Where an Italian subject died in this country leaving an infant, his next of kin, and his relatives were abroad, the court made a grant ad colligenda of his property here, under s. 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, to the Italian vice-consul until one of the relatives obtained administration. Migasso, In goods of, 6 R. 571; 70 L. T. 246.

Pending a litigation in a Spanish court as to which of two testamentary papers of a deceased Spaniard ought to be established, the plaintiff, who was resident in Spain, was appointed by the Spanish court the judicial administrator of the deceased's goods, and the plaintiff, under the authority of that court, afterwards appointed the defendant to be his attorney to recover and receive 10,000*l.* due to the deceased's estate from C. & Co., of London. The defendant, after litigation in the prerogative court of Canterbury with one of the parties to the Spanish suit, obtained letters of administration to the deceased, to be granted to him as the plaintiff's attorney, limited to receive the 10,000*l.* until the plaintiff should obtain administration to the deceased. The defendant afterwards received the 10,000*l.*:—Held, that he might safely pay it over to the plaintiff, although he had not obtained administration to the deceased. De la Viesca v. Lubbock, 10 Sim. 629.

—— Russian Imperial Family Law.] — By the law of Russia all testamentary instruments executed by members of the imperial family are disregarded, and the disposition of the property of such persons after their death is within the exclusive power of the Emperor of Russia. Oldenburg (Prince), In goods of, 53 L. J., P. 46; 9 P. D. 234; 32 W. R. 724; 49 J. P. 104.

A., a member of the Russian Imperial family, died in Russia, having executed a will by which he appointed B., his son as his executor. After A.'s death a meeting of the members of his family was held, and an arrangement for the disposition of his property in accordance with the terms of his will was agreed to, and was embodied in a document termed an "Acte Définitif," which was subsequently confirmed by the Emperor of Russia; and by the terms of the "Acte Définitif" B. was constituted the sole and entire owner of certain shares held by the deceased in a railway company having its offices in England. The court, upon a certificate from the Russian ambassador in England, with the seal of the Russian embassy, reciting that the law of Russia is as stated above, and that under the "Acte Définitif," B. was the sole and entire owner of the railway shares, made a grant to the attorney of B. of letters of administration with the "Acte Définitif" annexed, limited to the property of the deceased in England. Ib.

Domiciled Scotchman having Indian Property.]—A domiciled Scotchman died, leaving a will, whereby he appointed executors. The executors proved the will in Scotland, and authorised F. & Co. to take out administration as their agents in India, where the deceased possessed considerable property. F. & Co. did so, and having realised the assets, they paid the money for their own protection into the court of chancery in England. On a suggestion that personal representation was also necessary in this country to enable the executors to take the money out of the court of chancery, the court expressed its willingness to grant probate of the will, but declined to allow the executors' oath to be altered to meet the facts of the case by having the property sworn under 20*l.* Murray, In goods of, 16 L. T. 266.

Englishman domiciled Abroad—Administration with Retranslation of Will annexed.]—A translation of the will of an Englishman dying domiciled abroad but possessed of personal property in England, originally written in English, had been proved in the court of the country of his domicil. One of the executors transferred his powers to his co-executor, who afterwards died, and G. was appointed in his place by the same court. The court granted letters of administration, with a retranslation of the will annexed, to G.'s attorney in this country. Rule, In goods of, 47 L. J., P. 32; 4 P. D. 76; 39 L. T. 123; 26 W. R. 357.

To Disinterested Nominee.]—The court will grant administration, with the consent of all parties interested in the property of the deceased, to their nominee who takes no interest in the property himself. Farrell v. Brownbill, 3 Sw. & Tr. 467.

Grant for Purpose of vesting Trust Term in New Trustees.]—Where, upon the occasion of the appointment of new trustees of a settlement, which comprised, amongst other trust funds, a charge on the settled lands, which had been paid off by the former trustees, and an assignment of it taken from the persons beneficially interested therein, the new trustees required that a term of years created for the purpose of securing the charge, which had not been assigned to the former trustees, should be transferred to them, and there was no personal representative of the surviving trustee of the term living, the court, on the application of the attorney of the person beneficially entitled to the charge, who was resident abroad, gave liberty to his attorney to apply for a grant, limited to assigning the term to the new trustees. Form of order. Vereker, In the goods of, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 200.

To Nominees under Special Circumstances—20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73.]—The consent of all the persons interested is not a sufficient ground for departing from the general rules as to grants of administration. The court therefore refused to make a joint grant to two of the persons interested in distribution and to a nominee of the next of kin, although the next of kin and all the persons interested concurred in the application. Richardson, In goods of, 40 L. J., P. 36; L. R. 2 P. 244; 25 L. T. 384; 19 W. R. 979.

The mere fact that the person who would be entitled to administration desires that some other person should take the grant, does not constitute such a special state of circumstances as to justify a grant under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73. In such a case the proper course to be adopted is for the person entitled to administration to take the grant, and then appoint his nominee to act as his or her attorney. Hale, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 45; L. R. 3 P. 207; 31 L. T. 799.

A will having been set aside by reason of an informality in the execution, the widow and children entered into an arrangement by deed to carry out the intention of the husband as contained in such will, notwithstanding its informality. The court refused to grant administration to the executors named in the will under the Probate Act, s. 73, as the nominees of the parties interested in an intestacy, they themselves having no interest in the property of the deceased. Ib.

If next of kin are unable to agree amongst themselves which of them shall take administration, and are all willing that such administration shall be granted to a nominee who has no interest therein, that will not be a special circumstance to justify the court in making a grant to such nominee under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73. Teague v. Wharton, Jeffries, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 13; L. R. 2 P. 360; 25 L. T. 764; 20 W. R. 214.

A doubt having been raised as to the legitimacy of the sole next of kin, a deed was entered into by the parties interested for the distribution of the property amongst themselves in certain proportions, and it was a part of the arrangement that administration of the personal estate should be applied for by an individual who had, under no circumstances, an interest therein:—Held, that there were special circumstances in the case which authorised the court to grant such administration to the person designated under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73. Hopkins, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 42; L. R. 3 P. 235; 33 L. T. 320.

The court will, but under special circumstances only, make a grant of administration to a nominee of the parties interested in the estate. Clayton, In goods of, 55 L. J., P. 26; 11 P. D. 76; 34 W. R. 444; 50 J. P. 263.

An indiarubber merchant, carrying on business in this country, died here intestate. His next of kin consisted of a mother, two brothers, and two sisters, all resident in South America. The estates from which the indiarubber was produced were situate in Bolivia, 3,000 miles from the coast, and difficult of access. Quantities of goods were lying at Liverpool, and bills accepted by the firm were coming due. The only relation in this country was a nephew, who was only here temporarily and did not care to take administration. It was important that the business should be carried on. Under these circumstances (the nephew and all other persons interested in the business consenting), the court made a grant of administration under s. 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, to a chartered accountant, limited until the proper person should come in and claim. Justifying security to be given. Suarez, In goods of, 66 L. J., P. 98; [1897] P. 82; 77 L. T. 137; 45 W. R. 704.

To Nominees of Guardians.] — See ante, GUARDIANS, col. 508.

Crown Nominees (15 & 16 Vict. c. 5).]—When a bastard, having no relations, makes a will disposing of a part only of his or her property, the crown has a right to a grant save and except, or to a cæterorum grant, but not to a general grant of administration, and the legatees have a right to a grant, with the will annexed, limited to the property disposed of by the will. Rhoades, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 125; L. R. 1 P. 119.

A nominee of the crown taking out administration to the estate of an intestate is under the same obligation as any other administrator. Att.-Gen. v. Köhler, 9 H. L. Cas. 654; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 467; 5 L. T. 35; 9 W. R. 933.

The 15 & 16 Vict. c. 3, only dispenses with the necessity of his giving the usual bond to the ordinary, but imposes on him all the duties and liabilities of a private administrator. If he improperly pays to the crown part of an intestate's effects, though such payment is made under authority of a warrant under the sign-manual, he makes himself personally liable to restore it to parties afterwards proving themselves legally entitled. Ib.

Upon his death that liability only continues against his personal representatives, and not against his successor in office. But that successor may make himself personally liable for the acts of his predecessor, as by taking out letters of administration de bonis non to the same estate. Ib.

Where the nominee of the crown had improperly paid money (thus coming to his hands) to the then sovereign, and the succeeding nominee of the crown had taken out letters of administration de bonis non to the same estate, and in a suit by the next of kin against him, had only contested the fact of the claimants being truly the next of kin, and denied, if they were so, liability to pay interest on the sum claimed:—

Held, that this was in substance an admission of liability to pay the principal to the next of kin, and the claimants having satisfactorily established their title to that character, the liability to pay interest followed, as of course, on the liability to pay the principal. Ib.

The effects of an intestate having vested in the crown by forfeiture, if letters of administration are granted to A., in consequence of a warrant from the king, and they run in the usual form, viz., "To pay debts," &c., but with this additional clause, "For the use and benefit of his majesty," A. will be answerable as administrator for the debts of the intestate, and will not be permitted to give evidence tending to question the validity of the letters of administration. Megit v. Johnson, 2 Dougl. 542.

Prince of Wales when Intestate's Estates in Cornwall.]—T. C. died in Cornwall, intestate, without known relations. The court granted letters of administration of his estate for the use of his royal highness the Prince of Wales as Duke of Cornwall; but, semble, without prejudice to the rights of the crown. Cornwall (Solicitor of Duchy of) v. Canning, 5 P. D. 114; 41 L. T. 737; 28 W. R. 278.

Manager of Company appointed Executor and Trustee.] — Where a limited company were appointed executors and trustees under a will, the court granted administration with the will annexed to the general manager of the company as their nominee. Hunt, In goods of, 66 L. J., P. 8; [1896] P. 288.

Assignment of Right to Letters of Administration.]—A. bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to W., his sole executor and trustee, in trust for such persons as B., a married woman, should appoint, and in default of appointment to B. absolutely. W. renounced. By deed, B. appointed and assigned to M. and J., who accepted the trust, all her interest under the will, and her right to letters of administration, with the will annexed, in order that they might obtain such letters of administration. Letters of administration, with the will annexed, granted to M. and J. Martindale, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 8; 27 L. J., P. 29; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 196; 6 W. R. 277.

Grant ad colligenda bona—Liberty to pay pressing Debts, and dispose of Business.]—Under a grant ad colligenda bona, made to the solicitor to the treasury, the court gave leave to the administrator to pay all pressing claims for rent, rates, and taxes, to take the accounts of the manager of the intestate's business, and to dispose of the said business. Oddy, In goods of, 62 L. T. 643.

Liability of Nominee obtaining Grant.]—A party to whom letters of administration have been granted, as the attorney of the person entitled to the grant, and for the use and benefit of such person, is liable to be sued, in the same way as if he had obtained administration in his own right. Chambers v. Bicknell, 2 Hare, 536; 7 Jur. 167.

11. Committees of Lunatics.

When Entitled.]—An intestate, whose property was under 1,000*l.* in value, left no known relation except a sister, who was of unsound mind, but had not been found so by inquisition, and who had no property of her own. The court refused to grant administration for the use and benefit of the lunatic to a stranger in blood until the applicant should obtain an order from the court of chancery, under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 86, s. 12, rendering the property of the lunatic available for her maintenance and benefit. Slumbers, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 32; 34 L. J., P. 93; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 396; 12 L. T. 582; 13 W. R. 696.

A. died intestate, without child or parent, leaving a widow and several next of kin. Before the widow took out letters of administration she was found a lunatic, and a committee of her person and estate appointed:—Held, that the committee was entitled in preference to the next of kin. Alford v. Alford, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 990.

A sole executrix and sole legatee, who had taken out probate, was declared a lunatic. Her next of kin was appointed committee of her person, and another person committee of her estate. With the consent of the latter the court passed him over, and granted administration, with the will annexed, to the committee of the person. Scarlett, In goods of, 27 L. T. 215; 21 W. R. 79.

Where the next of kin of a deceased lunatic was of unsound mind, though not so found by inquisition, a transfer of the lunatic's personal estate was directed to be made to the person to whom administration durante animi vitio of such next of kin had been granted, agreeably to the practice of the ecclesiastical court. Evelyn, Ex parte, 2 Myl. & K. 3.

Person appointed to act with the Powers of a Committee.]—The sole next of kin of a deceased intestate was a person "not lawfully detained as a lunatic and not found a lunatic by inquisition, but through mental infirmity arising from age incapable of managing her affairs," within the meaning of sub-s. 1 (d) of s. 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890. Her estate was administered by a person appointed to act with the powers of a committee under sub-s. 2 of such section:—The court made a general grant of administration, under s. 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, to the person thus appointed for the use and benefit of the next of kin. Leese, In goods of, 63 L. J., P. 124; [1894] P. 160; 70 L. T. 810.

Objection of Masters in Lunacy.]—A. died intestate leaving B., a person of unsound mind, her lawful sister and sole next of kin, surviving her. C. was appointed committee of B.'s estate, but the masters in lunacy objected to his taking the grant of administration of A.'s estate. In these circumstances the court, with the consent of C. and the consent also of the next of kin of B., made the grant to D., a stranger in blood to the deceased. Hastings, In goods of, 47 L. J., P. 30; 4 P. D. 73; 39 L. T. 45.

12. On Renunciation of Parties.

Generally.]—The Probate Court Rules, 1862, are for the guidance of the registry, but capable of modification by the court. Loftus, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 307; 33 L. J., P. 59; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 324; 10 L. T. 240.

When a person has renounced probate or administration in one character, he may be entitled to administration de bonis non in an inferior character, which did not exist when he renounced in the superior character. Ib.

Next of kin refusing to take administration, title of person taking it out will not depend on next of kin's granting his permission, nor by his withholding it. Cawthorne v. Chalie, 2 Sim. & S. 128; 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 125.

By Person Abroad.]—Where a party entitled, being resident out of England, had by a power of attorney specially authorised his brother to execute for him an instrument of renunciation and consent, the court acted on a renunciation and consent so executed. Rosser, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 490; 33 L. J., P. 155; 10 L. T. 695; 12 W. R. 1014.

Of Executors.]—Where one of several executors, after intermeddling in the testator's estate, executed a renunciation, and probate had been granted to his co-executors, the court, on the application of the renunciant, declared his renunciation to be invalid, and directed the record of it on the probate to be cancelled. Badenach, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 465; 33 L. J., P. 179; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 521; 11 L. T. 275.

An executor, having renounced in Australia, was appointed by the executors, who proved the will in the colony, their agent to obtain letters of administration with the will annexed in this country; the court held that r. 50 of the Probate Court Rules, 1862, did not apply, and made the grant to him as attorney, but required that he should file a fresh and definite renunciation, which beyond all question should strip him of the character of executor and bring him within the operation of s. 9 of the Probate Act. Russell, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 31; L. R. 1 P. 634; 20 L. T. 231; 17 W. R. 471.

The renunciation of an executor need not be under seal. Boyle, In goods of, 3 Sw. & T. 426; 33 L. J., P. 109; 10 L. T. 541.

The court received and acted on an informal deed of renunciation, which stated in substance, although not in terms, that the executor had not intermeddled. Gibson, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 114; L. R. 1 P. 105; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 344; 14 L. T. 23.

When a will, disposing of realty, appointed an executor, who afterwards renounced, the court granted administration with the will annexed to the next of kin. Jordan, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 22; L. R. 1 P. 555; 16 W. R. 407.

The court will not recognise an agreement by an executor to renounce. Hargreaves v. Wood, 2 Sw. & Tr. 602; 32 L. J., P. 8; 7 L. T. 338; 11 W. R. 31.

An executor cannot renounce after he has taken probate. Veiga, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 13; 32 L. J., P. 9; 7 L. T. 644; 11 W. R. 84.

An executor under the will of a testator domiciled in Portugal accepted the executorship in that country, and also obtained probate in England. Becoming afterwards, through age and infirmity, incapable of acting, a competent Portuguese tribunal permitted him to renounce the executorship, and appoint A. to act as executor in his stead. Upon application for a grant to A. of administration de bonis non with the will annexed:—Held, that the renunciation of the executor, though sanctioned by the law of Portugal, could not be recognised in this country, and that A. therefore was not entitled to the grant prayed. Ib.

A renunciation of executorship is not complete and may be retracted at any time before it is filed in the court. Morant or Morand, In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 16; L. R. 3 P. 151; 30 L. T. 74; 22 W. R. 267.

An executor signed a renunciation of probate, in order that administration with the will annexed might be granted to a creditor. The necessary papers, including the renunciation, to lead the grant, were taken into the registry, but a difficulty arose in the way of the grant, and all the papers were withdrawn:—Held, that there had been no renunciation by the executor within the meaning of the Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 79, and that he was entitled to probate of the will. Ib.

A person who has been appointed sole executrix and named universal legatee, and has renounced probate, may afterwards take a grant of administration de bonis non in the latter character. Wheelwright, In goods of, 47 L. J., P. 87; 3 P. D. 71; 39 L. T. 127; 27 W. R. 139.

When "failing A.," B. was substituted executor, the court held, that the condition of substitution was satisfied by A.'s refusal to act, and granted probate to B. on the renunciation of A. Colquhoun, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 1; 17 L. T. 123; 16 W. R. 88.

A testator left his property to his children who should attain twenty-eight; the sole executor renounced probate and refused to nominate any new trustee; the court granted letters of administration with the will annexed to two sons under the age of twenty-eight, that age being fixed for possession, and not for vesting of the shares. Thompson, In goods of, 67 L. T. 357.

See also EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR.

Of Next of Kin.]—Where the persons who are sole next of kin and the only persons entitled in distribution renounce their title to administration, the court will make the grant to a person who would have been next of kin if the sole next of kin had been out of the way, although such person has no interest. Johnson, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 595; 7 L. T. 337.

Retracting Renunciation.]—The court of probate has jurisdiction in a proper case to allow an executor to retract his renunciation even where the renunciation is complete. Bell, In goods of, 3 L. R., Ir. 230.

It has never been decided that an executor who has filed a renunciation of his rights may not afterwards retract such renunciation, notwithstanding the terms of the Probate Act, 1857, s. 79, but he certainly will not be permitted to do so, unless he can shew that such retractation will be for the benefit of the estate or of those interested under the will. Gill, In goods of, L. R. 3 P. 113.

—— 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 79, is not Retrospective.]—The 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 79, does not apply to an executor who has renounced before that act came into operation; and the retractation of such renunciation after the act came into operation, and a second renunciation after such retractation, will not bring him within that section. Whitham, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 26; L. R. 1 P. 303; 15 L. T. 447; 15 W. R. 560.

The next of kin may, with consent of the court, retract a renunciation before administration has issued to another party; but the court is not bound to allow such retractation. Park, In goods of, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 660.

A. having, before 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, renounced, as executor, probate of A.'s will, and as residuary legatee in trust, administration with the will annexed, such administration was granted to the residuary legatee for life:—Held, that on the death of the administratrix, A. could not retract his renunciation in either capacity. Richardson, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 515; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 326; 1 L. T. 448.

13. General or Limited Grant.

General.]—A clause revoking all former wills in a will purporting to deal only with trust property, entitled the executor of the will to a general grant of probate. Lancaster, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 464; 29 L. J., P. 19; 1 L. T. 75; 8 W. R. 134.

When the person entitled to a general grant with the will annexed was also an appointee by the same will to a fund of 2,000*l.* in settlement, and the general estate of the testatrix, who died insolvent, did not amount to 5*l.*, the court declined to make a limited grant to the appointee on the suggestion that, by taking a general grant, he rendered himself liable to be harassed with actions by her creditors. Somerset, In goods of, L. R. 1 P. 350.

Administration granted under 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, is not for a limited time, but for a limited purpose—viz. to become and be made party to bills in equity, and to carry decrees into execution. Rainsford v. Taynton, 7 Ves. 468.

—— To Executor of Married Woman.]—A married woman executed a will under powers given to her by her marriage settlement. She survived her husband, and died without republishing her will. All the next of kin, except one in New Zealand, consented to a general grant with the will annexed of the goods of the deceased being made to the executor named in the will. The court made the grant without any notice to or consent from the next of kin in New Zealand. Thorild, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 119; 16 L. T. 853.

Limited — To Part of Estate Applicant is interested in.]—Administration of the personal estate and effects of a deceased had been granted to A.; and all the property, with the exception of an interest in some fields as tenant from year to year, had been administered. A will having been propounded, dealing with these fields alone, and bequeathing the testator's interest in them to B., the court refused to grant to B. an administration with the will annexed limited to the property contained in the will; but revoking the former administration to A., granted her liberty to apply for and obtain letters of administration with the will annexed. Clarke, In goods of, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 26.

Where a party applying for administration has no direct interest in the personal estate of the deceased, he cannot obtain a grant extending to the whole of the property; it must be limited to the particular fund to which he satisfies the court he is entitled. Dodgson, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 260; 28 L. J., P. 116; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 252.

The court will grant administration to a cestui que trust of a trust fund, limited to that fund, when the trustee in whose name the fund stands is dead, and is without a personal representative, the parties entitled to represent the deceased trustee having been first cited. When there are several parties interested in the fund, the grant will be limited to the interest of the cestui que trust making the application, unless the other cestui que trusts assent to the grant extending to their respective interests. Pegg v. Chamberlain, 1 Sw. & Tr. 527; 2 L. T. 25; 8 W. R. 273.

—— Citation of Next of Kin.]—A married woman, who had lost sight of her husband for about twenty-seven years, bequeathed certain money in the post office savings bank to a man with whom she had lived in adultery during that time. The will did not appoint an executor, neither did it contain a residuary clause. The court refused to grant to the legatee administration with the will annexed limited to the amount of his legacy, without citing the next of kin. Watson, In goods of (1 Sw. & Tr. 110), distinguished. Miles, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 59; 62 L. T. 607.

—— To Property passing under a Power.]—If executors are appointed in a will which disposes only of real property, they are usually entitled to probate of the same; but this is not the case if such will is made under a power, for then the executors have their authority limited to such property as passes under the power, and can take nothing jure representationis. O'Dwyer v. Geare, Parkin, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 465; 29 L. J., P. 47; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1366; 1 L. T. 242.

—— To Policy of Insurance.]—The court may, if it thinks fit, depart from the practice of not granting limited administration to a person entitled to a general grant. The district registrars are, by the rules, bound to adhere to such practice. Patteson v. Hunter, 30 L. J., P. 272.

A creditor insured the life of his debtor, but the policy having by mistake been made payable to the representatives of the debtor, the court granted administration to it, limited to the policy. Ib.

—— To Particular Bequest.]—A wife who was a legatee under the will of her father died in his lifetime and in that of her husband, leaving issue. The husband died before the father, leaving a will of which probate was granted:—Held, that under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 33, the bequest took effect as if the legatee had died immediately after her father, in which case she would have died a widow, her son was entitled to administration limited to the bequest, without citing the executor of the husband. Councell, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 16; L. R. 2 P. 314; 25 L. T. 763.

—— To Trust Fund.]—A., when blind, made his will, having no property of his own, but being surviving trustee of a fund consisting of stock, solely for the purpose of enabling B., to whom the reversion in the trust fund had been assigned, to receive the same. By the will he appointed B., his executors, administrators, and assigns, his sole executor. B. died in A.'s lifetime, having made a will whereof C., one of his executors, had taken probate. The court being satisfied that A. knew and approved of the contents of his will when he executed it, granted probate of it to C., limited to the trust fund. Asford, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 540; 2 L. T. 86; 8 W. R. 340.

The surviving trustee of a fund being dead and no one having been appointed to administer his estate, the next of kin having failed after citation to have his will proved; the court made a grant of administration under s. 73, limited to a specific fund, over which the deceased tenant for life had power to dispose, and did dispose, by her will, and by the said will appointed the applicants executors. Rugge-Price, In goods of, 67 L. T. 503.

—— To carrying out Instructions of Testator.]—A son, being entitled to the whole of the personal estate of his father, deceased intestate, wrote from Madras, where he was serving in the Royal Artillery, to a cousin in England, giving him directions as to securing the amount of the property, and transmitting a small sum to him. The court granted administration, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, to the cousin for the use and benefit of the son, limited to carrying into effect the directions contained in the letter. Drinkwater, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 611; 31 L. J., P. 93; 7 L. T. 251.

—— To Property in England.]—A husband having died in India, his property was administered by the administrator-general there, who paid one moiety of the available funds to the widow, who was resident in India, and transmitted the other moiety to this country for distribution amongst the parties entitled at the time of his death. The court, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, granted administration of his goods to one of such parties limited to the property transmitted to this country by the administrator-general. Hughes, In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 31; L. R. 3 P. 140; 29 L. T. 377.

—— As to Debt of Englishman to Foreign Intestate.]—On the death of A., who was a domiciled French subject, and at the petition of his wife, the tribunal of commerce of the Seine declared his estate bankrupt. According to the practice of that tribunal, a syndic was appointed to administer the estate, and an order was made that the debts due to the estate should be sold. They were accordingly sold by auction, and amongst them one due from a firm in England: —Held, that the court, in its discretion, will not grant administration to enable such a purchaser to recover a debt due in England. Depit v. Delevieleuse, 2 Sw. & Tr. 131; 30 L. J., P. 86; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 196; 4 L. T. 894.

—— As to Time.]—Upon the death of a testator, A., the surviving executor, being resident in Sydney, B., who held a general power of attorney to act for A. in this country, sent out to him for execution a special power of attorney to authorise B. to take out administration, with the will annexed for A.'s use and benefit, and also a process of renunciation in case he should wish to renounce. The residuary legatee for life was incompetent from senility to take administration, and, subject to his interest, B. and others were entitled to the residue. The majority of the persons interested under the will being desirous that a grant should be made without waiting for the return of the power of attorney or renunciation, the court granted administration, with the will annexed, to B., limited until such time as A. should apply for probate, or his attorney for administration, with the will annexed. Lewis, In goods of, 29 L. J., P. 94.

Administration of the estate of B. had been granted to two of his sons in 1818, one of whom had since died, and the other had for many years resided in the West Indies. A sum of money being divisible, in which the surviving administrator had no interest, an administration was granted to a third son, limited to the particular sum to be divided and to continue so long only as the former surviving administrator remained out of the jurisdiction of the court. Baynes, In goods of, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 832.

—— During Minority.]—The court, upon the application of the lawfully elected and appointed curator and guardian of three minors, the lawful children of the deceased, who died a widow and intestate, made a grant of administration under s. 73, without the consent of three children of the half-blood, all sui juris and resident in England; the grant to be limited to such time as one of the minors should attain full age and apply for administration on her own behalf. Roe, In goods of, 66 L. T. 266.

—— During Insanity.]—Where an administratrix who was herself beneficially entitled to the unadministered residue of the personal estate of the deceased became of unsound mind, but had not been so found by inquisition, the court granted letters of administration de bonis non to her next of kin for her use and benefit pending her unsoundness of mind: the letters of administration already granted being impounded in the meanwhile. Espinasse, In goods of, 3 L. R., Ir. 185.

Where a sole administrator becomes insane but is not so found by inquisition, and under s. 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, a person has been appointed with only limited powers over the lunatic's property, a grant of administration will be made to another of the next of kin of the intestate for the use of the lunatic so long as he remains a lunatic, and the first grant of administration will be impounded. Binckes, In goods of (1 Curteis, 286), followed. Cooke, In goods of, 64 L. J., P. 35; [1895] P. 68; 11 R. 594; 72 L. T. 121; 43 W. R. 428.

—— Until lost Will found.]—A will had been duly executed by the testator, but it could not be found after his death. His widow, who had made a statement to the effect that it had been accidentally destroyed, on being served with a notice to attend and be examined concerning the contents of the will, disobeyed the order, and was believed to have left the country. The court made a grant of letters of administration to the testator's only son, with the consent of the remaining next of kin, limited to dealing with certain leasehold property without requiring the widow to be cited. Wright, In goods of, 62 L. J., P. 31; [1893] P. 21; 1 R. 476; 68 L. T. 25; 41 W. R. 318.

Determination by Court of Construction.]—A wife died, leaving property in England and Ireland, and her executrix took out probate in England, "limited to such property as she had power to dispose of." A caveat having been lodged:—Held, that inasmuch as she had power to dispose of some property in Ireland, the court would not take upon itself to decide what particular sum it was, but simply setting aside the caveat and resealing the probate, would leave that question to be determined by a court of construction. Mahon v. Hodgens, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 344.

A woman made her will while under cover-ture; and by it, after disposing of property to which she was entitled to her separate use, bequeathed "all the residue of the real and personal estate which I shall possess or have power to dispose of at the time of my decease to my niece." After the will was executed her husband died, bequeathing her considerable personal property. Shortly afterwards she died herself, without having re-executed her will:—Held, that although the court would be warranted in holding that the testatrix, having full power over the property acquired from her husband at the time of her death, and having used language in the will sufficiently large to include it, had effectually disposed of it, yet that it was its duty to conform to the decision of the privy council in Barnes v. Vincent (5 Moore, P. C. 201), and to leave the question for the court of construction. Noble v. Willock or Phelps, 40 L. J., P. 60; L. R. 2 P. 276; 25 L. T. 65; 19 W. R. 1115.

It accordingly refused a general probate of the will, but made the limited grant as full as it possibly could, so as not to prejudice the parties or fetter the court of construction. Ib.

When the will of a married woman is tendered for probate on the ground that she has separate property, and the probate is contested, if the court is satisfied that there is separate property, it has power to grant probate of all such property as the testatrix had power to dispose of without deciding what that property is. But it is generally the duty of the court, so far as the evidence and pleadings enable it to do so, to decide judicially of what such property consists. Tharp, In goods of, Tharp v. McDonald, 3 P. D. 76; 38 L. T. 867; 26 W. R. 770—C. A.

Foreigner Abroad—Property in this Country—Letters of Administration founded on a Foreign Decree.]—D. M. K., a Persian subject, was by a decree of a Persian court declared entitled to certain property in this country. The decree, though founded partly upon a will, made no mention of it, and the court which had custody of the will refused to give a copy of it. The court of probate granted letters of administration limited to the property mentioned in a duly-authenticated copy of the decree. The court allowed the law applicable to the case to be proved by a Persian ambassador. Dost Aly Khan, In goods of, 49 L. J., P. 78; 6 P. D. 6; 29 W. R. 80.

Limited to Appointment of New Trustees.]—A marriage settlement of personal estate contained a power for the surviving or continuing trustee, or the acting executors or administrators of the last surviving trustee (after the death of the husband and wife), to appoint a new trustee or new trustees in the place of any deceased trustee or trustees. The husband and wife were both deceased; and the last surviving trustee of the settlement died, having made a will. Administration of his estate, with the will annexed, was granted, but the administrator died, leaving his estate partly unadministered. The persons entitled beneficially under the settlement were infants under twenty-one years of age. A guardian having been appointed for them, the executors and legatees of the last surviving trustee were cited to accept or refuse probate or letters of administration, cum test. ann., and, on their not appearing, the court gave liberty to the guardian of the infant cestuis que trust to apply for and obtain letters of administration of the goods of the last surviving trustee, without his will annexed, and limited to the appointment of the guardian and one other person as new trustees of the settlement, and to the obtaining a transfer of the trust funds; these persons being shewn by affidavit to be fit and eligible to act as such trustees, and having consented in writing to act:—Mode of procedure and form of order in such a case. Jackson, In goods of, 7 L. R., Ir. 318.

In Case of Property of Married Women.]—By a post-nuptial settlement, an annuity for life was granted to a wife, her executors, administrators, and assigns, by her husband. The parties afterwards separated, and a decree dissolving the marriage by reason of the adultery of the husband was obtained in a Scotch court. Such decree, however, was ineffectual in this country, as the marriage had been celebrated in England and the parties domiciled here. Subsequently the husband died. After the decree made in Scotland, and before the death of her husband, she executed a will, in which she expressed an intention to dispose of her separate property only. This will was not republished after the death of the husband, and she made no other will. Probate was granted to the executor, limited to such property as he in his affidavit should state he believed to form part of her separate estate. Crofts, In goods of, L. R. 2 P. 18; 21 L. T. 596; 18 W. R. 230.

A wife died at Rome in 1854, in the lifetime of her husband. By an indenture of post-nuptial settlement it was provided that property which was then settled upon certain trusts, and any other property to which she might thereafter become entitled, should, in the event of her predeceasing her husband, and other events which happened, be distributable amongst her next of kin as if she had died unmarried and intestate. Her husband, an Italian, died at Rome in 1871, having executed a will, in which he appointed executors, but the will was not proved in this country. The wife was entitled to one-third share of her father's residuary personal estate which became distributable in November, 1874, and by an order of the court of chancery the share was carried over to her account. The court under these circumstances granted administration limited to the fund in chancery, to one of the next of kin, without requiring the representative of the husband to be cited. Gorofolini, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 36; 33 L. T. 72; 23 W. R. 456.

De bonis non.]—A limited administration de bonis non, with the will annexed, will not generally be granted to a legatee. The persons entitled to a general grant should be first cited; and if they do not take administration, the legatee will be entitled to a general grant. Watts, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 538; 29 L. J., P. 108; 8 W. R. 340.

A married woman made a will under a power, and appointed two executors. One of them proved, and the husband took out a cæterorum administration. The deceased was the executrix of a will which she had proved:—Held, that the claim of executorship was not continued by the appointment of executors made under the power, and that the residuary legatee of the original testatrix was therefore entitled to a grant of administration de bonis non, without citing those executors to accept or renounce probate. Hughes, In goods of, 29 L. J., P. 165.

Where the unadministered estate of a testator had been transferred to the accountant-general of the court of chancery, and a bill had been filed praying for it to be administered by that court, the court decreed a grant de bonis non to the residuary legatee for life, without requiring her to find sureties to the administration bond. Cleverly v. Gladdish, Cleverly, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 335; 31 L. J., P. 53; 5 L. T. 689; 10 W. R. 265.

A. died leaving a will, whereby he appointed his wife sole executrix and universal legatee. She took probate, and afterwards married B., and during her coverture made a will in execution of a power vested in her, and appointed B. sole executor. Upon her death B. took limited probate of her will, and also administration of the rest of her effects:—Held, that B., as representing the whole of his wife's personal estate, was entitled to administration of the unadministered effects of A. Martin, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 1; 32 L. J., P. 5; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1134; 7 L. T. 756; 11 W. R. 191.

B., sole executrix of and universal legatee named in a will of A., died intestate, and her three children took out a joint administration to her estate. One of the children subsequently died, and a second took up her residence in Australia. A representative being required to the estate of A., to transfer trust property, the court granted administration, with the will annexed, of the estate of A. left unadministered by B., to one of the administrators of the effects of B., the other surviving administrator having been cited and not appearing. Hancock, In goods of, Hancock v. Lightfoot, 3 Sw. & Tr. 557; 33 L. J., P. 174; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 758.

An executor named in a will proved the same, but died without having distributed the whole estate. The court decreed administration with the will annexed of the unadministered property, to the assignee in bankruptcy of the residuary legatee. Downward v. Dickinson, 34 L. J., P. 4; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1084; 11 L. T. 641.

If A. dies intestate, and B., who is solely entitled to A.'s personal estate, afterwards dies without taking out administration, the appointment of a representative to B. is a condition precedent to a grant of administration of the effects of A. Allen, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 559; 34 L. J., P. 1; 13 W. R. 106.

A., a married woman, the sole executrix and universal legatee named in the will of B., took probate of the same and died, leaving part of his estate unadministered. C., the sole executrix named in the will of A., took probate of the same limited to the property over which A. had a power of disposal, and also administration of the rest of her goods:—Held, that C. should take a grant of administration with the will annexed of the unadministered estate of B., and not a supplemental grant of administration of the goods of A., limited to such personal estate as vested in A. as sole executor of the will of B. Richards, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 44; L. R. 1 P. 156; 13 L. T. 757.

A joint grant of administration de bonis non was made under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, to a next of kin and to a person entitled in distribution, the next of kin consenting to the grant, and there being special circumstances rendering such joint grant convenient. Grundy, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 21; L. R. 1 P. 459; 17 L. T. 451; 16 W. R. 406.

Ad litem.]—The court, in accordance with the practice of the ecclesiastical courts, will make grants limited to substantiate proceedings in chancery on a mere averment of interest, without in any way considering the merits of the case, and the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44, does not apply where the estate to be represented is the very estate to be administered in the suit. Maclean v. Davison, 1 Sw. & Tr. 425.

D. propounded a will of E., which was opposed by H., one of the next of kin of E., and certain issues in the suit came on for hearing before the court of probate and a jury. Before the jury was sworn, terms of compromise were signed by counsel on behalf of both parties; one of which terms was that a Scotch confirmation of the will brought into court by D. should receive the seal of the court. Subsequently, the parties being unable to agree as to the meaning and effect to be given to the terms of compromise, D. moved to have the confirmation sealed and delivered out to him; the court refused to give effect to one of the terms of the compromise, the parties being unable to agree as to the rest, but held that D. was entitled to take out the confirmation unsealed. H. afterwards filed a bill in chancery for the administration of E.'s estate; a demurrer to this bill for want of parties was allowed. The estate of E. was also alleged to be vested in trustees by sequestration under the Scotch bankruptcy acts. H. moved for administration with the will annexed, pendente lite, or for administration limited to substantiate the proceedings in chancery:—Held, that the nominee of H. was entitled to a grant of the latter description. Hawarden v. Dunlop, 2 Sw. & Tr. 614; 31 L. J., P. 180; 7 L. T. 251.

F. died in 1836, leaving a will and one codicil, and therein appointed three executors and residuary legatees in trust. Two renounced and the third took probate, but died in 1853 intestate. All the residuary legatees named in the will and codicil then renounced except T., and on his being cited and not appearing, a grant de bonis non (will annexed) was made to K. as a creditor. He died in 1858, leaving personalty of F. unadministered. F. was indebted to his co-trustees of the marriage settlement of D. in respect of trust moneys misappropriated by him, which had been the subject of proceedings in chancery. By indenture of the 28th of December, 1860, the executors of the surviving trustee agreed with the persons beneficially entitled to the trust fund to transfer all their right and title to sue, on receiving discharges from such persons; and the court, on T. being cited and not appearing, granted to the nominee of the assignees of the executors of the surviving trustee administration de bonis non, with the will annexed, of F., limited to revive and substantiate the proceedings in chancery. Frampton, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 169; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 755; 8 L. T. 701.

The grant of letters of administration ad litem makes the grantee complete representative of the estate to the extent of the authority which the letters purport to confer, and a decree obtained against such grantee is therefore binding upon anyone who may afterwards take out general administration to the estate. Davis v. Chanter, 2 Ph. 545; 17 L. J., Ch. 297.

T. was not heard of from December, 1846. More than seven years afterwards, namely, in September, 1854, he would, if alive, have become entitled, by the death of a relative, to a share in her residuary personal estate. This share had, in his absence, been paid into the account of the accountant-general of the court of chancery, who, it was stated, was prepared to pay it to his administrator. He had no other property in this country. The court declined to make a general grant of administration to his brother, on the ground that he must be presumed to have died before the death of his relative, but made a grant limited to substantiate proceedings in the court of chancery. Turner, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 476; 33 L. J., P. 180; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 708.

A., under the impression that he was entitled in his own right to a share in the residue of an estate, assigned it for a sufficient consideration to B. At the time he executed the deed of assignment the share formed part of the estate of his father, to whom he was administrator. On the death of A. the court refused to grant administration to the executor of B. of the estate of the father, limited to A.'s interest in such share, the value of which had been ascertained in the court of chancery, but only limited to institute proceedings in that court, and to receive whatever he might be held entitled to by it. Burdon v. Morgan, Longhurst, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 26; L. R. 2 P. 371; 26 L. T. 405; 20 W. R. 613.

A husband died leaving a will of which his wife was sole executrix at the time of his death. The executrix took out probate and died leaving a will, the validity of which was disputed in a suit which was pending in the court. A representative of the husband being required to receive money due to his estate, the court appointed an administrator pendente lite to the estate of the husband. Dawes, In goods of (L. R. 2 P. 147), doubted but followed. Fawcett, In goods of, 58 L. J., P. 87; 14 P. D. 152; 61 L. T. 303.

Where the parties to a testamentary suit took no steps to bring it to trial, and an action had been commenced in the chancery division in which a receiver had been appointed, this court, on the application of a creditor not a party to the testamentary suit, appointed an administrator, pendente lite. Evans, In goods of, 15 P. D. 215; 63 L. T. 254.

—— To substantiate Claim in French Courts.]—When a woman died in France, leaving personal estate there but none in England, and it was alleged that, by the law of France, her husband, from whom she had eloped, could not establish his claim to her property there without a grant from the court of probate:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to make a limited grant to enable him to substantiate his claim to the property in the courts of France. Tucker, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 585; 34 L. J., P. 29.

—— For bringing Action for Damages for Negligence.]—Where the death of a married woman had been caused by negligence, and her husband, a mariner, was abroad at the time, and was not expected to return until after the twelve months limited by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, s. 3, for bringing an action to recover damages would expire, the court granted to her mother letters of administration limited for the purpose of bringing such action. Williams, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 40, n.

—— Subsequent Application for General Grant.]—A grant of administration in the goods of a deceased, limited to carry on proceedings in chancery, having lawfully issued and being still in force, the court will not revoke it, in order that a general grant may be made to the party who in the first instance would have been entitled thereto. The proper course is to supplement the limited grant with a grant of administration of the rest of the goods of the deceased. Brown, In goods of, L. R. 2 P. 455.

14. Probates of Wills affecting Real Estate.

How far Probate is Evidence.]—An appointment of a testamentary guardian is not "a devise or other testamentary disposition of or affecting real estate" within the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 79, s. 68 (similar to 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 64), so as to admit of being proved by "the probate of the will or the letters of administration with the will annexed, or a copy thereof, stamped with any seal of the court of probate." Cope v. Mooney, 14 Ir. C. L. R. 256; 10 L. T. 854.

Where the notice required by s. 68 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 79 (Irish), similar to s. 64 of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77 (English), has been given, and no counter-notice served, probate of a will obtained prior to the passing of that act, and sealed with the seal of the prerogative court, is admissible upon a question relating to real estate, and does not require for that purpose to be sealed with the seal of the court of probate. Irwin v. Callwell, 12 Ir. C. L. R. 144.

Sect. 68 of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 79 (Irish), only requires that the notice to be given thereunder shall state the party giving it means to rely on the probate of the will, or a copy thereof; and does not require the party giving such notice to specify the particular purposes for which he intends to make use of the probate or a copy thereof. Ib.

Probate of a will is admissible without being stamped with the seal of the court under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 64. The stamp of the seal of the court is required for a copy only. Rippon v. Priest, 3 F. & F. 644.

In ejectment by the heir-at-law against the devisee, he served on the plaintiff, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 64, a notice, addressed to her and her attorney, that he intended at the trial "to adduce in evidence the probate of the will as proof of the devise." The plaintiff did not within four days of the receipt of that notice give notice to the defendant that she disputed the validity of the will. At the trial the defendant produced the probate of the will duly stamped with the seal of the probate court:—Held, that the probate was not conclusive evidence of the validity and contents of the will. Barraclough v. Greenhough, 8 B. & S. 623; 36 L. J., Q. B. 251; L. R. 2 Q. B. 612; 15 W. R. 934—Ex. Ch.

15. Foreign and Colonial Grants.

In General.]—Administration granted in a foreign court (as in Paris) not taken notice of in other courts. Tourton v. Fowler, 3 P. Wms. 371.

A will of a personal estate, which lies in a foreign country, may be proved there. Jauncy v. Sealey, 1 Vern. 397.

A. died beyond the sea, and made a nuncupative will; B. took administration here, and brought his bill for a discovery of the supposed intestate's personal estate. The defendant pleaded the will, and that he was executor, and that A. left no assets but what were beyond seas. Plea allowed. Ib.

When administration is granted in England to a person dying here, administration must be granted to the same person in the colonies. Burn v. Coles, Ambl. 416.

Administration taken out here will not extend to the colonies in America, but an agent there who gets in assets under the exemplification of probate, is equally chargeable as if executor got them in himself. Atkins v. Smith, 2 Atk. 63.

Where a party domiciled in one country has personal estate in another, though probate of his will in the latter country may be granted for the purpose of getting in his estate, yet such probate must be treated as ancillary to the law of the country of the domicil, and distribution of the estate ought to be directed accordingly. A British subject domiciled in France made, during a short visit to England, a will inconsistent with French law, which will was admitted to probate in the prerogative court. On a motion being made for an injunction to restrain the executor so appointed from getting in the estate: it was held that the court was not at liberty to question the validity of the appointment of executor, but that on a suit properly framed, distribution might be compelled according to the French law. Thornton v. Curling, 8 Sim. 310.

Payment of a sum of 34*l.* to the legal personal representatives under a Genevese probate refused. Lassuer v. Tyrconnel, 10 Beav. 28.

An Englishman having died intestate in Belgium, possessed of real and personal property there, his brother went over from England and obtained representation to him pur et simple, which by the Belgian law imposed upon him a personal obligation to pay all the debts of the intestate, independently of the amount of the assets. The intestate's brother afterwards returned to this country, but did not take possession of any property in England belonging to the intestate. A creditor of the intestate obtained letters of administration to him in England:—Held, that he could not sue the intestate's brother in equity in respect of the personal liability which he had so incurred, but that his remedy to recover his debt was at law. Beavan v. Hastings (Lord), 2 Kay & J. 724; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1044; 4 W. R. 785.

Held, also, that the intestate's brother, as he had not taken possession of any of the English property of the intestate, was not an executor de son tort. Ib.

Foreign Grant.]—Probate in common form of a will alleged to be valid by the law of a foreign country will be granted on primâ facie proof that the foreign court has adopted it as a valid testament, but the certificate of a notary public, referring to some act of a foreign court, is not sufficient. Deshais, In goods of; De Vigny (Countess) In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 13; 34 L. J., P. 58; 12 L. T. 54; 13 L. T. 246; 13 W. R. 616, 640.

A Spaniard died at Bilbao, in Spain. On the day of his death he caused a document to be prepared by a notary, purporting to give authority to his wife to make a will on his behalf. In pursuance of this authority she made a will on his behalf after his decease, and appointed herself executrix. The court being satisfied from the affidavit of a Spanish advocate that such a will was valid according to the law of Spain, decreed probate. Guttierez, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 48; 20 L. T. 758; 17 W. R. 742.

The court refused to follow a foreign grant which was made by the foreign court to persons who were not entitled as of right, but who were nominated by the widow and next of kin for the purpose, there being nothing on the face of the proceedings to shew that she had renewed the consent in their favour in respect of the administration of the English estate. Weaver, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 41; 15 L. T. 331; 15 W. R. 199.

The court follows the grant of the court of the testator's domicil, as to the document which that court has admitted to probate, but not as to the person to whom the grant is made. Cosnahan, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 76; L. R. 1 P. 183; 14 L. T. 337; 14 W. R. 969.

Where a testator dies domiciled in a foreign country, and probate has been granted in that country, the court will indorse that grant without examining the grounds on which it was based. Smith, In goods of, 16 W. R. 1130.

Where one executor is appointed in Amboyna, and another in England, and the latter proves the will in England, and the former does not, the assets in England will not be bound by the act of the executor in Amboyna, even supposing him to have a right, by the Dutch law, to prove the will here and administer the assets here. Lord v. Genslin, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 189.

Foreign Will—Duly authorised Copy admitted to Probate in this Country.]—A foreigner domiciled abroad left a will disposing of property in England containing these words: "My wife during her life is to have the unrestricted right of administration and usufruct of the whole of my estate, and without giving security." Expert evidence was called to shew that by the law of the domicil of the deceased—first, the above words would constitute the widow an executrix as completely as though she had been expressly nominated; and, secondly, that the original will was by law compelled to be placed in a certain recognised repository, and not allowed to leave the country, but that the local courts would recognise a notarial copy as having the same force and effect as the original. On this evidence probate of a duly authorised copy of the will was granted, limited to such time as might elapse before the original will could be brought in, to the widow, as executrix according to the tenor thereof. Lemme, In goods of (61 L. J., P. 123; [1892] P. 89), followed as to form of grant. Von Linden, In goods of, 65 L. J., P. 87; [1896] P. 148; 44 W. R. 448.

Where a will has been proved in the proper court of the domicil of the deceased, it is the ordinary practice of the court to grant probate on a copy of the will authenticated by the authorities of the place of domicil; in the case of a Russian probate, however, as the original will forms part of such probate, it will accept a certified copy of the will made in this country. Clarke, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 72; 16 L. T. 366; 15 W. R. 881.

The prayer for probate may also be supported on another ground, viz. on the affidavit of a skilled person as to the validity of such a paper by the law of the foreign country, and on an affidavit as to the domicil of the deceased. Ib.

Where a translation of a will originally written in English has been proved in the court of a foreign country, and probate is asked on that ground, a retranslation of the translation is the proper document to produce; but if proof of the validity of the paper by the law of the foreign domicil is relied on, then the original, or a copy of the original, should be before the court. Ib.

Limited to English Assets.]—The testator, a domiciled German subject, died in Germany, leaving a will in German form. In accordance with the laws of that country, and in pursuance of a request in the will, the local German court appointed German executors, who now applied for probate in this country in respect of the English assets of the deceased. The court made a grant of probate to the German executors limited to the testator's assets in this country. Briesmann, In goods of, 72 L. T. 268.

Assets in India.]—A testator resident in India, and having all his property there, bequeathed his residuary estate to H.; but if she should die before him, then to her children. H. died before the testator, and the executor, who was also resident in India, proved the will there, and remitted the residue to his agent in England, with directions to pay it to H. or her children. A suit having been instituted by the children, who were infants, against the executor and his agents, to have the residue secured:—Held, that the legacy duty was payable upon it, and that administration to the testator ought to have been taken out in this country, and the administrator made a party to suit. Logan v. Fairlie, 2 Sim. & S. 284; 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 152.

An Indian company was ordered to be wound up by the court of chancery. An Indian creditor of the company had received a dividend on his claim. He then died, and his will was proved in India by his executor, whose domicil was in that country. A further dividend became payable after the creditor's death:—Held, that the dividend could not be transmitted to the executor without requiring him to take out probate in England. Fernandez, Ex parte, Commercial Bank Corporation of India and the East, In re, L. R. 5 Ch. 314; 22 L. T. 219; 18 W. R. 411. Reversing 39 L. J., Ch. 497.

E. having died in Ireland intestate, letters of administration were granted in Ireland to the plaintiff. Part of his assets being in India, the plaintiff sent out a power of attorney to F. & Company in India, who procured letters of administration to be granted to them in India for the use and benefit of the plaintiff, received the Indian assets, paid the Indian debts, and remitted the surplus to their agents in England. The Irish letters of administration were sealed in England:—Held, that the agents in England were bound to hand over the fund to the plaintiff, and could not require the concurrence of the next of kin, they not having taken any legal proceedings to prevent the plaintiff from receiving the assets. Eames v. Hacon, 50 L. J., Ch. 740; 18 Ch. D. 347; 45 L. T. 196; 29 W. R. 877—C. A.

A creditor of a person who died intestate in India, took out letters of administration to the deceased, in that country. He then came to England, and obtained letters of administration from the prerogative court. Afterwards one of the testator's next of kin procured that administration to be revoked, and administration to be granted to himself:—Held, that the Indian administrator is compellable to account to him for assets possessed in India as well as in this country, in a suit instituted by him as personal representative only of the intestate, and to which the other next of kin, who were resident in India, were not parties. Sandilands v. Innes, 3 Sim. 263.

To a bill which seeks an account of the assets of an intestate who died in India, possessed by a personal representative there, a personal representative of the intestate constituted in England, is a necessary party, although it does not appear that the intestate, at the time of death, had any assets in England. And it is not sufficient, in order to avoid a demurrer for want of parties in such a case, that the personal representative constituted in India, who is out of the jurisdiction, is made a party, and that process is prayed against her when within the jurisdiction; although the bill alleges that the Indian court was the proper court for granting administration, and that the administratrix constituted by it is the sole legal personal representative of the intestate. Tyler v. Bell, 2 Myl. & C. 89; 1 Keen, 826; 6 L. J., Ch. 169; 1 Jur. 20.

A., one of the executors of the will of B., who died in India, proved the will, and possessed the testator's assets in India. The widow and executrix of A. proved her husband's will, and possessed his assets in India, and having afterwards come to England she was made a party to a suit for the administration of B.'s estate:—Held, that it was not necessary that an administrator of A.'s estate in England should be also a party to their suit. Anderson v. Counter, 2 Myl. & K. 763.

To a suit in respect of an unadministered part of a testator's estate, which has been remitted from India, and remains in the hands of an executor residing in England, but who was only constituted executor of the testator in India, against such executor, a personal representative constituted in England is a necessary party. Bond v. Graham, 1 Hare, 482; 11 L. J., Ch. 306; 6 Jur. 620.

B. died in India, and his will was proved there by two of the executors. One came to England, and a portion of the testator's assets was remitted to him there by his co-executor, who shortly afterwards died. On a bill filed by his executor in England for an account of the moneys so remitted to him:—Held, that the probate or administration ought to have been taken out in this country. Ib.

Colonial Grant.] — A married woman died domiciled in the colony of the Cape of Good Hope. On her marriage with B. an agreement was entered into between them which, according to the laws of the colony, excluded B. from all right or interest in her property, but did not deprive him of the right to administration of her personal estate and effects, in the event of her dying intestate. On her death, intestate, letters of administration were granted by the supreme court of the colony to the husband of her sister, and the court granted administration of her personal estate and effects in England to one of her brothers and next of kin resident in this country, without requiring the husband to be cited. Probart, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 71; 16 L. T. 298; 15 W. R. 798.

A person died domiciled in New South Wales, in which country probate of his will was granted to A., as executor according to its tenor. According to the practice the words of the will did not constitute an executorship; but, in order to follow the colonial grant as near as possible, the court directed that administration should issue to A. under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, as the person entitled by the grant from the proper court in New South Wales to administer the effects of the deceased. Earl, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 127; L. R. 1 P. 450; 16 L. T. 799.

A certified copy of a will and codicil which had been proved in Jamaica was sent to this country by the secretary of the island, but by mistake the probate was not sent. The court being satisfied by the certificate of the secretary that the copy sent was a true copy of the will and codicil, granted probate until a more authentic copy should be brought into the registry. Turner, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 82; 15 L. T. 446.

Colonial letters of administration will entitle the administrator to sue in this country in respect of a sum of stock standing in the names of trustees, to a share of which the intestate was entitled. M'Mahon v. Rawlings, 16 Sim. 429.

16. Scotch and Irish Grants.

Scotch Grant—Finding of Commissary as to Domicil.]—The finding of the commissary as to Scotch domicil, under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 56, ss. 9, 12, is conclusive evidence of the fact of domicil for the purposes of that act only, i.e. for rendering it unnecessary to take an English probate in respect of assets in England; but it has no effect in determining any issues raised in a suit in the court of probate, which will proceed to try such issues, though a confirmation of the will in question is tendered for the seal of the court. Hawarden v. Dunlop, 2 Sw. & Tr. 340; 31 L. J., P. 17; 5 L. T. 765.

—— Confirmation.]—Executors of a Scotch will, having sent the original confirmation granted by the commissary court to the colony of Victoria, obtained a duplicate confirmation from that court, and applied under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 56, s. 12, to have the seal of the probate court affixed to it. The court ordered the seal to be affixed, on the ground that it was bound to give faith to the commissary's certificate, and could not take into consideration the fact that the confirmation was a duplicate. Webster, In goods of, 29 L. J., P. 66; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1270.

The fact of one of three executors having declined to accept a confirmation in Scotland is no bar to his afterwards applying, the other executors having died, for a grant of probate in England. Campbell, In goods of, 23 L. T. 323; 18 W. R. 844.

Where confirmation of the executor of a person who has died domiciled in Scotland has been sealed with the seal of the court of probate, in manner provided by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 56, s. 12, the executor has all the powers of an ordinary English executor, and may sell and dispose of leaseholds in England, although they are specifically bequeathed, and although, by the law of Scotland, an executor cannot deal with leasehold property in that country. Hood v. Barrington (Lord), L. R. 6 Eq. 218.

The plaintiffs, who were nominated executors in a Scotch will, obtained ex parte, in Scotland, a confirmation of the nomination, and afterwards procured, as of course, the seal of the probate court in England thereto. They then sued some debtors of the testator in the court of chancery:—Held, that the pendency of proceedings in Scotland for a reduction of the confirmation was no defence, and the defendants were ordered to pay to the plaintiffs the amount due to the testator's estate. Cumming v. Fraser, 28 Beav. 614.

—— Eik, or Additional Confirmation.]—On the death of a domiciled Scotchman, his widow filed in the commissary court at Jedburgh an inventory of his estate, distinguishing which part was situate in Scotland and which in England, and the value of each, and she was decreed and confirmed executrix dative to the deceased. The confirmation was sealed in England. Subsequently additional estate was discovered in England. Thereupon the executrix filed a fresh inventory of such estate in the commissary court, and obtained an eik, or an additional confirmation, the court ordering the eik to be sealed in the registry. Ryde, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 49; L. R. 2 P. 86; 23 L. T. 166; 18 W. R. 902.

The seal of the court will not be affixed to an eik, or an additional confirmation. Hutcheson, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 165; 32 L. J., P. 167; 11 W. R. 772.

Where an original confirmation obtained in a commissary court of Scotland is incomplete, it is requisite, for the purpose of obtaining the seal of the court of probate, that there should be a new confirmation, including the whole of the personal estate in England and Scotland. Ib.

An additional confirmation granted under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 56, s. 12, does not apply to an original confirmation granted before that act came into operation. Gordon, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 622; 29 L. J., P. 67.

Where an inventory has been recorded in a commissary court of Scotland of the personal estate of a person who died domiciled in Scotland, and confirmation has been granted in respect of the same, and afterwards an additional inventory has been recorded of personal estate belonging to the deceased in England, and an eik, or additional confirmation, has been granted in respect of the same, the court of probate will not seal such eik, or additional confirmation. Wingate, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 625; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 142.

—— Inventory.]—In a form of confirmation produced in order to be sealed in the English court of probate, it was not stated that the inventory given in on oath contained the personal estate of the deceased "at the time of his death":—Held, that since 23 & 24 Vict. c. 80, the fifth section of which requires that certain property, to be included in the inventory, shall be taken at its value on the day the inventory is sworn to, such words are properly omitted. Hay, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 273; 33 L. J., P. 25; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 136; 9 L. T. 454.

Assets in Scotland and England—Will proved in Scotland only—Right of Legatee to Insist upon Proof in England.]—W. E. died possessed of property of small value in this country, and entitled under the will of J. O. E. to large assets in Scotland which were being duly administered there. The executors of W. E. proved his will in Scotland only. G. W. H., a legatee under W. E.'s will, applied for a grant of administration of the estate of W. E. in this country, which application was opposed by the executors:—Held, that the court is not bound to make such a grant, but that its power is discretionary. Ewing, In goods of, or Hope v. Ewing, 50 L. J., P. 11; 6 P. D. 19; 44 L. T. 278; 29 W. R. 474; 45 J. P. 376.

Held, also, that, it not having been shewn that the executors were not doing their duty, there was no necessity for any grant in this country. Application refused. Ib.

A similar application was made by another legatee upon the ground also that such a grant was necessary to substantiate proceedings in chancery. Application refused on its being proved that the grant was not necessary for the suit in chancery. Ib.

The courts in Scotland have no power to appoint persons to administer property in England, that power being exclusively vested in the English ecclesiastical courts, and of that the Scotch courts are bound to take notice. Preston v. Melville (Viscount), 8 Cl. & F. 1.

Where a testator domiciled in Scotland died possessed of large real estate there, and of personal estate there and in England, and devised the whole to executors and trustees, who renounced the office and trusts, and one of his next of kin, and devisee, obtained administration in England, and other trustees were by consent appointed by the court of session in Scotland:—Held, that the latter had no power to administer the personal estate in England, nor to call upon the administratrix to transfer the property to them; although the law of the domicile governs the succession wherever situated, yet the estate itself is to be administered in the country where possession is taken of it under lawful authority. Ib.

A testator domiciled in England, but occasionally residing in Scotland, gave the residue of his real and personal estate, the bulk of which was locally situated in England, to two of his sons, one of whom at the time of the testator's death was indebted to an insurance company, carrying on business in England and Scotland. The will was proved in England, and probate recorded in Scotland. The insurance company, having previously obtained judgment in an English court, instituted proceedings against the executors in the court of session to arrest in their hands the share of the debtor in the testator's residuary estate. One of the executors filed a bill for administration of the estate in England, and moved for an injunction to restrain the proceedings in Scotland. The court granted the injunction upon his undertaking to obtain an administration decree forthwith. Baillie v. Baillie, 37 L. J., Ch. 225; 16 W. R. 272.

In such cases the mere fact of a bill pending for administration is sufficient to support the injunction. It is not necessary that there should have been a decree. Ib.

—— Memorandum as to Domicil of Deceased after Issue of Probate.]—A note or a memorandum on a probate that the deceased died domiciled in England may, under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 56, s. 14, be written after the probate has issued. Allison, In goods of, 34 L. J., P. 20; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1244; 11 L. T. 514; 13 W. R. 277.

Irish.]—Letters of administration granted in the Irish probate registry, limited to a fund, were presented in the probate registry in England to be resealed. They had attached to them a certificate from the inland revenue office, that the deceased had no personal estate within the jurisdiction of the English probate court to be affected by the administration, and from the registrar of the Irish probate court, that a bond had been given sufficient in amount to cover the property to which the said administration was limited:—Held, that the requirements of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 79, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, had not been complied with, and the letters of administration could not be resealed. Roche, In goods of, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 784.

After a testamentary suit had been determined by a decree that a paper writing propounded as the last will of a deceased was invalid, the court ordered an Irish grant of administration, which had been brought into the registry, to be resealed with the seal of the court of probate in England under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 79, s. 95. Collins, In goods of, 32 L. J., P. 26; 11 W. R. 154.

A party, having obtained letters of administration of the effects of a deceased in this country, and given security to cover the property in England only, may subsequently give additional security to include property in Ireland, in order to apply for the certificate of the registrar in England, without which, under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 31, s. 25, such letters cannot be resealed in Ireland. Potts, In goods of, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 486; 2 L. T. 255; 8 W. R. 454.

G. died intestate, leaving her husband surviving her, who did not take administration to her estate. The will of the husband was proved in the prerogative court of Armagh, Ireland, but no grant was made in this country. The will of the sole executor of the husband was also proved in Ireland, but was resealed in London:—Held, that the executor under the last-mentioned will did not represent the husband in England so as to be entitled to obtain administration of the goods of the deceased. Gaynor, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 79; L. R. 1 P. 723; 21 L. T. 367; 17 W. R. 1062.

17. In other Cases.

Debtors.]—Making a debtor an executor is not an extinguishment of the debt. Carey v. Goodinge, 3 Bro. C. C. 110.

Where a creditor makes his debtor, or one of his joint and several debtors, his executor, either alone or with others, the debt is discharged by operation of law, for he cannot have an action against himself; and a personal thing if suspended is lost. Cheetham v. Ward, 1 Bos. & P. 630.

Where the payee of a promissory note made the maker his executor:—Held, that the debt was discharged, and that no action could be maintained on the note, even by a person to whom the executor had indorsed it. Freakly v. Fox, 9 B. & C. 130; 4 M. & Ry. 18; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 148.

Parties in Equal Degree.]—A person died leaving a brother and three sisters surviving him. The brother had been twice bankrupt, and on the last occasion had paid no dividend. The parties applying for administration were, on the one hand, the brother, and, on the other, two of the sisters, with the assent of the third:—Held, that the court, where it has a discretion, will, cæteris paribus, grant administration to a male in preference to a female, but not so when such grant is opposed by those who have a majority of interests in the property. Iredale v. Ford, 1 Sw. & Tr. 305; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 474; 7 W. R. 462.

Where several parties in equal degree apply for administration, the party obtaining it will be required to find justifying security to the amount of the share of the dissenting party. Ib.

Parties Abroad.]—When administration to an estate of a person who died, resident abroad, is applied for, it should appear upon affidavit that he left personal property in this country. Evans v. Burrell, 4 Sw. & Tr. 185; 28 L. J., P. 82.

Where A., the person primarily entitled to letters of administration, is abroad, and a citation has issued, but has not been personally served, calling on him to accept or refuse letters of administration, or shew cause why they should not be granted to B., who, in the event of A.'s refusing to accept administration, would be entitled to them, the court, before granting administration to B., requires an affidavit that A. has no agent in this country. Ib.

Male or Female.]—Cæteris paribus, the male is preferred to the female in a contest for a grant of administration, but the female, when with the consent of the male she is prior petens, is preferred to the male who afterwards opposes her taking the grant. Cordeux v. Trasler, 4 Sw. & Tr. 48; 34 L. J., P. 127; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 587.

Although charges of intemperance and misconduct were alleged against the eldest male next of kin, who represented the majority of interests, and who was the prior applicant, the court granted administration to him in preference to a female representative of the deceased. Ellison v. M'Cormick, 14 W. R. 742.

When there has been an Intermeddling.]—On a proxy of renunciation and consent being filed by a widow, which omitted, however, the declaration that she had not intermeddled in the estate (she having intermeddled therein through mistake), the court granted administration to the natural and lawful father of the deceased. Fell, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 126; 3 L. T. 756; 9 W. R. 252.

The executors of a will intermeddled in the estate and effects of their testator without taking probate of the instrument. A citation having been served upon them to enter an appearance and take probate, they entered an appearance, but took no further steps in the matter. The court refused to grant an attachment against them for contempt in not obeying the citation, but directed a peremptory order to be served upon them to take probate within ten days from the date of the order. Mordaunt v. Clarke, 38 L. J., P. 45; L. R. 1 P. 592; 19 L. T. 610.

Assignees of Bankrupts.]—A., in 1813, assigned certain bills of exchange and negotiable instruments to B., who was, in 1833, adjudicated a bankrupt. In 1862, C., being his official assignee, assigned the sums remaining due and to become due on the bills of exchange and the negotiable instruments to D., as purchaser, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, s. 137, and D. sold and assigned them to E. The court declined to make a grant of the personal effects of A., limited to the aforesaid sums (the next of kin of A. having been cited and not appearing), to E., but made the grant to D. as assignee of the official assignee. Coles, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 181; 33 L. J., P. 175; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1080; 9 L. T. 519.

A. died leaving a will, whereof he appointed B. executor and residuary legatee. B. proved the will, and afterwards became bankrupt, and subsequently died intestate, leaving part of the estate of A. unadministered. At the time of his bankruptcy B. was a creditor of A. The court granted administration with the will annexed of the unadministered estate of A. to the assignee in bankruptcy of B. in the character of assignee of a residuary legatee. Chune, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 564; 11 L. T. 641.

A married woman had, at the time of her death, a reversionary interest under the will of her grandmother, and shortly afterwards her estate became absolutely entitled to 242*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.* as her share of her grandmother's residuary personal estate. She left no children, and her husband was adjudicated a bankrupt. The husband refused to renounce administration, and did not appear to a citation issued by the trustee under his bankruptcy. The court, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, granted letters of administration to the trustee under the husband's bankruptcy, limited to the share of the deceased in the residuary personal estate of her grandmother. Tilley v. Trussler, 26 W. R. 760.

A married woman died intestate, the whole value of her separate estate being 20*l.* Her husband shortly afterwards absconded, and was adjudicated a bankrupt:—Held, that the husband's right to administration did not pass to the trustee in his bankruptcy under s. 44 the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, but that there were "special circumstances" to justify a grant to the trustee in bankruptcy under s. 73 of the Probate Act, 1857, without citing the husband. Turner, In goods of, 56 L. J., P. 41; 12 P. D. 18; 57 L. T. 372; 35 W. R. 384. See also Brown, In goods of, ante, col. 502.

Trustees.]—When a court of equity had made an order under the Trustee Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 60), ss. 27 and 32, substituting new trustees for those named in the will, the court of probate granted administration with the will annexed to the substituted trustees without requiring the execution of a deed of conveyance to them by the old trustees. Woodfall, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 64; L. R. 3 P. 108; 29 L. T. 248; 21 W. R. 933.

A., who died intestate, was one of the executors and trustees of his father's will, and applied to his own use considerable sums, part of the trust funds, which came into his hands as trustee. A renunciation and consent having been filed by the next of kin, the court granted administration of the personal estate and effects of the deceased to B. and C., the substituted trustees under his father's will. Bond. In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 41; 33 L. T. 71; 23 W. R. 597.

—— Of Marriage Settlement—20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73.]—A. died intestate. His estate was insolvent, the only asset of any value being an interest in a mortgage of property in Ceylon, which he had conveyed to the trustees of his marriage settlement, one of whom was B., his brother-in-law. A. was a widower, and left five children, two of whom were of full age. The two adult children renounced administration. The court, on a renunciation by the eldest son on behalf of the minor children, who had appointed him as their guardian for the purpose of the application, made a grant of administration to B. under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73. Tyndall, In goods of, 51 L. J., P. 12; 30 W. R. 231; 46 J. P. 169.

The sole next of kin of an intestate was a married woman whose husband had been for several years in Australia without being heard of. By a settlement executed on the marriage all property was settled upon the wife to her separate use, independently of her husband and without power of anticipation, with remainder to the husband for life, remainder to the children of the marriage. The wife having renounced administration, the court granted letters of administration to the trustees of the settlement under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73. Mayehell, In goods of, 47 L. J., P. 31; 4 P. D. 74; 39 L. T. 94; 26 W. R. 439.

Officers of Isle of Man.]—In the Isle of Man officers called "sumners" are appointed in each parish by the bishop, whose duty it is to take upon themselves grants of administration with the wills annexed in the event of executors refusing to act, or being unable to give security to the ecclesiastical court of the diocese. A. died in the Isle of Man, leaving a will, whereof he appointed executors. The executors being unable to give security to the ecclesiastical court of the diocese, administration with the will annexed was granted to B., sumner for the parish in which A. died. The executors having been cited and not appearing, the court, upon an affidavit as to the circumstances under which the grant was made to B., and upon B.'s consent being filed in the registry, granted administration with the will annexed to the residuary legatee. Whiston, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 318. S. C. nom. Cubbon v. Steele, 30 L. J., P. 192; 5 L. T. 140.

Corporation.]—When an executor named in a will is a corporation aggregate, administration with the will annexed will be granted to its syndic, i.e. a person specially appointed by the corporation for that purpose. Darke, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 516; 29 L. J., P. 71; 2 L. T. 24; 8 W. R. 273.

Receivers of the Court of Chancery.]—Proceedings in chancery having been taken by persons having claims upon the estate of an intestate against his widow, who was alleged to have possessed herself of part of the estate, but who had not taken out administration, the court of chancery appointed a receiver, with authority to collect, get in, and receive the estate, and to apply to the court of probate for administration. The widow and all the next of kin and persons entitled in distribution having been cited, upon their non-appearance to the citation, the court made a general grant of administration to the receiver. Mayer, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 57; L. R. 3 P. 39; 29 L. T. 247.

Oath of Administrator.]—The mother of an intestate was the sole forthcoming next of kin, and as no positive intelligence had been received of the father's death, though he had been missing since 1852, the court allowed the administratrix to swear that she believed herself to be the sole next of kin. Reed, In goods of, 29 L. T. 932.

Foreigner's Property in England.]—A domiciled Paraguayan died in Paraguay, leaving personal property in England. After his death, but before a grant was made in England, a decree of the government of Paraguay declared that all his property, wheresoever situate, was the property of the nation of Paraguay. The court held that, although by the law of Paraguay, as existing at the time when the grant of the probate of his will was applied for, the will might be invalid, the right to the grant and the succession to the property must be governed by the law of Paraguay as it existed at the time of the death; and, therefore, that the government of Paraguay had no locus standi to contest the validity of the will. Lynch v. Paraguay Government, 40 L. J., P. 81; L. R. 2 P. 268; 25 L. T. 164; 19 W. R. 982.

When the deceased is domiciled in a foreign country, and an application is made to the probate court either for an original or a de bonis grant of administration, it will be prepared to make it to the person recognised by the proper court of that country. Hill, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 52; L. R. 2 P. 89; 23 L. T. 167; 18 W. R. 1005.

Succession to chattels real depends on the law of the country wherein they are situate, and not on that of the deceased's domicil; and in case of intestacy the right to administration as to chattels real must follow the right of succession to them; and it is not the practice of the court of probate to limit its grants by the measure of the beneficial interest of the grantee. Gentili, In goods of, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 541.

Where, therefore, a married woman, domiciled in Italy, died there possessed of a leasehold interest in Ireland settled to her separate use, her husband was held entitled to an unqualified administration as to the leasehold, although his beneficial interest in it was but limited. Ib.

Dying Abroad.]—When a party in respect of whose estate a grant is asked for died abroad, there should be an affidavit that he left personal property in England, otherwise the court has no jurisdiction to make the grant. Evans v. Burrell, 4 Sw. & Tr. 185; 28 L. J., P. 82.

In Case of Felons.]—A wife became entitled to a legacy of 100*l.* in 1827. In 1833 she was convicted of felony and transported to Van Diemen's Land for seven years. In 1843 she received a certificate of freedom, and was not heard of afterwards. The legacy, which was the only property to which she was entitled, became payable in 1870. The court required notice to be served on the Queen's proctor before granting administration of her personal estate and effects to her husband. Stevens or Stephens, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 23; 28 L. T. 143; 21 W. R. 345; 12 Cox, C. C. 382.

Bastardy—Grants to the Crown—Practice.]—The practice heretofore followed of allowing grants to go to the crown before oath sworn that the deceased died a bastard and intestate disapproved of. The court expressed the intention to alter the practice in future. Frend, In goods of, 66 L. T. 380.

Legitimacy Doubtful—Agreement between Parties interested in Estate.]—Doubts having arisen as to the legitimacy of the person claiming to be next of kin, it was agreed between the persons interested in the estate of the intestate that such claimant should apply for a grant of administration under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, and that the estate should afterwards be divided between them and the claimant:—Held, that there were "special circumstances" to warrant the court in making a grant to the person applying in pursuance of the agreement. Minshull, In goods of, 58 L. J., P. 69; 14 P. D. 151; 61 L. T. 257; 38 W. R. 80.

Unexecuted Testamentary Paper naming Executors—Consent of Parties.]—D. died intestate, leaving an unexecuted paper signed by him, wherein he named his widow and two eldest sons as his executors. He left a widow and six children, of whom five were over twenty-one, and the sixth was twenty years and six months old:—The court, having regard to the age of the minor, the wishes of the deceased as expressed in the unexecuted testamentary paper, and the consent of all parties interested, made a grant of administration to the widow and the two eldest sons. Newbold, In goods of (L. R. 1 P. 285) distinguished. Dickinson, In goods of, 60 L. J., P. 94; [1891] P. 292; 64 L. T. 808.

No known Relatives—No Residuary Legatee—Grant to Stranger—Sect. 73.]—A testator, by his will, bequeathed a life interest in his estate, which consisted solely of five leasehold houses, to his wife, with remainder to his stepson, whom he nominated his sole executor. The stepson died without having proved the will, and his wife took out administration to his estate. The testator's widow entered into possession, and received the rents of the houses during her life, and by her will bequeathed them to her son C. B., who proved the will. Disputes having arisen as to the interests of other members of the family under a previous will, it was arranged that the stepson's administratrix should take out letters of administration with the will annexed to the estate of the testator and divide the property; but she died before the arrangement could be carried out. The testator had no known relatives, and his will did not appoint a residuary legatee:—Held, that under the circumstances a grant of administration with the will annexed to the estate of the testator might be made to C. B. Jackson, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 126; [1892] P. 257; 67 L. T. 327; 56 J. P. 457.

C. ADMINISTRATION BOND.

General Rules as to.]—The court will not determine the amount under which an estate is to be sworn. Cleverly, In goods of, Cleverly v. Gladdish, 2 Sw. & Tr. 335; 31 L. J., P. 53; 5 L. T. 689; 10 W. R. 265.

The general rule is, that creditors are not entitled to require the next of kin, or the guardian of the next of kin, to give justifying security; and a very strong case ought to be made out before a departure from the rule is allowed. John v. Bradbury, 36 L. J., P. 33; L. R. 1 P. 245; 15 L. T. 414; 15 W. R. 285.

F. appointed S. residuary legatee and executor, and in case of his decease leaving the directions of the will unperformed, substituted P. as executor. In August, 1850, probate was granted to S., who died in December, 1862, leaving certain legatees of income for their lives under the will surviving. P. renounced probate, and the widow of S. renounced administration with the will annexed. One of the legatees for life was entitled to administration with the will annexed, technically a cessat grant, on which a bond is usually required in double the amount of the deceased's property at time of death. The court directed a bond to be taken in the same amount as would have been required if the grant had been one de bonis non. Foxard, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 173; 32 L. J., P. 160; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 756; 8 L. T. 702; 12 W. R. 19.

Lodging Assets in Court under Trustee Relief Act—Surety.]—The surety in the probate court of an administrator who has got money assets of the intestate in his hands, may lodge it in court under the Trustee Relief Act. Monahan's Estate, In re, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 353.

The balance of the assets of an intestate, after they have been fully administered, should be lodged to a credit entitled, "In the matter of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 68, and separate credit of the next of kin" of the intestate. Ib.

When Penalty will be Reduced—Sureties.]—When an administrator, who was the sole person entitled in distribution, had no friends in this country willing to become sureties, the court, though it refused to dispense with the ordinary bonds, allowed the amount to be spread over several sureties or to be secured by one surety alone. Smith, In goods of, 29 L. T. 932.

When the estate was under 5,000*l.*, and all the debts of the intestate, with the exception of a few small debts, amounting to 25*l.*, had been paid and satisfied by the administrator, who was the only next of kin and the only person entitled in distribution to the personal estate, the court required only one surety to join in the administration bond. Bellamy, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 49; 33 L. T. 71; 23 W. R. 552.

The husband of the sole next of kin of a deceased lunatic administered to the estate after her death. The estate was considerable, and the applicant being in humble circumstances was unable to find the requisite sureties. The court allowed the applicant himself to give a bond for the full amount of the usual penalties, and ordered him to find sureties in 100*l.* Harrow, In goods of, 21 L. T. 834.

A wife took out administration to her husband's estate, and became insane before completely administering it. The court in granting administration to the son allowed the sureties to justify for the present instead of the original value of the estate. James, In goods of, 21 L. T. 730.

When a limited administration was granted merely to enable the personal representative to assign the legal estate in certain leaseholds of the value of 6,000*l.*, which had been sold by the trustees, the court allowed the administrator's bond to be in the nominal penalty of 200*l.* Bowlby, In goods of, 45 L. J., P. 100.

A. died intestate, leaving B. his only next of kin, and solely entitled in distribution. His personal estate was of the value of about 55*l.*, and it seemed that he had no debts. B. being unable, through poverty, to obtain sureties to the amount of 200*l.*, the penalty of the requisite bond, the court reduced the penalty to 60*l.* Harrigan, In goods of, 32 L. J., P. 204.

A. died intestate, leaving personalty sworn under the value of 6,000*l.* A.'s father, who was his only next of kin, and the only person entitled in distribution, being unable to procure sureties to a bond in a penalty for double the amount of the estate, the court accepted two sureties in 1,000*l.* each. M'Donald, in goods of, 32 L. J., P. 132; 11 W. R. 957.

An administratrix was allowed to enter into a bond, with sureties, in the penalty of 100*l.* only, although the effects would be sworn under 3,000*l.* Gent, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 54 ; 27 L. J., P. 37 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 341 ; 6 W. R. 460.

On an administration with the will annexed de bonis non, to a contingent annuitant and legatee, with the consent of minor children beneficially interested, the property about 8,000*l.*, the court allowed two sureties to justify to the amount of 1,000*l.* each. Fraser, In goods of, 33 L. J., P. 57 ; 9 L. T. 845.

When security had already been given by an applicant, as committee in lunacy, the court required a bond for one-fourth of the property, with two sureties, each in one-half the amount. Powis, In goods of, 34 L. J., P. 55.

A widow died intestate, leaving seven infant children, and a grant of administration was made to A., as guardian of the infants, for their use and benefit, till one of them should attain the age of twenty-one. A. absconded after misappropriating part of the personal estate of the deceased. One of the daughters of the deceased, who had attained the age of twenty-one and was resident abroad, afterwards appointed B. as her attorney to obtain a grant of administration in England of her mother's estate, for her use and benefit, till she should apply for a grant of administration. The court allowed the attorney to give an administration bond for an amount representing the present value of the estate of the deceased. Halliwell, In goods of, 54 L. J., P. 32 ; 10 P. D. 198 ; 33 W. R. 371 ; 49 J. P. 233.

Where an application was for a grant of administration de bonis non, the court allowed the administrator to give security in double the amount only of so much of the estate as remained unadministered. Halliwell, In goods of, supra, followed. Oakey, In goods of, 65 L. J., P. 38 ; [1896] P. 7 ; 44 W. R. 432.

Where an estate was being administered in the chancery division and an order had been made that each individual share of the estate should be paid directly to the parties entitled, the court allowed the penalty of the administration bond to be limited to double the amount of the beneficial interest of the applicant. Paxton, In goods of, 58 L. J., P. 55 ; 14 P. D. 40 ; 60 L. T. 513 ; 53 J. P. 135.

—— Disability of Person entitled in Distribution.]—In a case of intestacy, where one of the persons entitled in distribution was a minor, but the others were willing to dispense with justifying security, administration was granted to one of the latter, and the amount of security was limited to a sum sufficient to cover the estimated share of the minor in the assets—(1) on the consent of the remaining adult entitled in distribution that the security given should be primarily available to secure the interest of the minor in the personal estate of the intestate ; and (2) on the court being satisfied that no danger was to be apprehended from creditors. Elliott, In goods of, 3 L. R., Ir. 147.

Increase in Value of Property—Administrator Abroad.]—A., having taken out administration to the goods of the deceased, went abroad. Subsequently, under an order of the court of chancery, a considerable sum became payable to the estate of the deceased, and of his brother and sister, who were also deceased. The order could not be passed and entered until the additional duty on these estates had been paid. In the absence of the administrator, who was in Japan, the court allowed another person to file an affidavit as to the increase of property, and to execute the bond to cover the increased duty (in the place of the administrator) with two sureties, on the understanding that, as soon as possible, the administrator should execute a similar bond. Ross, In goods of, 46 L. J., P. 57 ; 2 P. D. 274 ; 25 W. R. 808.

Property Sworn under larger Sum than real Value.]—Where justifying security had been ordered, and it appeared that though the estate had been sworn under 2,000*l.*, its actual value was only 800*l.*, the court allowed the sureties to justify for double the amount of the actual value, instead of double the amount under which the estate was sworn. England v. Wall, 31 L. J., P. 16.

Where, under a misapprehension as to the value of the personal estate of an intestate, the penalty of the bond was too large, the court, upon the execution of a fresh bond in a penalty proportioned to the actual value of the estate, ordered the original bond to be delivered out of the registry to be cancelled. Goold, in goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 20 ; 34 L. J., P. 105 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 288 ; 13 L. T. 193.

Reswearing Amount.] — An administration was taken out under 20,000*l.*, and a bond in a penalty of double that sum entered into. The administratrix subsequently received a sum of money from a bankrupt estate indebted to the deceased, which made it necessary to reswear the amount under 25,000*l.* The court directed the registrars of the principal registry to receive a separate bond in the penalty of 10,000*l.*, which, together with the original bond, would be double the amount of the sum under which the estate was to be resworn. Weir, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 506 ; 28 L. J., P. 111 ; 2 L. T. 191.

Married Woman — Consent of Husband.]—Since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, when a married woman is administratrix it is not necessary that her husband should join in the administration bond. Ayres, In goods of, 52 L. J., P. 98 ; 8 P. D. 168 ; 31 W. R. 660 ; 47 J. P. 440.

A married woman had become entitled to 3*l.* per cents. standing in the name of the accountant-general of the court of chancery, and it was proposed to apply to that court to have a settlement of such property made in her favour. In order thereto it was requisite that she should take administration to the estate of a deceased party under whose will she was so entitled ; but her husband refused to execute the bond :—Held, that on an attorney certifying that the wife could act upon such a grant without her husband, administration might issue to her, and that the bond might be executed on her behalf by a third person in place of her husband. Sutherland, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 189 ; 31 L. J., P. 126 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 465.

Sureties—When dispensed with.]—The court made an order to dispense with the usual sureties to be entered into by A. ; who was beneficially entitled to a fund which had been paid into the court of chancery, and for which the administration was required, it appearing that A. was in consequence of sickness, in great poverty, and unable to induce any of his relatives or friends to become sureties to the bond. De la

Farque, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 631 ; 31 L. J., P. 199 ; 7 L. T. 194.

Where a testator was a domiciled Frenchman, and the will was made in France, the court, on affidavits that the legacies were all paid, and that there were no debts in this country, allowed administration with the will annexed to go, without requiring sureties to the administration bond. Bejot, In goods of, 20 L. T. 231.

Where a grant of administration to the estate of an intestate was made to the chief official receiver in bankruptcy as trustee under the bankruptcy of the father and sole next of kin of the deceased, the court having regard to the position of the applicant as an officer of the high court, dispensed with the usual sureties to the administration bond. Cornwall (Solicitor to the Duchy of) v. Canning (5 P. D. 114) followed. Cope, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 94; 15 P. D. 107; 62 L. T. 500; 38 W. R. 688. S. P., Knapp or Robins, In goods of, 63 L. T. 252 ; and Thacker, In goods of, 54 J. P. 759.

Where the whole of the proceeds of the estate were in court and a receiver had been appointed, the court dispensed with the sureties to an administration bond. Stelfox, In goods of, 6 R. 569 ; 70 L. T. 814.

The court dispensed with sureties upon an administration bond, where the whole estate of deceased was in court, and where the applicant had been appointed by the chancery division guardian of an infant, who was the sole surviving beneficiary. Wilcocks, In goods of, 67 L. T. 528.

A testator having duly executed his will, whereby he bequeathed all his real and personal estate to his wife and appointed her executrix, mislaid it, and not being able to find it subsequently made a similar will, except that it contained no appointment of executrix. After the testator's death the first will was found, and an application made for probate of both wills. The court granted administration with the last will annexed upon the widow giving her personal bond, and dispensed with further security. Allen In goods of, 62 L. J., P. 111 ; [1893] P. 184 ; 1 R. 479 ; 68 L. T. 462.

Where an administratrix, after having intermeddled in the estate, became lunatic, leaving a portion of the estate unadministered, and subsequently the greater portion of the estate was paid into court under an order of the chancery division, and it had become necessary to appoint an administrator to deal with the only portion of the estate remaining out of the hands of the chancery division, amounting to 850*l.*, the court refused to dispense with the usual sureties, but allowed them to justify to the amount of 1,700*l.*, the administrator's personal bond to be given for double the full value of the estate. Morris, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 16 ; 15 P. D. 9 ; 61 L. T. 652 ; 38 W. R. 496.

The court will not by reason of the property being large and the risk small, dispense with sureties to an administration bond, or lessen the amount to be secured. But it will allow the security to be made up of any number of bonds. Earle, In goods of, 54 L. J., P. 95 ; 10 P. D. 196 ; 34 W. R. 48 ; 49 J. P. 761. S. P., McGowan, In goods of, 10 P. D. 197 ; 34 W. R. 48 ; 49 J. P. 761.

The official receiver in bankruptcy applying for a grant in his official capacity is only required to give his personal bond without any sureties. Cowlly, In goods of, 74 L. T. 461. S. P., Morgan, In goods of, 75 L. T. 190.

Where the official receiver in bankruptcy applies for a grant of administration of the estate of a deceased bankrupt, an application to dispense with sureties to the administration bond will be dealt with by the registrars, and need not be made to the court. Renninson, In goods of, 11 R. 583.

—— Where Limited Company appointed Executors—Grant of Administration with Will annexed to General Manager—Company itself accepted as Sole Surety.]—Where a testator appointed the "Trustees, Executors and Securities Insurance Corporation, Limited," to be executors of his will, the court made a grant of administration with the will annexed to the general manager for the use and benefit of the company as executors, and—being satisfied of its solvency and of the sufficiency of its assets—accepted the company itself as sole surety to the administration bond. Hunt, In goods of, 66 L. J., P. 8 ; [1896] P. 288 ; 45 W. R. 236.

Part of Fund paid into Chancery Division—Security required to cover amount of Nett Balance only.]—An estate was originally sworn by the administratrix at 4,569*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.*, and a bond given with sureties to the amount of 9,140*l.* Subsequently the administratrix discovered that the estate was entitled to a further sum of 4,492*l.* 6*s.*, making a total of 8,659*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.* Of this amount 6,823*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* had been paid into court in the chancery division, leaving a sum of 1,835*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.*, out of which debts, probate duty and other expenses had been paid, leaving a nett balance estimated at 650*l.* Under these circumstances the court allowed the testatrix to give a bond without sureties for the full amount of the estate, and a bond with sureties for 1,300*l.*, being double the amount of the nett balance. Cormack, In goods of, 60 L. J., P. 96 ; [1891] P. 151 ; 63 L. T. 710.

Administration Pendente Lite—General Grant reduced to Limited Grant.]—Where the plaintiff in a probate action, who was also executor, had been appointed receiver of the real estate, and had also obtained a general grant of administration pendente lite to the personal estate ; but in consequence of the large amount of property involved, was unable to obtain the requisite sureties to the administration bond :—The court declined to dispense with sureties altogether, but reduced the general grant to a limited grant, so as to entitle him to receive certain specific sums of money only, and ordered him to give security in double the amount of such specific sums. Askew v. Askew, 60 L. J., P. 52 ; [1891] P. 174 ; 64 L. T. 145.

Foreign Testator—Personalty in England—Sureties to—Practice.]—Where a testator of foreign domicil died abroad leaving personalty in England of considerable value and nominal debts, and his widow had become the only person interested in his estate, the court reduced the amount of the administration bond to the actual amount of the estate in England instead of double, and allowed foreign instead of English sureties to be accepted if necessary, and in the case of English sureties allowed the amount to be made up by several persons. Blank, In goods of, 6 R. 563 ; 70 L. T. 810.

Foreign Sureties.]—Applications for leave to give foreign sureties to administration bond should be made to a judge in chambers, and not by motion in court. Scott, In goods of, 65 L. J., P. 15; [1895] P. 342; 73 L. T. 317.

—— Where no Debts in England.]—The court allowed the administrator of a foreign subject resident abroad, who had left no debts in this country, to give a bond with foreign sureties. [See now rule, 10 May, 1893.] De Beaufort, In goods of, 62 L. J., P. 101; [1893] P. 231; 1 R. 483; 69 L. T. 420; 57 J. P. 553.

Creditors—Rights of.]—Where an action is brought against the principal and sureties in an administration bond, by a bond creditor of the intestate, as assignee of the ordinary, and judgment is suffered by default; the judgment shall stand as a security for so much as shall fall short to satisfy the bond creditors of the intestate. Greenside v. Benson, 3 Atk. 248.

Real assets followed under administration bonds by legatees; creditors have no such right. Ashley v. Baillie, 2 Ves. 368.

Creditor cannot take assignment of bond given by administrators pursuant to Statute of Distributions; nor will action lie upon it, though assigned for a breach that he was indebted to assignee in sum of 2,000*l.* on specialty. Baker v. Dumaresque, 2 Atk. 66.

Creditors cannot sue an administrator on bond taken by statute Car. 2, but may on bonds given by administrator pendente lite. Wallis v. Pipon, Ambl. 183.

Where no proceedings have been taken to put an administration bond in a suit, a sum due from the administrator at his death to the estate of the intestate is not a specialty debt. Parker v. Young, 6 Beav. 261; 12 L. J., Ch. 335.

An administratrix entered into the usual bond in the prerogative court to exhibit an inventory within a limited time, &c. The time having elapsed without an inventory being exhibited, a creditor put the bond in suit in the name of the archbishop. The administratrix filed her bill for an injunction, which was granted, on the terms of her giving judgment in the action, which was to stand as a security for the costs at law and in equity (but not for the debt), and amending the bill by submitting to account. Thomas v. Canterbury (Archbishop), 1 Cox, 399.

A suit cannot be maintained in this court by a party interested in the intestate's estate upon an administration bond where no special reasons are shewn why the proceeding is not taken in the name of the ordinary. Bolton v. Powell, 14 Beav. 275; 16 Jur. 24. Affirmed, 2 De G. M. & G. 1.

—— Notice to by Advertisement.]—The 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 29, affords protection to sureties in an administration bond, where the administrator, before distributing the assets of the intestate, has pursued the course pointed out by that section. Newton v. Sherry, 45 L. J., C. P. 257; 1 C. P. D. 246; 34 L. T. 251; 24 W. R. 371.

Sureties Resident out of Jurisdiction.]—Where a limited grant of administration had been made to a person resident without the jurisdiction of the court, who was unable to procure justifying sureties within its jurisdiction, the court accepted sureties resident in Jersey. Reed, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 439.

The court will not allow residents in Scotland to be sureties. Herbert v. Shiell, 3 Sw. & Tr. 479; 33 L. J., P. 142.

The court is at liberty to accept as sureties persons resident out of its jurisdiction, when the principal, who is also residing without the jurisdiction, is unable to procure sureties within the jurisdiction, provided a writ of summons is servable on the sureties under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 18. Ballingall, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 441, n.; 32 L. J., P. 138; 9 L. T. 116; 11 W. R. 591.

Where a person applying for administration was solely entitled to the personal estate of the deceased, and there were no creditors, the court allowed the sureties to be persons resident in Scotland. Houston, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 41; L. R. 1 P. 85.

Administration bond allowed to be executed by foreigners resident abroad, upon proof that the administrator was unable to obtain sureties resident here, that the deceased had no debts unpaid, and that the person on whose behalf the letters of administration were applied for was solely entitled to the estate in this country. Hernandez, In goods of, 48 L. J., P. 31; 4 P. D. 229; 40 L. T. 366; 27 W. R. 664.

Receiver appointed by Court of Chancery.]—The mere fact that a receiver of the personal estate of an intestate has been appointed by the court of chancery is no ground for dispensing with justifying security on a grant of administration. Jackson v. Jackson, 35 L. J., P. 3; L. R. 1 P. 12; 13 L. T. 336; 14 W. R. 111.

If a receiver is appointed for a temporary purpose only, and it is not clear that the court of chancery will retain its control of the estate after the grant has been made, justifying security will be required. Ib.

Under £20.]—Where letters of administration were granted merely to enable a personal representative of a deceased party to execute a formal release to a trustee under a marriage settlement, the court allowed the property to be sworn under 20*l.* Stacpoole, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 316; 30 L. J., P. 191; 5 L. T. 140.

Payment of Premium to Guarantee Society out of Estate.]—In a probate action where an administrator pendente lite had been appointed and had been ordered to give security in a penal sum of 10,488*l.* for due administration of the estate, the court, on the application of an intervener, allowed him to pay 50*l.* out of the estate to a guarantee society which was willing to enter into a bond on his behalf, on condition that the intervener should undertake to recoup the estate in the event of his failing in the suit and being condemned in costs. Harver, In goods of, 58 L. J., P. 72; 14 P. D. 81; 61 L. T. 338; 37 W. R. 768.

Bonds prior to Commencement of Probate Act.]—See 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 15, as to bonds given before the 11th January, 1858.

Prior to the commencement of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, probate was granted by the prerogative court of Canterbury; it turned out that a small portion of the assets lay in the province of York, but that they were included in the amount of property sworn to:—Held, this being a legal grant, that the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 87, had made it unnecessary to have a further grant, but that the probate duty, which would have been payable upon taking out probate in the province of York, must be paid. Freckleton or Hickleton, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 16; 27 L. J., P. 6; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 124; 6 W. R. 262.

Administration to the goods of A. was granted in the consistory court of Lichfield in September, 1857; the property was sworn under, and the duty paid upon, 9,000*l.* It was afterwards discovered that 3,000*l.* consols formed part of this amount. The Bank of England refused to register the letters of administration, which were certainly void under the old law. It was sought to take the opinion or direction of the court as to the effect of ss. 86, 87, and 88 of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, on such a grant. No definite motion being made, the court declined to give any opinion on the point. Elwell, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 27.

Discharge of Sureties.]—The court will not discharge the original sureties and allow other sureties to be substituted for them. Stark, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 42; L. R. 1 P. 76; 13 L. T. 682; 14 W. R. 349.

Where an administratrix entered into a bond with two sureties, and one of them subsequently wished to be discharged, and two other persons of substance were willing to take his place, the court held, it could not allow the bond to be cancelled on the administratrix executing a new bond with the second original surety, and one or both of the persons offering themselves. Ib.

Death of Ordinary—To whom passing.]—A bond, taken by the ordinary, according to 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10, and taken to the ordinary by name, his executors, administrators, or assigns, passed on the death of the ordinary, according to the general rule with regard to the descent of chattels in the hands of a corporation sole, to his executor, and not to his successor. Howley v. Knight, 14 Q. B. 240; 19 L. J., Q. B. 3; 14 Jur. 665.

Issue and Form of.]—The court has no power, under any circumstances, to dispense with an administration bond. Powis, In goods of, 34 L. J., P. 55.

The court has no authority to vary the conditions of the bond so that an attorney shall undertake only to pay over the personal estate which may come to his hands to the party for whose use and benefit he takes administration, and not to administer it in the usual form, according to law. Goldsborough, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 295; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 417; 7 W. R. 375.

Attestation.]—Where the property was small, and the administratrix lived in Australia, the court dispensed with the rule of court which requires the bond to be attested by the person who administers the oath to the administrator or administratrix. Parker, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 26; L. R. 1 P. 301; 15 L. T. 248; 15 W. R. 262.

Assignment of.] — An application for the assignment of an administration bond is not a proceeding in any action within Ord. LIII. r. 2, and coming under the old practice, the proceeding will be by a rule nisi without notice to the sureties. Cartwright, In goods of, 1 P. D. 422; 34 L. T. 72; 24 W. R. 214.

The assignee will not be required to give security for costs if he is resident in England. Young, In goods of, infra.

Leave to appeal against an order for the assignment was refused. Ib.

Where the alleged breach of the condition was, that the administrator had not paid any part of the personal estate of the intestate to one of the next of kin, and the only question in dispute was, whether the applicant was one of the next of kin, the court directed the bond to be assigned to him upon condition that he would consent to an order that no execution should issue at common law, but that the money, if any, recovered by the judgment should be paid into the registry. Ib.

A creditor of an intestate to whom a bond has been assigned, although thereby empowered to sue in his own name, is in all other respects in the same position as the ordinary was, and may, therefore, maintain an action thereon for the general benefit of all parties interested in the estate, but not for his own or the benefit of any one in particular. Saundrey v. Mitchell, 3 B. & S. 405; 32 L. J., Q. B. 100; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 968; 7 L. T. 849; 11 W. R. 363.

Since the Probate Act, 1857, an unpaid creditor of a deceased intestate is entitled to an assignment of the administration bond. A motion for the assignment of an administration bond should be on notice. Harding, In goods of, 15 L. R., Ir. 186.

Breach of Condition on.] — When a person makes out a primâ facie case that there has been a breach of the condition of the bond, the court will direct it to be assigned by the registrar. Sandrey v. Michell, 3 Sw. & Tr. 25.

The court will not entertain objections to the validity of the condition of the bond, but will leave such questions to be determined by a court of common law. Ib.

An administrator who distributes the whole of the personal estate of a deceased without retaining in his hands a sum sufficient to pay a legacy left to an infant on his attaining his majority commits a breach of the condition in an administration bond given under s. 81 of the Probate Act, 1857, that he shall "well and truly administer" the estate, and the sureties to the bond are liable in respect of such breach. Dobbs v. Brain, 61 L. J., Q. B. 749; [1892] 2 Q. B. 207; 67 L. T. 371; 41 W. R. 7; 57 J. P. 22—C. A.

Where a person interested under the estate of a deceased intestate, to whom administration has been taken out, makes out a primâ facie case of breach of the bond, the court will direct a rule nisi calling on the sureties to shew cause why the bond should not be assigned. Jones, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 28; 32 L. J., P. 26; 8 L. T. 90; 11 W. R. 191.

Discretion of Court as to.] — But the court might refuse to do so if, on cause shewn, the proceeding appeared to be wholly frivolous and vexatious. Baker v. Brooks, 3 Sw. & Tr. 32; 32 L. J., P. 25; 8 L. T. 89; 11 W. R. 110.

The court has a discretion as to ordering an assignment for the purpose of the bond being sued upon. It will order the assignment if satisfied that the application is bonâ fide, that a primâ facie case of breach of the condition is made out, and that the applicant is the proper person to sue. Young, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 126; L. R. 1 P. 186; 14 L. T. 634; 14 W. R. 821, 970.

Suing upon.] — An administrator executed a bond with one surety under a nominal sum. He subsequently reswore the value of the property at a greatly increased sum, and executed a fresh bond with two new sureties. He afterwards became a bankrupt, without having duly administered the estate of the deceased; and application was made to the court for leave to sue on the bonds. The court refused to grant leave to sue upon the first bond until the action on the second bond had been disposed of. Irving, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 83; L. R. 1 P. 658; 20 L. T. 684.

A declaration against a surety on an administration bond in the form required by the rules under the Court of Probate Act, 1857, expressed to be made by B. as the true and lawful attorney of G., only next of kin of the deceased, and conditioned "all the rest and residue of the personal estate and effects, to deliver and pay unto such person or persons as shall be entitled thereto under the act of parliament," assigning, as breach of the condition, that other persons were entitled equally with G. to the residue of the personal estate as next of kin, yet that B. did not deliver and pay the same to such persons, but wrongfully paid over the whole to G., not being sole next of kin, but one of them, is good, the condition being absolute and not qualified by the recital in the bond that G. was sole next of kin. Lester v. Gooch, 17 W. R. 139.

D. Effect and Proof of Probate and Letters of Administration.

Effect of Probate.]—The grant of probate of a will not appealed against conclusively establishes that the will was executed according to the law where the testator was domiciled at the time of his death. Whicker v. Hume, 7 H. L. Cas. 124; 28 L. J., Ch. 396; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 533; 6 W. R. 813.

The probate whenever obtained has relation to the time of the testator's death. Rogers v. James, 7 Taunt. 147; 2 Marsh. 425.

Probate conclusive as to the character of executor. Griffiths v. Hamilton, 12 Ves. 298.

Where there are two wills, the first devising the real estate to charitable uses, and the personal estate to particular legatee, and the second will bequeathing the personalty to other legatees, and the real estate to such uses as testator should declare, and probate is granted of first will, such probate is conclusive against the claimants under the second will until reversed by commission of review. Annesley v. Palmer, 9 Mod. 8.

Will, though proved per testes, not declared well proved in absence of heir, but decreed to be established. Stokes v. Taylor, Dick. 349.

Probate of a will not evidence that copyholds pass by it. Jervoise v. Northumberland (Duke), 1 Jac. & Walk. 570.

Probate is not evidence of will of real estate. Gibson v. Whitehead, 4 Madd. 244.

Chancery requires judgment of ecclesiastical court that an instrument is testamentary, but is not satisfied with proof in that court, but requires the witnesses to be examined again, or if no witnesses, proof of signature. Rich v. Cockell, 9 Ves. 376.

Where personal property is bequeathed to the executors as trustees, the probate of the will is an acceptance of the trusts. Mucklow v. Fuller, Jac. 198.

Probate by one executor enures to the co-executors, although probate or letters of administration may have been granted; yet, if a sufficient case is made for disputing their validity, and a suit has been commenced in the ecclesiastical court for the purpose of having them revoked, this court will protect the property of the deceased by granting an injunction and receiver pending the litigation in the ecclesiastical court. Watkins v. Brent, 7 Sim. 512; 1 Myl. & Cr. 97; 5 L. J., Ch. 49.

To a bill against an executor for payment of a legacy, he pleaded that the testator was, at the time of making his will and of his death, domiciled in France, and all the bequests of personal estate affected to be made by his will were, by the laws of that country, null and void:—Held, that the plea was not double, as it did not state two bars, but two averments leading up to one bar or conclusion. Campbell v. Beaufoy, 1 Johns. 320; 28 L. J., Ch. 645; 7 W. R. 513.

Although probate of a will is conclusive so far as relates to the appointment of executors, it is not conclusive as to the validity of the particular dispositions therein contained, and the above plea therefore was held not to be bad on that ground. Ib.

Where an executor proves a will, probate has reference back to the death of the testator, and what was then in the hands of the executor is assets for the payment of the testator's debts. Ingle v. Richards, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 117; 8 W. R. 697.

In 1839 the son of the testator borrowed of his father 300*l.* upon his promissory note. In 1842, before the same was paid, the testator died, having by his will appointed his son, with three other persons, executors. The will was shortly afterwards proved by the executors other than the son, power being reserved for him to come in and prove the same. Subsequently the proving executors all died, leaving the son surviving, who thereupon, in 1855, proved the will. He had never been called upon by the father during his lifetime, nor by the proving executors of his will during their lives, to pay the sum due on the note:—Held, that although the debt could not be recovered at law (because an executor could not sue himself) or in equity (because more than six years had elapsed between the death of the testator and the proof of his will by the son), yet the son by proving the will had made the debt assets in his hands. Ib.

The ecclesiastical court granted probate of a will of personalty with cross lines drawn in ink over the bequests of certain legacies:—Held, on a claim raised by the parties interested in these legacies, that the will must be taken to have been executed after the cross lines were drawn, and that the only question was, what was the meaning of the testator, and that this was that the legacies were not to stand part of the will. Gann v. Gregory, 3 De G. M. & G. 777; 2 Eq. R. 605; 18 Jur. 1063; 2 W. R. 484.

A trust fund paid into the court of chancery, under the Trustee Relief Act, after the death of the cestui que trust, ordered to be paid to the administrator of the cestui que trust under a grant of letters of administration by the archdeaconry court, obtained after the fund was in the court of chancery. Spencer's Trust, In re, 9 Hare, 410. Affirmed, 1 De G. M. & G. 311; 21 L. J., Ch. 314; 16 Jur. 233.

Where a diocesan probate is proper with reference to the situation of the assets at the death, it remains so notwithstanding they may afterwards be rightfully or wrongfully removed out of the diocese. Ib.

A will is made in French, and the probate in English, and varies from the original; probate being in a different language is not conclusive. L'Fit v. L'Batt, 1 P. Wms. 526.

A plaintiff claiming a share of leaseholds, partly in the occupation of the defendant, under an alleged will, which he charged was being fraudulently suppressed by him, brought an action claiming partition or sale, and to have the will established and directions given for probate. The defendant denied all knowledge of the will:—Held, first, that before the plaintiff could obtain any relief upon the will it must first be proved, or probate must be admitted by the defendant; held, secondly, that a judge in the chancery division had, under the judicature acts, jurisdiction to grant probate, but that it would not be using a sound discretion to exercise the jurisdiction, and the action accordingly ordered to stand over for probate proceedings to be taken in the probate division. Pinney v. Hunt, 6 Ch. D. 98; 26 W. R. 69.

—— Of Letters of Administration.]—Where administration was granted, by the sentence of the ecclesiastical court, to A., as only next of kin of the intestate, in a suit in which B. also claimed to be the only next of kin, and that sentence was affirmed by the court of delegates on appeal, and B. filed a bill impeaching the pedigree of A. and to establish his own, this court will not, in such case, grant an injunction until answer, to prevent the administrator possessing himself of the assets, he being, by the decree of the ecclesiastical court, both legally and equitably entitled thereto. Maher v. Gorman, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 304.

Case in which a party in a cause heard upon bill and answer without replication, producing letters of administration to a deceased person,—the court may admit them to ascertain the representative character of such party, and may act upon the evidence which they furnish of that character. Wilkinson v. Fowkes, 9 Hare, 592.

An administration granted after an executor has acted in pais may be repealed by application to an ecclesiastical court; but it is not merely void, except as a protection to the executor. The act in pais of the executor could not be set up by a debtor to the fund in answer to a suit by the administrator. Doyle v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lef. 237.

Letters of administration of the estate of an intestate were granted ex parte to the defendant, as "his natural and lawful brother of the half-blood." The plaintiff, who was an uncle of the intestate, then commenced an action in the chancery division for the administration of the estate, alleging that the defendant was illegitimate, and that he himself was next of kin; and moved for a receiver and an injunction:—Held, that the application must be refused, for that as long as the letters of administration remained in force they were conclusive evidence that the defendant was one of the next of kin, and that the plaintiff's proper course of procedure was to apply in the probate division to have them recalled. Ivory, In re, Hankin v. Turner, 10 Ch. D. 372; 39 L. T. 611; 27 W. R. 20.

When administration is granted to two, and one dies, the administration survives to the other without new letters of administration. Hudson v. Hudson, Forrest, 127. But see Jacomb v. Harwood, 2 Ves. 268.

Administration granted to two: if one dies, it survives to the other; but if a letter of attorney is made to two, and one dies, the authority ceases. Adam v. Buckland, 2 Vern. 514. And see Eyre v. Shaftesbury, 2 P. Wms. 121.

Where administration with the will annexed is granted to a person as the attorney of, and for the benefit of, the executor, such person represents the testator during the life of the executor, or until he takes out probate. Suverkrop v. Day, 3 N. & P. 670; 1 W. W. & H. 463; 8 A. & E. 624; 7 L. J., Q. B. 261.

—— Estoppel—Res Judicata—Cognizance of Former Suit — Power to Intervene.]—In proceedings in the probate court as to the validity of a will, a person who is not a party is bound thereby only if he has cognizance of the proceedings, and is entitled to make himself a party to them. Young v. Holloway, 64 L. J., P. 55; [1895] P. 87; 11 R. 596; 72 L. T. 118; 43 W. R. 429.

—— Payment to Executor or Administrator a Good Discharge.]—So long as the probate remains unrepealed, it cannot be impeached in the temporal courts. Allan v. Dundas, 3 Term Rep. 125; 1 R. R. 666.

Therefore a payment of money to an executor, who has obtained probate of a forged will, is a discharge to the debtor of the intestate, notwithstanding the probate is afterwards declared null, and administration is granted to the intestate's next of kin. Ib.

Semble, that payment of a debt to an administrator, to whom letters of administration have been regularly granted, exonerates the debtor, though it should turn out that there is a will existing. Prosser v. Wagner, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 289; 26 L. J., C. P. 81; 5 W. R. 146. See 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, ss. 75, 76, 77.

—— Enables Executor or Administrator to Sue.]—The administrator has sufficient property in coal raised from mines after he takes out administration, and in the barges marked with the name of his intestate, to maintain an action of trover. Fraser v. Swansea Canal Co., 1 A. & E. 354; 3 N. & M. 391; 3 L. J., K. B. 153.

Executors and administrators cannot recover property out of this country, because the jurisdiction of the prerogative courts does not extend beyond their respective provinces. Scott v. Bentley, 1 Kay & J. 281; 3 Eq. R. 428; 24 L. J., Ch. 244; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 394; 3 W. R. 280.

—— Title of Administrator relates back to Death of Intestate.]—Letters of administration have relation to the death of the intestate, so as to enable the administrator to sue for goods of the intestate which were sold and delivered by an agent after his death and prior to the granting of administration. Foster v. Bates, 12 M. & W. 226; 1 D. & L. 400; 13 L. J., Ex. 88; 7 Jur. 1093.

An administrator may maintain trespass for the seizure of goods of the intestate between the death and the grant of letters of administration. Tharpe v. Stallwood, 6 Scott (N.R.) 715; 5 Man. & G. 760; 1 D. & L. 24; 12 L. J., C. P. 241; 7 Jur. 492.

The doctrine of relation, by which the letters of administration are held to relate back to acts done between the death of the intestate and the taking out of the letters of administration, exists only in those cases where the act done is for the benefit of the estate. Morgan v. Thomas, 8 Ex. 302; 22 L. J., Ex. 152; 17 Jur. 283.

The widow of an intestate remained in the possession of her husband's property for some time after his decease. The intestate's son did not interfere in any way with the property, which was seized under a fi. fa. issued against the widow. They afterwards took out letters of administration :—Held, first, that there was no evidence of the administrator's assent to the widow's taking the property. Ib.

Held, secondly, that if such an assent could be implied, the estate was not bound by it, as the act to which the assent was given did not benefit the estate. Ib.

Semble, that the rule of law, that the title of an administrator has relation back to the death of the intestate, so as to enable him to recover for an injury to personal chattels prior to the grant of administration, applies also to leasehold property ; but in that case he must first enter. Barnett v. Guildford (Earl), 11 Ex. 19 ; 24 L. J., Ex. 281 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1142 ; 3 W. R. 406.

—— Purchaser not bound to pay Executor before Probate.]—Although executors can make an assignment and give a receipt for purchase-money, which are binding, yet a purchaser is not bound to pay the purchase-money till probate, because till the evidence of title exists the executors cannot give a complete indemnity. Newton v. Metropolitan Ry., 1 Dr. & Sm. 583 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 738 ; 5 L. T. 542 ; 10 W. R. 102.

Proof of Probate.]—A will of a feme covert, authorised by a power in her marriage settlement, cannot be given in evidence to shew a title to personal property till it has been proved in the ecclesiastical court. Stone v. Forsyth, 2 Dougl. 737.

In an action, as executor, for money had and received, the plaintiff proved a notice to produce the probate of the will of G., of which the defendant was executor, and under which the plaintiff's testatrix claimed the money which was the subject of the action, and also put in a judge's order to admit an office copy of the will. The will not being produced, the plaintiff tendered in evidence an official copy, purporting to be signed by the registrar of the ecclesiastical court, and annexed to which was a document purporting to be a copy of the act of the ecclesiastical court :—Held, that this, being a copy of an official act, was admissible as secondary evidence against the defendant. Waite v. Gale, 2 D. & L. 925 ; 14 L. J., Q. B. 212 ; 9 Jur. 782.

In an action on a promissory note, payable "to the executors of the late Mr. W. B.," the proper proof that they are the executors of Mr. W. B. is the production of the probate of his will, and the reading in evidence so much of it as shews that he appointed them his executors ; and the giving in evidence the grant of administration (annexed to the probate) is not sufficient for this purpose. Hamilton v. Aston, 1 Car. & K. 679.

Under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14, an unstamped copy of an act book of the ecclesiastical court is sufficient evidence of the probate of a will to prove the executorship of the person named in it. Dorrett v. Meux, 2 C. L. R. 807 ; 15 C. B. 142 ; 23 L. J., C. P. 221 ; 2 W. R. 480.

Where executors suing for a debt due to them as such had put in evidence probate of the will of their testator, and the same had been used without objection :—Held, that the defendant could not afterwards, by giving intrinsic evidence of the value of the estate, object to the admissibility of the probate for want of a sufficient stamp. Robinson v. Vernon (Lord), 7 C. B. (N.S.) 235 ; 29 L. J., C. P. 310 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 146.

Before 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 62, the probate was the only evidence of a will of personalty. Rex v. Netherseal, 4 Term Rep. 258.

The title of three, claiming as executors, is well proved by the probate granted to one only of the will appointing them all. Walters v. Pfeil, M. & M. 362. S. P., Davis v. Williams, 1 Smith, 5 ; 13 East, 232.

The production of the original will, with the act of the ecclesiastical court, ordering probate, is sufficient evidence of the title of an executor, without accounting for the non-production of the probate. Doe d. Edwards v. Gunning, 2 N. & P. 260 ; 7 A. & E. 240 ; W. W. & D. 460 ; 6 L. J., K. B. 229.

The probate of a will is not admissible to prove declarations of the testator as reputation on a question of pedigree. Doe d. Wild v. Ormerod, 1 M. & Rob. 466.

The court will look only to the probate copy of a will, though strong grounds for suspecting that another copy tendered in evidence is the correct one. Bernal v. Bernal, 3 Myl. & Cr. 559, n.

As to personal estate, the court is bound by the terms of the will appearing on the probate, but if on production of the original a doubt exists as to the accuracy of the probate copy, the court will give an opportunity to the parties in the ecclesiastical court to set it right. Havergal v. Harrison, 7 Beav. 49 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 30 ; 7 Jur. 1100.

Though a court of equity may inspect the original will of personal estate with a view to its construction, it has no jurisdiction to decide that the probate is erroneous. Taylor v. Creagh, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 281.

—— Of Foreign Wills.]—The copy of a foreign will contained in the ancillary probate granted in this country to the foreign executors is the only admissible evidence of the will. Enokin v. Wylie, 10 H. L. Cas. 1 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 402 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 897 ; 6 L. T. 263 ; 10 W. R. 467.

The certificate of the Hanoverian ambassador, under the seal of the legation, was admitted as evidence of the law of Hanover as to the validity of a testamentary paper. Klingemann, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 18 ; 8 L. T. 172 ; 11 W. R. 218.

Proof of Letters of Administration.] — An examined copy of the act book, in the registry of the prerogative court of Canterbury, stating that administration was granted to the defendant of her husband's goods at such a time, is proof of her being such administratrix, in an action against her as such, without giving her notice to produce the letters of administration. Davis v. Williams, 13 East, 232 ; 1 Smith, 5.

To prove a person dead, the production of the letters of administration granted by the ordinary is not of itself sufficient evidence. Thompson v. Donaldson, 3 Esp. 63 ; 6 R. R. 812. S. P., Moons v. De Bernales, 1 Russ. 301.

E. REVOCATION AND ALTERATION OF GRANT.

Jurisdiction of Chancery Division.]—Though the chancery division may have jurisdiction to recall the probate of a will, it ought not, as a general rule, to exercise that jurisdiction, even if the estate of the testator is in court in a proceeding in that division. Pinney v. Hunt (ante, col. 565) followed. Bradford v. Young, 54 L. J., Ch. 96 ; 26 Ch. D. 656 ; 50 L. T. 707 ; 32 W. R. 901.

A will was proved in spiritual court, but executor of former will brought his bill in equity to discover by what means the latter will was obtained, and whether testator was not incapable, &c., and for account. Demurrer to jurisdiction overruled. Andrews v. Powys, 2 Bro. P. C. 504.

A court of equity had no jurisdiction to relieve against the probate of a will, unless the consent of the next of kin was obtained fraudulently. Gingell v. Horne, 9 Sim. 539.

Jurisdiction of Probate Division.]—Semble, the probate division has exclusive jurisdiction to revoke probate of a will. Priestman v. Thomas, 53 L. J., P. 109; 9 P. D. 210; 51 L. T. 843; 32 W. R. 842—C. A.

General Rules.]—If the validity of a will have been already determined, and it has been acted upon, equity will restrain proceedings in the prerogative court to controvert it. Sheffield v. Bucks (Duke), 1 Atk. 628.

Where parties are dissatisfied with a probate, chancery will suspend its determination, till after a trial upon the validity of it in the proper court; for equity cannot determine upon the validity of a probate adversely: but if it comes incidentally before the court, and that incident is admitted, the court may determine it, and hold the parties bound by their admission; for an admission by a party concerned in matters of fact, is stronger than if it had been determined by a jury, and facts are as properly concluded by admission as by a trial. There is no difference between parties admitting things proper to be determined by the court in which the admission is made, and the admission of things cognisable in another court, for they are equally bound. Ib., 630.

Executor proves a will of a personal estate wherein one of the legacies is forged: the executor has no remedy in equity, but ought to have proved the will with a special reservation as to that legacy. Plume v. Beale, 1 P. Wms. 388.

The court will not grant an injunction to stay proceedings to repeal letters of administration, and grant them to a poor person on a suggestion that a judgment will consequently be released, &c. Kennedy v. Kennedy, 2 Ken. Ch. 26.

As to personal estate the court is bound by the terms of the will appearing on the probate; but if, on production of the original, a doubt exists as to the accuracy of the probate copy, the court will give an opportunity to the parties in the ecclesiastical court to set it right. Havergal v. Harrison, 7 Beav. 49; 13 L. J., Ch. 30; 7 Jur. 1100.

—— Estoppel.]—In an action in the probate division, T. and G. propounded an earlier and P. a later will. The action was compromised, and by consent verdict and judgment were taken establishing the earlier will. Subsequently P. discovered that the earlier will was a forgery, and in an action in the chancery division, to which T. and G. were parties, obtained the verdict of a jury to that effect, and a decree that the compromise be set aside. In another action in the probate division for revocation of the probate of the earlier will:—Held, that T. and G. were estopped from denying the forgery. Priestman v. Thomas, supra.

Revocation of Grant—Practice Opposed to it.]—Where a grant had been taken out under the misapprehension that a note or memorandum under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 56, s. 14, might be indorsed after it had issued, the court refused to revoke the grant. Faulkner, In goods of, 8 W. R. 454.

A citation was personally served upon the executor and universal legatee, named in a will, calling upon him to bring into the registry the probate of it which had been granted to him, and to shew cause why the probate should not be revoked and declared null and void, and the will itself declared null and invalid. The probate was brought into the registry, but no appearance entered to the citation. The court, although there was no evidence before it as to the invalidity of the will, revoked the probate, and ordered probate of an earlier will to issue in common form to the executor named therein. Crosby v. Noton, 36 L. J., P. 55; 16 L. T. 153; 15 W. R. 775.

Semble, where a general grant of administration is properly made, the practice is against revoking it, even with consent of the grantee, unless the grantee has become incapable by the act of God. Grants to creditors, however, are an exception to this rule. Morris, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 360; 31 L. J., P. 80; 5 L. T. 768.

After a decree had been made on the construction of a will and for the administration of the testator's estate in accordance therewith, a letter of later date was found duly executed and almost an exact counterpart of the earlier will. Questions having arisen as to the effect of the new will on certain legacies, named in both wills, which by the decree had been held to be superseded, the court, on the application of the trustees, directed an inquiry as to who were the persons interested in setting up the alleged new will, and that notice should be given to such persons that, unless they, within a limited time, took steps to recall the existing probate, and to prove the new will, the court would proceed to administer the estate on the will as proved. Harrison v. Every, 34 L. T. 238.

The court will not revoke a probate rightly granted, and not issued under a mistake. Muir, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 294; 28 L. J., P. 49; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 445; 7 W. R. 361. S. P., Mooney, In goods of, 3 L. R., Ir. 281.

Probate granted by consent without fraud will not be revoked, on the ground that the conditions on which the consent was given have not been fulfilled. Nicol v. Askew, 2 Moore, P. C. 88.

—— On whose Application.]—An executor who has proved a will in common form cannot, as such executor, take proceedings to call in question the validity of that will. He has no right, therefore, to cite the persons interested under it to propound it in solemn form, or shew cause why the probate in common form should not be revoked. Chamberlain, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 52; L. R. 1 P. 316; 16 L. T. 97; 15 W. R. 680.

—— Of Elected Guardian on Discovery of Testamentary Guardian.]—Where a testamentary guardian to minor children had been appointed, and administration had, per incuriam, been granted to a guardian elected by the minors for their use and benefit, the court revoked the grant and granted administration to the testamentary guardian. Morris, In goods of, supra.

—— Disappearance of Administrator de bonis non—Fresh Grant.]—Where, in 1880, a grant de bonis non had been made to one of the grandchildren and residuary legatees of a testator, and in 1884 the administrator de bonis non disappeared, leaving a letter to the effect that his body would be found at the bottom of the river, and it appeared that he had already previously attempted to commit suicide, the court revoked the grant de bonis non so made to him, and made a similar grant in favour of another of the grandchildren and residuary legatees of the original testator. Covell, In goods of, 59 L. J., P. 7; 15 P. D. 8; 61 L. T. 620; 38 W. R. 79.

—— Administrator Absconding.]—Where an administrator could not be found, having absconded, after threatening to commit suicide, and the only estate remaining unadministered was a claim for debt against a bankrupt's estate, the court, without citation, revoked the grant, and made a new grant to one of the next of kin. Covell, In goods of, 61 L. T. 620; 38 W. R. 79.

A grant of administration of the estate of an intestate was made to a creditor, who, after his debt had been fully satisfied, absconded, and could not be found:—A personal representative of the estate being required in an action in the chancery division, the court revoked the grant to the creditor without citing him, and made a new grant to the sole next of kin of the deceased. Bradshaw, In goods of, 57 L. J., P. 12; 13 P. D. 18; 58 L. T. 58; 36 W. R. 848; 52 J. P. 56.

—— Lunacy of one Executor after proving Will — Fresh Grant to remaining Executor, limited to Duration of Lunacy.]—The executors of a will obtained probate in the ordinary way. One of them subsequently became of unsound mind, and no early recovery was to be anticipated. The co-executor moved the court for directions:—Held, that the most convenient course for the court to adopt would be to revoke the original grant of probate, and to make a fresh grant to the applicant, limited to such time as the other executor should continue of unsound mind. Sowerby, In goods of, 65 L. T. 764.

Wife's Estate—Grant to Next of Kin—Concealment—Right of Husband to Revocation.]—A husband and wife separated in 1863. The wife died in 1881, and the executors of her father's will took out letters of administration of her estate in her maiden name, describing her as a spinster, without notice to the husband, although they knew of the marriage, and that the husband was alive. In 1888 the husband first heard of his wife's death, and, after inquiries, brought an action in the county court for revocation of the grant and regrant to himself. The county court judge held that, in the absence of fraud, he was not justified in revoking the grant after so long a lapse of time:—Held, on appeal, that it was not necessary to shew fraud, and that the grant must be revoked and a grant made to the husband. Copeland v. Simister, 62 L. J., P. 38; [1893] P. 16; 1 R. 469; 68 L. T. 257; 41 W. R. 269.

Administration, with last Will annexed, revoked—Probate of earlier Will—Decree of Foreign Court.]—A British subject domiciled in Kentucky died, leaving several wills, the last of which was proved in one of the inferior courts of that state, and thereupon administration, with the will annexed, was granted to the attorney in England of the widow, who was the sole executrix. Subsequently, the superior courts of Kentucky upset the will, and the widow commenced a suit for revocation of the said letters of administration, and for probate of an earlier will. Upon affirmative proof of the testamentary capacity of the deceased:—The court revoked the letters of administration, and granted probate of the earlier will, now propounded by the plaintiff. Newcomb v. Newcomb, 73 L. T. 317.

Married Woman intermeddling with Estate.]—Administration with the will annexed was granted to a woman who intermeddled with the estate, and subsequently married. Her husband deserted her and could not be found, and an application was accordingly made for a revocation of the grant, and a fresh grant to another person:—Held, that the administratrix having intermeddled with the estate the grant could not be revoked. Reid, In goods of, 55 L. J., P. 75; 11 P. D. 70; 54 L. T. 590; 34 W. R. 577—C. A. Affirming 50 J. P. 263.

Conditional Revocation—Grant of Administration—Application to Revoke and for Probate of Will—Motion—Consent of all Parties.]—A testator destroyed a will in the belief that he thereby revived an earlier will; but his widow, under the impression that there was an intestacy, took out letters of administration of his effects. After the widow's death the executors of the destroyed will applied on motion for revocation of the grant to her and for grant to them of probate of a copy of the destroyed will. Some of the parties interested in the case of an intestacy were infants, the remainder consented:—Held, that in the absence of consent by all parties the court could not grant the application on motion, but the will must be propounded. Andrews, In goods of, 62 L. J., P. 25; [1893] P. 14; 1 R. 474; 68 L. T. 259.

—— Of Lost Letters of Administration.]—Upon the revocation of letters of administration, which have been lost, an undertaking will be required from the person to whom they were granted, that, if found, he will bring them into the registry, and that they will not be acted upon. Carr, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 111.

When Grant made in Error.]—An intestate married his deceased wife's sister. On his death she obtained letters of administration to his personal estate and effects, and died leaving part of the estate unadministered. The court revoked the grant so made in error, and decreed administration to the natural and lawful daughters and next of kin of the deceased. Wells, In goods of, 17 L. T. 123.

A next of kin took out administration of the effects of a deceased person and swore that she died intestate. Four years afterwards the administration was called in, and evidence was produced to shew that a will of the deceased, duly executed, was in existence at the time of her death, and that it had passed into the hands of the next of kin. It was not forthcoming. The court revoked the administration, and granted probate of a draft of the will limited until the original was produced. Podmore v. Whatton, 3 Sw. & Tr. 449; 33 L. J., P. 143; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 756; 10 L. T. 754; 13 W. R. 106.

A., the surviving trustee of a term of 500 years, died, having appointed B. and others his executors, of whom B. proved his will, and survived his co-executors. B. appointed C. his executor, and C. proved B.'s will. D., for the purpose of bringing an ejectment, applied to the court of probate for letters of administration de bonis non, to A., limited to the term of 500 years, which were granted to him; and D. brought the ejectment for the term, as the personal representative of A.: —Held, that the letters of administration granted to D. were void, and that he should have been nonsuited. M'Dougall v. O'Shaughnessy, Ir. R. 2 C. L. 157.

Revocation — Procedure after.] — An order was made for the revocation of a grant with the will annexed. The letters of administration were in the hands of the proctors, who had obtained them, and who claimed a lien upon them for costs. The court declined to order the proctors to deliver up the letters for the purpose of cancellation, but directed that a copy of its order, revoking the grant and requiring the executor to bring the letters into the registry if they ever came into his possession, should be served upon them. Barnes v. Durham, 38 L. J., P. 46; L. R. 1 P. 728; 20 L. T. 545.

A grant of administration which had been made as upon intestacy was subsequently revoked, and probate granted to an executor of a will which had recently been discovered. Upon application by the executor for an account shewing how the administrator had dealt with the estate:—Held, upon the authority of Taylor v. Newton (1 Lee, 15), that the court had jurisdiction, notwithstanding the grant had been revoked, and ordered the defendant to furnish to the plaintiff, within fourteen days after probate should be exhibited to him, an account shewing how he had disposed of the estate. Jenkins, In goods of, 76 L. T. 164.

—— Effect of—Legatee in Trust applying Money bonâ fide in accordance with Provisions of alleged Will.]—Probate of an alleged will having been granted in common form to the executors named therein, they paid a charitable bequest to the defendant, who bonâ fide and without notice of any invalidity of the alleged will, applied portion thereof in accordance with the trusts of the bequest. Probate was afterwards revoked (not by consent), and letters of administration were granted to the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover from the defendant the amount which the latter expended in execution of the supposed trusts. Fitzpatrick v. M'Glone, [1897] 2 Ir. R. 542.

—— Suits for.]—In a suit for revocation of probate the defendant propounding the will should deliver issue, and move for directions as to the mode of trial. Brandreth v. Brandreth, 2 Sw. & Tr. 446; 31 L. J., P. 153; 6 L. T. 335; 10 W. R. 672.

The court will not direct an issue to the assizes except upon application supported by affidavit. Ib.

Where executors of a later will having called in the probate of a will of prior date, propound in a declaration the later will, it is not competent to them to allege in their declaration that the probate of the earlier will was surreptitiously obtained, or that the earlier will ought to be pronounced null and invalid. Rosbotham v. Rosbotham, 2 Sw. & Tr. 121; 30 L. J., P. 38; 3 L. T. 557; 9 W. R. 148.

In a suit for revocation of probate, the party propounding the will must begin, though the plaintiff has declared, alleging an intestacy. Cross v. Cross, 3 Sw. & Tr. 292; 33 L. J., P. 49; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 183; 10 L. T. 70; 12 W. R. 694.

It being doubtful whether an unsuccessful plaintiff in a suit for revocation of probate would be able to pay the costs of an intervener who had propounded the will, the court ordered that the intervener's costs should be paid out of the estate. Ib.

A next of kin who unsuccessfully applied for revocation of the probate of a will, was condemned in costs, although there was strong evidence of the incapacity of the testator, on the ground that he had allowed an unreasonable time to elapse between the death of the testator and the institution of the suit, and had charged the widow of the testator and the drawer of the will with conspiring to obtain the will when the testator was incompetent. Clayton v. Davis, 3 Sw. & Tr. 290; 33 L. J., P. 28; 10 L. T. 70.

Where a next of kin wishes to recall a grant of administration with a will annexed, and have the will condemned on the ground of want of capacity, the proper course is to proceed by action and have the will condemned at the trial. Ross v. Wallace, 29 L. R., Ir. 330.

An application to revoke a grant of administration can only be decided by way of motion, if all parties consent to its being so heard. If such consent is withheld, the court will decline to deal with the matter upon motion, and an action must be commenced for the revocation of the grant. Baddeley, In goods of, 60 L. T. 237; 53 J. P. 40.

Where a motion was made to the court for revocation of a grant of probate and for a declaration of the validity of a subsequent will, a draft of which only was in existence, the court declined to hear the motion until the grant and draft will had been lodged in the registry. Riley, In goods of, 65 L. J., P. 41; [1896] P. 9.

Where the plaintiffs claimed a decree of intestacy, and the due execution of a will propounded by the defendant was admitted by the plaintiffs in their reply, the only plea against the will being that it was duly revoked by the testatrix:—Held, that the onus of proof lay on the plaintiffs, and that they must begin by opening their case. Saqui v. Lazarus, 73 L. T. 194.

A decree was made at the suit of residuary legatees for the administration of the real and personal estate of a testator. After this a subsequent will was discovered by which the estate was disposed of in a different way. Probate of the old will was recalled, and letters of administration with the later will annexed were granted to one of the beneficiaries. Under these circumstances the court of appeal made an order dismissing the action. Dean, In re, Dean v. Wright, 21 Ch. D. 581; 47 L. T. 501; 31 W. R. 174.

What Interest Necessary to entitle Person to Intervene in Suit.]—To entitle a person to intervene in a suit for revocation of letters of administration it is not necessary that he should have had an interest at the time of the death of the deceased; an interest acquired subsequently by purchase of part of the estates from the administrator is sufficient. Lindsay v. Lindsay, 42 L. J., P. 32; 27 L. T. 592; 21 W. R. 272.

A creditor of a person who takes an interest under a will has sufficient interest to entitle him, in a proper case, to a citation to recall letters of administration. White, In goods of, 31 L. R., Ir. 385.

Pleas Allowed.]—A person who has no interest in the assets, except under a later will, cannot be allowed to plead any plea to an earlier will, except its revocation by the will on which his interest depends. Philpott v. O'Callaghan, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 327.

Withdrawal of Caveat, Effect of.]—An executor entered a caveat to a will of a later date, but withdrew the caveat before it was warned and allowed letters of administration, with the earlier will annexed, to be granted to one of the residuary legatees named therein:—Held, that he was not estopped by the withdrawal of the caveat under the circumstances from calling in the letters of administration (with the earlier will annexed) and propounding the alleged later will. Goddard v. Smith, 42 L. J., P. 14; L. R. 3 P. 7; 28 L. T. 141; 21 W. R. 247.

Judgment against Will in Absence of Witnesses in Support.]—The court with hesitation, in the absence of any cited authority, gave judgment for the plaintiff, with costs, revoking a grant of probate previously obtained by the defendants, in common form, without requiring any evidence to be given, on behalf of the plaintiffs, against the will. Martyr v. Perry, 65 L. T. 794.

Effect of revoking Grant—Sale of Leaseholds.]—A grant of letters of administration obtained by suppressing a will containing no appointment of executors is not void ab initio, and accordingly a sale of leaseholds by an administratrix who had obtained a grant of administration under such circumstances to a purchaser who was ignorant of the suppression of the will was upheld by the court, although the grant was revoked after the sale. Abram v. Cunningham (2 Lcv. 182) distinguished. Boxall v. Boxall, 53 L. J., Ch. 838; 27 Ch. D. 220; 51 L. T. 771; 32 W. R. 896.

Amendment of Probate—Words of Will must be regarded.]—There is no difference between the words which a testator himself uses in drawing up his will, and the words which are bonâ fide used by one whom he trusts to draw it up for him. The court in either case must take the words as it finds them, and therefore held that the plaintiff, the natural daughter, was not entitled to have probate amended by omitting the words "from and after the decease of my said wife without leaving issue of our said marriage," on the ground that the draughtsman introduced them without reason or special directions, and that the effect of the same had not been intelligently appreciated by the testator. Rhodes v. Rhodes, 51 L. J., P. C. 53; 7 App. Cas. 192; 46 L. T. 463; 30 W. R. 709—P. C.

—— Property Abroad—Foreign Court.]—An intestate died leaving personal estate to the amount of 273*l.* in this country, and 6,100*l.* in the Italian rentes. The Italian court refused to grant the authority required to deal with the property within its jurisdiction, on the ground that the letters of administration granted by the court of probate here were on the face of them limited to the smaller amount in this country, and that this court, if it had been made aware of the full value of the estate, would have required greater security for its administration. The court allowed the letters of administration to be amended—the board of inland revenue having signified its consent to accept the succession duty on the Italian rentes as probate duty—so as to state on the face of them that the larger sum was also included. Henley, In goods of, 55 L. J., P. 61; 11 P. D. 126; 56 L. T. 895; 35 W. R. 184; 50 J. P. 520.

—— As to Date on which Will was Executed.]—The court may order a memorandum to be indorsed on a probate after it has issued, as to the true date on which a will was executed, if satisfied that the date given in the probate is erroneous. Allchin, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 84; L. R. 1 P. 664; 20 L. T. 757.

—— Description of Testator.]—The court allowed a probate to be amended after it had issued by the addition of a fuller description of the testator than therein contained in the first instance. Towgood, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 84; L. R. 2 P. 408; 26 L. T. 984; 20 W. R. 802.

Alteration in Grant—Omission of one of the Christian Names of an Executor.]—The christian names of an executor called in a will and grant of probate "Frederick," were "Frederick John":—The court, on proof that the Bank of England had objected to transferring stock into the names of the executors, in consequence of this executor having signed the memorandum for the transfer with the initials "F. J.," allowed the description in the grant to be altered into "Frederick John M. . . . , called in the will Frederick M. . . . ." Honywood, In goods of, 65 L. J., P. 9; [1895] P. 341; 44 W. R. 256.

F. PRACTICE RELATING TO.

1. Citation.

Parties Cited—Heir-at-Law and Devisee.]—The court will not authorise the citation of the heir-at-law, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 61, until a plea has been filed in the suit, or until the next of kin has been already cited to see proceedings. Moore v. Holgate, 35 L. J., P. 46; L. R. 1 P. 101; 14 L. T. 24; 14 W. R. 515.

Where an executor propounds the latter of two wills, the court will direct a citation to issue against the devisees under the earlier will, and against the heir-at-law, though already before the court, as defendant in the suit. Lister v. Smith, 3 Sw. & Tr. 53; 32 L. J., P. 13; 7 L. T. 219; 10 W. R. 429.

When a party to a suit is before the court as next of kin or legatee, being also heir-at-law or devisee under the same will, it is necessary to cite him to see proceedings under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 97, s. 61, as heir-at-law or devisee. Emberley v. Trevanion, 4 Sw. & Tr. 197; 29 L. J., P. 142.

Before a receiver of real estate will be appointed by the court, it is necessary that it should appear on affidavit that the heir-at-law or devisee, or other person having or pretending interest in the real estate, has been cited. Purdey v. Field, 33 L. J., P. 73; 12 W. R. 1088.

When a suit has been commenced with a caveat, and the defendant has filed no plea to the declaration propounding the will, a citation may issue against the heir-at-law under s. 61. Domvile v. Domvile, 4 Sw. & Tr. 17; 34 L. J., P.

79; 12 L. T. 54. S. P., Coplestone v. Nicholes, 33 L. J., P. 57.

Semble; contra, when contention arises about a testamentary paper of a deceased, and his heir-at-law is either not within the jurisdiction of the court, or has no known place of abode, the court may still order him to be cited, but will not decide that any particular form of service of the citation shall bind him. Martin v. Harding, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 118.

The executors under a will cited the executors named in a codicil to it, as also the other parties interested, to propound such codicil. An appearance had been entered for the executors named in the codicil, but no declaration had been filed. The bequests in the codicil affected the real estate. The court ordered the heir-at-law to be cited. Comer v. Parnell, 36 L. J., P. 81; 16 L. T. 299.

When in a suit commenced by caveat, the party propounding a will wishes to cite the heir-at-law before pleas have been filed contesting the validity of the will, he must make an affidavit that he intends to proceed and prove the will in solemn form. Peacock v. Lowe, 36 L. J., P. 46; L. R. 1 P. 311; 15 L. T. 634; 15 W. R. 717.

An heir-at-law who has not been cited, cannot, by entering a caveat, prevent the executors of a will affecting realty from obtaining probate in common form. If the heir-at-law has entered a caveat under those circumstances, it is not necessary for the executors to declare. Young v. Ferrie, 4 Sw. & Tr. 210; 29 L. J., P. 69; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1318.

The provisions of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, ss. 61 and 62, which authorise the citing of the heir-at-law or persons interested in the real estate, when contentious proceedings arise as to the validity of a will, and by which the probate of a will granted after such litigation is to enure to the benefit of all persons interested in the real estate affected by the will, are not applicable to wills executed before the Wills Act, or to wills which in whole or in part have been executed not in accordance with the requirements of the Wills Act. Campbell v. Lucy, 40 L. J., P. 22; L. R. 2 P. 209; 24 L. T. 231; 19 W. R. 568.

The practice as to citations to see proceedings heretofore in use in the Probate Court has not been altered by the Judicature Acts, and the rules therein contained; and therefore, in order that a decree in a testamentary suit may bind the heir-at-law or devisees of real estate, a citation should be taken out against them under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 61, notwithstanding the directions of r. 13 of Ord. XVI. Kennaway v. Kennaway, 45 L. J., P. 86; 1 P. D. 148; 34 L. T. 854; 24 W. R. 586.

—— Form of Affidavit.]—An affidavit, upon which an application to cite the persons interested in the real estate affected by a will in dispute is based, must state not only that it disposes of real estate, but that it was executed according to the law of England, and at a date since the Wills Act came into operation. Campbell v. Lucy, supra.

—— Assignee of Heir-at-Law.]—In an action as to the validity of a will the court will not order the assignee of the heir-at-law of the testatrix to be cited as a person having or pretending interest in the real estate affected by the will. Jones v. Jones, 51 L. J., P. 93; 7 P. D. 66; 46 L. T. 919; 30 W. R. 691; 46 J. P. 472.

—— Executors.]—When an executor had proved a will (power being reserved to his co-executors to come in and prove it), upon his refusal to produce the probate and an account of the estate in respect of which it had been granted, so as to enable a co-executor to prove the will without payment of probate duty, the court directed a citation to issue against him. Turrell, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 456; 31 L. J., P. 170; 6 L. T. 162; 10 W. R. 430.

An executor by non-appearance to a citation calling upon him to take probate of a copy of a missing will, is barred from afterwards obtaining probate of the original will when found. Davis v. Davis, 4 Sw. & Tr. 208; 31 L. J., P. 216.

The court allowed a citation to executors to bring in the probate to issue on an affidavit of the agent of the party citant (the next of kin), who was in Australia; the property being distributed by the Court of Chancery in due course of administration, which could not be stayed until proceedings were instituted for revocation of the probate, and the agent of the party citant being in a position to make the necessary averments to lead the citation. Hutley, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 27; L. R. 1 P. 596; 19 L. T. 704.

Where an executor possessed himself of part of the personal estate of the deceased without obtaining probate, and did not appear to a citation which had been issued by a legatee to bring in and prove the will, the court, on the application of the legatee, made a conditional order that the executor should, within a limited time, extract probate. Clune, In goods of, 15 L. R., Ir. 470.

—— Next of Kin.]—The court allowed a citation to issue against the next of kin, calling upon him to take administration of the goods of a deceased, or shew cause why it should not be granted to the applicant as a creditor, although by the operation of the Statute of Limitations the applicant was debarred from recovering his debt against the estate of the deceased. Coombs, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 78; L. R. 1 P. 193; 14 L. T. 635; 14 W. R. 975.

A person died on 27th March, 1862, leaving a will dated 17th April, 1860, whereof he appointed two executors; there was also a paper purporting to be a codicil dated 26th March, 1862. The executors believing this not to be a true codicil, asked for a citation on the legatees interested under it, calling on them to propound and prove it if they thought fit. The court refused to issue the citation, but suggested that the executors might proceed to prove the will in solemn form, and cite the next of kin and the legatees under the codicil to see the will proved. Benbow, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 488; 31 L. J., P. 171; 6 L. T. 659.

The executor named in the will having determined to propound it, cited certain persons who were the next of kin to see proceedings. They appeared, and there being reason to believe that there were other next of kin, the court made an order upon them, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 24, to attend before the registrar to be examined as to the state of the family. Shepheard v. Beetham, 41 L. J., P. 44; L. R. 2 P. 384.

A father left two children in their minorities, his only next of kin. The minors' next of kin were four in number, and three of them renounced their rights to the guardianship and administration. The fourth went to Nevada. in 1869, and nothing was now known of him. The court permitted the minors to elect a stranger in blood as their guardian, without requiring the citation or renunciation of the absent next of kin. Langham, In goods of, 25 L. T. 951 ; 20 W. R. 319.

A brother bequeathed his real and personal estate in two equal moieties to the children of his deceased sisters. The executor renounced and the children were resident abroad. The sole surviving next of kin was another sister, to whom the testator had left a legacy of "one shilling," and who was leading a dissolute life. Under these circumstances, the court made a grant of administration with the will annexed to a relative not interested, for the use and benefit of the minors until they should appear and take the grant. Thomas, In goods of, 28 L. T. 677.

—— Queen's Proctor.]—When the will of a bastard affecting real estate is propounded, if such real estate would devolve on the crown in case of an intestacy, the Queen's proctor may be cited to intervene in respect of the real estate. Wyman v. Ashwell, 4 Sw. & Tr. 196 ; 29 L. J., P. 94.

—— Person interested.] — A citation was ordered to issue against the only person interested in the estate of a deceased person, calling upon him to take administration, on the application of a party who was interested in the due prosecution of a suit in chancery, for which purpose a representative of the estate was required. Williams, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 48 ; L. R. 2 P. 81 ; 22 L. T. 630 ; 18 W. R. 844.

Before a person is permitted to contest a will he may be called on by the propounder to shew his interest ; but when two contest a will, neither can call upon the other first to shew his interest. Hingeston v. Tucker, 2 Sw. & Tr. 596 ; 31 L. J., P. 91 ; 9 L. T. 337.

Where an application for administration is made by a representative of the next of kin living at the death, it is the practice to require any person directly entitled in distribution at the death to be cited before making the grant, but the court has power, under s. 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, to make a special order dispensing with such citation. Kinchella, In goods of, 63 L. J., P. 162 ; [1894] P. 264 ; 6 R. 556 ; 71 L. T. 263.

The deceased, while of unsound mind, wrote out a document in form of a will duly executed and attested ; the provisions in the will were manifestly absurd. The widow whom the deceased purported to most largely benefit by the will moved the court to pass over the document and decree letters of administration as upon an intestacy :—Held, that notice to all persons interested under the will must be given. Rich, In goods of, 65 L. T. 352 ; 55 J, P. 760.

Leave to presume Death—Insurance Companies.]—Upon a motion to swear that a testator died on or since a certain day, and for probate of his will, the estate partly consisted of policies upon the testator's life :—Held, that notice of the motion must be given to the insurance company. Kirkbride, In goods of, 55 J. P. 503. S. P., Barber, In goods of, 11 P. D. 78 ; 56 L. T. 894 ; 35 W. R. 80.

Advertisements for Testator dispensed with.]—Advertisements were dispensed with in the case of a testator who had gone abroad, and had not been heard of for many years, the assets being very small. Patton, In goods of, 23 L. R., Ir. 435.

Oath of Administrator—Motion to modify Form.]—A. P. died in 1887, intestate, without child or parent, leaving her surviving J. S., her natural and lawful brother and one of her next of kin. The said intestate, who was about sixty-three years of age at the time of her death, was married in 1860, and her husband, a sailor, of about the same age as herself, shortly afterwards left her, and at the date of this motion it was upwards of twenty years since he was last heard of. The said intestate left personalty amounting to 1,011*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*, the result of her personal earnings and savings. J. S., now a resident in America, appointed as his attorney one J., a solicitor, and the latter applied for administration. The court was now moved on his behalf to modify the wording of the oath, and that he might have leave to swear that "he believed that the said A. P. was a widow at the time of her death." The court declined to follow the case of Reed, In goods of (ante, col. 551), and refused the application, stating that the practice in such cases was either to swear the oath in the regular form, and so to get the grant, or in the alternative to cite the next of kin. Upon the authority of that case alone the court felt disinclined to depart from the practice. Upon appeal :—Held, that this case was distinguishable from Reed, In goods of (ante, col. 551), and that, upon the facts disclosed by the affidavits the appeal must be dismissed. Pridham, In goods of, 61 L. T. 302—C. A.

Compromise — Devise of Real Estate for Charitable Purposes—Attorney-General cited.]—Where a testator devised a large portion of his real estate to a charity of somewhat undefined character, to the exclusion of a niece who had strong moral claims upon him, the estate in question having come from her mother, and terms of compromise had been agreed to between the parties to a probate action in respect of the said will, the attorney-general was cited to see proceedings for the purpose of sanctioning the compromise. Boughey v. Minor, 62 L. J., P. 104 ; [1893] P. 181.

Service—On Married Women.]—Service of a citation on a married woman is effected by serving her in the presence of her husband. Hallett v. Cox, 28 L. J., P., 55, n. S. P., Herbert v. Shiell, infra.

When a citation has not been duly served on a married woman, the court will act upon a renunciation subsequently executed by herself and husband. Herbert v. Shiell, 3 Sw. & Tr. 479 ; 33 L. J., P. 142.

—— In Case of Husband and Wife.]—When a wife and husband resident abroad have been served with a citation by advertisement, there should be an affidavit that neither of them has any agent in this country. Evans v. Burrell, 4 Sw. & Tr. 185 ; 28 L. J., P. 82.

A wife died at Rome in 1854, in the lifetime of her husband. By an indenture of post-nuptial settlement it was provided that property which was then settled upon certain trusts, and any other property to which she might thereafter become entitled, should, in the event of her predeceasing her husband, and other events which happened, be distributable amongst her next of kin as if she had died unmarried and intestate. Her husband, an Italian, died at Rome in 1871, having executed a will, in which he appointed executors, but the will was not proved in this country. The wife was entitled to one-third share of her father's residuary personal estate which became distributable in November, 1874, and by an order of the Court of Chancery the share was carried over to her account. The court under these circumstances granted administration limited to the fund in chancery, to one of the next of kin, without requiring the representative of the husband to be cited. Gorofolini, In goods of, 44 L. J., P. 36; 33 L. T. 72; 23 W. R. 456.

A husband and wife separated by agreement. The husband covenanted not to claim administration of his wife's estate if she should die during his life. She died during his life. The husband refused to renounce: the court refused to make a grant to the guardian of her children until he had been cited. Pigott, In goods of, 42 L. J., P. 77; 29 L. T. 45; 21 W. R. 823.

In a probate suit the person interested in establishing an intestacy were the widow of the testator and his brother the heir-at-law. The widow was a lunatic confined in an asylum in Australia, and as the heir-at-law had already appeared as a party in the suit the court refused to order the widow to be cited to see proceedings. Ward v. Huckle, 56 L. J., P. 110; 12 P. D. 110; 57 L. T. 495; 35 W. R. 736.

W. died in 1891 intestate. It was not known whether his wife, whom he married in 1848, and who thereafter immediately left him and had not been heard of by him for some years prior to his death, survived him or not. The court refused to grant administration to the intestate's brother, without citing the widow. White, In goods of, 66 L. T. 861; 56 J. P. 409.

On an application for a grant of administration to the father of the intestate, passing over his widow, against whom misconduct was charged, the court refused to make the grant without citing the widow. Middleton, In goods of, 58 L. J., P. 28; 14 P. D. 23; 60 L. T. 237; 53 J. P. 103.

—— On Minors.]—The service of a citation on a minor is effected by serving it on him in the presence of his natural or legal guardian, or of some person upon whom the care and custody of the minor have for the time being devolved. Brown v. Wildman, 28 L. J., P. 54.

When a minor, of the age of seventeen, was living in service at a distance from her mother, her natural guardian, the court dispensed with the rule, which requires service of a citation upon a minor to be effected upon her in the presence of her natural or legal guardian, or of some person upon whom her custody for the time being properly devolved. Lainson v. Naylor, 2 Sw. & Tr. 7; 29 L. J., P. 126; 2 L. T. 391; 8 W. R. 451.

An affidavit that a minor was served with a citation in the presence of his guardian, should go on to shew how he became his guardian. Johnson v. Weldy, 2 Sw. & Tr. 313; 30 L. J., P. 170; 5 L. T. 118.

Where a citation was served upon two minors at the house where they resided, but their custodian declined to be present at the service, and an attempt was also made to serve the citation on the next of kin of the minor, but failed by reason of the process-server not being permitted to see the next of kin, the court held the service on the minors to be sufficient. Lean v. Viner, 3 Sw. & Tr. 469; 33 L. J., P. 88.

—— On Lunatics.]—When a person, whom it is necessary to cite as interested in the estate of a deceased, is a lunatic, and a committee of his estate has been appointed, service of a citation upon such committee is sufficient. It is not necessary that the lunatic should be personally served in the presence of some medical man. Surtees, In goods of, 28 L. J., P. 89.

Form of order for service of citation on a person of unsound mind, not so found by inquisition. M'Cormick v. Heyden, 17 L. R., Ir. 338.

—— On Official Liquidators of Companies.]—The plaintiffs propounded the will and codicil of A. W., under the latter of which her husband, who had survived her but a short time, took an interest. The court allowed a citation to issue to the official liquidators of the East of England Bank, creditors of the husband, to see the codicil proved. Wilson, In re, 3 Sw. & Tr. 572; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1242; 11 L. T. 427.

Service in General.]—The court has no power to dispense with the service of citations. Potts v. Potts, 30 L. J., P. 112.

Leave to proceed to prove a will in solemn form will not be granted unless citations have been personally served on the persons entitled to see proceedings, or if personal service is impracticable, have been duly advertised. Ib.

When a citation has been served, a certificate of service should be indorsed on the citation. Goodburn v. Bainbridge, 2 Sw. & Tr. 4; 29 L. J., P. 163; 2 L. T. 439; 8 W. R. 504.

An affidavit of the service of a citation should identify the citation served; the citation should be made an exhibit to the affidavit. Harenc v. Dawson, 3 Sw. & Tr. 50; 32 L. J., P. 94.

The service of a citation by a party to a suit is insufficient. Glyde v. Davie, 33 L. J., P. 184.

—— By Advertisement.]—When a party is cited by advertisement, and has no agent in this country, there should be an affidavit that he has no attorney, agent or correspondent in this country. Kenworthy v. Kenworthy, 3 Sw. & Tr. 64; 32 L. J., P. 107; 8 L. T. 470; 11 W. R. 350.

A nephew applied for administration of the estate of his aunt who had died intestate; a brother of the deceased had emigrated to Australia thirty years before; nothing had been heard of him for eighteen years, if alive he would be about seventy; it appeared upon affidavit that his relatives thought him dead:—The court refused to dispense with the advertisement of the citation. Cutler, In goods of, 67 L. T. 355.

Amendment of Citation.]—A plaintiff, in a citation to bring in probate, described himself as one of the lawful cousins and next of kin of the deceased, and upon an order obtained by the defendant that he should propound his interest, filed an act on petition, in which he alleged that he was one of the executors and residuary legatees of A., deceased, who was the lawful cousin-german of the deceased, and one of his next of kin, and living at his death. The court gave the plaintiff leave to amend the citation by inserting in it his correct description, upon payment of the defendant's costs up to the time of the amendment, exclusively of the costs of entering an appearance. Ridgway v. Abingdon, 3 Sw. & Tr. 3; 32 L. J., P. 4; 7 L. T. 756; 11 W. R. 10.

Return into Registry.]—When the estate of a deceased, who died without any known relation, was barely sufficient to pay his liabilities, and a citation had been issued and served on behalf of a creditor upon the Queen's proctor and by advertisement, but had been lost or destroyed by his solicitor's clerk, who had absconded for embezzlement, the court dispensed with the rule requiring the citation to be returned into the registry, and made the grant of administration to the creditor. Robinson, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 43.

2. Appearance.

Service of Writ of Summons to Appear.]—When a writ of summons cannot be personally served upon one of several defendants by reason of his address being unknown and not ascertainable, the court will not dispense altogether with the service, but will direct service of the writ to be effected by advertisement. Whitley v. Honeywell, 35 L. T. 517; 24 W. R. 851.

If a defendant is a foreigner resident out of the jurisdiction, he must be served with notice of the writ of summons in the action. Beddington v. Beddington, 45 L. J., P. 44; 1 P. D. 426; 34 L. T. 366; 24 W. R. 346.

Judgment in Absence of Plaintiff—Application to Restore.]—Where, for a reason explained to the court, the plaintiff was not represented at the hearing of a probate suit, and applied within six days from the date of the judgment for leave to restore the cause, the court, in granting the application, made it a condition that the plaintiff should before a certain day pay the costs of the defendant as between solicitor and client, and directed that, if he failed to do so, the judgment against him should stand. Cudworth v. Hayward, 75 L. T. 456.

Other Matters as to.]—An affidavit of search and of non-appearance should state the day on which the search was made. Harene v. Dawson, 3 Sw. & Tr. 50; 32 L. J., P. 94.

Where two persons have been cited, and neither has appeared, it should state that no appearance has been entered by or on behalf of either of them. Ib.

A caveat entered by a next of kin having been warned by the executors, the next of kin applied to have the time for entering an appearance extended in order that a communication might be made with another next of kin who was in Australia, the caveat purporting to have been entered also on his behalf. The court rejected the motion. Corcoran, In goods of, 11 W. R. 241.

3. Staying Proceedings in Suits.

Grounds for.]—It is no ground for a stay of proceedings in a suit commenced by the next of kin, that the alleged executor of a will has filed a petition in a commissary court in Scotland, to obtain confirmation of the same instrument. Hawarden v. Dunlop, 2 Sw. & Tr. 150; 4 L. T. 339.

The court refused to order that proceedings instituted to prove a will in solemn form should be stayed because the heir-at-law had commenced actions of ejectment in reference to the real estate bequeathed by the will. Davies v. Dereveux, 35 L. J., P. 77; 14 W. R. 901.

A native of France died after many years' residence in London, leaving a will, executed according to the English law, in which he appointed B. sole executrix. B. propounded the will in a declaration. C., the brother, who, with other next of kin, had entered a caveat, filed pleas and treated the will as that of a domiciled Englishman. Some months afterwards, the cause having in the meantime been ordered to be tried by a special jury, C. and the other next of kin commenced proceedings in France to set aside the will on the ground that the testator was a domiciled Frenchman, and that the will was not executed according to the law of France: the court refused to stay the proceedings pending the proceedings before the French tribunal, or to allow the pleadings to be amended so as to raise the question of domicil; the facts as to the domicil having been within the knowledge of C. from the first, and the case standing for trial. Duprez v. Veret, 38 L. J., P. 5; L. R. 1 P. 583; 19 L. T. 525; 17 W. R. 157.

When an action is brought against executors, who are restrained by an injunction, from disposing of their testator's effects, and they resist the claim, the court will not stay proceedings, although, if a judgment had been signed, it might stay execution. Davis v. Salter, 1 D. P. C. 561; 2 C. & J. 466.

The court refused to stay the proceedings in an action by an administrator, upon a suggestion that there was a will in India, which the intestate's widow, who was thereby appointed executrix, had intimated her intention to bring to this country to prove. Prosser v. Wagner, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 289; 26 L. J., C. P. 81; 5 W. R. 146.

A creditor, who had obtained a grant of administration pending suit, and who had incurred costs in respect of such administration and of proceedings in the Chancery Division, the amount of which costs, together with his original debt, would more than swallow up the amount which had come to his hands as administrator, was allowed by the court to pay himself the amount, pro tanto, of his debt and costs, and thereupon to take his discharge as administrator; but the court refused, upon his application, to dismiss the original probate suit for want of prosecution. Evans, In goods of, 65 L. T. 793.

4. Abatement by Death.

When a plaintiff died after the hearing and before judgment, the court would not, on the application of his personal representative, give judgment, unless such personal representative had been made a party to the record. Staines v. Stewart, 2 Sw. & Tr. 320; 31 L. J., P. 10; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 440; 4 L. T. 457.

By the death of a plaintiff, after a verdict in his favour, the suit abates, and a suggestion of the death must have been entered on the record before a decree could be made. Jones v. Jones, 36 L. J., P. 43; 15 L. T. 544; 15 W. R. 498.

5. Affidavits.

Form.]—An affidavit on which the addition or place of abode of a deponent is not inserted will not be admitted. Bernard, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 489; 31 L. J., P. 89; 6 L. T. 726.

When a joint affidavit was made by A. and by B., and B.'s addition was omitted, the court treated the affidavit as that of A. only. Woodburne, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 89, n.

Affidavits were sent out to New Plymouth, New Zealand, to swear the widow of W. K., deceased, as administratrix. In the meantime she had moved to Hobart Town, in Tasmania, and certain interlineations in accordance were made in the affidavits, but not initialled by the judge who administered the oath; the description of Mrs. King, as widow, was also slightly irregular. The judge made an order that such affidavit should be filed. King, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 621; 32 L. J., P. 14; 7 L. T. 394; 11 W. R. 171.

A., in the oath for executrix, described herself as of, &c., "the lawful widow and relict of the deceased," without any other addition. The affidavit was rejected in the registry as contrary to the practice, on the ground that the deponent might be a married woman notwithstanding the terms of the addition:—The court held the addition to be sufficient, and directed the affidavit to be received. Morgan, In goods of, 32 L. J., P. 139; 11 W. R. 749.

Supporting Petition—Reference to Facts not Mentioned in Petition.]—If affidavits filed in support of a petition as to the right of a party to obtain letters of administration go into matters not set out in such petition, the court will not allow counter-affidavits to be brought in at once, but at the hearing will either refuse to read such parts of the affidavits, or will then, if they be material, permit the other party to answer them on oath. Cordeux v. Trasler, 4 Sw. & Tr. 48; 34 L. J., P. 127; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 587.

Supporting Application for Examination of Witness.]—In order to found an application for the immediate examination of a witness in a pending suit, the affidavit must set out special circumstances; it is not sufficient that it states that the witness is a material witness. Andrews v. Brooke, 43 L. J., P. 39; L. R. 3 P. 181; 31 L. T. 102; 22 W. R. 712.

Affidavit of Scripts.]—A memorandum written by a solicitor from oral directions of the testator, and sent to counsel as instructions to draft a will, is a script within the meaning of the affidavit of scripts, although not read by the deceased. Bagot v. Bagot, 1 L. R. Ir. 308.

An omission to annex to, or mention in the affidavits of scripts, the instructions for a will, is no ground for allowing out of the estate the costs of an unsuccessful opposition to the will, if such opposition is not founded on the absence of instructions. Foxwell v. Poole, 3 Sw. & Tr. 5; 32 L. J., P. 8; 7 L. T. 757; 11 W. R. 32.

Where one of the defendants, who was sole heiress-at-law of the deceased, had resided in Belgium for seventeen years, where she was still living, and had written stating that she had not, nor never had, any testamentary documents or receipts belonging to the affairs of the deceased, the court dispensed with an affidavit of scripts from her, and allowed her solicitor to make and file the necessary affidavit. Tallon, In goods of, 31 L. R., Ir. 393.

Taken in Foreign Places or Countries.]—An affidavit sworn before a notary abroad will not be admitted unless it appears on affidavit that there was not, at the place where it was sworn, a British consul or other officer empowered by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 42, s. 1, to take affidavits, and that a notary has, by the law of such place, authority to take affidavits. Bernard, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 489; 31 L. J., P. 89; 6 L. T. 726.

A requisition to New South Wales under the seal of the prerogative court of Canterbury to swear an administrator:—Held, that the Court of Probate can decree administration on the affidavits so sworn. Bedwell, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 15; 27 L. J., P. 8.

But a declaration on oath was received instead of an affidavit, the person making it being resident abroad, where an affidavit could not be made. Lambert, In goods of, 35 L. J., P. 64; L. R. 1 P. 138; 14 L. T. 227; 14 W. R. 617.

In Reply.]—The court will allow affidavits in reply to be read at the hearing of a cause, if it thinks such affidavits are necessary. Cordeux v. Trasler, supra.

6. Parties.

Propounding Will.—A person appointed executor, and after the testator's death convicted of felony, is not thereby disentitled to maintain a suit in the Court of Probate with a view of establishing the validity of the will by which he is appointed executor. Smethurst v. Tomlin and Bankes, 2 Sw. & Tr. 143; 30 L. J., P. 269; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 763; 4 L. T. 712.

A party propounding a will may put any person opposing it on proof of his interest; but where two parties oppose a will, e.g., the Queen's proctor and an alleged next of kin, neither can put the other on proof of his interest. Hingeston v. Tucker, 2 Sw. & Tr. 596; 31 L. J., P. 91; 7 L. T. 337.

Being cited to propound and prove a will is a distinct matter from being cited to take probate under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 16. Bewsher v. Williams, 3 Sw. & Tr. 62; 8 L. T. 290, n.; 11 W. R. 541.

The burden of proof lies upon the party propounding a will. He is, therefore, bound to begin, although he is an intervener, and although the plaintiff in the suit has, in his declaration, alleged an intestacy. Cross v. Cross, 3 Sw. & Tr. 292; 33 L. J., P. 49; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 183; 10 L. T. 70; 12 W. R. 694.

A jury found for a will although the only surviving attesting witness swore that it was a forgery, and the court refused, upon the evidence, to disturb the verdict. Ib.

Where parties interested under a testamentary paper have been cited to appear and propound it, and have not appeared and propounded it, the court will grant administration as to an intestate, or probate of an earlier will, as the case may be, in common form. Morton, In goods of, Morton v. Thorpe, 3 Sw. & Tr. 179; 32 L. J., P. 174; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 728; 9 L. T. 300.

A party who has no interest under a will cannot propound it. Parton v. Johnson, 37 L. J., P. 67; L. R. 1 P. 549; 18 L. T. 923; 16 W. R. 1192.

—— Particulars of Papers Propounded.]—Where a will or a codicil is propounded in a declaration in the usual form, and there is ground for suggesting that other testamentary papers, besides those specifically referred to in the declaration, may be included in the probate, the court will order the party propounding the will or codicil to furnish the other party with particulars of the testamentary papers he intends to set up. Marsh v. Corry, 3 Sw. & Tr. 458; 33 L. J., P. 112; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 159.

—— Interested in opposing.]—A caveat was warned by the widow, and the defendants appeared thereto as universal devisees and legatees of the estate of A., the universal devisee and legatee of the whole estate of the deceased. The plaintiff thereupon declared, alleging an intestacy. The defendants pleaded propounding a will, whereof A. was sole executrix and universal legatee. On motion for an order to amend the pleas by setting forth how they derived their interest:—Held, that it was too late for the plaintiff to call upon the defendants to set forth their interest after the declaration had been delivered. Inkson v. Jeeves, 3 Sw. & Tr. 39; 32 L. J., P. 69; 8 L. T. 173; 11 W. R. 350.

A deed executed by the deceased in favour of the defendant, in which she was described as a sister of the deceased, is sufficient evidence of relationship, so that she, as next of kin, can contest the validity of the will of the deceased. Smith v. Tebbitt, 36 L. J., P. 35; L. R. 1 P. 354; 15 L. T. 594; 15 W. R. 562.

An executor having propounded a will, a party who appeared to dispute it as the natural son of the deceased was put upon proof of his interest. In his declaration he alleged that the deceased was a domiciled Portuguese, that he was his natural son, that, by the law of Portugal, he was entitled to the whole of the deceased's property, and that he had instituted a suit in Portugal against the executor, in which he obtained a decree that he should be put into possession of the property. The declaration did not state the nature of the suit, nor the questions involved in it, nor did the judgment shew that the plaintiff was in the same position as a legitimate son:—Held, that the foreign judgment alone did not shew such an interest in the party in whose favour it was made as to entitle him to dispute the will. Crispin v. Doglioni, 2 Sw. & Tr. 17; 29 L. J., P. 130; 3 L. T. 179; 9 W. R. 19. See col. 822, 1.

Parties entitled to Contest Proof of Will.]—An executor of a former will has the same right as a next of kin to put an executor of a later will upon proof in solemn form, and to interrogate his witnesses. Boston v. Fox, 4 Sw. & Tr. 199; 29 L. J., P. 68.

Infants—Guardian ad litem.]—When a will is disputed by a guardian ad litem on behalf of infants, the Court of Probate has power to inquire whether the suit is for their benefit. Percival v. Cross, 52 L. J., P. 16; 7 P. D. 234; 47 L. T. 353; 31 W. R. 124; 46 J. P. 792.

In appointing a guardian ad litem to an infant, the court, if it thinks fit, may pass over the next of kin. Quick v. Quick, 33 L. J., P. 177; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 372.

The court refused to appoint the paternal uncle guardian to a minor, for the purpose of instituting a suit on his behalf against the mother in reference to the validity of the will of his father, without first citing the mother to shew cause why such an appointment should not be made. Jenkins, In goods of, 38 L. J., P. 72; L. R. 1 P. 690. See also INFANT.

Defendant a Minor — Guardian refusing to take part in Proceedings.]—Where the defendant in a probate action was a minor, and both she and her guardian refused to take any part in the proceedings, the court, holding that the practice in such a case was governed by Ord. XIII. r. 1 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, and not by the Probate Rules, 1862 (Contentious Business), r. 74, appointed the official solicitor of the court the defendant's guardian ad litem, and ordered that his costs should be provided by the plaintiff. White v. Duvernay, 60 L. J., P. 89; [1891] P. 290.

Paupers.]—A plaintiff who through poverty is unable to prosecute a suit instituted by him should apply for leave to continue the suit in formâ pauperis. If he does not, and the suit is dismissed for non-prosecution, he will not afterwards be allowed to recommence it in formâ pauperis. Cuthrell v. Jeffree, 33 L. J., P. 178; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 445.

S. obtained probate, in common form, of a paper professing to be the will of L. Such probate, at the suit of the next of kin of the deceased, was revoked, the court holding that the paper was not the will of the deceased, and that S. had been guilty of fraud in obtaining probate; and in contesting the suit S., though suing in formâ pauperis, was condemned in the costs of the suit. Carless v. Thompson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 21.

A person suing in formâ pauperis, to whom counsel has been assigned by the court, cannot appear by another counsel until there has been a renunciation, or a new assignment of counsel, or he has been dispaupered. Hamer v. Boreham, 1 Sw. & Tr. 26; 27 L. J., P. 107.

Parties—Striking out.]—In a probate suit, out of nine defendants on the record eight had been cited and had not appeared. The remaining one, who was resident in New Zealand, had not been served. The court, at the hearing, allowed him to be struck off the record, and the case to proceed against the other eight defendants. Drewitt v. Drewitt, 58 L. T. 684; 52 J. P. 232.

7. Pleadings.

Claim—Form of.]—When a will which has been destroyed is propounded, it is not necessary to set out the substance of the will, or to allege its destruction in the declaration. Glen v. Burgess, 3 Sw. & Tr. 43; 32 L. J., P. 157; 8 L. T. 174; 11 W. R. 463.

The declaration should, however, if possible, assign a particular date to the will, and an averment that the deceased in or about a certain month made his last will is primâ facie insufficient. Ib.

A plaintiff propounded a will in a declaration in the ordinary form, to which the defendant pleaded. The plaintiff then filed a second declaration in a special form, propounding the will as an American will. To this declaration the defendant pleaded, and evidence was taken on the questions raised by the pleadings under a requisition and commissions in America. Before the case came on for trial, the plaintiff amended his declaration by reverting to the case which he had originally set up, whereupon the defendant abandoned his opposition and consented to probate. The court condemned the defendant in the costs of proving the will in solemn form, as if the suit had proceeded upon the original declaration, and made no order as to the costs caused by the filing of the second declaration.

Archer v. Burke, 37 L. J., P. 30; L. R. 1 P. 558.

Wills alleged must be propounded—if by the plaintiff, in his statement of claim; if by a defendant, by counter-claim at the end of the defence. Madder v. Penrose, 29 L. R., Ir. 16.

—— Interest Suit.]—The pedigree of parties claiming to be next of kin of a person dying intestate, against the Queen's proctor claiming administration on the ground of bastardy, must be set out in their pleadings, and not by way of particulars. Griffin v. Greenwood, 19 L. T. 661.

—— Action to prove Will and to discharge Protection Order made in Wife's Lifetime.]—A claim to pronounce against the validity of the will of a married woman who had obtained a protection order, and a counter-claim to discharge the protection order, may be included in the same action. Mudge v. Adams, 50 L. J., P. 49; 6 P. D. 54; 44 L. T. 185; 29 W. R. 307.

—— Declaration of Legitimacy.]—A prayer for a declaration of legitimacy cannot be included in a writ in a probate suit, but must be by petition. Warter v. Warter, 59 L. J., P. 45; 15 P. D. 35; 62 L. T. 328.

—— Defendant's Legitimacy Questioned—Motion to strike out Defence.]—In an interest suit, where the real question in dispute was the defendant's legitimacy, upon motion by the plaintiff to strike out the defence:—Held, that this was too serious a matter to be decided upon motion. Harrington, In goods of, 63 L. T. 228.

Leave to Plead.]—Before a plea that the testator did not intend the alleged testamentary instrument to operate as his will can be put on the record, leave must first be obtained; but it is not necessary to furnish particulars under such plea. Harrison v. Kirby, 17 L. T. 152; 16 W. R. 144.

Defence.]—When the statement of claim does not deny the defendant's interest in the estate, the court will not order the statement of defence to be struck out for not alleging an interest in the defendant. Medcalf v. James, 25 W. R. 63.

When a plea contains irrelevant matter, it should be objected to on application at chambers. Farlar v. Farlar, 1 Sw. & Tr. 124; 27 L. J., P. 103.

The admission of a responsive allegation, pleading in the earlier part the personal and testamentary history of the testatrix, and in the later part that the paper in question was procured by her husband at a time when, by reason of extreme illness, she had not testamentary capacity, was opposed:—Held, that the earlier part of the allegation, though in itself inadmissible, as not affecting the issue, would, in combination with the averment of testamentary incapacity contained in the later part, be such evidence as a judge could not properly withdraw from the consideration of a jury at a trial of the issue of testamentary competency, and must be admitted to proof accordingly. Latham v. Woolbert, 1 Sw. & Tr. 1; 27 L. J., P. 10; 6 W. R. 374.

When a party pleading relies upon a will of later date than that propounded, he is bound to set it forth in the plea, with the same particulars as in a declaration. Leake v. Hurst, 30 L. J., P. 39; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 104.

An executor propounding a will cannot plead in opposition to an earlier will propounded in the same suit any plea but revocation by the will which he propounds. Parton v. Johnson, 37 L. J., P. 67; L. R. 1 P. 549; 18 L. T. 923; 16 W. R. 1192.

Pleas of Undue Execution and Revocation.]—Under a plea that a paper propounded is not the will of the deceased evidence of undue execution, or of incapacity, is not admissible. The meaning of that plea is, that the deceased did not execute the paper intending that it should operate as his will. Cunliffe v. Cross, infra.

A plea that the will propounded is not the will of the deceased is too vague and indefinite, and will not be allowed to be pleaded. Owen v. Davies, 3 Sw. & Tr. 588; 33 L. J., P. 201; 13 W. R. 88.

—— That Testator was incapable of executing Will.]—A defendant pleaded, that at the time of the pretended execution of the will deceased was incapable of executing it, and that the will was prepared and made by A., and that deceased had not given to A. directions to prepare or make it:—Held, that both pleas were bad. Middlehurst v. Johnson, 30 L. J., P. 14.

—— That Testator did not know Contents of Will.]—A plea that at the time when the testator signed the will he did not know and approve of the contents thereof is good on demurrer. Hastilow v. Stobie, 35 L. J., P. 18; L. R. 1 P. 64; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1039; 13 L. T. 473; 14 W. R. 211.

A plaintiff having propounded a will and codicil, the defendant pleaded that the codicil was not prepared in conformity with the instructions of the deceased; and that the deceased, at the time of the execution of the codicil, was ignorant of its contents:—Held, that the plea was bad. Cunliffe v. Cross, 3 Sw. & Tr. 37; 32 L. J., P. 68; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 210; 8 L. T. 172; 11 W. R. 258.

In a suit as to the validity of a will, the next of kin pleaded that it was not the will of the deceased. The jury found that the testatrix gave instructions for, and intended to have inserted in her will, certain small legacies, which were in fact omitted; that such instructions, at the moment she executed the will, were absent from her mind; and that the residuary legatee, who procured such execution, knew that such instructions were absent from her mind. The verdict on this issue, by direction of the judge of assize, was entered for the next of kin:—Held, that as no fraud was pleaded or imputed to the residuary legatee, and as the will was read over to the testatrix at the time she executed it, the mere omission of the legacies did not prevent the instrument propounded from being her will. Mitchell v. Gard, 3 Sw. & Tr. 75; 32 L. J., P. 129; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 673; 8 L. T. 438; 11 W. R. 773.

A plaintiff propounded a will. The defendant pleaded denying the due execution of such will; and that the deceased subsequently executed another will, by which the first was revoked; and, finally, that he destroyed the second will with an intention to revoke it:—Held, that the last fact was not properly pleaded, inasmuch as it was no answer to the declaration. Powell v.

Powell, 35 L. J., P. 5; L. R. 1 P. 6; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 982; 13 L. T. 566; 14 W. R. 147.

At the trial a legatee in an earlier will who resisted probate of a later will, which was propounded by the executors, impeached the genuineness of the testator's signature to the instrument, though no allegation of fraud had been pleaded:—Held, that evidence in support of the allegation of forgery was admissible under the plea of undue execution. Hooton v. Dennet, 17 L. T. 670; 16 W. R. 488.

A defendant pleaded, in addition to pleas of undue execution, want of testamentary capacity, and undue influence, that a will of an earlier date, brought in with the scripts, was the last will and testament of the deceased:—Held, that the plea might stand, as it occasioned no inconvenience to the plaintiff. Tailby v. Brown, 13 L. T. 566.

Pleas of Undue Influence and Fraud.]—A plea that a will was procured by undue influence, intimidation, duress, or improper control, is bad unless the name of some person exercising the undue influence is stated in it. West v. West, 4 Sw. & Tr. 22; 34 L. J., P. 146. S. P., Harris v. Bradbury, 30 L. J., P. 168.

A plea that a will was procured by the undue influence of "A. and others" is good, but the other side is entitled to the particulars of "the others." Ib.

When it is intended to invalidate a will on the ground of fraud, or of circumstances tantamount to a charge of fraud, there should be a plea alleging that the execution of the will has been obtained by fraud. A plea of undue influence is insufficient to let in a charge of fraud. White v. White, 2 Sw. & Tr. 504; 31 L. J., P. 215.

In a plea averring that the execution of a will was obtained by the undue influence or fraud of A. and others acting with him, it must be shewn that he personally exercised such influence or fraud. Purcell v. Barlow, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 367.

Leave was granted to a defendant (propounding the latest will of the deceased) to insert a different name in each plea, he paying the costs from the filing of the pleas to the amendment. Ib.

Leave was given to file a special plea of fraud alleged to have been exercised by the plaintiff in preventing the revocation by destruction of a will on the terms of the defendant giving particulars of the alleged fraud. Kelly v. Kelly, 23 L. R., Ir. 136.

Particulars of Pleas.]—By a rule of proceeding in the Probate Court (1865), made as to contentious business, it is required that any party having pleaded certain pleas as to the competency of the testator, and the validity of the execution of the will, shall give particulars in writing stating shortly the substance of the case he intends to present to the court, and no other defence shall be available. The particulars delivered set forth that, "at the time of the execution of the alleged will, the deceased was in a state of mental prostration brought on by habitual drunkenness and disease of the brain, and that when he executed the alleged will he was not conscious of, and did not approve of, the contents of the alleged will or of the residuary clause":—Held, that these particulars could not be construed as restricting the defendant to proof that the non-approval of the residuary clause was alone occasioned by mental prostration brought on by habitual drunkenness and disease of the brain. Fulton v. Andrew, 44 L. J., P. 17; L. R. 7 H. L. 448; 32 L. T. 209; 23 W. R. 566.

—— Undue Influence.]—The defendant in a probate action alleged that the will had been procured by the undue influence of the plaintiff "and others." The plaintiff applied for particulars of the names of the persons charged with undue influence and particulars of the acts of undue influence alleged, and the times when and places where each of the acts was alleged to have taken place. The president ordered the defendant to give the names of the persons charged with undue influence, but refused to order him to give particulars of the acts:—Held, that as it was admitted to have been the long-settled practice of the Probate Court, and subsequently of the Probate Division, not to require a party alleging undue influence to give particulars of the acts of undue influence, such practice ought not now to be disturbed; and semble (per Lindley and Fry, L.JJ.), that this rule of practice was founded on good reason. Salisbury (Lord) v. Nugent, 53 L. J., P. 23; 9 P. D. 23; 50 L. T. 160; 32 W. R. 221—C. A.

—— Incapacity.]—In an action for probate the court will not order particulars to be given of incapacity. Hankinson v. Barningham, 53 L. J., P. 16; 9 P. D. 62; 32 W. R. 324; 48 J. P. 24.

Embarrassing Matter.]—The plaintiff propounded for probate a will of September, 1880. A defendant counter-claimed to prove a will of May, 1881. The plaintiff replied (inter alia) that the testatrix was not of sound mind when she executed the will of May, 1881; and (5) that if she did duly execute it when of sound mind, she duly revoked it by a will of June, 1881, executed when she was in a similar state of mind:—Held, that clause 5 of the reply ought not to be struck out as embarrassing. Rigg v. Hughes, Smith, In re, 53 L. J., P. 62; 9 P. D. 68; 50 L. T. 293; 32 W. R. 355—C. A.

Costs of Pleas of Undue Influence.]—A defendant pleading undue influence, and not appearing at the trial in support of the plea, will be condemned in costs. Tolland v. Stevenson, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 300; 13 L. T. 609.

A defendant pleaded that the will propounded was not duly executed, and that the deceased was incapable at the time of making a will. With this plea, he gave notice that he only intended to cross-examine the witnesses produced in support of the will. Subsequently he obtained leave to, and did, file a plea of undue influence on the part of the plaintiff, but did not withdraw the notice:—Held, that such notice only protected the defendant from costs in case he limited his cross-examination to those matters required to be established by an executor in proving a will in solemn form, namely, that the will was duly executed and that the testator was capable at the time of execution. Ireland v. Rendall, 35 L. J., P. 79; L. R. 1 P. 194; 14 L. T. 574.

The court refused to condemn a next of kin in costs who had unsuccessfully opposed a will on the ground of incapacity and undue influence, although there was no direct evidence of undue influence, when it appeared that the will was made in favour of the testator's widow, and at her instigation, by answers of "Aye" and "No"

at a time when his capacity might be fairly questioned. Smith v. Smith, 36 L. J., P. 13; L. R. 1 P. 239; 15 L. T. 192; 15 W. R. 230.

Pleadings by Interveners.]—An intervener may plead after issue joined by leave of the court. Jones v. Williams, 4 Sw. & Tr. 19; 34 L. J., P. 102; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 288.

A party intervening after the pleadings have been closed, cannot be allowed by a minute of court to adopt and adhere to the pleas given in opposition to a will, but must file his own separate pleas. Ib.

Withdrawing Pleas.]—Leave to withdraw a plea to which there has been a demurrer, will not be granted except upon payment of costs. Hawke v. Hawke, 32 L. J., P. 132.

Amendment of Pleadings.]—M. A. D., the testatrix, in 1853, made her will, by which she gave her property equally between the plaintiffs, defendants and interveners. In an action by the plaintiffs propounding this will, it appeared that in 1874 she gave instructions for another will, which would have deprived the plaintiffs of all interest in her estate. In the course of the plaintiff's case some evidence was given tending to shew that the testatrix was prevented by force and threats from executing the proposed will. The court allowed the pleadings to be amended by adding statements to that effect, and praying for a declaration that the plaintiffs held their shares as trustees for the defendants and interveners. Betts v. Doughty, 48 L. J., P. 71; 5 P. D. 26; 41 L. T. 560.

The inclination of the court is to allow the record to be amended at the trial by the addition of a new plea rather than to shut out any defence which might be raised. Todd v. Simpsion, 1 Sw. & Tr. 269.

B. died in May, 1850, leaving a will dated May, 1849, and two codicils dated May, 1850. Probate of these papers was taken in common form, in July, 1850. In April, 1858, two legatees intimated their intention of disputing the two codicils; whereupon the surviving executors commenced a suit, and filed their declaration on the 25th June. On the 21st of July the defendants filed pleas, first, alleging that the codicils were duly executed; and, secondly, that the testator was of unsound mind at the time of their execution. On the 18th of November the plaintiffs set the case down for hearing, but it had not come on for trial. The defendants then, on the affidavit of their solicitor, applied for leave to amend their pleas by inserting similar pleas against the will, on the ground that since the pleas were filed their solicitor had received information impeaching the validity of the will. The court hæsitanter allowed such amendment, on condition of a portion of the legacy, already received by one of the defendants, being brought into court, the costs of the motion being paid, and the pleadings amended within a week. Ware v. Claxton, 1 Sw. & Tr. 251; 7 W. R. 145.

The court will, at the trial, allow pleadings to be amended by adding a plea on the terms of adjournment, if desired by the other side, and payment of the costs of the day. White v. White, 2 Sw. & Tr. 504; 31 L. J., P. 215.

But leave to introduce a new plea after issue joined will not be given, unless affidavits in support of the motion disclose such facts, as, if proved in evidence, would warrant the plea. Twells v. Clarke, 3 Sw. & Tr. 280; 33 L. J., P. 49; 9 L. T. 658.

If at the trial evidence of such facts should be given, the court would allow a corresponding plea to be added to the record if it could be done without injury to the other party. Ib.

The court will not give leave to amend at the eleventh hour unless fresh facts have only just been found out. Duprez v. Veret, 38 L. J., P. 5; L. R. 1 P. 583; 19 L. T. 525; 17 W. R. 157.

In a probate suit where the onus of proof lay on the defendant, application was made by the plaintiff, after the defendant had been cross-examined and his case had been closed, for leave to amend the pleadings by adding a defence that the codicil in dispute had been obtained by the defendant's fraudulent misrepresentations, the evidence in support of such defence to be confined to matters arising upon the defendant's cross-examination:—Held, that the amendment might properly be allowed. Riding v. Hawkins, 58 L. J., P. 48; 14 P. D. 56; 60 L. T. 869; 37 W. R. 575.

Demurrers.]—Where a party takes no step on an order to join in demurrer within a given time, the party demurring is at the expiration of the time entitled to judgment on the demurrer. Wells v. Wells, 2 Sw. & Tr. 607; 31 L. J., P. 112; 7 L. T. 250.

Pleas by Party Cited.]—A party cited to see proceedings who has appeared, and opposes a testamentary paper, is not allowed to adopt the pleas of the defendant, but should file pleas on his own behalf. Jones v. Williams, 4 Sw. & Tr. 19; 34 L. J., P. 102; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 288.

8. Evidence.

Subpœna.]—The Probate Court of Ireland has jurisdiction to order a subpœna to issue to compel the attendance of a witness resident in England or Scotland. Ross v. Burke, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 328.

Examination of Witnesses.]—Neither defendants nor interveners, unless they plead, can be permitted either to examine or to cross-examine witnesses. Nugent v. Nugent, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 519.

In a probate case, wherein the three plaintiffs propounded the will, which was opposed on various grounds, including a charge of undue influence against all three of the plaintiffs:—Held, that counsel for the plaintiffs was entitled to open the whole case, and, after calling one of the plaintiffs only, to reserve the evidence of the other two plaintiffs. Faldo v. Lovett, 77 L. T. 220.

Commission to Examine Witnesses.]—In a testamentary suit the question at issue was, whether the will of the deceased was executed in accordance with the provisions of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26. One of the attesting witnesses being resident in New Zealand, the court ordered the original will to be transmitted to that colony, attached to the commission for the examination of such witness, an attested copy having been first deposited in the registry, and time having been allowed for the examination of the other witness before one of the registrars of the court by either party. Forster v. Forster, 33 L. J., P. 113; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 594.

A commission for the examination of a witness in a distant colony will authorise the commissioners to act jointly or severally. Ib.

The court has power to issue a commission to examine a witness who is not prevented by illness or by reason of being without the jurisdiction of the court from attending the trial, but will not make such an order without the consent of the other side. Jones v. Williams, 13 W. R. 696.

The court directed a commission to issue for the examination of the surviving attesting witness to a will, which was in litigation before it, although the affidavit filed to support the application merely stated that the witness was upwards of sixty-six years of age, and frequently suffered from ill-health. Brown v. Brown, 38 L. J., P. 78; L. R. 1 P. 720; 21 L. T. 339; 17 W. R. 1110.

Under s. 26 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, the court has power to order a commission to issue to examine a person as to her knowledge of a testamentary paper. Banfield v. Pickard, or Pickard, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 72; 6 P. D. 33; 29 W. R. 613; 45 J. P. 508.

Discovery and Inspection.]—The court possesses powers as extensive as the Court of Chancery and the superior courts of common law to compel a discovery, by virtue of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 36, such powers being "auxiliary to the trial of questions of fact by a jury before the court itself." Hunt v. Anderson, 37 L. J., P. 27; L. R. 1 P. 476; 18 L. T. 33; 16 W. R. 583.

The court will exercise its power of compelling a discovery in cases where a discovery would be granted by the Court of Chancery, in order that parties may not be compelled to resort to the Court of Chancery for assistance in the prosecution of a suit in the Court of Probate. Ib.

The court has power to order any documents sufficiently described, and shewn to be material to the inquiry going on before it, to be brought into the registry, and also to order either party to file additional affidavits as to scripts. Peacock v. Lowe, 36 L. J., P. 91; 16 L. T. 641.

The opposite counsel cannot inspect letters which a witness has with him during examination, though they relate to the cause, without putting them, if required by the other side, in evidence. Palmer v. Maclear, 1 Sw. & Tr. 149.

Where the executors of a testatrix and their solicitors had in their possession certain old wills and other testamentary documents executed by her, as to the contents of which they refused to give any information to her husband's nephew and niece, who believed themselves to be benefited by the same, the court—an application for a subpœna to bring in such testamentary papers having been refused in the registry—under s. 26 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, ordered the executors to bring all such testamentary papers into the registry, and that the applicants should be allowed to take copies of them, but that the applicants should pay the costs of such deposit and of the motion. Shepherd, In goods of, 60 L. J., P. 102; [1891] P. 323.

Interrogatories.]—The plaintiff sued to recall probate on the ground that the testator was not of sound mind, and that the will was obtained by the undue influence of the defendants, two of whom were the executors, and the third universal legatee. The plaintiff delivered interrogatories for the examination of the defendants, asking what sums they had received from the testator by way of payment for services, loan, or gift, and whether the universal legatee had since the death of testator made over any and what part of the property to the other defendants. The defendants declined to answer these interrogatories as irrelevant:—Held, that the interrogatories must be answered, the period in the first interrogatory being limited to three years. Holloway, In re, Young v. Holloway, 56 L. J., P. 81; 12 P. D. 167; 57 L. T. 515—C. A.

—— Memorandum Relating to Will.]—The court gave leave to two of the executors named in a will to interrogate the solicitor of the testator touching a memorandum which the solicitor had stated to the executors had been executed by the testator in reference to his property. Lockwood, In goods of, 66 L. T. 124.

Declaration of Deceased Person.]—Declarations of a deceased person, claiming a limited interest under a particular will of property of which he was in possession, are admissible to prove the fact that such will had a legal existence, and that certain persons were named executors therein. Sly v. Sly, 46 L. J., P. 63; 2 P. D. 91; 25 W. R. 463.

Copy of Will.]—A copy of a will in the handwriting of one of the attesting witnesses, who was a solicitor's clerk, was found after a lapse of fifty years among the solicitor's papers tied up with other papers belonging to a client who was one of the executors named in the will:—Held, on proof of due search for the original will, that the copy was admissible. Ib.

By Affidavit.]—In an action brought for the purpose of proving a will in solemn form, where none of the parties cited had appeared, the court declined to order the execution and attestation of the will, to be proved by affidavit under Ord. XXXVII. r. 1. Cook v. Tomlinson, 24 W. R. 851.

Affidavits having been sworn before the United States consul in Vera Cruz, as there was no English consul or diplomatic agent there:—Held, that the court had no power to receive them. De Salazar, In goods of, 21 W. R. 776.

In a probate suit the court allowed an affidavit, used on a motion formerly made in the suit, and sworn by a witness who had been subpœnaed but was unable to attend, owing to his being, at the time of the hearing, engaged as a witness elsewhere, to be put in evidence, and treated the application as made before the trial under Ord. XXXVII. r. 1. Drewitt v. Drewitt, 58 L. T. 684. See also Gornall v. Mason, 56 L. J., P. 86; 12 P. D. 142; 57 L. T. 601; 35 W. R. 672; 51 J. P. 663.

—— Duchy of Cornwall.]—On motion for grant of letters of administration of an intestate's effects to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, as Duke of Cornwall, it is not necessary, if the facts are sufficiently set forth in the warrant, that they should be verified by affidavit. Griffith, In goods of, 53 L. J., P. 30; 9 P. D. 63; 32 W. R. 524; 48 J. P. 312.

—— As to Birth or Death.]—Upon an application for administration to the estate of a child, the court allowed the birth and death of the child to be proved by evidence of declarations by its deceased mother. Thompson, In goods of, 56 L. J., P. 46; 12 P. D. 100; 57 L. T. 373; 35 W. R. 384.

Notice with Plea to Call and Cross-examine Witnesses.]—When a party opposing a will has given notice that he merely insists upon the will being proved in solemn form of law, and only intends to cross-examine the witnesses produced in support of it, he may on the eve of the trial recall such notice, and substitute another expression of his intention to produce, if necessary, witnesses on the trial of the cause. Edmonds v. Lewer, 13 L. T. 248.

If a party opposing a will does not deliver the notice of his intention not to call witnesses until after he has delivered his plea, he loses the protection against condemnation in costs given by the rule of the court, and the question of costs is left to the discretion of the court. Bone v. Whittle, 36 L. J., P. 15; L. R. 1 P. 249; 15 L. T. 330.

An attesting witness to a codicil signed a written statement to the effect that it was not duly executed, and it was opposed upon that statement. The court being of opinion that the statement had been unfairly obtained from the witness by the party opposing the codicil condemned her in the costs. Ib.

A party who pleads that the deceased did not know and approve of the contents of his will may upon that question cross-examine the witnesses produced by the plaintiff without being liable to costs, if he has given the notice required by r. 41. Cleare v. Cleare, 38 L. J., P. 81; L. R. 1 P. 655; 20 L. T. 497; 17 W. R. 687.

A conditional notice, that if both attesting witnesses to a will are produced the parties opposing it only intend to cross-examine the witnesses, is a sufficient notice to protect them against condemnation in costs. Leeman v. George, 37 L. J., P. 13; L. R. 1 P. 542; 17 L. T. 518.

Executor—Error in Name—Correct Description — Admissibility of Evidence — Costs.] — Where there were two persons each of whom answered part of the description of a person named in a will as executor, one as to the name, the other as to the address and occupation, the court, on the principle of Charter v. Charter (L. R. 7 H. L. 364), admitted evidence of circumstances to shew who it was the testator meant. As this was an error made by the testator himself, costs were granted out of the estate. Chappell, In goods of, 63 L. J., P. 95; [1894] P. 95; 6 R. 576; 70 L. T. 245.

Calling Attesting Witnesses.]—The court will not, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 26, order the attendance for examination in open court of the attesting witnesses to a will because they may have declined to give information as to the circumstances attending the execution of the same. Evans v. Jones, 36 L. J., P. 70; 16 L. T. 299; 15 W. R. 775.

A party having been brought before the court to be examined as to her knowledge of the testamentary papers of the deceased, counsel was permitted to attend on her behalf, to put questions to her, and also to the other persons who had been required to attend on the same inquiry. Cope, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 83.

In contentious proceedings the party propounding a will is not bound to call both the attesting witnesses. Forster v. Forster, 33 L. J., P. 113; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 594. S. P., Belbin v Skeates, 1 Sw. & Tr. 148; 27 L. J., P. 56.

But a party proving a will in solemn form is bound to call at least one of the attesting witnesses. Bowman v. Hodgson, 36 L. J., P. 124; L. R. 1 P. 362; 16 L. T. 392.

It will not suffice to prove the execution by other witnesses who were present at the time, but did not attest the instrument. Ib.

When a party propounding a will in a contested suit, the only issue being due execution, and notice under the 41st rule having been given, called one of the attesting witnesses, who gave evidence against the due execution:—Held, that he was bound to call the other attesting witness. Owen v. Williams, 4 Sw. & Tr. 202; 32 L. J., P. 159; 9 L. T. 86; 11 W. R. 808.

An executor having produced one of the attesting witnesses to the will in dispute, who failed, from mental incapacity or some other cause, to give a rational account of the time and manner of execution, called the second witness. The second witness deposed that the testator did not sign his name or acknowledge his signature in the presence of two witnesses present at the time:—Held, that though the second witness could not be considered a hostile witness, yet he was produced to satisfy the requirements of the law; and that the party producing him might put questions to other witnesses tending to throw doubts upon his general credibility. Coles v. Coles, 35 L. J., P. 40; L. R. 1 P. 70; 13 L. T. 608; 14 W. R. 290.

Onus probandi—Informal Will—Interested Parties propounding.]—Strict proof must be given of an informal will signed by a mark instead of the usual subscription in full of the testator and obtained from him by one of the propounders, who takes a substantial interest under its provisions, when two of the propounder's relations are witnesses to the signature. Such a will is not invalid, but the onus probandi may be increased by circumstances, and the presumption may even be conclusive against the validity of the instrument. Donnelly v. Broughton, 60 L. J., P. C. 48; [1891] A. C. 435; 65 L. T. 558; 40 W. R. 209—P. C.

Refusal of Attesting Witnesses to make Affidavit — Insufficient Attestation Clause — Jurisdiction.]—Each of the two attesting witnesses to a will (the attestation clause of which was insufficient) refused to make an affidavit as to due execution. The two executors named in the will made affidavits under Ord. LXXIX. r. 7 as to its due execution in their presence:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to dispense with the testimony of the attesting witnesses, and would grant probate on the affidavits of the executors. Ovens, In goods of, 29 L. R., Ir. 451.

The attestation clause to a will presented for probate being insufficient, the registrar required an affidavit from the witnesses, under r. 4 of the Orders in respect of Non-contentious Business, that the will had been duly executed. Each of the three attesting witnesses—one being a beneficiary and another the wife of a beneficiary—refused to make an affidavit. The executor made an affidavit, under r. 7, stating that the signatures of the testator and attesting witnesses were in their handwriting, and that no other persons were present at the execution:—Held, that the evidence was not sufficient for a grant of probate under r. 7, but that an order might be made under s. 24 of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77 requiring the attesting witnesses to attend for examination as to the execution of the will. Sweet, In goods of, 61 L. J., P. 15 ; [1891] P. 400.

Proof of Signature.]—When attesting witnesses are out of the jurisdiction, a will may be proved by evidence of their handwriting, although the will might possibly have been sent to the witnesses. Wilson v. Collum, 9 L. R., Ir. 150—C. A.

9. Trial.

20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 29.] — Semble, that 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 29, applies only to procedure. Oliphant, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 525 ; 30 L. J., P. 82 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 256 ; 1 L. T. 446.

The rules for practice in the registry are not, under all circumstances, absolutely binding on the court. Loftus, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 307 ; 33 L. J., P. 59 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 324 ; 10 L. T. 240.

When Counsel will be Heard.] — All motions required to be made before the court must be made by counsel. Drake v. Morgan, 27 L. J., P. 3 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 32.

Where an executor propounds a will in solemn form, and there are several defendants whose case on the pleadings is substantially the same, the court will hear counsel only for one defendant. Palmer v. Macleau, 1 Sw. & Tr. 149.

A person suing in formâ pauperis, to whom counsel has been assigned by the court, cannot appear by another counsel until there has been a renunciation or a new assignment of counsel, or he has been dispaupered. Hamer v. Boreham, 1 Sw. & Tr. 26 ; 27 L. J., P. 107.

Right to Begin.]—In a testamentary suit the party propounding the last will is entitled to begin. So also is a party who alleges only undue influence in opposition to the validity of a will. Hutley v. Grimston, 48 L. J., P. 68 ; 5 P. D. 24 ; 41 L. T. 531.

At the trial of an ejectment by the heir and a devisee under a prior will as co-plaintiffs against the devisee under a later will, the defendant admitted the heirship, but, nevertheless, the plaintiffs were held entitled to begin, because of the joinder of the devisee as a co-plaintiff. Purdon v. Longford (Earl), Ir. R. 11 C. L. 267.

Consolidation of Actions.] — Two executors had commenced separate defences, and two records had been made up. The court ordered the records to be consolidated, but gave the defendants leave to be represented by counsel separately. Limb v. Holden, 21 L. T. 731.

Place of.]—In a testamentary suit touching the validity of a will, the jury was discharged without agreeing to a verdict. A rule absolute for a new trial was granted, but on motion by the plaintiff, at whose instance the first trial was had, the court refused to change the venue to Stafford assizes. Mumford v. Shufflebotham, 21 L. T. 835.

By Ord. XXXVI. r. 1, the statement of claim must contain a paragraph stating the place where the plaintiff proposes the trial of his cause shall take place. Except under special circumstances, the court will not allow causes to be tried out of Middlesex, unless the application is made in the statement of claim in pursuance of this order. Ridge v. Ridge, 35 L. T. 428.

Directions as to Mode of.]—The court will not make an order as to the mode of trial of a cause unless all the pleadings have been regularly filed in the registry. Isaacks v. Whaley, 11 W. R. 549.

—— By the Court itself.]—The court has power to direct issues of fact to be tried before itself by a jury, reserving issues of law arising out of the pleadings to be tried by itself alone. Crispin v. Doglioni, 2 Sw. & Tr. 493 ; 31 L. J., P. 64 ; 6 L. T. 694 ; 10 W. R. 810.

When the cause, from the nature of the issues of fact raised, is a more proper one to be tried before the court itself than by a jury, the court will, on the application of one of the parties, direct it to be heard without a jury, unless such application is opposed by the heir-at-law. Quick v. Quick, 3 Sw. & Tr. 460 ; 33 L. J., P. 108.

When the main question to be decided was presumptive revocation of a will, the court (the defendants who were not heirs-at-law opposing) directed the cause to be tried by the court without a jury. Smith v. Hoad, 3 Sw. & Tr. 462.

—— By Jury.]—The court will make it part of an order for the trial of a cause by a special jury, that if the applicant does not take the requisite steps for striking the jury, the other party may have it tried by a common jury. Morris v. Owen, 30 L. J., P. 213.

The court refused to allow an issue as to the contents of a destroyed will to be tried by a jury. James v. Foster, 36 L. J., P. 46 ; 15 L. T. 544 ; 15 W. R. 498.

—— At the Assizes.]—Application on behalf of a plaintiff to direct a cause to be tried at the assizes refused. There is no similarity between the position of a plaintiff in the Probate Court and his common law right to lay the venue where he pleases. A testamentary suit is at large, and ought to be tried before the judge, though he has a discretionary power to send an issue to be tried before a judge of assize. Cooper v. Moss, 1 Sw. & Tr. 143 ; 6 W. R. 866.

In order to save expense and delay, the court will generally allow issues to be tried at the assizes. When, however, the suit was for revocation of probate, and there had been great delay in calling in the probate, and the property was large, the court considered these circumstances sufficient ground for refusing an application by the plaintiff, opposed by the defendant, that the issues should be tried at the assizes, but ordered that the defendant, if successful, should not be allowed more costs than he would have been entitled to if the issues had been tried at the assizes. Ridgway v. Abington, 3 Sw. & Tr. 3 ; 32 L. J., P. 107 ; 11 W. R. 500.

When the principal issue raised was, whether the deceased had destroyed, with the intention of revoking it, a will which was not forthcoming, the court refused to send the issues for trial at the assizes. Beech v. Rathbone, 35 L. J., P. 26.

The court has no power to order an issue to be tried at the assizes by a judge without a jury. If both parties wish the issue to be so tried, they should apply to the judge, who will try the issue under the Common Law Procedure Act of 1854, s. 1.

When issues are tried at the assizes, the postea should be signed by the associate. West v. Goodrick, 31 L. J., P. 39.

—— By County Court Judge.]—When the judge is satisfied that the county court has jurisdiction over a cause, he will direct a cause to be tried before the judge of a county court having jurisdiction, and will also direct the papers in that cause to be transmitted to the county court for the purposes of that suit, but he will give no directions as to the mode in which the cause shall be tried. Norris v. Allen, 2 Sw. & Tr. 601; 32 L. J., P. 3; 7 L. T. 338; 11 W. R. 32.

It will be for the judge of the county court to decide whether the cause shall be tried before him with or without a jury. Ib.

When a county court has jurisdiction, the court may, though application is made on behalf of all the parties to the cause for it to be tried at the assizes, still in its discretion direct it to be tried in the county court. Dunn v. Dunn, 1 Sw. & Tr. 521; 30 L. J., P. 40; 2 L. T. 24; 8 W. R. 259.

When on an application acquiesced in by all parties to direct an issue to be tried at the assizes, it appeared that the whole property did not amount to 300*l.*, the court required that it should also appear that the personalty was not under 200*l.*, so as to shew that the county court had no jurisdiction. Ib.

Where issues in a suit for proving a will in solemn form have been directed to be tried by the judge of a county court, and are found by him against the will, upon a certified copy of his decree being filed in the principal registry, the judge of the Probate Court will pronounce against the will, and decide any questions as to costs. Thomas v. Crowther, 2 Sw. & Tr. 501; 10 W. R. 861.

When contentious proceedings are referred by the court to a county court, the court has no further jurisdiction, except by way of appeal, over such proceedings. Macleur v. Macleur, 37 L. J., P. 68; L. R. 1 P. 604.

Amendment of Pleadings at.]—M. A. D., the testatrix, in 1853 made her will, by which she gave her property equally between the plaintiffs, defendants, and interveners. In an action by the plaintiffs propounding this will, it appeared that in 1874 she gave instructions for another will, which would have deprived the plaintiffs of all interest in her estate. In the course of the plaintiffs' case some evidence was given tending to shew that the testatrix was prevented by force and threats from executing the proposed will. The court allowed the pleadings to be amended by adding statements to that effect, and praying for a declaration that the plaintiffs held their shares as trustees for the defendants and interveners. Betts v. Doughty, 48 L. J., P. 71; 5 P. D. 26; 41 L. T. 560.

Restraining Proceedings in the Court of Probate.]—The defendants, the heir-at-law and some of the next of kin of a deceased person whose will could not be found, joined with the plaintiff in executing a deed confirming the dispositions made in a draft will in favour of the plaintiff. Afterwards, the defendants applied for letters of administration, and opposed the grant of probate to the (draft) will. On motion by the plaintiff, the defendants were restrained by a court of equity from further proceedings in the Court of Probate, but it was held that on the construction of the deed there was nothing in it to prevent the other next of kin from obtaining administration. Wilcocks v. Carter, L. R. 10 Ch. 440; 32 L. T. 444; 23 W. R. 530.

Issues.]—He upon whom the burden of proving an issue lies is not bound to prove every fact or conclusion of fact upon which the issue depends. From every fact that is proved, legitimate and reasonable inferences may be drawn; and hence, in discussing whether there is, in any case, evidence to go to the jury, what the court has to consider is, whether, assuming the evidence to be true, and adding to the direct proof all such inferences of fact as in the exercise of a reasonable intelligence the jury would be warranted in drawing from it, there is sufficient to support the issue. Parfitt v. Lawless, 41 L. J., P. 68; L. R. 2 P. 462; 27 L. T. 215; 21 W. R. 200.

Refusal to Propound Will.]—When the parties interested under a questioned will do not, though cited, propound it, the mode of having the will condemned is by motion, on notice, for administration, notwithstanding such will. Brennan v. Dillon, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 215. See S. C., Ir. R. 8 Eq. 94.

Survivorship of Husband or Wife ascertained by Petition or Declaration.]—A question whether a husband, who has not been heard of for many years, survived his wife, litigated between the next of kin of the husband and of the wife, may be decided either on a petition or declaration. Peppercorne v. Gardner, L. R. 3 P. 149.

Objection to either form of procedure is waived by taking any step in the cause. Ib.

Postponement of.]—A defendant moved for the postponement of a trial from the spring to the summer assizes, on the ground that a material witness for the plaintiff, whom the defendant wished to cross-examine in court, would be prevented by illness from being present at the trial. The court rejected the motion, as it appeared that the witness would probably die before the summer assizes, and no advantage would, therefore, be gained by the postponement. Williams v. Henry, 3 S. & T. 463; 33 L. J., P. 110.

10. New Trial.

Within what Time Application made.]—When an issue has been tried at the assizes, the parties are not bound by the rule of court, which directs that an application for a new trial must be made within ten days of the trial, or on the first sitting of the court after the trial. Charlton v. Hindmarsh, 29 L. J., P. 163.

By way of Appeal from Judge of County Court.]—When a testamentary cause, in which a county court has jurisdiction, has been commenced in, or has been transferred to a county court, the Court of Probate has no power to grant a new trial, or to make any order in the cause, unless it is brought before it by way of appeal from the determination of the judge of the county court in point of law, or upon the admission or rejection of evidence, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 58. Zealley v. Veryard, 35 L. J., P. 127; L. R. 1 P. 195; 14 L. T. 769; 14 W. R. 970.

For Further Evidence.]—When the only material question at issue was whether the deceased, who was proved to have been subject to insane delusions, was subject to them at the date of the will, and the evidence of the plaintiff's principal witnesses negatived the existence of delusions at any time, and the defendant's witnesses were unable to fix the date of their first appearance, and the defendant after trial (which terminated in a verdict in favour of the will) discovered evidence tending to throw further light on the question; the court being of opinion that the latter had not received that full investigation and final solution on which it was proper to found a decree, granted to the defendant a new trial upon payment by him of the plaintiff's costs of the former trial. Young v. Dendy, L. R. 1 P. 344.

Witness Convicted of Perjury.]—In a testamentary suit the jury, being unable to agree, was discharged without giving a verdict. The question in dispute, the capacity of the deceased, was afterwards referred to a second jury, who found in the affirmative and for the plaintiff. Application was made for a new trial on the ground of the verdict being against the weight of evidence, but it was refused. Subsequently the plaintiff was convicted of perjury in reference to the evidence he gave in the suit:—Held, that that circumstance was not in itself sufficient to justify the court in allowing a new trial after an application with that object had been rejected. Davies v. Brecknell, 42 L. J., P. 39; L. R. 3 P. 88; 28 L. T. 604.

Misdirection.]—On issues directed by the Court of Probate to determine the validity of a will, evidence was given on the part of those propounding the will that the will was read over to the deceased before execution, and this evidence those who impeached the will were not in a position to contradict. The jury found that the will was duly executed, that the testator was at the time of sound mind, that the execution was not procured by undue influence, and that he at the time of the execution knew and approved of the contents of the will except as to the residuary clause, of the contents of which he did not know and approve. A verdict was entered accordingly:—Held, that no new trial ought to be granted, on the ground that the jury was not directed that if they believed that the deceased was at the time of the execution of sound mind, they were bound upon the uncontradicted evidence that the will was read over to the deceased before execution to find that he knew and approved of its whole contents. For (assuming that the jury believed the evidence of reading over, which they were not bound to do merely because no contradiction was in fact given to it) no irrebuttable presumption of knowledge and approval of contents would arise upon proof that the testator was of sound mind, that the will was read over to him, and that he thereupon affixed his signature. Fulton v. Andrew, 44 L. J., P. 17; L. R. 7 H. L. 448; 32 L. T. 209; 23 W. R. 566.

—— Grounds in Notice.]—Ord. XXXIX. r. 3, which requires that the grounds on which misdirection is alleged should be stated in the notice of motion for a new trial, applies to motions in the Probate Division as well as to the Queen's Bench Division. Pfeiffer v. Midland Ry. (18 Q. B. D. 243) followed. Murfett v. Smith, 56 L. J., P. 87; 12 P. D. 116; 57 L. T. 498; 35 W. R. 460; 51 J. P. 374.

House of Lords.]—When the Court of Probate granted a rule nisi for a new trial, and made it absolute to enter a verdict, the House of Lords, upon appeal from the order in this form, entertained the original question of new trial, and made the order which ought to have been made in the court below. Fulton v. Andrew, supra.

On Affidavits—Postponement of.]—The hearing of a motion for a new trial upon affidavits, if formally made in time, will be postponed when there has not been sufficient time to procure the necessary affidavits. Young v. Dendy, 36 L. J., P. 43.

11. Appeal.

Generally.]—The judge of the probate division having directed a jury to find in favour of a will, on the ground that the facts proved were no evidence of its having been revoked, and having pronounced in favour of the will, and directed an exception to his ruling to be annexed to the record, there being no record to which it could be annexed, the Court of Appeal directed notice of appeal to be given. Harris, In re, Cheese v. Lovejoy, 2 P. D. 161; 37 L. T. 294; 25 W. R. 453—C. A.

When a cause has been heard before a judge without a jury, the evidence being given viva voce, the parties may, if they please, apply for a rehearing under r. 60 of the Probate Court Orders of July, 1862, or they may, without doing so, appeal from the decision of the judge, on the facts as well as the law, to the Court of Appeal. Sugden v. St. Leonards (Lord), 45 L. J., P. 49; 1 P. D. 154; 34 L. T. 369; 24 W. R. 479—C. A.

Refusal to grant Letters of Administration.]—A person claiming to be a creditor of an intestate applied for letters of administration, having cited the next of kin, who did not appear. The judge refused the grant, holding that the applicant was not a creditor of the intestate. The applicant appealed:—Held, that, whether the application was contentious or non-contentious business, as to which the court gave no opinion, there was, under s. 19 of the Judicature Act, 1873, an appeal from the judge's decision to the Court of Appeal. Clook, In re, 15 P. D. 132; 63 L. T. 536—C. A.

Appeal direct from Chambers.]—Appeals from orders made in chambers are to be subject to the same rules in the probate division as in the chancery division, and will not be entertained unless the judge gives leave to appeal direct, or certifies that he does not require to hear further argument. Rigg v. Hughes, Smith, In re, ante, col. 592.

From Registrar—Time for.]—The time for appealing from an order made by a registrar of the probate division is the same as that limited by Ord. LIV. r. 21, for appealing from an order of a master: viz. four days from the decision, although a registrar is not mentioned in that rule. Patrick, In goods of, 58 L. J., P. 36; 14 P. D. 42; 60 L. T. 343; 37 W. R. 393—C. A. Affirming 53 J. P. 231.

From County Court.]—Semble, that the appeal was not under the County Courts Act, 1888, but under the Court of Probate Acts, 1857 and 1858, and that, although s. 11 of the act of 1858 repeals s. 54 of the 1857 act, which confers the jurisdiction on the county courts, and the act of 1858, whilst giving jurisdiction to the county court, contains no reference to appeals, yet the acts of 1857 and 1858 must be read together, and the appellate jurisdiction under s. 58 of the 1857 act remains. Copeland v. Simister, 62 L. J., P. 38; [1893] P. 16; 1 R. 469; 68 L. T. 257; 41 W. R. 269.

To the House of Lords.]—Where there is an appeal from a final decree to the House of Lords, all interlocutory orders are under appeal, and it is unnecessary to obtain leave to appeal from such orders. Smith v. Atkins, 39 L. J., P. 78; L. R. 2 P. 169; 22 L. T. 247.

Leave to appeal from an order discharging a rule for a new trial was refused on the ground that it was unnecessary, the final decree being under appeal. Ib.

12. Costs.

a. On Opposing or Contesting Proof of Wills.

Principles.]—A next of kin pleaded undue execution and incapacity in opposition to a will, and called witnesses in support of these pleas. The court pronounced for the will, but refused to condemn the next of kin in costs, undue influence not having been pleaded. Summerell v. Clements, 3 Sw. & Tr. 35; 32 L. J., P. 33; 8 L. T. 172; 11 W. R. 153.

Failure to establish pleas of undue influence and fraud will, as a rule, be followed by condemnation in costs. Ib. S. P., Browning v. Mostyn, 66 L. J., P. 37.

In deciding whether the costs of an unsuccessful party should be paid out of the estate or not, the court will be guided by the opinion of the judge before whom the issues were tried. West v. Goodrick, 31 L. J., P. 39.

When the opposition is groundless the unsuccessful opponent of a will, who has pleaded the incapacity of the testator, will be condemned in costs, although he may have acted bonâ fide. Ib.

In interest causes the general rule is that the unsuccessful party is condemned in costs, except under special circumstances of misconduct by the opposite parties. M'Lean v. M'Lean, 1 L. R., Ir. 271.

In a testamentary suit, condemnation in costs includes all the charges of an administrator pending suit. Fisher v. Fisher, 48 L. J., P. 69; 4 P. D. 231.

The rule and practice by which a party may compel proof of a will in solemn form without liability for costs does not extend to a residuary legatee under a prior will. Hockley v. Wyatt, 51 L. J., P. 92; 7 P. D. 239; 47 L. T. 354; 46 J. P. 792.

The opponents pleaded undue influence and fraud, but offered no evidence in support of these pleas. The court, to mark its sense of the impropriety of putting these pleas on the record, condemned them in whatever costs the plaintiffs might have incurred to rebut these pleas. Du Boison (formerly Maxwell) v. Maxwell, 28 L. T. 369; 21 W. R. 575.

In a probate suit the plaintiff claimed a decree of intestacy, and the defendant set up a will which had been duly executed by the deceased in her favour, and of which she was sole executrix. The only issue was one of fraud, which had been pleaded by the plaintiff, the alleged fraud being that the defendant had led the testator to believe that she was capable of contracting, and that she had contracted a valid marriage with him, whereas in fact her real husband was then and still alive. The plaintiff opened the case, and in the result, the court found that the plea of fraud had failed, and pronounced for the will in the defendant's favour, but left each party to pay their own costs. Tute v. Tate, 63 L. T. 112.

The plaintiff, with full knowledge of all the testamentary papers of the deceased, issued a writ, making one person only defendant. After the said defendant had appeared and filed his defence, setting up a later will of the deceased, the plaintiff took out a summons for leave to amend the writ by adding as a defendant the surviving attesting witness of the will which he had propounded by his statement of claim. The proposed second defendant was the solicitor who had prepared the last will propounded in the defence, and also an executor thereunder. The registrar refused the application, holding that it was misconceived, and dismissed the summons with costs. Upon appeal to the judge (in chambers) the proposed amendment was allowed, but the plaintiff was ordered to pay the costs of the defendant, which had been thrown away by reason of the non-joinder of the second defendant in the first instance. The plaintiff was also ordered to pay the defendant's costs on the appeal. Coke v. French, 76 L. T. 163.

Where Reasonable Grounds exist for.]—A will of a married woman being propounded by her executors, it was opposed by her husband, and a question of domicil was raised upon the pleadings. That question was decided in favour of the executors, and the decision was affirmed, upon appeal to the House of Lords, without costs. The costs of litigation in the Court of Probate were allowed out of the estate, on the ground that the question raised by the party opposing was so doubtful that he was entitled to have it decided by a competent tribunal. Robins v. Dolphin, 1 Sw. & Tr. 518; 29 L. J., P. 138; 1 L. T. 306; 8 W. R. 177.

A person entitled in distribution, who merely puts executors to strict proof of a will in solemn form, if he has reasonable ground for doing so, will generally be allowed his costs out of the estate. But if it appears that his object in calling for such proof was not simply to obtain the judgment of the Court of Probate as to the validity of the will, but to elicit evidence which might be used by him in a suit instituted in another court, he will not be allowed his costs out of the estate. Swinfen v. Swinfen, 1 Sw. & Tr. 283; 29 L. J., P. 153.

Where a legal question fairly arises on the papers of a deceased person, the court will order the costs of the losing party to be paid out of the estate. Thorncroft v. Lashmar, 2 Sw. & Tr. 479; 31 L. J., P. 150; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 595; 6 L. T. 476; 10 W. R. 783.

Where the judge of assize was satisfied with a verdict for the plaintiff establishing a will, but would not have been dissatisfied with a contrary verdict, the court refused to condemn the defendant in costs. Bramley v. Bramley, 3 Sw. & Tr. 430; 33 L. J., P. 111, n.; 12 W. R. 992.

If the cause of litigation takes its origin in the fault of the testator, or of those interested in the residue, the costs will properly be paid out of the estate. Mitchell v. Gard, 3 Sw. & Tr. 275; 33 L. J., P. 7; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 51; 9 L. T. 491; 12 W. R. 255.

If there are sufficient and reasonable grounds, looking to the knowledge and means of knowledge of the opposing party, to question either the execution of the will or the capacity of the testator, or to put forward a charge of undue influence or fraud, the losing party may properly be relieved from the costs of his successful opponent. Ib.

The costs of an unsuccessful opposition of a will allowed out of the estate, on the ground that the misconduct of those interested in setting up the will had given reasonable ground for the litigation. Williams v. Henry, 3 Sw. & Tr. 471; 33 L. J., P. 110; 12 W. R. 1015.

H. died in 1856: his widow proved his will in 1860, and died in 1862, making D. her executor, and leaving him all her property. C., next of kin of H., cited D. to bring in the probate of H.'s will. D. propounded it, and C. pleaded thereto; the jury found the issues in favour of D.:—Held, that though C., on the facts proved, might have had reasonable grounds for opposing the probate when taken, yet he had no right to wait till after the widow's death, who might have given important evidence, and then call in the probate, without being liable to costs in case of failure. Hawkins, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 290; 10 L. T. 70.

Costs incurred by Conduct of Testator.]—Doubts having been caused by the condition in which the testatrix had left her testamentary papers, the court allowed the costs of all parties out of the estate, including, besides the costs of the executors propounding the former will, the costs of legatees named in it. Jenner v. Finch, 49 L. J., P. 25; 5 P. D. 106; 42 L. T. 327; 28 W. R. 520.

Issues of undue execution, incapacity, and undue influence, raised by the next of kin in opposition to a will were found against him. The court, however, refused to condemn him in costs, because it was of opinion that the parties propounding the will, and in whose favour it was made, had acted so as to excite the suspicion of the next of kin; but refused to allow his costs out of the estate, because he had not sufficient grounds for the pleas he had filed. Broadbent v. Hughes, 29 L. J., P. 134.

A party pleading undue influence does not exempt himself from liability for costs, by giving notice that he intends only to cross-examine the witnesses produced in support of the will. Harrington v. Bowyer, 41 L. J., P. 17; L. R. 2 P. 264; 25 L. T. 385; 19 W. R. 982.

Primâ facie, an executor is justified in propounding his testator's will, and if the facts within his knowledge at the time he does so tend to shew eccentricity merely on the part of the testator, and he is totally ignorant at the time of the circumstances and conduct which afterwards induce a jury to find that the testator was insane at the date of his will, he will, on the principle that the testator's conduct was the cause of litigation, be entitled to receive his costs out of the estate, although the will is pronounced against. Boughton v. Knight, 42 L. J., P. 25; L. R. 3 P. 64; 28 L. T. 562.

A testator, before the execution of his last will, which was in favour of his wife, and was propounded by her, had executed another will not so favourable, but the existence of which he concealed from her. The last will being disputed unsuccessfully by parties interested under the prior will:—Held, that the testator had conduced to the litigation, and costs granted out of the estate. Du Boison (formerly Maxwell) v. Maxwell, supra, col. 606.

The court allowed costs out of the estate to the unsuccessful opponent of a will, although he had pleaded undue influence and fraud, being of opinion that the mode in which the testator had executed the will and the conduct of the persons beneficially interested under it, had reasonably excited doubt and suspicion, and justified those pleas. Orton v. Smith, 42 L. J., P. 50; L. R. 3 P. 23; 28 L. T. 112.

The costs of an unsuccessful opposition to a will must be paid out of the estate in cases where the testator, by his own conduct, and habits and mode of life, has given the opponents of the will reasonable ground for questioning his testamentary capacity. Davies or Davis v. Gregory, 42 L. J., P. 33; L. R. 3 P. 28; 28 L. T. 239; 21 W. R. 462.

In cases where neither the testator by his own conduct, nor the executors or persons interested under the will by their conduct, have brought about the litigation as to its validity, but the opponents of the will, after due inquiry into the facts, entertained a bonâ fide belief in the existence of a state of things which, if it did exist, would justify the litigation, and the opposition is unsuccessful, each party must pay his own costs. Ib.

Nine years after a testator's death, his executor produced and propounded a will. It was opposed by the next of kin. The executor accounted for the delay by saying that the testator had desired that it should not be produced until after his mother's death. The will being admitted to probate:—Held, that as the conduct of the testator in desiring its concealment had given the next of kin a reasonable ground for suspicion, she ought not to have been condemned in the costs of her opposition. Emberley v. Trevanion, 29 L. J., P. 143.

In a case where a will was opposed upon various grounds, but mainly upon an allegation of undue influence, the court found that the defence had not succeeded, and pronounced for the will; but, finding also, as a fact, that the testator's duplicity had led to the litigation, the court gave the costs of all parties out of the estate. Cousins v. Tubb, 65 L. T. 716.

The court allowed costs out of the estate to the unsuccessful opponent of a will, although he had pleaded undue influence, the court being of opinion that the mode in which the testator had executed his will, and the conduct of the person receiving under it, had reasonably excited suspicion. Orton v. Smith (supra) followed. Shortman v. Shortman, 1 R. 465; 67 L. T. 717.

If the mode in which a testator has executed his will raises in the minds of those who are interested in contesting it reasonable grounds for suspicion, and really give rise to litigation ensuing thereon, the court is justified, in the exercise of its discretion, in ordering the costs of both plaintiff and defendant to be paid out of the estate, notwithstanding the fact that undue influence has been pleaded, but not proved. Williams v. Coker, 67 L. T. 626.

In a case where a will was disputed on the ground of the testator's sanity, and also on the ground of undue influence, the court, considering that the testator had by his own conduct given rise to considerable doubt as to his sanity, and thereby directly caused the litigation, and also having regard to the fact that the plea of undue influence had never been unduly pressed in taking the evidence of several witnesses on commission, and had also been freely abandoned at the trial, gave the defendants the costs of all the issues out of the estate, notwithstanding the plea of undue influence. Davis v. Gregory (42 L. J., P. 33; L. R. 3 P. & D. 28) commented on. Browning v. Mostyn, supra.

At the same time the court, considering that the defendants had by being separately represented incurred unnecessary expense, ordered that one set of costs only—namely, those of the executors of a former will which the defendants set up—should be allowed out of the estate. Ib.

See also Roe v. Nix, ante, col. 232.

Of Next of Kin.]—After a next of kin had taken out administration, a will was propounded by one of the residuary legatees. The court pronounced ~~for~~ the will, but allowed the costs of the next of kin, in obtaining administration and in putting the residuary legatee upon proof in solemn form, out of the estate, as the residuary legatee did not produce the will until after administration had been taken out, and several months after the testator's death, although he was several times desired by the next of kin to produce it if it existed, and he gave no explanation of the delay. Smith v. Smith, 4 Sw. & Tr. 3; 34 L. J., P. 57; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 143; 13 W. R. 504.

A next of kin, who unsuccessfully opposed a will, was condemned in the costs of another next of kin, whom he had cited to see proceedings, and who had appeared and pleaded, but had taken no other part. Cross v. Cross, 3 Sw. & Tr. 292; 33 L. J., P. 49; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 183; 10 L. T. 70; 12 W. R. 694.

A next of kin, who contested the validity of a will propounded by the widow of the deceased as the sole executrix named therein, which was pronounced against by the court, but without condemning the widow in costs, is entitled to have his costs out of the estate. Critchell v. Critchell, 3 Sw. & Tr. 41; 32 L. J., P. 108; 8 L. T. 173; 11 W. R. 401.

An executor propounded a will, to which the defendant, next of kin, pleaded undue execution, but gave no notice of merely cross-examining plaintiff's witnesses. At the trial the plaintiff examined one attesting witness, who proved due execution; the defendant called the other attesting witness, who negatived due execution, and the jury found a verdict establishing the will. The court refused to make an order as to costs. Ferrey v. King, 3 Sw. & Tr. 51; 31 L. J., P. 120; 7 L. T. 219.

B., acting really in the interest of an infant residuary legatee, succeeded in establishing a will under which she herself took only a trifling legacy, the executor having refused to propound the will. The court held that the circumstances of the case were such as to warrant the opposition to the will, and at first refused to make any order as to costs; but, on the representation that B. was not primarily entitled to the grant with the will annexed, and so might never be in a position to repay herself the expenses of the suit, it ordered her costs to be paid out of the estate. Bewsher v. Williams, 3 Sw. & Tr. 62; 8 L. T. 290; 11 W. R. 541, n.

A next of kin who calls in probate of a will and gives the usual notice under r. 41 will not, if unsuccessful, be condemned in costs because the sole evidence upon which his opposition to the will is founded must to his knowledge be open to grave suspicion, from being that of an attesting witness who had previously made an affidavit of due execution. Such evidence, though primâ facie untrustworthy, may justify the next of kin in requiring proof of the will in solemn form. Sheffield v. Sheffield, 43 L. J., P. 72; 31 L. T. 455.

A next of kin who unsuccessfully opposed a will on the ground of incapacity was not condemned in costs where the opposition was induced by a statement of the medical attendant of the deceased, who also attested the will, to the effect that he read over the will to the deceased, who signified his assent by gesture only, and that he could not swear that the deceased was in full possession of his mental faculties. Tippett v. Tippett, 35 L. J., P. 41; L. R. 1 P. 54; 14 W. R. 410.

—— After Notice that Will not to be Supported.]—When a next of kin, who resisted probate on the ground of undue execution, proceeded to trial, despite of notice by the executor that it was not intended to support the will, the court refused to allow him costs out of the estate other than such as the registrar, having regard to the duty cast upon him, might think reasonable. Fritchley v. Fritchley, 16 L. T. 267.

—— Propounder withdrawing on Morning of Trial.]—An attorney propounded, as executor, a will which purported to be attested by two of his clerks. The next of kin pleaded in opposition to the will; issue was joined, and the cause came on for trial before a jury. On the morning of the trial, the counsel for the executor stated that the executor would consent to a verdict for the defendant. In the absence of a satisfactory explanation by the plaintiff of the circumstances under which the will had been propounded and withdrawn, the court condemned him in the costs of the suit. Richards v. Humphreys, 29 L. J., P. 137.

—— Intervening after Establishment of Will.]—A next of kin, though not cited to see proceedings, and not having intervened, if in fact cognisant of a suit between the executor of a will and other next of kin ending in the establishment of the will, is not at liberty in any way to oppose probate of such will being taken; and where, on a verdict, the court had pronounced for a will, and a next of kin so situated had entered a caveat, the court directed probate to issue in spite of the caveat, and condemned the next of kin in costs. Ratcliffe v. Barnes, 2 Sw. & Tr. 486; 31 L. J., P. 61; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 313; 6 L. T. 658.

The next of kin opposed a will executed in the Mysore territory, in the East Indies, on the ground that the testator was a domiciled Scotsman, and that the execution was invalid by the law of Scotland. Pending the suit, a court of appeal in Scotland, in another case, determined that the will of a domiciled Scotsman as to personalty was good, if executed according to the lex loci actus. The next of kin gave notice to the plaintiffs that they no longer intended to dispute probate, and when the cause came on for hearing asked for their costs out of the estate; but the court refused to make any order for costs, on the ground that they had raised an issue of fact as to domicil likely to put the plaintiffs to great expense, as well as the issue at law. Onslow v. Cannon, 2 Sw. & Tr. 136; 30 L. J., P. 165; 4 L. T. 217.

Of Executors.]—A widow twelve months after the death of her husband, who died in Canada, took probate of a will in which she was named executrix. A month afterwards a citation was extracted by the plaintiff calling upon her to bring such probate into the registry, which she did. He then propounded a later will, and after a short delay she withdrew from the suit. The court declined to condemn her in the costs. Smith v. Fletcher, L. R. 2 P. 20; 21 L. T. 646.

A person was of eccentric habits, but had always managed his own affairs. His executors propounded his will, but failed to support it, the evidence shewing that at the time it was executed he was not of sound mind. The court being of opinion that they had acted in the bonâ fide belief of his capacity, and that they could have had no knowledge of his true life and character until it was disclosed on the trial, allowed their costs out of the estate. Boughton v. Knight, 42 L. J., P. 41; L. R. 3 P. 64; 28 L. T. 562.

An executor propounded a will in the interest of infant children, and did not become aware, until after the suit was instituted, that it had not been duly executed:—Held, that he was entitled to his costs out of the estate. Davies v. Rees, 13 L. T. 609.

A will propounded by the executors was opposed by the plaintiff, one of the next of kin. The issues were tried by a jury, and were found for the executors, and the will was pronounced for. After an order nisi for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, had been granted, the plaintiff abandoned further opposition to the will. The court, upon the application of two of the next of kin, who had been cited to see proceedings and had appeared, but had not pleaded, allowed them to plead and adopt the proceedings already had in the suit. The order for a new trial was ultimately made absolute, the executors being allowed their costs up to that time out of the estate. Boulton v. Boulton, 37 L. J., P. 19; L. R. 1 P. 456; 17 L. T. 415.

—— Acting without Reasonable Cause.]—A nude executor who, without reasonable ground, propounds a testamentary paper, is liable for costs. An executor, if he has any doubt as to the validity of a testamentary paper, should, before propounding it, take security for his costs from the persons interested. Rennie v. Massie, 35 L. J., P. 124; L. R. 1 P. 118; 14 L. T. 188; 14 W. R. 516.

A nude executor who propounds a testamentary paper, of the validity of which there is no reasonable primâ facie probability, cannot escape from the liability of being condemned in costs by the fact that he takes no interest under the paper. Roberts v. Cowmeadow, 21 L. T. 367.

Where the will of a deceased lunatic shewed sign of insanity on the face of it, the executors propounding the will were condemned in costs, although they called evidence to shew that they were unaware of the condition of the deceased, and although the plaintiff and her advisers, when applied to, had refused to give them any information as to the facts of her case. Rogers v. Le Cocq, 65 L. J., P. 68.

—— Where Negligent.]—Where the substance of a will has been propounded, and, in most particulars, established by an executrix, through whose negligence the original will had been lost, the court condemned the executrix in the costs of the defendants, and allowed her only such costs as she would have incurred in proving the original will in solemn form. Burls v. Burls, 36 L. J., P. 125; L. R. 1 P. 472; 16 L. T. 677; 15 W. R. 1090.

—— Guilty of Misconduct.]—The executor propounded the will. It was opposed on behalf of the crown by the solicitor for the duchy of Lancaster, who alleged that the deceased had died intestate, leaving no next of kin, and also by persons claiming to be next of kin. The crown and the other defendants, whose interest was accepted by the plaintiff, pleaded the same pleas. All parties were represented by counsel at the trial, and the will was upset. The crown did not ask for costs; and it ultimately turned out that the other defendants were not next of kin. The court, notwithstanding, condemned the executors in the costs incurred by them in the suit. Goss v. Hill, 40 L. J., P. 39; 25 L. T. 133; 19 W. R. 878.

An executrix having propounded a will in solemn form, the residuary clause, which was in her favour, was opposed, and the court pronounced for the will, excluding the residuary clause from the probate on the ground that it had been obtained by her undue influence. The court condemned her in the costs of the suit, with the exception of the costs of proving the will in solemn form, which she was allowed to take out of the estate. Smith v. Atkins, L. R. 2 P. 169.

—— Resisting Renunciation.]—A testator executed two wills, the first in England and the second in Italy, where he was domiciled at the time of his death. The English will disposed of realty and personalty, and nominated an executor. The second, or Italian will, disposed of the personalty only, but contained a general revocatory clause:—Held, that the second will revoked the first, including the appointment of the executor; and the executor, who resisted revocation of the probate of it, granted to him in common form, was condemned in costs. Cottrell v. Cottrell, 41 L. J., P. 57; L. R. 2 P. 397; 26 L. T. 527; 20 W. R. 590.

—— Of a Previous Will.]—An executor of a former will has the same right as a next of kin to put an executor of a subsequent will upon proof in solemn form, and to interrogate his witnesses, without being liable for costs. Boston v. Fox, 4 Sw. & Tr. 199; 29 L. J., P. 68.

Probate of a will was opposed by the next of kin, who was also the executor of a previous will. He made an inquiry into the circumstances under which the later will was executed, though he was aware of the execution, and knew the name of the attorney who had prepared it. He pleaded undue execution, incapacity, and that the will was not the last will of the deceased, but gave notice before the hearing that he did not intend to produce evidence. On cross-examination of a witness in support of the will, facts were elicited which, in the opinion of the court, would have justified the next of kin in calling for proof of the will in solemn form, if they had been known to him; but as they were not known to him until stated by the witness in court, and he had made no previous inquiry as to the circumstances attending the execution, the court refused to allow his costs out of the estate, although it did not condemn him in costs. Seaton v. Sturch, 29 L. J., P. 195.

Where executors of an earlier will, being disinterested persons, opposed on reasonable grounds a will of later date and the verdict of a jury establishing the latter will, the executors of the earlier will held to be entitled to their costs out of the estate. Foale v. Trethewy, 9 L. T. 87.

Where a next of kin successfully opposed, on the ground of undue influence exercised by the executor, and by the residuary legatee, a will propounded by the executor, the court condemned the executor in costs. Nash v. Yellowly, 3 Sw. & Tr. 59; 8 L. T. 290; 11 W. R. 541.

The plaintiff was also executor under an earlier will, which appointed the same residuary legatee, under which the executor took nothing, and the court refused to make an order securing out of the estate to the defendant such costs as he might not be able to recover from the plaintiff. Ib.

Interveners.]—A., B. and C., three legatees named in a codicil, sought probate of it in solemn form against the executors named in the will. Subsequently to their having propounded the codicil, D., another legatee, intervened. The executors by their replication, which was given in after D. had intervened, admitted part of the alleged codicil, including the legacy to D.: —Held, that D. was not entitled to have his costs out of the estate. Shawe v. Marshall, 1 Sw. & Tr. 129.

In interest suits, the unsuccessful party is, as a general rule, condemned in costs. Wiseman v. Wiseman, 36 L. J., P. 22; L. R. 1 P. 351; 15 L. T. 415.
